To the wonderment of a simple minded reporter, the Alaskan coffee industry is perhaps the most prolific business enterprise I have seen in the great north. Picture a building — picture a trailer rather — planted in the middle of a gravelly dusty parking lot that once had other businesses where now all that remains are signs and this hut. Those signs have incomplete prices for cigarettes and 50-cent coke cans that have faded from red to a putrid yellow. The trailer has weathered latticework hiding its wheels and a long since dead potted plant disguising its hitch. On a simple glance, it doesn't bite you as anything much, but as you drive by you see in your rearview mirror the most repetitious advertisement on its obverse.

Picture a building — picture a trailer rather — planted in the middle of a gravelly dusty parking lot ... With a few sketched prices on a dry-erase board, this is a coffee hut.

It reads "ESPRESSO: Drive Thru," and is the fifteenth of its ilk in the last 30 miles. The intentional typo sits squarely next to a window, simple and wood-framed. With a few sketched prices on a dry-erase board, this is a coffee hut.

The drive through coffee hut seems to be a staple of long and short roads alike. I don't know which came first, a thirst for caffeine or a dearth of utilized parking lots, but on the way to Talkeetna, a 100-mile drive, we passed close to two dozen. Each had its own flavor, not vanilla or mocha in origin, but an aesthetic flavor. Some had polar bears (most had polar bears) painted on signs, drinking coffee, pointing to the window, set on a sign separate from the trailer but certainly waving you in. Others had large plaster ice cream cones signaling a diverse menu.

Others yet had giant yellow coffee cups, a yellow you would see warning you of wet floors or a crime scene. These grab you with their brunt obviousness and hold you with their compelling palette. There was no requirement, or apparent desire, to match the paint — and there were a few that seem to be a patchwork of half-empty paint cans salvaged from basements and garages.

They dot Anchorage, finding themselves in dirty lots next to dirtier car dealerships, and cleaner lots near impending business parks. They accompany gas stations, car dealerships, taxidermists, ATMs and gun shops.

To have stairs, an entry beyond your delivery window sets you above the nearest competitor. To have a seating area seems almost sacrilegious. Seldom a long wait, seldom a line of more than two cars, there seems to be both supply and demand for these forlorn trailers in these abandoned lots.

I theorize, as that is a limitation of my visiting status, that the true nature of the coffee hut might lie in a desired mobility. It would be a far better lot in life to be able to work as long as necessary, to raise enough money, then not work. And if you can balance serving coffee and carbon monoxide for nine months out of the year and then tow your entire business somewhere while you travel, hunt or race the Iditarod, why not?

Of course I do not know the weight this theory carries. I did stop at one drive-through slash restaurants and have a buffalo burger with my father, but the woman was just as anxious to make sure we got our food as she was to check every so often on her children sliding down a precarious ditch in the back.

I suppose it could also have something to do with that entrepreneurial spirit and the ease a trailer and parking lot match up can have. Certainly there is a niche being exploited if there are so many coffee huts in South Central Alaska. And in a state where it seems that industry has its limitations (not a huge need for Bermuda shorts as one example), this coffee hut might be the way to be your own boss.

I think I like resting on my theories. A certain mystique associated with any good coffee emporium is always good. It goes well with the dark brew to have uncertainty in its origin and purpose. And, no offense to any happy drive through attendants, but I would rather drive up to an inviting polar bear and his morning cup of java than an unfriendly sap who would rather do anything but help me with my caffeine jones.

Scott Eldridge II is a Collegian columnist on exchange in Anchorage, Alaska.

There's always next year

Rachel Smith

The Boston Red Sox fans' mantra, sadly optimistic in the apocryphal way a condemned man anticipates a stay of execution that never comes, is so infectious that even non-native Bostonians (such as myself) can't help but allow it to permeate our lives. I don't even have any ownership of the unofficial BoSox motto as my home team, the Florida Marlins, made this year the year, and our last trip to the World Series was only six years ago anyway. Nevertheless, here I am mourning Pedro Martinez's incompetence on the pitcher's mound and Grady Little's fatal decision to leave him in.

I'm talking about the baseball post-season of course, but "maybe next year" isn't just about sports; it's about Massachusetts. I wouldn't be surprised if the Pilgrims, upon landing at Plymouth Rock, conceded, "Maybe next year we'll sail someplace nicer — like Tahiti," as they resigned themselves to harsh New England winters and the unenviable task of building a society.

Massachusetts' unique brand of optimistic pessimism crosses all ethnic and cultural boundaries. It is just one of the quirks that separates native New Englanders from outsiders like me. However, a person can only escape its virulent grasp for so long; like the fabled Curse of the Bambino, "maybe next year" follows New Englanders around like a shadow.

Last week, I practiced free-form Japanese conversation with my professor and a few people from class. After struggling through a labored explanation of the hours I work, I ran out of things to say. Suddenly, I blurted out an indiscriminate question about funding, or more precisely the lack thereof. The Asian Languages Department clearly had experienced severe budget cuts, but the instructors never talked about it; they just worked twice as hard so that the cuts were imperceptible to their students.

My Japanese sensei for the past three semesters, Aiko Toyooka, informed me that the Japanese department doesn't have any money, so she doesn't even have a computer in her office; she uses her personal laptop at school. The department has no money for photocopies, so our vocabulary quizzes are administered on paper that she recycles from used handouts.

The Foreign Language Resource Center was eliminated after the spring 2002 cuts, so the University of Massachusetts dismantled the center's website this semester; all of the Japanese language audio exercises that were previously maintained on the site had to be loaded onto WebCT. Consequently, Japanese students couldn't complete the listening exercises until this month.

This semester, Toyookasensei is teaching an intensive Japanese language course that meets five days a week and the discussion section for another intensive course. In addition, she conducts practice sessions outside of her office hours to help improve students' fluency in the language. Other Japanese and Chinese language instructors and teaching assistants are also facing similarly demanding schedules and budgetary woes.

Finger pointing won't bring money into the Asian Languages Department ... just like firing Grady Little ... won't put the Red Sox into the World Series this year.

Toyookasensei's attitude, however, reflects that patented New England sentiment: maybe next year the funding will come.

Surely, the Bambino Curse doesn't affect UMass, does it? Babe Ruth didn't even go to college so I don't see why his curse should. Maybe UMass has its own curse; the Whitey Bulger Curse has a nice ring to it. The Cubs have the Billy Goat Curse; maybe we have the Billy Bulger Curse.

Skeptics will say there is no curse; it's just a case of bad management. The state legislature doesn't fund the University properly. Some say the Board of Trustees and President's Office don't do a good job advocating for the University at the State House. Previous chancellors mishandled funds when UMass had the money. Regardless, finger pointing won't bring money into the Asian Languages Department and it won't get a computer into Toyookasensei's office, just like firing Grady Little — as satisfying as it may be — won't put the Red Sox into the World Series this year.

Maybe the only thing preventing this year from being the year is something simple, yet difficult to pull together: teamwork. If Pedro cared more about his teammates than his ego, maybe he would have stepped aside and the Red Sox could have taken the series. Likewise, many of the problems at UMass, including riots and budget cuts could be more effectively addressed through teamwork and a more unified student body.

I've only lived in Massachusetts for a couple years. I don't call water fountains "bubblers," shopping carts "carriages" or hoagies "grinders." My car is parked in Harvard yard comfortably with all "r's" intact, and I still don't listen to Aerosmith. Nonetheless, that old-fashioned perseverance that got the Pilgrims through their first New England winter and keeps Red Sox fans going in the face of adversity has officially infected me; like the rest of Massachusetts, I'm waiting for next year.

Rachel Smith is a Collegian columnist.

A Conflict That Won't Go Away

Pick up any newspaper, on any given day, and you're likely to see a story about the Arab-Israeli conflict. It's a political problem that just won't go away, and many people on this very page have expressed a wide variety of opinions about it. You may be thinking "Why should I care?" The Middle East is pretty far away, and any resolution to the conflict would affect Americans only a little. That's the way I used to look at it.

William Hillyard

In the few years since I first started paying closer attention to what was going on, I have realized that the conflict really is deserving of our attention. Jerusalem and the entire region of Palestine as a whole are very important places for Christians, Jews, and Muslims. But what struck me only recently is that this conflict is a unique one: It's the only one I can think of where one side belongs to the First World and the other to the Third World. Not only that, but Israelis and Palestinians are in many cases living right next to each other. Perhaps these are the reasons why the Arab-Israeli conflict not only won't go away, but also won't leave the public consciousness.

The Palestinians have become people without a nation ... Surely this type of inequality is not what the Zionist movement had in mind when it first envisioned the creation of Israel.

Just about anyone who lives in this country lives a relatively comfortable life. The United States is the quintessential First World state. Living here at the University of Massachusetts, it's easy to forget how tough much of the world's population has it every single day. The fact is that most of the world's population lives in the Third World, at a level of prosperity that most of us would describe as "poor." It's a sad reflection on human society that this is the case, but that's the way it is. It shouldn't be hard to figure out who is who with regards to the Arab-Israeli conflict. Israel is a rich state, which has received the support of the West pretty much since day one. The Palestinians, on the other hand, are mostly citizens of the Third World. It's impossible to say they are citizens of any particular country, since they do not have a state of their own. Once we establish who's who in this respect, it should become easy to recognize and even predict what will happen to both sides.

The basic situation is that the Palestinians have been living as refugees for decades, while Israel is a secure state accepted by virtually every other country in the world. This is not to say that I have a problem with Israel's existence. Zionism is a legitimate cause with thousands of years' worth of history to back it up. What I object to are the miserable living conditions this creates for the Palestinians. The fact is that Palestinians were living in the areas that now make up Israel long before the Zionists ever arrived. Therefore, they have just as much right to live there, as do the Jewish citizens of Israel. The problem is that they have been turned into second-class citizens from the moment Israel declared its independence. The Palestinians have become people without a nation, in many ways restricted in where they can go and what they can do. Surely this type of inequality is not what the Zionist movement had in mind when it first envisioned the creation of Israel.

It's like in those old Westerns, when we reach the scene of the showdown at High Noon. Palestine just isn't big enough for the both of them. And since Israel is a rich country and the collective group of Palestinians a poor one, it should be no surprise that Israel holds the upper hand. Israel's success, of course, is due largely to the unwavering support it gets from its biggest ally — the U.S. It should be no surprise that our government supports the stronger state of Israel in this conflict. It is consistent with the form that U.S. foreign policy has always taken. And, let's face it, without the support of the United States, Israel would have a hard time facing its many enemies.

So it's here that the Arab-Israeli conflict really hits home. The U.S. has a vested interest in one of the combatants, and therefore news of the conflict never leaves the front page. It's a shame that the U.S. and Israel, two states that pride themselves on protecting freedom and human rights, seem to care so little about these issues when it comes to the Palestinians.

Oh, and as for the question about how and when we can resolve this seemingly endless conflict? It won't happen until both sides learn to treat each other with respect. Given that their current situations are so different from each other, it's going to be an awfully long time before anything like that happens.

William Hillyard is a Collegian columnist.

Submit a letter or opinion

editorial@dailycollegian.com | 413-545-3699 | Letters to the Editor, 113 Campus Center Way, Amherst, MA 01003

The reality of studying abroad

Emily O'Brien

One of the most rewarding experiences that the University of Massachusetts has to offer students is the opportunity to study abroad. Whether it is the tropical beaches of Hawaii or the cosmopolitan appeal of London that you desire, UMass provides exchange programs that fit virtually anyone's dreams.

When pondering the idea of studying abroad, one automatically assumes leaving the country and pursuing an education for a semester or more at a school in a foreign land. However, the University also provides students with the opportunity to partake in the National Student Exchange Program which allows students to study almost anywhere in the United States, including places such as Puerto Rico and the U.S. Virgin Islands. This program allows students who aren't hooked on the idea of living in a foreign country the chance to still be subjected to the benefits of the experience of living independently within another cultural atmosphere.

The experience while studying abroad will not only broaden your horizons but dramatically strengthen your sense of self as well.

However, the experience of studying in another country cannot compare. The true essences of studying abroad lie within completely uprooting yourself, leaving the comfort of home, and immersing yourself in the culture of another country. Although a daunting and somewhat overwhelming task, the opportunity to study abroad cannot be measured.

Although the idea of studying abroad may seem like just an extended vacation, there are many more aspects to the experience than that of just spending a semester lying on Waikiki Beach. There are a variety of considerations one must make in order to decide whether or not temporarily leaving the security of the UMass campus is the right choice.

Essentially, you have to decide what you want out of your education. If taking advantage of the study abroad programs that UMass has to offer is right for you, you must fully comprehend all that studying abroad entails. First of all, one must consider the advantages and disadvantages of most likely living a lengthy plane ride away from home for at least a semester. The idea of leaving the comfort of home is easier for some than others.

Secondly, you must also decide if this is the best path for you to take in your education. Studying abroad is not just a vacation; you will also be attending school wherever you travel to and will be forced to maintain the same responsibilities that you have here at UMass, plus others that come in toe with the independence of living so far away from home.

Deciding on the location in which you will choose to pursue a semester of your college career abroad is quite complex. Along with deciding which location appeals to you the most, you also have to research the schools in the places that you are interested in living. Finding a school that you will want to attend while studying abroad forces you to go through basically the same process that we all went through before deciding to attend UMass — it's no easy feat. Not only do you want the school to have a good academic reputation, but the programs that the school offers also have to be of a benefit to you and your major. For instance, although you may yearn to attend school in Paris, if you're a sports management major, and the only school offered in the study abroad program offers no classes that will benefit you, choosing to go to school there probably isn't the wisest decision. Although you may want to fulfill your fantasy of being whisked off to an exotic location, one must also consider the personal academic advantages and disadvantages to receiving an education there.

Although the decision of whether or not to study abroad cannot be taken lightly, the ultimate advantages of taking part in this opportunity are undeniable. The experience while studying abroad will not only broaden your horizons but dramatically strengthen your sense of self as well. Studying in another environment teaches life lessons that are impossible to acquire by simply staying within the confines of the UMass campus. Studying abroad allows you to learn many things about not only life but yourself as well, experience a culture different from our own, appreciate a different way of life, and meet people that you may have never met if not for challenging yourself by leaving the comforts of home.

Personally, I believe that it is a major mistake to pass up this opportunity. I'm taking advantage of the various programs offered and am going on National Domestic Exchange to The College of Charleston in South Carolina next semester, and plan to study abroad in Spain in the spring of the following year. Maybe my opinion that the advantages of studying abroad outweigh the disadvantages will change once I experience being on my own. However, for now my advice is to take advantage of all that you can while attending school here at UMass. The reality is that never again will we have the opportunity to temporarily live in a different state or country while still being able to feel the security of being supported by an institution, such as UMass.

Emily O'Brien is a Collegian columnist.

Letter to the Editor

As someone who's been at the University of Massachusetts long enough to remember the great "riots" of '99, the last time the Red Sox made it this far, and has been to most "riots" every year since, including the Hobart fiasco, maybe I have some "riot experience" when I say the following: Get the heck out! In regards to S.J. Port's column ("Due process of the law owed to University students") in yesterday's paper, I feel for T.J. and his not actually doing any so-called "rioting," and for helping the poor girl out. However, it doesn't take that much intelligence when you see officers in riot gear, police horses, dogs and the ex-INS buses ready to take people away to figure out that it's time go.

That's what separates T.J. from me and everyone else who's been to these riots, just hanging out and not causing trouble. When the police have started to break, we have gone home, no questions asked. T.J. had every ample opportunity, after first being talked to by the officer, to suck up his dignity and file out like everybody else; instead he foolishly tried to take a stand, and it backfired. If this were a demonstration of civil rights or a protest of other injustices, maybe I'd give him more credit. But when the police clearly defined the situation as a "riot" and were clearing the area, he was just in their way and wouldn't go away. So, they dealt with it like they're trained to.

As for the University's policies, this is just an old-fashion lesson of reading the fine print before you sign away. I support your effort in exposing how easily after being arrested it is to get burnt by both the judicial system and the University. But I also hope you and everyone else realizes how a situation so devastating for the guy could have so easily had a happier ending. I don't know about you, but my parents always told me, "pick your battles."

Joe A. Finley II
UMass student

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
ARTS & LIVING
Thursday, October 23, 2003 arts@dailycollegian.com

Get twice-baked with Chapelle

Comedian to perform two shows at Calvin

By Ferron Salniker
Collegian Staff

From the stoned janitor Thurgood Jenkins, to the intense secret agent, Conspiracy Brother, comedian Dave Chappelle has brought his characters to life, and on Nov. 2, he'll bring laughs to the Calvin Theatre in Northampton.

Beginning his stand-up career at the age of 14, Chappelle has delivered fresh and unapologetic honest comedy, expanding his role in the comedic world through more than 11 major feature film roles and the critically acclaimed Comedy Central series, "Chappelle's Show."

"People always said I was funny, I didn't know it was a remarkable skill I could make a living doing," said Chappelle about his early start.

The comedian explained that his material changes as he gains more experience.

"At 14 you don't have much to talk about, as you get older you get more perspective on the world," he said. "The differences [between my material now and then] are the changes in you as a person, you get better the longer you've been doing it."

After Chappelle's feature film debut in "Mel Brook's Robin Hood: Men in Tights," Chappelle went on to star in "The Nutty Professor" and the 1997 hit "Con Air." Chappelle's most recent film role was in Universal Picture's "Undercover Brother."

Last fall, Chappelle took his comedic genius to television, producing, co-writing and starring in "Chappelle's Show." In the series, Chapelle takes the opportunity to bring his sketchbook of comedic ideas to life.

"It seemed like I had all these ideas but not enough to fit into one movie," he said. "Chappelle's Show' was like the last hoorah with TV, I could do it the way I wanted to."

Despite the success of the show, Chappelle mentioned that getting the show started was difficult.

"I was having tough luck with the network, you can't do that much, the network looks for the least objectionable program," he said.

While keeping busy with the show and film, Chappelle's love for stand-up has not ceased.

"I never really stopped [doing stand up], I love it, if I get off work at 2 a.m., I'll go to a comedy club," he said. "It relaxes me, the audiences are a lot of fun."

Chappelle attributed much of what he likes about stand-up to his fans. "It's like hanging out with friends," he said. He explained that most of his audiences tend to be culturally astute. "There's less of a line between black and white audiences, it's more generational."

Since Chappelle's first major starring role in the film "Half Baked," which he also co-wrote, college students across the nation have made Chappelle their comedic relief.

"I talk their talk, college kids and I relate to each other," he said.

Chappelle reflected on the beginning of his career when he began performing for college student audiences.

"I was the same age as most of the audience, now I'm 30, I'm older than them," he said. "We still get along pretty well though."

Chapelle's national comedy tour "Dave Chappelle is Blackazilla," which played more than 60 shows in 40 cities, was ranked the third best-selling summer tour according to the Associated Press.

"Touring is in itself an interesting experience, what's crazy is that it just becomes normal," he said. "I've met some crazy people, but for the most part everybody has been real nice, you know, we're all just spreading a love vibe."

Middle-East meets UMass

By Helenice Valentim
Collegian Correspondent

A mix of art, culture, poetry, and dance, showcasing the stereotypes facing Middle-Eastern descents compose "ReOrientalism," a presentation being held tonight at 8 p.m. in the University of Massachusetts' Bowker Auditorium.

"ReOrientalism" reflects how political issues and the lack of information about Islam have affected the life and artwork of Arab-American artists. A Palestinian, Egyptian and Armenian are some of the representives of the diverse and eclectic performance team.

'ReOrientalism' Thurs. Oct. 23 Bowker Auditorium Amherst $15 General Public $8Seniors $5 Students

The writings of Edward Said about the conflicts between fascination and fright experienced in the West, especially after 9/11, often occur in the East for the artists who have experienced the simultaneous feelings and suffering as well.

Text, music and images will run the show. The recipe of the music artists' experiments is to blend conservative, classical, techno and hip-hop by using traditional and contemporary styles. Performances during "ReOrientalism" will include original vocal and instrumental music using English and various Middle-Eastern languages together. In addition to telling the story, there will be history, contemporary media, and artwork visually exposed.

"There's a lot of admiration for the beauty of the culture, but there's a lot of fear as well," marketing director of New World Theater Yvonne Mendes said.

Different aspects of cultural restrictions, misplacement, struggle and other feelings' influences on Arab-American identity will be discussed. The event will express the combination of personal background and artwork.

"ReOrientalism" is collaboration between the Center for Cultural Exchange in Portland, Me. and the New World Theater. Over the summer, after a brief introduction between the two groups, the performance team elaborated their presentation after suggestions, and now is once again back in Amherst. The New World Theater is known for being a leader in the area. The focal point is not only theater, but also productions with color interest.

Call the box office at 413-545-2511 or 800-999-UMASS to reserve a ticket for New World Theater's presentation "ReOrientalism". The ticket prices range from $15 for the general public, $8 for low-income patrons and seniors, and $5 for students with identification.

Reid Genauer plays to Pearl Street crowd

By Bradley Farberman
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON — Those who chose Pearl Street's intimate clubroom over a cramped, sweaty dorm room last Thursday were treated to an evening of fun and frivolity. While Game 7 played to an audience of millions across the globe, Reid Genauer And The Assembly Of Dust took the stage before dozens in Northampton.

Reid Genauer Pearl Street Northampton Oct. 16

And those dozens did not leave disappointed.

Genauer, formerly of Strangefolk, has put together a troupe of tremendous musicians whose talents serve the largely vocal-driven music to great effect.

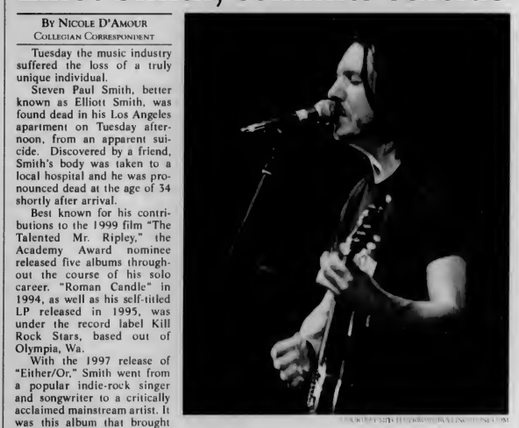
Keys-man and back-up vocalist Nate Wilson of Percy Hill contributes frenetic organ and chunky electric piano to the fold, bringing an element of jazz to the primarily folk/rock repertoire. Bassist John Leccese, also of Percy Hill, is a solid proponent of the low end who sings backup. Drummer Andy Herrick, formerly of Moon Boot Lover, rounds out the rhythm section and guitarist Adam Terrell injects the music with dangerously melodic leads, heavily influenced by Jerry Garcia and especially by Trey Anastasio.

Genauer, whose on-stage charisma makes up for what he lacks in height, is a fine guitarist and lead vocalist. His lyrics, intelligent and introspective, run the gamut of human emotion (a complement to his music which, while primarily rock, tends to run the gamut of style). Concerned with joy and sadness, love and loneliness, Reid's words are sensitive and playful.

The group, augmented on this night by percussionist Yahuba Garcia Torres, ran through two blistering sets of catchy, danceable tunes with big, sing-along choruses. "Burned Down" moved seamlessly between rock and dub, combining the angst of alternative rock with an Island vibe. "Tavern Walker," a funky vamp with a bluegrass chorus, explores the jubilation of drunkenness in its lyrics. The uplifting "Sometimes," a staple from Reid's Strangefolk days, is a stylistic nod to the Grateful Dead. "Love Junkie," a rock tune with serious funk underpinnings, exposes Genauer's lighthearted-ness. "I love you more than all the singers in a Motown group," he sings.

The genre-hopping sextet closed the night with the traditional "And We Bid You Goodnight," a tune popularized by the Dead. The small crowd left Pearl Street's cozy clubroom mourning the loss suffered by their beloved Red Sox, and wishing for a second dose of the Assembly's joyful, feel-good music.

Rocker and Hampshire grad, Elliot Smith, commits suicide



By Nicole D'Amour
Collegian Correspondent

Tuesday the music industry suffered the loss of a truly unique individual.

Steven Paul Smith, better known as Elliott Smith, was found dead in his Los Angeles apartment on Tuesday afternoon, from an apparent suicide. Discovered by a friend, Smith's body was taken to a local hospital and he was pronounced dead at the age of 34 shortly after arrival.

Best known for his contributions to the 1999 film "The Talented Mr. Ripley," the Academy Award nominee released five albums throughout the course of his solo career. "Roman Candle" in 1994, as well as his self-titled LP released in 1995, was under the record label Kill Rock Stars, based out of Olympia, Wa.

With the 1997 release of "Either/Or," Smith went from a popular indie-rock singer and songwriter to a critically acclaimed mainstream artist. It was this album that brought the song "Miss Misery," featured in "The Talented Mr. Ripley," and awarded Smith an Oscar nomination for Best Original Song. The film's soundtrack put Smith on the mainstream map, allowing him to put out his next two albums through the Dreamworks Records label.

Indie icon Elliot Smith reached a career high with his work on "The Talented Mr. Ripley" soundtrack.

COURTESY TOWNSEND RECORDS CO.UK

Smith lived to the age of 34.

Following the huge success of "Either/Or," Smith wrote and released "XO," which became his best selling effort. "Figure 8" was the final record put forth by Elliott Smith. Prior to his untimely death, a new record, "From a Basement on the Hill," was in the works. Two songs were released in August and the album was set to be released in 2004.

Smith was born in Omaha, Ne. in 1969. He attended high school in Portland, Oregon, which is where his music career began. Stranger than Crows was Smith's first band, formed while still in high school. After graduation, he attended Hampshire College in Amherst, at which time he became a member of a couple different bands. Among these bands was the fairly well known "Heatmiser," which released several albums in the '90s. Smith soon realized that he wanted to branch out and explore different genres of music, and so began his solo career.

Smith left behind family, friends, and thousands of heartbroken fans. His distinctive and soulful voice, as well as his brilliant ability to compose music and write lyrics will be missed. The world has lost an irreplaceable musician.

'Happy Tree Friends' new DVD a real killer

By Cameron J. Woods
Collegian Staff

It has been almost a year since the last time it happened, but this month the gory slaughter of some of the most sugary-sweet and cuddly looking animated animals happened again.

'Happy Tree Friends: Second Serving' Mondo Media Rated CV 145 mins Grade B+

That's right the Happy Tree Friends have come back from the grave to give their sadistic, desensitized and wood-land-creature hating fans exactly what they want. Co-creator Rhode Montijo and Animation Director Kenn Navarro have teamed up again to create, "Happy Tree Friends: Second Serving."

The DVD itself contains 17 of the highly acclaimed Internet shorts, most of which last only long enough to turn your stomach. One can either pick and choose which episode to watch or just sit back and be lost in the montage of fuzzy, heart-nosed carnage by watching all 17 in a row.

Any hardcore fan of the Happy Tree Friends will have seen, and most likely re-seen all of these cartoons on the Internet. So what is in it for the truly sick at heart? For those of you who want to see what the world has never seen before, there are two entirely new episodes that are above and beyond the others.

As time draws closer to the holiday season, the Happy Tree Friends appropriately share six blood-drenched adventures in their winter wonderland. These cutesy cartoons may not put viewers in the mood to go out caroling, but they will inspire some to turn off the television for a little bit.

Want to play with your food a bit? Not to worry, you don't get to just sit there and watch these critters kill themselves; you actually get to take part in the massacre. The disk contains four interactive "Smoochies" in which the viewer/player is allowed to play with their favorite Happy Tree Friends.

This is not a game disk, though there is potential for one involving these characters. As such, your interactions with the adorable death machines are limited to a few options. Regardless of the constraints it is still quite fun to take part in the destruction.

THE MONKEY BAR

Thursday- Fusion
Hip-Hop R&B House and Tech Jams

Friday- Turntable to the
With DJ Menace
Hip Hop and R&B

Saturday- Coyote Ugly Guest DJ Night
The Coyote Ugly girls get crazy
Don't let anyone tell you no!!!
Come and see for yourself

october Schedule

Monthly Drink Specials
- Rum & Coke $2.50
Bud Bud Light Pitchers $5.00

TRY THE MONKEY BAR ORIGINAL DRINK
- VANILLA GORILLA

Spring Break Giveaway
the Poconos giving away
Trip
October 25th 10 30 pm - 1:00 am check out flipnation.com for more details

STUDENTCITY.COM
Private Parties
call : 413.537.8527
The Monkey Bar 63 N. Pleasant st. 413.259.1600

Local unique improv

Barn Owl and others stray from traditional rock

By Mike Barrett
Collegian Staff

It has already been out for a couple months, but Barn Owl's 3" CDR "My Very First Barn Owl EP," on Crank Satori shows that an improv ensemble doesn't need to be huge and bombastic to be successful.

This trio of prepared guitar, bowed bass, and umm … "percussion," is tight, succinct and has interesting haircuts, well, except for Matt, but he is the "percussionist."

There are about nine songs, meandering around howls and bellows, and tiny little whispers that don't work well when you try to listen to this in your headphones on a bus ride to campus. If I were to compare this to one of my other favorite free-music ensembles, Test, I would have to say Barn Owl proves that improvisation doesn't have to be huge and explosive to be interesting. They work with tight, controlled, short-form pieces; explosive, yes, but more like a juicy pimple first thing in the morning, than say, the collapsing of a skyscraper. Led Zeppelin Fans take note: this is not for you.

On the other hand, that other hand being a record player, Barn Owl guitarist Chris Cooper has another band, Fat Worm Of Error. Fat Worm, aside from its members occupying an entire duplex in Northampton, has two new recordings out. For their tour this summer, Fat Worm assembled the "Fat Worm Of Error Summer Mix Tape," put out on the drummer's Yea! Cassettes! label.

Assembled from the boxes of practice recordings and random noodlings that the members collectively record, "Mix Tape" is probably the strongest output of the band yet, featuring, among dozens of other wonders, a cover of "Popcorn," that old Moog disco classic. And if tapes are too arcane for you — you digital sell-out — they have a 7" EP out too. If there is ever a reason to buy a record player, this is it.

Another five or six songs exist on this handy piece of wax, in true rock form: there is none of the weird remix magic on the "Mix Tape," y'know? So Fat Worm, if you haven't heard them, is truly an art-punk revival. If I were to put them in with the "new-new-wave" or "no-wave," scenes of this past summer, I'd call them groundbreaking.

Imagine if you will, and cross over between a really drunk Arab On Radar and a really strung out Sharon Topper (of God Is My Co-Pilot fame). You kind of get the idea. Then throw in a lot of spray paint stencils and macramé unicorns … that's Fat Worm live. If that weren't enough, Breaking World Records of Hadley has a tidy little 3" CDR compilation out called Rap Pouch. There's really no rap on it, but it does come in a pouch.

It showcases the smelly, sweaty underground scene of the Pioneer Valley. It does include exclusive tracks from Barn Owl and Fat Worm of Error, also includes tracks from Diagram A, Noise Nomads, Bromp Treb and Steve Zultanski. It does not include any exclusive Led Zeppelin or Pink Floyd. It may be the best 20 minutes of your life.

Diagram A and Noise Nomads also have a split CD they co-released earlier this year. Truly an experiment in the horror of the subconscious, this is an awesome headphone listen on the bus. Diagram A makes homemade electronics. He then puts on a gas mask, jock strap, and plugs himself in and thrashes around a lot. It sounds like destruction. It is really perverted, in a PG-13 kind of way, dynamic and explosive, pulsing throbbing, and lava of crud flowing out of your speakers into your mind.

Remember that magazine, Fangoria? It was all about horror and gore movie special effects? Diagram A is like that — the inside look on what's really disturbing to us as sane, normal people. Noise Nomads is a lot less scary, unless you're scared of little children playing big drums into boom boxes through guitar pedals, and of muddled field recordings. He's loud and has really long hair. When he head bangs, it's amazing.

These CDs are around; if you know the right places to look … it's not a well-kept secret, at least not by intention.

COURTESY OF/CHRIS MYERS

Diagram A, wearing a gas mask and jock strap, playing one of his homemade electronic instruments.

No matter what your major is... if you're thinking of going to Graduate School now,
next year, or even two years from now,
you should plan to go to the

ANNUAL FIVE COLLEGE GRADUATE AND PROFESSIONAL SCHOOLS INFORMATION DAY

Wednesday, October 29
11 am - 3 pm
Student Union Ballroom
UMass Amherst

Representatives from over 160 schools from across the United States (think CA, FL, TX, Washington DC...) and abroad!

Attend "Creating a Personal Statement" Workshop
Make your Grad School Application stand out!
12:30 and 2:30

achitecture theology dental business education international relations natural sciences law medical social work political science engineering library science nursing public health design
and more!

Find out about the GRE, LSAT, GMAT and MCAS tests

CareerServices
Call 413-577-0417 for more information
Check out www-ccn.acad.umass.edu for a list of attending schools/departments

Tickets on sale at the Mullins Center Box Office, online at ticketmaster.com, by phone at (413) 733-2500 or at all TicketMaster outlets. Presented by MassConcerts.

Minutemen prepare for first place battle with Villanova

Continued from page 12

tions. The sophomore has also complemented his gaudy passing numbers with 155 yards and four TD's on the ground, including the game-winning one-yard plunge with under a minute to go in the Wildcats last game — a 21-17 victory over URI in which the signal caller completed a 23-yard pass on 4th-and-17 to set up his winning score.

"He's a good quarterback and a good football player in their system," Whipple said. "He does a very good job of running their offense and creating chances for them to score, and he's going to be someone we need to contain to win the football game."

One of the major reasons behind Casamento's success has been the plethora of talent around him on offense. The 'Cats boast six different players who have all caught at least 10 balls, including three — sophomore receiver J.J. Outlaw as well as junior fullback Phil DiGiacomo and junior reciever Noble Champen — who have caught over 30.

Villanova's wide array of firepower does not stop there, as the 'Cats employ a two-headed rushing attack of sophomore Martin Gibson and junior Terry Butler that has netted them 814 yards and seven touchdowns on the ground this season, including an average of 199.5 yards per game.

"They have a lot of talented players that can do a lot of things for them offensively," Whipple said. "It's on us to go out there and play well and stop them or we're going to be in for a long afternoon."

Defensively, the Wildcats are spearheaded by sophomore middle linebacker Brian Hulea, who leads the team with 77 tackles, including more solo stops (52) than 'Nova's second-most prolific tackler, freshman strong safety Allyn Bacchus, has total tackles.

Fellow safety Raymond Ventrone is third on the team with 49 tackles, while veteran cornerbacks senior Clarence Curry and junior Jeremy Morgan give the 'Cats a season, experienced secondary.

Junior defensive end Jamil Butler is the leader up front, recording 26 tackles and 2 sacks, including six tackles for a loss.

For the Minutemen, Whipple plans on starting tailback Steve Baylark being able to return from a high-ankle sprain that kept him out of all but one play of UMass 27-22 win over Hofstra. The sophomore rookie who has rushed for 638 yards and seven touchdowns will split carries with Rich Demers, who has carried 66 times for 402 yards and four scores on the year, while sophomore Raunny Rosario will be in uniform and on the sideline for the second straight week, and could see some action if needed, although it appears unlikely.

In other injury news, leading receiver Jason Peebler should be out again after practicing only sparingly on an injured hamstring. Junior Dominique Stewart, who has caught a touchdown in each of the last two games, will start in his place.

Defensively, freshman and Amherst Regional product James Ihedigbo will again get the nod as the starting free safety, as sophomore Shannon James will again slide over to cornerback in place of the injured Bobby Boyer.

www.dailycollegian.com

Depo-Provera®
Contraceptive Injection
Birth control you think about just 4 x a year.
medroxyprogesterone acetate injectable suspension

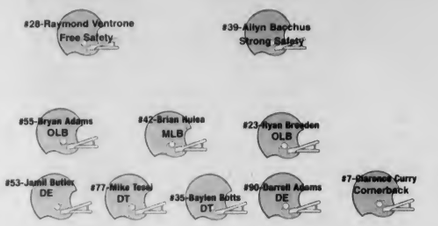
DEPO-PROVERA® (contraceptive injection medroxyprogesterone acetate sterile aqueous suspension, USP)

This product is intended to prevent pregnancy. It does not protect against HIV infection (AIDS) and other sexually transmitted diseases.

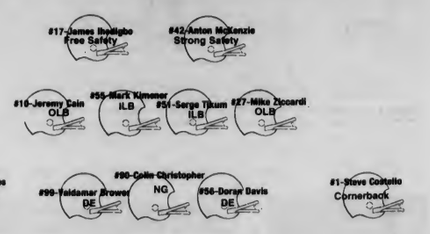
What is DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?
DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection is a form of birth control that is given as an intramuscular injection (a shot) in the buttock or upper arm once every 3 months (13 weeks) to prevent your contraceptive protection you must return for your next injection promptly at the end of 13 weeks. DEPO-PROVERA contains medroxyprogesterone acetate, a synthetic chemical similar to, but not the same as, the natural hormone progesterone, which is produced by your ovaries during the second half of your menstrual cycle. DEPO-PROVERA acts by preventing your egg cells from ripening. If an egg is not released from the ovaries during your menstrual cycle, it cannot become fertilized by sperm and result in pregnancy. DEPO-PROVERA may also change the lining of your uterus (womb) so that implantation is less likely to occur.

How effective is DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?
The effectiveness of DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection depends on following the recommended dosage schedule exactly (one 3-mo ultem do) get my shot of DEPO-PROVERA every 12 weeks (4 injections/year). To make sure you are not pregnant when you first get DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection, your first injection must be given ONLY during the first 5 days of a normal menstrual period ONLY within the first 5 days after the start of your next breast-feeding and if exclusively breast feeding ONLY at the sixth week after childbirth. It is important to return for your next injection every 12 weeks (3 months) ± 1 week. Intervals between injections of longer than 13 weeks may reduce the effectiveness of DEPO-PROVERA. DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection is over 99% effective, making it one of the most reliable methods of birth control available. This means that the average annual pregnancy rate is less than one for every 100 women who use DEPO-PROVERA. The effectiveness of most contraceptive methods depends in part on how reliably each woman uses the method. The effectiveness of DEPO-PROVERA depends only on the patient returning every 3 months (13 weeks) for her next injection. Your healthcare provider will help you choose DEPO-PROVERA or other contraceptive methods and give you the information you need in order to decide which form is right for you.



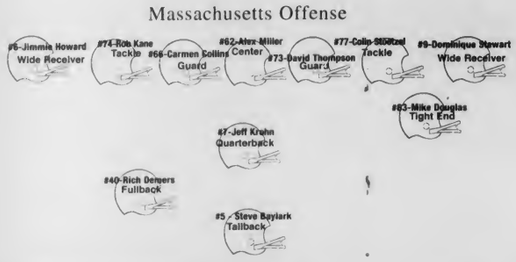
The following table shows the percent of women who get pregnant while using different kinds of contraceptive methods. It gives both the lowest expected rate of pregnancy (the rate expected in women who use each method exactly as it should be used) and the typical rate of pregnancy (which includes women who became pregnant because they forgot to use their birth control or because they did not follow the directions exactly).

Percent of Women Experiencing an Accidental Pregnancy in the First Year of Continuous Use

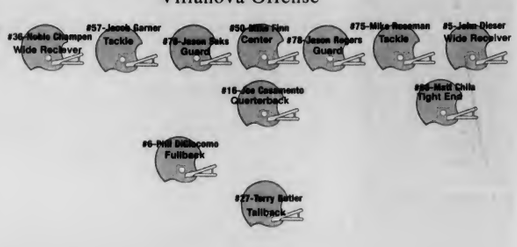


Method	Lowest Expected	Typical
DEPO-PROVERA	0.3	3
Implant, Norplant	0.09	0.09
Tubal sterilization	0.4	0.5
Vasectomy	0.1	0.15
Male condom (without spermicide)	2	14
Diaphragm (with spermicide)	6	18
Cervical cap	9	18
Sponge	9	20
Periodic abstinence	1	20
Spermicide alone	6	21
Vaginal foam	6	21
Withdrawal (before ejaculation)	4	19
Oral contraceptive	0.1	3
Progestin-only pills	0.5	3
IUD
Progestasert	1.5	2
Copper T 380A	0.6	0.8
Lippes Loop (without spermicide)	0.1	3
Lippes Loop (with spermicide)	0.1	3
Shield	0.1	3
Withdrawal	4	19

Massachusetts (6-1 4-0 A-10)
@
Villanova (6-0 4-0 A-10)
Saturday 3:30 p.m.
Villanova Stadium (12,000)



Villanova Defense



Massachusetts Defense

Massachusetts Offense

Villanova Offense

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT
REGISTRATION FOR SPRING 2004

The WRITING PROGRAM PLACEMENT TEST
will be offered on:

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 28 @ 7pm in Thompson 102
WENDNESDAY OCTOBER 29 @ 7pm in Bartlett 65
MONDAY, NOVEMBER 3 @ 7pm in Tobin 304

This test is a pre-requisite for enrollment in Englwrit 112/113. (College Writing)

This test may be taken only once.
Students do not need to register for the test

Clip & Curl
665-2629
Hair Skin & Nails
Massage Therapy
Route 116, Sunderland
(Located on bus route)
Accepted: Visa MC
Open Tuesday - Friday 9 to 6:30, and Saturday 9 to 4
Stress Relief Package
30 Minute Massage
30 Minute Aveda Facial
Hair Shampooed & Dried
Regularly $73, Now $60
(Add a Complimentary Lavender Paraffin hand dip!)
Expires 11/22/03
Aveda • ARUM • Paul Mitchell
Two full service rooms!

Oasis Body Wraps and Tanning
243 Russell St.
Hadley, MA 01035
(413) 587-9742
• The first UV FREE tanning machine in the area
• Get $5.00 off your first visit
• A rich golden tan in just a few seconds
• You'll look and feel great
1/2 Price tanning every Tuesday
Conveniently Located
CASES
UMASS
University Drive
Route 9

ATTENTION
UMass Amherst Sophomores, Juniors, & Seniors
We would like to invite you to participate in a group interview with 8-10 other students on the topic of student beliefs and values.
The researchers are offering $30 to each participant
The interview will take 1.5 - 2 hours of your time. Snacks will also be provided.
Monday,Oct. 27
1-3p, or 3-5pm
151 Hills South Building
If you are interested in participating, please email Kati Szelenyi, szelenyi@ucla.edu. Please make sure to indicate which of the two sessions you would like to attend.

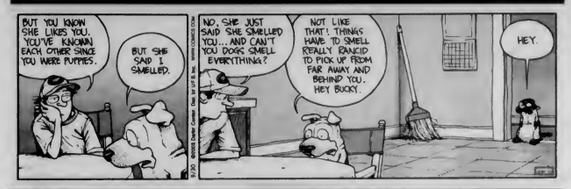
PLAY QB1
Game Room - Delicious Menu - Free Popcorn
Rafters
SPORTS BAR & RESTAURANT
University Drive & Amity Street, Amherst
FRIDAYS
FREE PIZZA
3-5PM
NFL SUNDAY TICKET
Coors LIGHT
Pitcher Special
$6.50
All Month
Saturday Nights
KARAOKE
10-1am No Cover

Seven's
Rt. 116 | Sunderland, MA
(413) 665 - 8788
Next to Cliffside Apartments
KARAOKE EVERY WEDNESDAY
KARAOKE CONTEST EVERY SUNDAY
2 6 1
Open Mic Night
Every Thursday
WEEKLY PITCHER SPECIALS

UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS-AMHERST
DEPARTMENT OF ECONOMICS
presents
THE SEVENTH ANNUAL PHILIP GAMBLE MEMORIAL LECTURE

LANI GUINIER
Harvard Law School

WILLIAM SPRIGGS
National Urban League



"The Future of Affirmative Action in the Academy"
4 p.m.
Friday, October 24, 2003
Cape Cod Lounge, Student Union
Free And Open To The Public

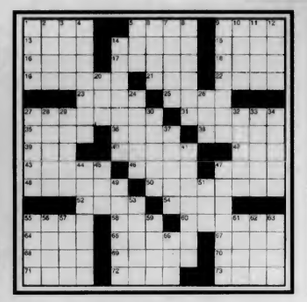
Four Seasons Wine & Liquors
Wine:
Beer:
Bass Ale 2/12 pk btl...$20.99*
Miller Light 30 pk cans...$18.49*
High Life 30 pk cans...$12.99*
Busch & Busch Light 24 pk btl...$10.99*
Wachusett 12 pk btl...$10.99*
Rolling Rock 12 pk btl...$7.99*
Sterling Vineyards Chardonnay 750 ml...$12.99
Talus Chard, Cab, Merlot, P. Grigio 1.5 lt...$10.99
Inglenook Chablis, Blush 4.0 lt...$8.99
Jacobs Creek Chard, Cab, Merlot, Shiraz 750 ml...$6.99
Vendange Chard, Cab, Merlot 1.5 lt...$6.99
Marcus James Chard, Cab, Merlot 1.5 lt...$5.99
Freixenet Carta Nevada Brut, Sem-dry 750 ml...$5.99
Arbor Mist All Flavors 1.5 lt...$4.99
Barton & Guster Chard, Cab, Merlot 705 ml...$3.99
Liquor:
Glenlivet 750 ml...$27.99
Jameson 1 liter...$22.99
Martell V.S. 750 ml...$21.99
Absolut All Flavors 750 ml...$15.99
Southern Comfort 750 ml...$11.99
Seagram's Gin All Flavors 750 ml...$8.99
*all beer prices plus deposit
Four Seasons Wine & Liquors
333 Russell St., Rte 9, Hadley, MA 01035
584-8174 • Mon.- Sat. 9am- 11pm
SALE 10/16 THROUGH 10/22

QUOTE FOR THE DAY

"I had the radio on."

-Marilyn Monroe, asked if she really had nothing on in a calendar photograph

TODAY'S CROSSWORD PUZZLE



ACROSS
1 Makes a dress
5 Like some pints
9 Banquet figures
14 Sales assistant
15 Select few
16 Hull part
17 Peruvian native
18 Long for 19 Golden Rule actor
20 Mayor Delaney
21 Tumbler's pad
22 Craving
23 Metric measure
25 Roller coaster
27 Picnic in the parking lot
31 Jam metal
35 Learn by memorizing
36 Pathfinder
38 Whinny
39 A Gershwin
40 Wading bird
42 Have a go at
43 Stronghold of Spain
46 Artist Magritte
47 Flower stalk
48 Couch
50 Pigeons' roost
52 PC screen image
54 Pen
55 Burst of laughter
58 "Alley ___"
60 J.R.'s lawn
64 Science magazine
65 Pretty Rose
67 Bootleg
68 Tea herb
69 Of the Far East
70 Napoleon's island
71 Mouse, to an owl
72 Auto mishap
73 Clean the furniture

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

11-140 © 2003 United Feature Syndicate

DOWN
1 Gulp (of liquor)
2 "Ocean Rex" 3 Baylor University
4 Flash
5 Pub brew
6 Land of Anna's song
7 Dadaing for
8 Decade fractions
9 Banjo lick
10 Order fast
11 Caresses
12 Fast-moving
14 Mediocre wager
30 Rock band's booking
24 One or the ___
26 Long time
28 Group of three
29 Grand ___ salary
79 Austria's neighbor
30 Bunnylike
32 Likewise
33 "Snowy" bird
34 Greeting card feature
37 Bird collector
41 Manic resident
44 Know-how
45 NYSE regulator
47 Burnout
51 Epoch
53 Boom-box issue
56 Splendor
58 Arab VIP
59 Subject of films
60 Discomfort
61 Comic strip mopper
62 Long while
63 Mattress support
66 "Unforgettable" singer

AMHERST BREWING COMPANY
UPSTAIRS at the ABC
NO COVER CHARGE
Menlos & The new Horizon
Elco Drive
26
Rafael Flores
Halloween Karoke Party

DINING COMMONS MENU

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Cheese Quesadilla (vegetarian)
- Philly Steak Sandwich
- Tofu Fricassee (vegan)

DINNER
- BBQ Chicken Quarters
- Baked Chicken Quarters
- Old Fashioned Beef Stew
- Seitan Bourguignon (vegan)

DAILY WEATHER FORECAST

For Amherst

THURSDAY
- High: 44
- Low: 28

FRIDAY
- High: 49
- Low: 26

SATURDAY
- High: 55
- Low: 39

PRODUCTION CREW

On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Nikolas P. Markantonatos
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Brendan O'Meara
COPY EDITOR
Leah Wyner
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Scott Pihl
PRODUCTION STAFF
Samantha Nielsen/ Oliver Chong

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • JAN. 20-FEB. 18
You're tired. You should be. You've been working hard.

pisces • FEB. 19-MAR. 20
You're taking on a new challenge. Don't worry, you'll succeed.

aries • MAR. 21-APR. 19
You changed your hairstyle. It looks hot.

taurus • APR. 20-MAY 20
When your dog runs away, it's time for a pet kitten.

gemini • MAY 21-JUN. 21
Get through this assignment. You don't want it hanging over your head.

cancer • JUN. 22-JUL. 22
You're more talented than most people give you credit for.

leo • JUL. 23-AUG. 22
You'd still be cool even if you were from Jersey.

virgo • AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Don't forget your socks. It's cold out.

libra • SPT. 23-OCT. 22
Life is rough. Get a riot helmet and shield.

scorpio • OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Don't pull four all nighters in a row. It's not healthy.

sagittarius • NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Eat some cornbread and macaroni & cheese.

capricorn • DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Go take in a lecture; become more cultured.

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Fraternities- Sororities- Clubs- Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with a proven CampusFundraiser 3 hour fundraising event. Our free programs make fundraising easy with no risks. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so get with the program! It works. Contact CampusFundraiser at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Questions about your lease/security deposit deductions? Questions about subletting/assigning leases? Questions about the conditions of your new house or apartment? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

AUTO FOR SALE

1992 Honda Prelude SI, Loaded, $3900 587-0242

AUTO FOR SALE

Sizzling Red Convertible, Pontiac Sunfire 1997 excellent $3900.00 549-0822

Achieva 92 Oldsmobile 66,000 Miles FWD 4 shows good condition No rust $1995.00 548-1020

1991 Toyota Camry Wagon, AC/Power 117,000 miles, reliable. $2500 549-4060

1992 Silver Ford Taurus AC, All-Power, Excellent Condition $2400 118,000K Call 549-3930 210-7393

$500!!! Cars from $500!!! Police Impounds for listings. 1-800-319-3323 ext4554

93 Pontiac Bonneville SDN All Power Must Sell $1500 B/O 253-5537

COMPUTERS

Quicksilver Computing Computer help Virus removal Web Design $15/hr 548-6847 Ask for T.J.

EMPLOYMENT

Make over $1000 a week many opportunities available www.studentsource.net

LOCAL RADIO STATION Entry level clerical/sales/on-air. Computer skills necessary Compensation negotiable Resume: PO Box 983 Greenfield, MA 01302

Motivated students seeking leadership outside the box. Gain experience in all aspects of running a small business Call 508-246-1230

Experienced and certified high energy instructors for kickboxing and spinning classes. Call Northampton Athletic Club 585-8500

EMPLOYMENT

Drivers and Kitchen Help Wanted Apply at DP Dough Downtown Amherst

Visa/Mastercard approval agents earn $1,000/week potential No experience necessary. Call 1-800-821-3416 ext.145

Sales Assistant for consulting/software firm. Telephone telemarketing. Economics a plus. Please send cover letter and resume to Frederick Treyz at Regional Economic Models, Inc., 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002 or fax 413-549-1038 or email resumes@remi.com.

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

!Bartending!$ $250/day potential No experience Nesc Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext 162

FURNITURE

Moving Sale Patricia 413-529-9458

INSTRUCTION

University Bartending Classes Start Soon 1-800-U-CAN-MIX Call now for information!!! Space is Limited www.universitybartending.com

LOST AND FOUND

Lost: Wallet Near Parking garage 10/14 If found please call with description 413-237-1015

SERVICES

Pet-Sitter available days nights & weekends. Dog walking. 9 years experience. Call Gina 253-0619

All Digital Productions Pro Videography for Weddings, Bar Mitzvahs, Commercial (508) 221-8223 sweeppicker@yahoo.com

SERVICES

SHEAR BLISS DAY SPA SERVICES Body Sugaring (waxing) for men and women *Safe *100%Natural *Effective 253-2322 https//shearbliss.image 411.com

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

TRAVEL

#1 Spring Break Vacations! 110% Best Prices! Mexico, Jamaica, Bahamas, Florida, Texas. Book Now & Receive Free Parties & Meals Campus Reps Wanted! 1-800-234-7007 endlesssummertours.com

TRAVEL

Spring Break- Sign up with Student Express and get Free roundtrip airline tickets to over 15 international destinations- including Aruba, Dominican Republic, Costa Rica, Caribbean hot spots and more. Why go with anyone else? Limited offer call now. Commission rep positions also available 1-800-787-3787 www.studentexpress.com

Spring Break – Nassau/Paradise Island, Cancun, Jamaica and Acapulco from $489 Air, Hotel, Transfers, Parties and More! Organize small group- earn FREE TRIPS plus commissions! Call 1-800-GET-SUN-1

SPRING BREAK 2004! Beach Life Vacations! Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas, Florida. Sell Trips, Earn Cash, Travel Free!! Call 1-800-733-6347 www.beachlifevacations.com

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Destinations, including Cruises! Foam Parties, Free Drinks and Club Admissions. Rep Positions and FREE trips Available. 1-800-231-4386 www.EpicureanTours.com

A "Reality" Spring Break 2004's Hottest Prices Book now :. Free Trips, Meals & Parties www.sunsplashtours.com or 1-800-426-7710

TUTORS

Math/Physics Tutor $30/Hr plus travel Call Dr. Kline 413-552-3805

Advertise in the Collegian Classifieds! Just visit the Campus Center Basement or call 545-3500!

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 23, 2003 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Judgement day

No. 5 UM to face No. 2 'Nova in A-10 showdown

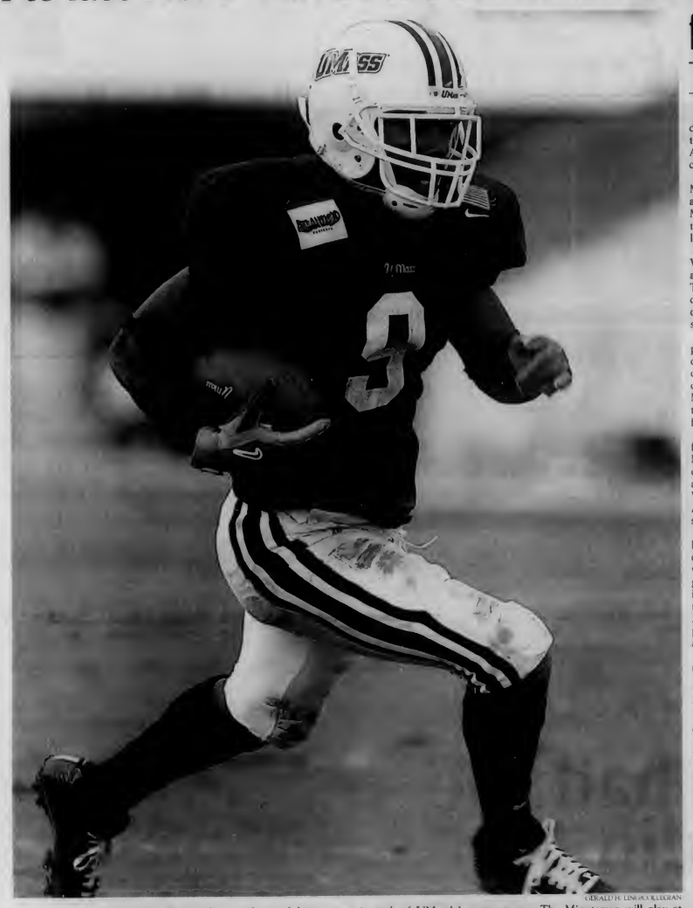
By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

A football season is more of a marathon than a sprint. A matter of survival, it is almost primal in nature as it tests a team's ability to persevere over the course of time.

Because of this, "one game does not a season make" has become an increasingly popular sports adage among coaches wishing to downplay the significance of any single contest.

However, in more cases than not, there is one game that defines a team; a game that serves as a turning point in the road each team begins on, yet only few will travel until its end. One game that, if won, can propel a team to greatness and allow it to reach the goals it so desperately hopes to attain and, if lost, can ruin the hard work and sacrifices of so many.

For the Massachusetts football team, that game is Saturday. With unblemished conference records and Top 5 national rankings on the line, the No. 5 Minutemen (6-1 4-0 Atlantic 10) will travel to Philadelphia to battle the No. 2 Villanova Wildcats (6-0 4-0 A-10) for a continued share of first place in the A-10, in a place where they haven't won since 1962.



"This is obviously as big as they come at this point in the season," coach Mark Whipple said. "Every player on this team knows how big this game is, and how important it is for us, and they're going to be ready to play, because we're going to have to go out there and play as well as we can on the football field.

"[The fact that we haven't won at Villanova] in so long isn't going to be a factor," he added. "This game is about our current team and theirs; history has nothing to do with it. We just need to go out and play our best as a football team, and whatever's happened in the past isn't going to matter to us."

What will matter for UMass is finding a way to stop 'Nova quarterback Joe Casamento, who is having a brilliant season in his first as a starter.

Filling rather large shoes in taking over for the graduated Brett Gordon, Casamento has completed 143-of-191 passes for 1,481 yards, 12 touchdowns and seven intercep-

Continued on page 9

GERALD R. LINGO/COLLEGIAN

Junior receiver Dominique Stewart has caught touchdown passes in each of UMass' last two games. The Minutemen will play at Villanova on Saturday with a share of first place in the Atlantic 10 on the line.

Teams prepare for barnburner

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

The date was Oct. 19, 2002.

The weather was cold, dank and dreary in the Pioneer Valley, and the home stands at McGuirk Alumni Stadium were filled to capacity.

On one side, the UMass Minutemen were 4-2, and fresh off a 20-10 upset win over then-No.2 Maine on homecoming weekend that vaulted them to 20th nationally.

On the other side, the Villanova Wildcats were atop the Atlantic 10 and ranked No. 4 in the nation. They had arguably the nation's best quarterback in Brett Gordon, and one of the league's premier offensive players in Brian White.

It was a battle of conference powers that, when all was said and done, proved to be one of the best college football games ever played on this campus, as Anton McKenzie's blocked field goal as time expired preserved a 17-16 win for the Maroon and White.

It was a game that set the tone for both teams seasons, as the Minutemen went on to make a serious run at a conference title before adversity struck them down, and Villanova advanced deep into the I-AA playoffs before coming up just short of a national title.

So now, with the stakes much higher, the two squads will again converge on the gridiron for what will surely be another grueling, gut-wrenching battle with serious implications. Both are ranked in the Top 5, both are undefeated in A-10 play and hold a share of first place in the conference and both are vying, again, for a national title.

The Maroon and White have not won in Philadelphia since 1962, and the road team has not been victorious in the series since the Wildcats won in Amherst in 1978. In their last six meetings, each team is 3-3 while 'Nova holds the all-time series lead with 11 wins to UMass' nine.

So when the 'Cats and the Minutemen hit the Villanova Stadium field Saturday at 3:30 pm in front of a homecoming crowd and a national television audience, the stakes will be higher than ever. Two teams, as dead even as can be, prepped for a contest where losing could spell doom and winning provides a reason to fight on.

There need be no more hype, hoopla nor promotion.

This is the game of the year.

Minutewomen head to Philly

By Brendan Hall
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts field hockey team will be busy this weekend in Philadelphia, as they battle two conference rivals in a critical weekend for the Atlantic 10. The first stop will be O.J. Roberts High School, where the Minutewomen (3-12, 1-2 A-10) will be looking to up their conference record against the West Chester Golden Rams (3-10, 0-3 A-10) Saturday at noon. The Rams, on the other hand, will be trying to snap their three-game losing streak with a first conference win.

"You really have to throw the records out the window when you're in conference play, because anything can happen," coach Patty Shea said. "With West Chester, it's always a dogfight, and this is no exception." The Rams are coming off a heartbreaking 6-5 loss to Temple in overtime, and will be looking to carry that momentum into Saturday.

The game will also be played on FieldTurf, something the Minutewomen aren't used to. In fact, Saturday will mark the first time this season they'll be playing on a surface other than Astroturf.

"It's like putting in the rough," Shea said about the effects of the grassy-like surface. "You have to give that extra effort, and pay more attention to the little things. It slows down the pace of the game, and you have to change your game plan. But good teams can play on any surface."

Offensively, the Rams will be led by sophomore forward Jen McGinley, who through Sunday leads the team with four goals and one assist for nine points. She will be joined up front by senior Caleen Owens, sophomore Kelly Olinger and sophomore Megan Glielmi.

The Minutewomen have been facing talented goalkeepers all season long, and the Rams' Carrie Hanshue will be no exception. A former A-10 Goalkeeper of the Week, the sophomore has been keeping games close as of late. Her 109 saves rank fifth in the A-10 this season, and she has one shutout to her credit thus far. Saturday would be an ideal day for Minutewomen goalie Christine Tocco to get out of her slump. Although her 129 saves rank sixth in the nation, she has let up ten goals in the last two games.

This time around, the notably improved offense will be able to help out. The trio of Jaime Bawden, Robin Dzierzic, and Adrianne Monaco will be key to how well to the offense performs. But in this battle of two high-powered offenses, the bulk of the pressure for UMass still rests in how well Tocco performs, as well as a defense that is allowing an average of 18 shots per game.

On Sunday, UMass will swing across town to Hank DeVincent Field to take on the LaSalle Explorers (7-10, 0-3 A-10). Like West Chester, the Explorers play on a surface entirely new to the Minutewomen (natural grass), which means more adjustments will have to be made. Also like West Chester, the Explorers will be looking for their first conference win this season.

The Explorers have lost seven of their last eight games, including a current five-game losing streak. But the natural grass surface will be working to LaSalle's advantage.

Offensively LaSalle is led by one-time A-10 Co-Player of the Week Sara Camilli. The junior midfielder leads the team with eight goals and three assists for 19 points, tied for third overall in the A-10. She will be joined up front by five-goal scorers Emily Simone and one-time A-10 Rookie of the Week Amy Comstock.

Tocco will be facing Explorers standout goalie Colleen Bolger. She currently ranks fourth in the A-10 in saves (117), and has one shutout. Although her defense is allowing over 14 shots a game, she has been keeping the Explorers in the game all season long.

GERALD R. LINGO/COLLEGIAN

Senior midfielder Kristen Hopwood and the Minutewomen will hit the road for a pair of conference games this weekend.

The Daily Collegian

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 24, 2003 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 37

Bush thanks Australia for help on terror

CHARLES DHARAPAK/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Australia's Green Party senators Bob Brown, second right, and Kerry Nettle, right, are warned by a Parliament official after they heckled a speech by U.S. President George W. Bush. This was the last stop of Bush's recent Asia-Australia tour.

President heckled by parliament members during speech on terror

By Tom Raum
Associated Press

CANBERRA, Australia (AP) — Heckled inside and outside Australia's Parliament, President Bush offered a pointed answer to those who say the war with Iraq wasn't worth fighting.

"Who can possibly think that the world would be better off with Saddam Hussein still in power?" Bush asked Thursday as he wrapped up a six-nation lobbying campaign to reinvigorate the war on terrorism among Asian and Pacific allies.

Bush told a divided Parliament that the war in Iraq was right and inevitable, but that Americans and Australians "still have decisive days ahead" and that the broader war on terror could be long and drawn out.

With thousands of anti-war demonstrators protesting outside the building and two hecklers jeering him from within, Bush thanked the government of Prime Minister John Howard for its help in both Iraq and Afghanistan.

"America, Australia and other nations acted in Iraq to remove a grave and gathering danger, instead of wishing and waiting while a tragedy drew closer," Bush said near the end of an eight-day overseas trip.

Bush arrived in Hawaii later Thursday after a 10-hour flight across the International Dateline. He was greeted with leis by Republican Gov. Linda Lingle and others as he stepped off Air Force One amid tight security at Hickam Air Force Base.

The president and his wife, Laura, visited the USS Arizona Memorial where 1,177 crewmen were killed on Dec. 7, 1941, in the surprise attack by Japanese fighter planes. The president and first lady dropped flower petals in the water around the sunken battleship.

Before heading for Hawaii, Bush observed a ceremony in which soldiers placed a wreath on Australia's Tomb of the Unknown Soldier to honor Sgt. Andrew Russell, an Australian solider who was the first casualty among U.S. allies in Afghanistan.

Bush praised Prime Minister Howard as "a leader of exceptional courage" for sending 2,000 troops to Iraq despite the largest peace protests in his nation since the Vietnam War.

For his part, Howard said as he introduced Bush to Parliament: "We have a divided view in this nation" on Iraq.

That was reinforced when 41 opposition-party lawmakers signed a letter criticizing Bush's war decision, saying no clear and present danger existed.

Thousands of demonstrators banged drums and shouted outside the Parliament building while a separate group of protesters jostled with security officials outside the U.S. embassy compound where Bush stayed overnight.

During Bush's speech, two Green Party senators jumped to their feet and shouted war protests at Bush. They were ordered removed from the chamber but sat and refused to leave. One of them, Sen. Bob Brown, shouted "we are not a sheriff," a reference to Bush's recent description of Howard.

"I love free speech," Bush said to laughter.

Several other lawmakers wore white arm bands to protest the Iraq war but remained silent.

Later, Bush spokesman Scott McClellan said that the president had been warned beforehand by Howard of possible heckling.

"It was expected," said McClellan. "That's the Australian Parliament for you."

For the most part, Bush was warmly received. Opposition Labor Party leader Simon Crean, in opening remarks, said that differences over Iraq "strengthen rather than weaken the relationship."

"Friends must be honest with one another," he added.

While Bush drew mixed applause with his remarks about Iraq, his comments on the broader war on terrorism brought approving shouts of "here, here" from both sides of the chamber.

"As free nations in peril, we must fight this enemy with all our strength," Bush said.

Both in the speech, and at an earlier news conference with Howard, Bush portrayed the battle ahead as long and difficult.

"We cannot let up in our offensive against terror, even a bit," Bush told Parliament. "And we must continue to build stability and peace in the Middle East and Asia as the alternatives to hatred and fear."

During the news conference, Bush also said that his administration hoped to complete negotiations on a free-trade agreement with Australia by year's end.

And he defended the continuing holding in Guantanamo, Cuba, of two Australians captured during fighting in Afghanistan. Their imprisonment has been a big issue in Australia.

He said he discussed the status of the two Australians with Howard and "there is an ongoing process." Still, he said, "These are people who were picked up off a battlefield of war."

Bush called suggestions by critics that the prisoners had been mistreated "utterly ridiculous."

Magazine editor speaks about relating to readers

By Nicole Lewis
Collegian Correspondent

Lee Kravitz, editor of Parade magazine, spoke yesterday about his experiences as editor of a large publication, saying it is important to remember to connect a publication to its readers.

"I try to get [writers] that can connect with an audience," Kravitz said. "I do a magazine for 80 million people, but I realize it's read by individuals."

Kravitz has a "very hands-on" role in his every day routine at Parade. A typical day includes reviewing stories, consulting about layouts and designs, and attending a number of meetings. A large focus of his is matching the writer to the story.

Kravitz said he asks himself every day: "How can I tell stories that connect emotionally with readers and move them to action?"

Since Parade has such a large circulation, Kravitz said he has used it as an effective medium for raising the public's awareness of important issues. He spoke about Greg Mortenson, an American whose mission was to build secular schools in Pakistan and promote the education of girls. According to Parade, his fundraising efforts were slow to start, having been given a $100 check from NBC's Tom Brokaw and receiving $623 in pennies from a group of school children.

Kevin Fedarko wrote about Mortenson's efforts in the April 6, 2003 issue of Parade. The response was huge, with 10,000 Americans donating money to Mortenson's cause, Kravitz said.

A reality of having such a huge readership is that one cannot always satisfy everyone's tastes.

"I have 80 million critics, I get thousands of letters every week," Kravitz said.

The letters Kravitz receives mostly address what readers perceive as bias articles or inappropriate opinions in some editorials.

"I'm not in the business of outraging people, but you see how ripples occur," Kravitz said.

In connecting with his audience, Kravitz said he tries to have a sense of humor. Parade's cover story this week was about actor Will Ferrell. The photograph of Ferrell on the cover depicted him in a suit, with one of his pant legs pulled up. Kravitz thought that this was humorous, and in step with Ferrell's comedic personality. Some readers didn't agree. Kravitz read aloud a letter he received from a reader about the Ferrell cover.

The letter read: "You had to ruin it by pulling up his pant leg in an effort to put forth and portray a sexy look. You don't have to show sex to make something readable."

"Some people just won't get [the humor]," Kravitz said.

Kravitz graduated college and traveled overseas, working as a freelance writer and photographer. He made very little money, but enjoyed what he did.

"I kept following passions and curiosities," Kravitz said.

Kravitz was 33 years old when he got his first job. He started working for Scholastic Inc. and

Continued on page 2

AMHERST STUDENT/COLLEGIAN

Lee Kravitz talks about his experience with Parade magazine and his career in journalism. Kravitz has worked for Parade since March, 2000.

Last paying passenger flies Concorde

By Jill Lawless
Associated Press

LONDON (AP) — British Airways checked in its last fare-paying Concorde passengers Thursday, a day before scheduled supersonic service ends for good.

Both Thursday's London-New York flight and Friday's final trans-Atlantic return are expected to be full, but Friday's passengers will all be invited guests of the airline, including actress Joan Collins and Concorde frequent flyer Sir David Frost.

Thousands of planespotters are expected to gather near Heathrow Airport on Friday to watch the near-simultaneous landing of the New York flight and two other Concordes — one carrying competition winners from Edinburgh, the other taking guests on a circular flight from Heathrow over the Bay of Biscay.

With that, the era of supersonic commercial flight will be over, at least for now.

British Airways chairman Lord Marshall said Concorde's final day would bring mixed emotions.

"Everyone has enormous pride in all that she has achieved, but there is inevitable sadness that we have to move on and say farewell," he said.

"The decision to retire Concorde was a tough one, but it is the right thing to do at the right time," he added.

British Airways' announcement last April that it was retiring its seven Concordes spurred an outpouring of affection for the sleek needle-nosed jet.

But airport authorities asked people not to go to Heathrow Friday for the finale, fearing traffic gridlock

Continued on page 2

Iran turns over nuclear information

By George Jahn
Associated Press

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — Iran gave the U.N. nuclear watchdog a dossier meant to dispel fears it is trying to make atomic bombs, but a Tehran envoy acknowledged Thursday the files omitted key information about a bomb-making ingredient found in the country.

Ali Akbar Salehi, Iran's chief delegate to the International Atomic Energy Agency, suggested to The Associated Press that the dossier did not specify the origin of traces of highly enriched weapons-grade uranium found in his country by agency experts.

IAEA Director General Mohamed ElBaradei has called that discovery the most troubling aspect of Tehran's nuclear activities, and diplomats recently said on condition of anonymity that Iran was expected to explain the origin of those traces.

ElBaradei suggested Thursday he expected the dossier to contain that information, linking it to IAEA efforts to verify Iranian assertions its nuclear programs are peaceful.

"We have asked ... to know the origin of the equipment," he said. "I was assured that the report I got today is a comprehensive and accurate declaration."

The United States accuses Iran of running a weapons program and points to the discovery of highly enriched uranium as strong evidence of such activity.

Iran insists the traces, found in environmental samples, were inadvertently imported on equipment meant to generate electricity and says it does not know where the equipment originated because it was purchased through third par-

Continued on page 2

EDITORIAL/OPINION
PAGE 3
SECURITY FENCE
ISRAEL NEEDS BARRIER TO HOLD BACK TERRORISTS.

ARTS & LIVING
PAGE 4
TRUE DRAMA
'VERONICA GUERIN' A REAL HEROINE

SPORTS
PAGE 8
LAST CRUSADE
HOLY CROSS PAYS A VISIT

COMICS/CLASSIFIEDS
PAGE 7

Organization will meet to raise money for homeless

By Erika Lovley
Collegian Staff

Amherst Friends for the Homeless, a non-profit organization, will hold its 15th annual Shelter Sunday on Sunday, Oct. 26 in the Amherst Town Common at 12:30 p.m. The event includes a door-to-door campaign in order to raise money for the local homeless.

Shelter Sunday relies almost entirely on volunteers. Last year, over 300 volunteers raised about $28,000 for needy and homeless organizations.

"Over the last 15 years we have raised anywhere from $8,000 to $28,000," said Betsey Johnson of Amherst Friends for the Homeless. "We are hoping to achieve that or more this year, especially because we are donating to [the Hampshire County Interfaith Shelter], which makes that goal even more important."

First Call for Help, The Grove Street Inn, Not Bread Alone and The Amherst Survival Center are among other benefactors. This year, Florence Savings Bank will cover all administrative costs, allowing all the funds raised by volunteers to directly benefit the organizations.

"Every single cent we collect goes to the organizations," Johnson said.

Volunteers will solicit thousands of homes within several hours in the Pelham, Amherst and Hadley area. In the past, the top volunteers for Shelter Sunday have been students.

"We count heavily on UMass volunteers; they have been the backbone of our success. They are absolutely wonderful and responsible. I am always impressed by their dedication," Johnson said. UMass volunteers have included members of Greek life, the Boltwood Project, and other organizations. Johnson explained that student work has affected Shelter Sunday's volunteer pool.

"We have had such an overwhelming student response that we don't have to make as much of an effort to recruit from other areas of the community."

Volunteers collect the majority of the funds directly; however, many donations are also sent through the mail by local residents who aren't home at the time of the solicitation.

"On the day of Shelter Sunday last year, the volunteers collected $15,000. We left brochures for those [residents] who weren't home. So that brought in the rest; $13,000 came in the mail the next week," Johnson noted.

Volunteers will not solicit alone.

"We group the volunteers and send them out. This year they'll be grouped in fives [and sent] to a certain zone."

Maps and instructions will be provided.

"Many students aren't familiar with the Amherst area. We will do everything we can to help the students find where they are going.

"It's fun to go out in groups. It's fun to see who can collect the most money," Johnson reflected. "Most people have heard of Shelter Sunday. It's not as if you are asking for money for an obscure project. I have never heard of a door being slammed in anyone's face. Some areas of Amherst are very generous and some people just give what they can.

"This year, we have 310 volunteers signed up. We can always use more, people can come to the Common at 12:30 even if they haven't pre-registered and we will sign them up," Johnson said.

There will be a tent on the Amherst Town Common and a special station for sign-ups. Volunteers need to be willing to commit to a three-hour period on Sunday. Training of volunteers will be held before the canvassing begins. Other volunteer positions include stuffing envelopes, handing out instructions, and organizational help.

Interested volunteers can call (413) 253-5715 or visit www.sheltersunday.org.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Jennifer Eastwood
MANAGING EDITOR Dan Lamothe
BUSINESS MANAGER Peter Foundas
PRODUCTION MANAGER Scott Pihl
NEWS SUPERVISOR Nick Markantonatos
ADVERTISING MANAGER Sean Costello
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Shannon Farrington
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Glen Straub
COMICS EDITOR Molly Eggleston
EDITORIAL EDITOR Paige Cram
NEWS EDITOR Ferron Saltiker
PHOTO EDITOR Gerald H. Ling
SPORTS EDITOR Andrew Merritt
CLASSIFIED ADVERTISING Marty Pappas
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Julie Beauchamp
FINANCE MANAGER Greg Stamm
HUMAN RESOURCE Sandra Marquet
SPECIAL ISSUES Betsy Feldman
ASSISTANT BUSINESS Ben Ratner
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING David Bor
ASSISTANT DISTRIBUTION Mark Lugaric
ASSISTANT FINANCE Richard Pacheco
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Liza Lynch
LAYOUT MANAGER Lindsay Clark
GRAPHICS ADVISOR Charlie Higgins
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Meghan Healy
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Cameron J. Woods
ASSISTANT NEWS Erika Lovely
ASSISTANT NEWS Morris Singer
ASSISTANT PHOTO Emilie Duggan
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Marzelli
ASSISTANT SPORTS Robert McGovern

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY OWNED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1907, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1938, PUBLISHED TWO-WEEKLY IN 1963, AND THE DAILY COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN PUBLISHED SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL ADVERTISING BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

Three photographers to stand trial in France in Princess Diana suit

PARIS (AP) — Three photographers will go on trial in Paris on Friday for shooting pictures at the scene of the 1997 car crash that killed Princess Diana and her boyfriend, Dodi Fayed. The trial, the latest judicial proceedings surrounding the high-speed crash, stemmed from a criminal complaint for invasion of privacy filed by Dodi Fayed's father, Egyptian-born billionaire Mohammed Al Fayed. Celebrity photographers on motorcycles had been chasing Diana and Dodi Fayed after they left the Ritz Hotel in their car on Aug. 31, 1997. The couple and chauffeur Henri Paul were killed when the car crashed in a Paris tunnel. The photographers were cleared last year of manslaughter charges in the crash and will now be tried only for pictures they took of Dodi Fayed.

Campus Perspectives

By Amelia P. Lincoln

"What is your favorite Amherst restaurant?"

sophomore
Theater major
"Pinocchio's"
Liz Scudlere

senior
Wildlife Conservation major
"ABC Upstairs"
Matt Bolus

senior
Political Science major
"Pinocchio's"
James Schaffer

senior
Sports Management major
"China Inn"
Ari Shapiro-Miller

junior
Sports Management major
"Bueno Y Sano"
Dave D'Orlando

junior
Political Science major
"Chili's"
Matt Gorgan

Editor speaks about career in journalism

Continued from page 1

fueled his passion for opening up the world to young people. Becoming an editorial director at Scholastic Inc., Kravitz also edited React, a teen magazine launched by Parade Publications in 1995. He also managed React.com, a popular website for teens that spawned from the magazine. The magazine, which Kravitz made "a venue for popular culture," lasted five years.

React "was a big hit editorially but the market didn't work," Kravitz said, noting that the magazine wasn't getting enough advertising money.

When offered a job at Parade, Kravitz initially didn't want it.

"I felt I was abandoning my commitment to young people," Kravitz said.

Kravitz became editor of Parade in March 2000. He wanted "to move this magazine that's been around for 60 years into the [next] century," he said.

Parade is distributed each Sunday by 344 newspapers nationwide.

Kravitz is a Graduate of Yale University, and earned a Master's Degree from Columbia University Graduate School of Journalism. Additionally, he's a member of the American Society of Newspaper Editors, and also President of Youth Communications Inc., a non-profit publisher of teen writing.

Supersonic flight ends

Continued from page 1

in the area west of London.

Hundreds of police will be on duty around the airport's perimeter and parking will be strictly barred, as 1,000 invited guests watch the landing from a grandstand erected near the runway.

The Anglo-French Concorde, which began commercial service in January 1976, was a technological marvel and the ultimate symbol of jet-set glamour. It flew up to 11 miles above the Earth, at up to 1,350 mph, crossing the Atlantic in about 3 1/2 hours. With the five-hour time difference, passengers arrived in New York earlier than they had left London.

But it was ultimately a financial dud. The British and French governments hoped to sell hundreds of Concordes around the world, but in the end only 16 were built. All went to BA and Air France, which grounded its fleet for good in May.

Concorde never made back the millions invested in it, even with fares of more than $9,000 for a trans-Atlantic round trip. The July 25, 2000 crash of an Air France Concorde near Paris, which killed 113 people, grounded the planes for more than a year. Concorde returned to service just after the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks, which spawned an aviation slump.

Maintenance costs also were growing for the aging jets. Last April, both airlines announced they would be retiring Concorde.

British Airways said it would make an announcement next week about the fate of its seven Concordes. Most are expected to go to museums.

Virgin Atlantic Airways chief Richard Branson, whose attempt to buy the remaining Concordes was rebuffed by BA, said it was a shame the plane would not be allowed to continue flying.

Uranium not explained

Continued from page 1

ties.

When asked Thursday if the dossier specified where the equipment came from, Salehi repeated that argument, suggesting that the information was missing.

"How can you give the (equipment's) origin ... if you have taken it from the intermediaries on the foreign market?" Salehi said.

But earlier, after meeting with ElBaradei, Salehi said the dossier answers all "open questions" about Iran's nuclear programs.

"We have submitted a report fully disclosing all our past activities in the nuclear field," he said.

Neither Salehi nor ElBaradei would elaborate on the contents of the documents, which Iran turned over ahead of an Oct. 31 deadline to prove its nuclear program is peaceful.

The IAEA has said traces of highly enriched, weapons-grade uranium were found on centrifuges at a plant in Natanz, about 300 miles south of Tehran. Minute quantities of the substance also were found at the Kalay-e Electric Co., just west of Tehran.

An agency report also noted tests by Iran that experts say make little sense unless the country was pursuing nuclear weapons.

Diplomats familiar With the situation said any failure by Tehran to clear up concerns about the weapons-grade uranium would damage its case ahead of a Nov. 20 meeting of the IAEA's board of governors.

If the board finds that suspicions remain about a possible weapons program, it could find Iran in violation of the Nuclear Nonproliferation Treaty.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 24, 2003 EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Smoking ban good for Massachusetts

The vote by the House of Representatives on Wednesday night to extend the state's workplace smoking ban to all restaurants, nightclubs and bars is a step in the right direction in helping protect the health of the residents of the Commonwealth.

The measure, which must pass through Governor Mitt Romney and the state Senate, will make Massachusetts the sixth state to ban cigarettes in nearly all public venues. Earlier in the year Romney, however, had said he wished to leave smoking laws to individual cities and towns. The 125-25 vote appears to make the ban immune should Romney attempt to veto it.

We at the Massachusetts Daily Collegian hope Massachusetts joins California, New York, Connecticut, Maine and Delaware in the fight against the tobacco industries and help safeguard non-smokers who currently have no choice but to breathe in second-hand smoke in public venues.

Should the law pass, violators will face fines as high as $300. The law would go into effect July 5, 2004. The ban was originally set to begin January 2005, but was moved to the summer months in order to allow smokers to go outside and become accustomed to the changes before winter comes. This is a clever move by the state that is fair to smokers and non-smokers alike.

Recent moves by other states and continued pressure on the tobacco industry show more people are becoming aware of the harmful effects of smoking and second-hand smoke. The ban of smoking in public venues by six states speaks volumes in terms of people's concern over the issue.

Indeed, the most important aspect of the bill is the public's health. According to the American Lung Association, officials site tobacco use as the single most preventable cause of death in the nation, responsible for more than 430,700 deaths each year. According the association, smoking costs the United States about $97.2 billion in healthcare costs and lost productivity.

According to the association, secondhand smoke causes, or can exacerbate, the following health effects: cancer, respitory infections and asthma. The Environmental Protection Agency has found that 3,000 deaths a year are caused by second-hand smoke alone.

Restrictive legislation, then, is in order. Smokers may have a right to do whatever they wish to their own bodies, but by smoking in public they are also jeopardizing the health of harmless people around them. We applaud the state for making proactive measures to ensure the safety of the residents of the Commonwealth.

The restriction of smoking in public venues is also a good step in preventing children from smoking. The fewer adults, and other role models that young people look up to, that are seen smoking in public places, the less likely children will be to light up themselves.

The ban is also a sigh of relief for those suffering from allergies and respiratory problems. For these people second-hand smoke has made living uncomfortable when stepping outside of the confines of their own homes.

The relief that non-smokers can finally enjoy a meal at a restaurant, dance without wheezing and have fun with family and friends in public venues in a completely smoke-free environment is a welcome blast of fresh air.

We hope the smoking ban passes so all residents in the Commonwealth can live and breathe more comfortably.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

Freedom at what cost?

Ian O'Donnell

I am sure you have heard it because I have heard it many, many times and frankly I am sick of it. Yes, this is America, where you can write what you want to write about and voice your opinion about anything you want, to a certain degree, without any penalty. Our Constitution says so, but sometimes people take it too far. There are a lot of naive people out there that think they know what would be best for the country. They chant anti-war rhymes and put up bright orange posters saying how our president is fighting the war for his own reasons, not for the better of the country. This is absurd, baby killers and rapists. Those soldiers were the best people in our country because they fought for America. If it weren't for people like them in the past and future, this country would be nothing because we would have no one who would give their lives for what America is. The soldiers of the Armed Forces do nothing wrong except serve their country. So the next time you see one, or think about saying a vulgar comment to them, think twice and don't. They are preserving your rights and the future of this country.

There is also a lot of information about certain subjects that we do not know and do not know for a reason. The "secrets" that the government has allow the officials of America to make important decisions. The president and his advisors are some of the brightest people in the country; they make educated decisions and think things through to the fullest extent. Who is anyone to say that they know what would be better for this country? Some people should respect the fact that they are living in a country that allows a lot to go on, unlike some other countries such as China, where if a person speaks out about the government they can be sent to prison for years. In Iraq, a person and/or his family could be killed just for speaking out against the government. Americans and some of the people living here need to have a little, wait, a lot more respect for the country and what it does for us.

There are so many things people take for granted, especially our freedom of speech, which everyone uses. What does it take for people to realize that Al-Queda and Saddam are the enemy and would do anything to disrupt the American way of life? This is why we should do what is necessary to defend our rights. But it may take another September 11th for people to realize that we are not as safe and free as we think we are. This is one reason why we need to trust that the government will do the right thing for America.

I am not saying that President Bush is the best leader we have ever had, but what I am saying is that we should respect his decisions because it is a lot easier to point fingers once the situation is over. We need to respect our country and what we have because there are a lot of people in America that take what this country has to offer for granted. I know all the people who have died for this country and their families would like some respect and recognition. Their relatives died so that you and your son or daughter could live here for the next 50 years plus. Some more energy should be concentrated on making this country better. Education, for example, or more jobs, a stronger economy, but those things will come in time once we have protected our freedoms. So, next time you think to yell how dumb the government is or how else we should be spending our money, think about the things you have. Then think of all the countries that don't have the opportunities we do.

Ian O'Donnell is a UMass student.

People need to show more respect toward our country and the people who serve it rather than cussing and degrading them.

and people need to show more respect toward our country and the people who serve it rather than cussing and degrading them.

Many people protest the soldiers' actions in Iraq and yell obscenities to them as they leave or return home. It's not the soldiers' decision to fight the war; they do what they are told without question. This is one of the biggest examples of disrespect that the people of this country participate in. They did it in Vietnam, the Korean War and Desert Storm. These men and women fight for the freedoms you use everyday and the opportunities you have.

When the men and women of Vietnam came home after fighting an awful, gruesome war, the people of this country spit on them, literally. Some called them

Holding back hatred

Morris Singer

One of the most pervasive issues in the Israeli-Palestinian conflict is the issue of the security fence. Israelis want to continue construction of the fence, they say, to secure their homeland from the threat of Palestinian terrorists. Palestinians claim that the fence will cut them off from vital access to social and economic resources. Let's look at the facts.

On Sept. 28, 2000, Palestinians took up arms against Israeli innocents in an attempt to destabilize the government and murder as many people as possible. This organized act, called the al-Aqsa Intifada, or Second Intifada (yes, the Palestinians had already committed the despicable act once before), has killed 675 innocent Israeli civilians to date, by shooting, lynching and, most prevalently, suicide bombing the citizenry. The Israeli government has been charged with the task of defending the nation from a number of terrorist groups.

The Democratic Front of the Liberation of Palestine, the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine, Fatah's Tanzim, the al-Aqsa Martyrs Brigade, Hamas, Hizballah, Palestinian Islamic Jihad, the Palestinian Liberation Front, The Popular Struggle Front and Force 17 are a handful of terrorist organizations that have claimed responsibility for attacks on innocent Israeli civilians. Eight of those groups operate extensively or exclusively within Israel.

The number of non-combatants these terrorist groups have killed is almost four times the number of combatants. This shows that the Palestinian terrorists attack innocent civilians more frequently than they attack military targets. The majority of Israelis who have been killed died simply for eating in a restaurant, dancing at a disco, walking along a busy street or riding a bus to work or school. Most of the Israelis murdered by the Palestinian terrorists were completely unengaged in the conflict, and yet they still were targeted.

Far more Israelis have been what the press calls "injured," or what should be called "seriously brutalized." I have seen Israelis without legs, severely burned or paralyzed from the neck down because of terror. These Israelis, although "injured," and not killed, will have to live the rest of their lives inconceivably impaired by what was a moment of unfortunate fate – being in the wrong place at the instant of terror.

Most of the Israelis murdered by the Palestinian terrorists were completely unengaged in the conflict and yet they still were targeted.

And the situation, despite whatever means Israel has tried, has not become any better. In fact, all signs point to the situation incessantly worsening. Even during the Hudna (the cease-fire that ephemerally existed last August), several attempts were made to incite violence and hatred. The Israel Ministry of Foreign Affairs has recorded four of the televised cases and has placed them on its website.

Even with international groups working toward peace, terrorist groups continue their attempt to motivate violence and killing.

The ministry showcased a music video featuring a Palestinian woman, dressed in army fatigues, singing, "Oh Zionists, you won't survive the volcano of stones. You are the target in front of my eyes. Join me in my martyrdom." The video allegedly aired on Palestinian television.

The ministry also showed a Friday sermon on Arafat's television station, which urged Palestinians, "Wherever you are, kill those Jews and those Americans."

"He who puts an explosive belt on himself or on his son and goes to explode among the Jews will be blessed," the speaker shouted.

The situation of incitement in the youngest of Palestinians is no better. One Palestinian television program urged children to "put down their toys and pick up rocks," the MFA said.

According to the ministry, a Palestinian psychologist who conducted a study on Palestinian children determined that more than 50 percent of Palestinians ages 6 to 11 "dream of becoming suicide bombers who wear explosive belts."

Suicide bombers have continued to murder Israelis throughout the years. Even now, more fuel for the fire of terrorism is synthesized day by day, as young children are inspired by a message of hate.

Israel has been left with no options. It must create the security fence to assist in preventing terror from reaching Israel. If the Palestinians are unwilling or unable to stop breeding violent behavior, Israel must prevent that behavior from taking brutal form within its lands.

Information from www.mfa.gov.il and www.ict.org.il was used in this article.

Morris Singer is a Collegian columnist.

The ethical pedestrian

Pat Roche

We're not crazy people. We're civilized adults – civilians, even. We live and work and play together. We conduct ourselves within the framework of a great and sophisticated society. We adhere to what Thomas Hobbes called the "social contract." This is the constant achievement of a collective endeavor. For many, it is even a point of pride, a thing to which mankind should aspire and correspond proudly (Think: "Nation State") – mere good and unified behavior staving off an encroaching world of darkness, barbarism and chaos. We are noble creatures, indeed.

Think now to our models for utopian society: the ancient Aztecs, Socialistic Scandinavia, Heaven; societal arrangements based on harmony and synthesis. Surely they're but pipe dreams, idealistic illusions, not for the complexities of this life. They could never be achieved here. Not on this campus. We're thriving on the abounding misanthropy. Besides, what alternative do we really have, what with the Platonic enterprise of the "University," having degenerated into a nightmare of bureaucracy, inefficiency and apathy? It's every person for themselves and their own agendas. We're used to this here in the northeast, a place where the collective expectation of a greater social good remains low. We are a jaded people. Fine, then.

Now that may or may not be the case, but certainly we are still capable of selfishness, cruelty and opportunism. At our core, we function at the behest of personal advancement (bona fide masochists excluded).

Okay, so what? So we fall prey to our greed, our egos and our fears. All is not lost. Again, I must remind the reader, that for the most part, we walk around in public all day and conduct ourselves properly. We hold doors for one another; we smile, say hello. We use our "pleases and thank yous." We allow ourselves compassion and empathy, sentiment and nostalgia. Transference and identification remain fundamental to our narratives. We walk in each other's shoes to better understand the nature of perspective.

But there come times too – and we've all seen this – where and when pandemonium ensues, say at points of over-run intersection, the bottleneck, the traffic jam, the seething crowd at subway turn styles, places where people are forced to behave and act together at the very brink of anarchy. This is the mob mentality; it is animalistic, and it is powerful. (Don't let it get the best of you). It even takes place in more benign circumstances, say at the intersection of Mass Ave. and where Southwest residential area lets out.

Now, at such places, at such times of heavy traffic, there is no law or rule at hand, and certainly no enforcement of the unwritten code. We are left to our own devices, left to self-regulation, self-control; we must enforce our own rules of civil conduct, code and ethic – the great and sophisticated redeeming human aspect. Times of crisis come to mind – the black out, the wake of a great flood or earthquake, any natural disaster. People have cause to band together for the "greater good," to stop looting and help re-coup civility and order. These are moments of rapture, elevated times where humans function at their very best and shine. Yes, society looks like a mighty good idea during such times. It's a proud covenant.

Another phenomena comes to mind...

Crazy people, wackos, loonies and nutjobs, can often be found standing in the road directing traffic with expansive gestures. Now, it may be traffic that doesn't necessarily need directing, but these crazies are making a point just the same. They're providing a service to the community in what, to their warped sensibilities, appear to be difficult and tenuous times, heavy traffic, honking horns and flaring tempers. These noble loonies have taken it upon themselves to mend the uncouth and otherwise unregulated ways of vehicular traffic in extenuating circumstance.

Is that so crazy?

What I am suggesting here is that as thoughtful, conscientious citizens, we all take survey of our surroundings and determine what needs to be done to return order to things. Some of you may have had the illustrious experience of being elected to the "safety patrol" in middle school – the few, the proud, the day-glow pennant-clad crossing guards – working to restore order, safety and civility to their preoccupied peers at a moment of critical decision. I urge you all to make that great leap from the herd, separate yourself and address the person walking next to you, "Hey, hold up a second. Let's let this traffic through. Look how far it's backed up. Just because we have the 'right of way,' doesn't mean that we should abuse that privilege."

Meditate on that, will you – especially those of you living in Southwest. Don't make me petition for a crossing guard. That would be embarrassing.

Pat Roche is a UMass student.

Submit a letter or opinion

editorial@dailycollegian.com | 413-545-3699 | Letters to the Editor, 113 Campus Center Way, Amherst, MA 01003

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 24, 2003

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Musical duo back on the tour bus

By Jason Straziuso
Associated Press

WILKES-BARRE, Pa. (AP) — Shattering two decades of silence on the road, Paul Simon and Art Garfunkel took the stage on Thursday night to an enthusiastic older audience that seemed happy to relive the popular songs of their youth.

The 1960s folk-rock duo seemed happy with each other, too, opening the show with the song "Old Friends" also the title of the tour and a reminder of their childhood friendship that has been strained over the years.

Before the song, a video montage showed scenes of Simon and Garfunkel and news events from years past the duo in their youth with full heads of hair, a shot of the first moon landing, a peace sign made of airplane contrails.

When the lights came up, Simon, guitar in hand, and Garfunkel, wearing his signature black vest, took the stage to a standing ovation to kick off their 40-date tour.

There were lots of smiles, bobbing heads, and clapping hands in the audience of 9,000 that contained more balding heads and graying hair than 20-something rockers.

The duo, which has sold more than 40 million albums in the United States, played crowd favorites "America," "The Sound of Silence" and "Mrs. Robinson." Simon belted out "Bridge over Troubled Water" and Garfunkel easily hit the high notes on "The Boxer."

"The Sound of Silence," one of their most popular hits, was released in 1966. Simon turned 62 on Monday and Garfunkel's 62nd birthday is Nov. 5.

"We met when we were 11, we started to sing when we were 13, and we started to argue when we were 14," Simon joked, referring to their famously fractured friendship.

Garfunkel said the two met in the sixth grade in 1953. "And it occurs to me that it's been 50 years of this thing we do," he said.

The duo, who last toured in 1982-83, shared warm smiles and often patted each other on the back.

"They sound as good now as they did back then. Unbelievable," said Tony Stringent, 43, of Hazleton. "I'm going to see them again in 20 more years."

Until a performance at the Grammy Awards in February, the pair hadn't played together since 1993. That their friendship has been rocky is no secret.

"What we had was a friendship that was estranged, and the Grammys was an opportunity to put that behind us," Simon said last month.

In a line from "Old Friends," the singers ask: "Can you imagine us years from today, sharing a park bench quietly? How terribly strange to be 70."

Just before the end of the final song, officially named "The 59th Street Bridge Song" but better known as "Feelin' Groovy," the duo shadowboxed before holding each other's hands above their heads.

Curiosity got the journalist instead, this time

Rave reports for Veronica Guerin

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

Gerard McSorley plays Bill Gilligan in this drama based on a true story about the murder of Veronica Guerin.

COURTESY TOUCHSTONE PICTURES

'Veronica Guerin'
Directed by Joel Schumacher
Starring
Cate Blanchett
Ciaran Hinds
Touchstone
Raived R
98 mins.
Grade B

In 1996, Irish journalist Veronica Guerin, a star reporter for the self-described 'popular rag' the Sunday Independent, was brutally murdered by an assassin while parked at a traffic light.

Guerin had gained celebrity status in her homeland for her exposés on corruption in the church and in the boardroom, and when she spied young children playing with used, discarded syringes on the squalid streets of Dublin, she decided to ferret out the identities of the high-rollers behind the drug industry in her home country.

Her pursuit was dogged, as the reporter ignored both pleas from her family and threats to her life in search of the truth. Her death galvanized a nation, sending the government into action by proposing projects designed to target the wealth and well being of known drug offenders.

"Veronica Guerin" is a biopic that at least respects the identity of who Guerin actually was. The movie that surrounds Guerin is just a standard biopic, nothing more and nothing less, but it does offer the sight of Guerin as a human being. "Veronica Guerin" avoids depicting the character as a noble martyr, the kind of secular saint that slick Hollywood movies adore because he or she is so untouchably good.

Since the director is Joel Schumacher and the producer is Jerry Bruckheimer – no strangers to empty Hollywood slickness – it comes as a shock that "Veronica Guerin" is so assiduously removed from rote characterizations of many biographical dramas. Schumacher and Bruckheimer aren't the types of filmmakers known for weaving subtle nuances into their movies, after all.

But Veronica Guerin is presented here as an imperfect heroine, a woman who although her heart is in the right place, is so set in her ways that she endangers the lives of those around her. Guerin knows that the drug problem is a heinous one in her country, and she sets out to expose it. And while she is dedicated, she's also stupid and egocentric. Even when a goon puts a bullet in her leg and when her child is threatened with kidnapping and molestation, she refuses to back down.

It's by the good graces of Cate Blanchett's performance that the character is still so likable and involving. Guerin flirts and teases to put informants at ease, and Blanchett imbues the cinematic Guerin with a mixture of sweetness, drive and charm. It's another terrific role for Blanchett, a fine actress who has often been relegated to nothing parts since her "Elizabeth" breakthrough. And she's matched by the performances of Gerald McSorley and Ciaran Hinds as two members of the Dublin criminal underground. McSorley is frightening as the violent and short-tempered Gilligan (watch the scene in which Gilligan reacts unexpectedly to a visit by Guerin to his home.) Hinds, as a low-rung informant, plays his role with a weary grace, a combination of tenderness and criminality. This is a man who has obvious affection for Guerin, but is torn between that and his loyalty to the underground.

Schumacher – moving away from the hyper-glossy terrain of movies like "8MM" and "Bad Company" – captures the rough, gritty feel of Dublin's rotting, mean streets. Unfortunately, as respectful as Schumacher and Bruckheimer are of Guerin and her mission, they are still incapable of delivering a complex and introspective narrative. "Veronica Guerin" is painted in bold strokes that do not allow for much thought on the political issues at hand – in this world, everything is either black (Gilligan's mustache-twirling villain) or white (Guerin's crusade.) This kind of simplistic treatment of the material – Guerin's family life is about as deep as a dance, set to U2, that Guerin does with her husband and son – reduces the power of the material. "Veronica Guerin" is a solid and unspectacular bio that does justice to its subject, but not her struggle.

Veronica (Cate Blanchette) is a reporter who gives the ultimate sacrifice for her profession: her life.

COURTESY TOUCHSTONE PICTURES

Jerry Bruckheimer (left) and Joel Schumacher (right) reunite to create an edgy realistic film that is nothing short of what can be expected of them.

COURTESY TOUCHSTONE PICTURES

Improv music never sounded so cool

Keller Williams and friends give stellar performances

Williams is a soloist, but doesn't mind sharing the stage.

COURTEST DIGUS.COM

By Diana Mogilevsky
Collegian Correspondent

Keller Williams
Pearl Street
Northampton
Oct. 22

All those privileged enough to have been at the Pearl Street Nightclub in Northampton on Wednesday night have to agree that the Keller Williams show was amazing. The one-man band, who played by himself and with enough musical toys to fill a truck, delivered a dynamic performance complete with 13 guitars, drums, pitch pipes, whistles, air FX, claves, guiro, xylophone, triangle and more.

He promptly and modestly came out and wasted no time on stage before throwing the crowd into his own world, where even the air smells like music. The audience was immediately hushed as Keller strolled out with his first acoustic 10-string, finger picking the first song, everyone slowly began to sway with the music and look at each other with raised eyebrows as if to say "this is gonna be awesome, dude."

His demeanor is professionally fun in that he sets loops seamlessly and wastes no time before jumping to the next layer, while playfully enjoying himself with a casual air of comfort. He exudes vibrancy and seems to be playing for himself as much as for his fans – Williams gives the audience a sense of having a secret peek at his creative musical operations. Among the songs he performed were "Better than Reality," "Tubeular," "Sheebs," "My Better Half," and a cover of U2's "Wide Awake."

Truly a lover of sound, he seems to sense, move and breathe all sorts of rhythm, with his harp of a mouth and dexterous fingers. There are hippies groovin' and a gentle mountain scent wafting above the crowd as Keller scats, hums and whistles to the accompaniment of his carefully chosen guitars, some played in open tuning. His style is fast-jivin-folk-reggae-bluegrass-funk; really, it is purely his own.

Before the end of the first set and to great surprise of the audience, Williams introduced his good friend Martin Sexton to sing a few songs. The crowd cheered, laughed, clapped and stared as Sexton began to sing the first of three songs on stage, "Hallelujah," with Williams on Spanish guitar. Sexton also treated the audience to "Young and Beautiful," and "Gypsy Woman." The two performers complemented each other perfectly: undoubtedly they were on the same wavelength.

The crowd was pleased, toasted and friendly. Everyone was ecstatic about the guest performance. Little did they know there would be another one. In the second set, Keller introduced trumpet player Louie G. from across the floor with his silhouette tastefully illuminating the red wall behind him. He and Williams on mouth harp harmonized and accompanied each other mellifluously to make for a unique audio surrealism. Afterwards, Williams even sang a song about how he broke a bass string, "I done broke a string," as the crowd cheered.

Despite two hours of hard playing, Williams seemed energized and focused. For his last song, he chose perhaps one of his most popular numbers, "Tweeker," a song essentially about the thrilling feeling of music. Poetic imagery and smooth progressions make this song poignant as the performer not only expresses his physical and emotional connection to sound and rhythm, but he seems to have it running through his veins as he shares this feeling with his fans.

Keller Williams' eclectic sound appears to glorify the potential of rhythm and sound, and welcomes the fans into its own arena. This is also evident in the fact that Keller invests his well-earned income on more and more sensitive, high tech and unique toys to further extend the reaches and limits of his sound for his loyal fans. Keller thanked the crowd for coming and walked off. No one moved. They knew it wasn't quite over yet. Within a minute he was back out softly singing Bob Marley's "Redemption Song" with no musical accompaniment except the serene and satisfied voices of his fans. Some were speechless, some were psyched, some were pretty drunk, but no one left unsatisfied.

Erase Errata demand to be heard

'At Crystal Palace' proves to be sound album

By Timothy Gabriele
Collegian Staff

Erase Errata
'At Crystal Palace'
Troubleman Unlimited records

Last year while the rest of the world was prattling on about a No-Wave revolution in New York, San Francisco was actually having one.

All right, to be fair there were about four or five important bands making the experimental noise in the Golden Gate area. However, they were damn good at it and still continue to be.

At the center of this "movement" is the Erase Errata, a brutal foursome who received raves for their confrontational performances and twisted, tangled and tongue-tied debut album released on Troubleman Unlimited Records. It was Troubleman who gave them their start on the seminal double-album "Mix Tape" compilation, which featured just about every significant artist, mostly unsigned at that point, even remotely connected to this recently emerged style of music.

Since then, a frenzy of "next big things" has been hyped into nauseastic spurts of maniacal list building. Erase Errata briefed a few, but were overall lost in the scrap heap thanks to more fashionable mods of communication. Karen O's willingness to become a sex symbol, or rather her drunken lack of concern about the media morphing her into one, warmed over the critics better than any uninhibited fury and finesse that some plain-looking, hard-working girls milling the stacks of Amoeba Records had to offer, proving once and for all that rock and roll is just another phrase for nothing left to sell and music criticism is never to be trusted (yes, even this one).

Though they are not likely to win any beauty pageants, Erase Errata do have an image that is not too far from the unstraightened skinny ties of the modern mod/nu new wave crowd. However, when they hit the stage like they just caught the school bus after partying all last night and stayed in bed well after their alarm clock went off, there is a sound to match that frenzied, hangover look.

"At Crystal Palace," like "Other Animals" before it, jangles and screeches in dizzying, frayed patterns of Rowland Howard-esque guitar while the guttural bass plods methodically before exploding into the next mood swing. It's raw, primal and indebted to that sense of urgency that evades most modern music. The songs themselves try desperately to keep their decadent sprawl under the three-minute mark, in the spirit of all great punk albums.

"At Crystal Palace" is also unmistakably fun for such dark and menacing territory. Their predecessors in assaultive acts, groups like DNA and Teenage Jesus and the Jerks, immersed themselves in industrial bile

Continued on page 5

This quartet known as Erase Errata has produced some of the best music of this age in their genre.

COURTESY UPPSTHEATOUR.COM

Fair of Americana

Classic festival underway

By Melissa Poulin
Collegian Staff

COURTESY TOPSFIELDFAIR.ORG

The Topsfield Fair
Topsfield
10am-10pm
Oct. 4-13

The Topsfield Fair prides itself in being "America's oldest", was founded in 1818 and has since developed into the festival, carnival and agricultural meeting ground that it is today. Topsfield's vast fairgrounds are where hundreds of New England natives and tourists come together to appreciate the simplicity and quaint tradition of north shore agriculture and trade. This year, the event ran from October 4-13. Kicking the week off with an opening day parade, the Topsfield Fair and its many workers prepared to educate, cater to and entertain the public with their merchandise and services. The fair offers many attractions annually including the traditional produce and livestock exhibits and concession stands. There is also an extensive collection of amusement park rides, a concert stage, dozens of stores and stands, even a petting zoo that offers elephant rides.

Some events unique to this year were musical performances by artists such as Juice Newton, America and Danny and the Juniors. Fairgoers were able to appreciate a multitude of activities and witness some amazing demonstrations when walking about the grounds. From Robinson's Racing Pigs to the Clydesdale Horses to the yearly Topsfield Fair sand sculpture, there was surely something for everyone.

Raymond and Marjorie Wilkinson have been working at the Topsfield Fair for 20 years in the rabbit and cavy barn, one of the oldest buildings on the grounds. They are members of the Essex County Rabbit and Cavy Breeders Associatiorl and the American Rabbit Breeders Association. Of her time volunteering for the fair, Mrs. Wilkinson said, "What I enjoy is the people. I enjoy the school kids when they come the most." The couple also mentioned that the fair has been making an effort in recent years to really bring the agricultural aspect of the fair to the forefront of the festival's attractions. When asked what he thinks has changed the most over the years, Mr. Wilkinson commented, "Some of the agriculture was lost, and it has become much more commercialized. They've had to update things."

The Topsfield Fair continues to add more highlights to keep the crowds coming back, such as the newer tradition of fireworks on the first Monday of the fair week. However, there are still the simple attractions that keep the event charming and timeless such as the annual pumpkin weighing contest, the pig barn and the flower auction. Here's hoping that the agricultural aspect is what keeps the tradition growing and the crowds returning for many years to come.

For the Record
Correction: Due to a reporting error in yesterday's Arts & Living section, Elliot Smith was said to have contributed to the soundtrack for "The Talented Mr. Ripley." Smith contributed to the "Good Will Hunting" soundtrack, for which he received critical acclaim.

Holmes' new film holds it together

'Pieces of April' is a standout flick with a psycho twist

By Sheila Norman-Culp
Associated Press

'Pieces of April'
Starring
Katie Holmes
Oliver Platt
Rated PG-13
80 mins.
Grade B+

Thanksgiving just wouldn't be Thanksgiving without a dysfunctional family reunion, but writer-director Peter Hedges comes up with an original take on the holiday disaster theme in the quiet gem "Pieces of April."

This time it's the estranged daughter who tries to unite a divided family over barely cooked turkey, plus a bitter, dying mother who wants no part of it.

In his directorial debut, Hedges, who wrote the novel and screenplay for "What's Eating Gilbert Grape?" and the screenplay for "About a Boy" gives actress Patricia Clarkson a role to treasure: an angry cancer victim named Joy.

No saint for Hedges, no nurturing mother, no words of wisdom. It's sheer rotten luck to be dying in your 40s especially when your own mother is well into her 80s and Clarkson makes the most of Joy's unhappy predicament.

She's a sardonic Mommie Dearest in a badly fitting wig.

Breathtakingly mean, astonishingly self-centered, Joy lambastes her husband Jim (Oliver Platt), mocks her two teens and despises her eldest daughter April (Katie Holmes), who has invited the family to her New York apartment for a Thanksgiving dinner.

And of course, since Joy is dying, the family cannot fight back.

Note how she warms to daughter Beth (Alison Pill), an obsessive goody-goody trying to cheer her mother up with a song or two as the family station wagon rumbles on toward the city.

"Any requests?" Beth asks.

"That you stop," Joy snaps.

Joy also insists she doesn't have a single warm memory of April, waxes on about sexual exploits before her horrified teens and begs her husband to turn the car around and head to a fast food joint for a real holiday dinner.

It's the latest in a string of award-winning performances for Clarkson, which also include roles in "Far from Heaven," "The Station Agent" and the HBO series "Six Feet Under." Back at her New York tenement, April finds that her oven is kaput. A kaleidoscope of neighbors emerge as April knocks on doors, desperately trying to find a way to cook a very raw bird.

Despite April's maroon-haired grunge look, there's no sign of the devil child that Joy remembers. Holmes appears every bit as sweet, determined and conflicted as she did for years as Joey on the WB's "Dawson's Creek."

April (Katie Holmes) and Wayne (Sean Hayes) are neighbors in United Artists' comedic drama Pieces of April.

COURTESY TEDDY MAKT/UNITED ARTISTS

Was April really the rebellious soul who liked matches? Or was her mother just so angry at her own teenage pregnancy that she rejected the child who came of it? It's not really clear.

Hedges leavens the heavy moments with side dishes of humor. April is quite the novice cook, the family excursion is certainly a road trip from hell. Why cut an onion in pieces when you can stuff it whole in the bird?

Platt, as the father and husband, brings a quiet gravity to the movie, a far cry from his bombastic turn on NBC's "The West Wing."

Fairly short and tightly focused, Hedges' movie feels more like a short story than a novel, a quick glimpse as opposed to a sweeping story. It might leave some audiences a bit hungry, looking for more.

Shot in digital film, the movie's grainy yellow hues are eerily reminiscent of fading family photos from the '70s. After all, this is the last Thanksgiving for the entire Burns family, and they know it.

Released by United Artists "Pieces of April" runs 80 minutes and is rated PG-13 for some language, sensuality, drug content and nudity.

April waits for her family to arrive for Thanksgiving dinner in United Artists' comedic drama 'Pieces of April'.

Girls that aren't afraid to be different

Continued from page 4

aimed at the pretentious coffee-house-types that infiltrated New York's punk clubs. Unlike those angry young men and women, and much like their contemporaries on the east coast, Erase Errata lift their disenchanted anthems above any brewing pot of negativity. This is thanks in no small part to the chilly contribution of singer Jenny Hoyston's chanting vocals and the unstoppable booty-shaking beat machine of Bianca Sparta's drums.

Earlier this year, the girls of Errata, along with fellow San Francisican pocket-calculating minimalists Numbers, released a set of remix EPs under the guidance of Prankster Glitch Fiends on the local Tigerbeat6 roster. The remixers, artists generally known for their sporadically quirky untechno laptop work, reluctantly refused to remove the dance elements from the originals. Instead, Erase Errata opted to title their remix work "Dancing Machine," an apt tag for what they have emphatically spun out with "At Crystal Palace."

Album opener "Driving Test" whirls about in dizzying disarray, complete with its own stopping, going and parallel parking. "I find myself getting in the same accidents/ With the same cars/ In the same place on the freeway," Hoyston hollers, as if caught in an irritating Groundhog Day-esque nightmare. On "Owls," Sarah Jaffe's guitar daftly squeaks in patches of mischievous, prickly taunting amidst synthesized hoots and four-on-the-floor pounding. These woods are the acid-tinged forests where trees come to life and the psyche manifests itself in the claustrophobic dungeonous paths that wind back on themselves.

"Let's be Active c/o Club Hott" starts out by confirming that Erase Errata are capable of living up to the questionable Sleater-Kinney comparisons that have followed them, but soon dissolves into a frantic to-do list followed by ghostly off-tempo choral crooning. The song ends with more delectably detuned trudging guitars, recalling a more mellowed version of the gardens that grow in The Dead Kennedys' "Ill in the Head."

There's a cartoonish lunacy in the errata. Bounce of the Errata sound that may be their most distinguished forte. Their musical penchant for exposing the absurdity of the mundane is both a cautionary defense mechanism from these things and an undeniably fertile talent that sets them a tier above many of their peers. "Abandon diplomacy/ I won't let it run my life/ It's a circus in my house/ Every one wants to come over to my house" Hoyston declares in "Retreat! The most familiar."

It is a circus, and this is just the carnivalesque music to reflect the broken tilt-a-whirls and other fragmented pieces of the crystal palace outside our windows.

Rent One of Ours
• Direct Billing to Insurance Companies
• Free Local Pick Up
• Locally Owned and Operated
549-RENT (7368)
No additional fee for 21-25 year old drivers
• Cars
• Passenger Vans
• Trucks
POTTERS AUTO & TRUCK RENTALS
at North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
78 Sunderland Road, North Amherst, MA. 01059
www.northamherstmotors.com
On Bus Route • One Mile North of UMass

Gentle, effective, natural treatment for neck pain, back pain, headaches, sports injuries, auto injuries, work injuries.
"Results you can feel."
Dr. Lee Kane
Chiropractic Physician
Member:
• American Chiropractic Association
• Massachusetts Chiropractic Society
Participating provider with most insurance, including student insurance & GIC
Amherst Family Chiropractic Center for Natural Health
228 Triangle Street, Amherst (next to Bertucci's)
549-1500

Nick's...for the morning after
63 Main Street, Amherst
Traditional & eclectic breakfast fare, featuring a Southwestern flare, Jewish favorites, & vegan items.
20% STUDENT DISCOUNT
Monday-Friday for the fall 2003 semester
Monday-Friday 6:30am-2pm
Satuday & Sunday 7am-2pm
256-4643
OCMP

GREENLEAVES
Greenleaves is a brand new adult 55 plus condo community. Enjoy home ownership without all the hassles; we will even clear your car of snow. Relax in our large community room of enjoy the cozy fireplace. FREE CONDO FEES for 2 years. Call for details. Many styles to choose from. (One 2-bedroom for rent.)
23 Greenleaves Drive (Off Rt. 9 across from Chili's)
Phone: (413) 253-1800

It's your degree.
Shouldn't it be your research?
At Worcester Polytechnic Institute, our smaller programs mean students collaborate with accomplished faculty to conduct world-class research. And our hands-on approach means you get to lead and author your own research.
To learn more about our programs visit our table at the Five Colleges Graduate and Professional School Information Day on October 29, 2003 from 11:00 a.m. – 3:00 p.m.
Graduate Academic Departments
Biology and Biotechnology
Biomedical Engineering
Chemical Engineering
Chemistry and Biochemistry
Civil and Environmental Engineering
Computer Science
Electrical and Computer Engineering
Fire Protection Engineering
Management
Manufacturing Engineering
Materials Science and Engineering
Mathematical Sciences
Mechanical Engineering
Physics
www.wpi.edu/+GAO
WPI The University of Science and Technology As Live

Clip & Curl 665-2629
Hair Skin & Nails
Massage Therapy
Route 116, Sunderland
(Located on bus route)
Accepted: Visa MC
Open Tuesday - Friday 9 to 6:30, and Saturday 9 to 4
Stress Relief Package
30 Minute Massage
30 Minute Aveda Facial
Hair Shampooed & Dried
Regularly $73, Now $60
(Add a Complimentary Lavender Paraffin hand dip!)
Expires 11/22/03
Aveda • ARUM • Paul Mitchell
Two full service rooms!

ATTENTION
UMass Amherst Sophomores, Juniors, & Seniors
We would like to invite you to participate in a group interview with 8-10 other students on the topic of student beliefs and values.
The researchers are offering $30 to each participant
The interview will take 1.5 - 2 hours of your time. Snacks will also be provided.
Monday, Oct. 27
1-3p, or 3-5pm
151 Hills South Building
If you are interested in participating, please email Kati Szelenyi, szelenyi@ucla.edu.
Please make sure to indicate which of the two sessions you would like to attend.

Gerald H. Lingucollegian

Junior Lindsey Fairweather will be called upon to provide scoring punch when Duquesne and St. Bonaventure invade this weekend.

Crucial pair at Rudd

Continued from page 8

weekend marks the final home stretch of the season, bringing an added sentiment to the contests.

Sunday's showdown against the Bonnies will be the final time that UMass seniors Kelly Nigh, Erin Lilly, Rayney Meisel, Maggie LaBrode, Erin Muir and Michelle Luttati will grace the pitch of Rudd Field. Nigh probably won't see too much action, though, as she's nursing an injury.

Luttati has made the most of her senior season. The Westford native has proven to be a great leader for the young UMass team.

"Luttati's been brilliant and incredibly tactical," Rudy said. "I haven't seen a player this impressive in a while."

Duquesne is the first challenge for the Minutewomen. Lauren Bracco is the most powerful weapon in the Dukes' arsenal. Bracco leads her team in scoring with 13 points (six goals). She also leads the A-10 in shots, is tied for sixth place in points, and tied for fifth in goal scoring.

"She's a force on the field, not only personally but physically and mentally," Rudy said. "She might be one of the best players when in the air in the conference. She's just a tough, disciplined, hard-nosed midfielder."

Rudy had heavily recruited Bracco, and said that he was disappointed when she decided to settle in Pittsburgh rather than Amherst. Virginia Bond will be in net for the Dukes. Bond holds a 4-5-2 record, .820 save percentage, and a 1.43 goals against average.

After Friday's matchup with the Dukes, St. Bonaventure is next on the slate for UMass. Lisa Nicola is the featured player on the Bonnies' lineup. Nicola leads her team in points with 10 (four goals).

"Nicola is a quick kid up front," Rudy said. "She's not a polished player but she gets goals, a very opportunistic player. She rips in and steals goals at opportune times."

St. Bonaventure has pulled off two huge road wins recently, first against George Washington 3-1 on Oct. 10 and then over Richmond on Oct. 12 in a thrilling 2-1 double overtime victory, handing the Spiders their first loss of the season.

UMass will look to sophomore Kristen Rutland to rise to the occasion in the absence of Nigh in net.

Minutemen make trek to outer reaches

By Becky Horowitz
Collegian Staff

With the Atlantic 10 tournament less than three weeks away, the Massachusetts men's soccer team will play a pair of crucial conference games this weekend.

The Minutemen (9-4-1, 3-2-1 Atlantic 10) have a long weekend ahead of them, as they travel to Pittsburgh, Pa. to take on Duquesne (9-2-2, 4-1-1 A-10) today at 7:30 and then continue on to Olean, N.Y. for a matchup against St. Bonaventure (1-12-1, 0-6-0 A-10) Sunday at 1 p.m.

The nationally-ranked Dukes are led by senior forward Damien Pottinger. Pottinger, Duquesne's all-time leading scorer, was named to the A-10 preseason all-conference team and for the second time this season he was recognized as A-10 Player of the Week.

"We definitely are going mark Pottinger and look to close him down," UMass coach Sam Koch said. "We feel if we stop him, we really stop most of their offense."

With a recent loss to Temple, and a slight drop in the A-10 rankings, the Dukes are looking to get back on track, while the Minutemen are trying to keep their hopes of an A-10 tournament appearance alive.

"They're a hard-working team, we know that," Koch said. "We know we're in for a tough game in that regard but I think our guys are going be ready, I think our players realize what's on the line and I think they'll come to play."

The Maroon and White will be faced with another challenge, as tonight's game will be played under the lights. Even though the Minutemen are unaccustomed to playing at night, Koch isn't worried.

"We like playing at night so it's no big deal. We'll practice playing there Thursday night so we'll know the lights, we'll know what it's going to be like. I don't think it will be that big of an issue, it'll be colder and that's the only thing that's tough about playing at night."

If the UMass defense, led by standout Craig Canavan — who left last Sunday's game early when Koch noticed him limping — continues to communicate and protect the net the way it has been, it will be a long, tough night for Pottinger and the rest of the DU front line.

On the chance that the Dukes are able to beat the Minutemen defense, they still have to beat one of two solid goalies. Colin Burns and Nick Billman are both vying for the starting spot.

"We'll just see how they train this week in practice," Koch said. "Billman seems to be healthy but we haven't made any decisions."

Sunday's contest against St. Bonaventure will be a little more difficult for the Minutemen than would be statistically expected. Although their record is nothing to write home about, the Bonnies have a handful of exceptional players.

"I think they're probably a little more dangerous than Duquesne because they have four outstanding players, they just don't have much to support them," Koch said. "Those four individuals are as good if not better than most players in the league.

"Those four can beat you by themselves and you've got to make sure you're mentally prepared to play against them. If we are we'll be ok, if we're not it's going to be a long afternoon, especially at their field, it's a tough place to play."

HC invades the Bill

Continued from page 8

to do on the penalty kill, Coach [Bill] Gilligan's done a great job with that crew.

"Power play, it's more an off-on thing. When we're on, we're pretty good, but when we're off, we're pretty bad. We've got to get more consistent with the power play."

The Minutemen saw one of their own receive honors from Hockey East this week, as sophomore Chris Capraro earned the CCM Player of the Week award for his three-point (two goals) effort in a 5-1 win over St. Lawrence on Saturday. Of course, keeping with a theme, Cahoon doesn't exactly relish in past accomplishments.

"It's a nice award for him, and it's history now so let's move forward, we don't dwell on those things," Cahoon said of Capraro's award. "It's nice that he got it, he deserves it, he played well, and let's go forward."

In their second non-conference game in as many weeks, the Maroon and White will likely mix up line combinations once again, and while Cahoon had no final decisions made yesterday, two noticeable changes were made to the "orange" line, which featured transfers John Toffey (sophomore, Ohio State) and John Luszcz (junior, Providence) skating alongside Greg Mauldin. While that grouping may change even before tonight's game, it's clear that the forward corps is a work in progress.

"You'll see a couple of changes, for a variety of reasons," Cahoon said. "You'll see a couple of new faces in there because we need to see some kids play. The crux of our lineup will be in place."

When the Crusaders make the 56-mile trek from Worcester to Amherst, they'll bring an impressive undefeated conference record with them. Holy Cross has outscored Atlantic Hockey (formerly MAAC) opponents 10-6 in three games this season. But it's coming off a 7-0 shellacking at the hands of Maine on Oct. 18 in the Black Bear Classic final.

Gerald H. Lingucollegian

Goaltender Gabe Winer has held opponents to two goals per game this season, with a .902 save percentage.

Swim teams set to begin 2003-04

By Matt Barstow and Paula Aden
Collegian Staff

After much anticipation, the Massachusetts swimming and diving teams plunge into the regular season tomorrow in a dual meet with the University of New Hampshire. Coming off successful seasons last year, both teams look to rebound from the loss of a large number of graduating seniors – 10 from men's and nine from women's. Women's coach Bob Newcomb and men's coach Russ Yarworth are not worried, due in part to transfer students and accomplished freshmen.

"We have a good collection. I like to think we're pretty well balanced," Newcomb said. "We had a gigantic graduating class last year, so we've lost a good deal of talent, but I think we've replaced them pretty well."

This year's captains are seniors Diana Alberti, Christen Dexter and Lauren Rowell. Alberti will be leading the team in the butterfly events, while Dexter will be key for the breaststroke, currently holding two school records in the event. Rowell's specialty is the backstroke, and she will be responsible for guiding the other swimmers in the event.

"[Rowell] is the real backbone of our backstroke group. We don't have a large group of backstrokers, but they're going to be good and solid," Newcomb said.

Junior Colleen Wasson is another strong swimmer for the team, and was one of the top point scorers last season. Wasson will be instrumental in both the breaststroke and the backstroke, as well as the individual medley events.

Specializing in the freestyle events, Aimee Bourassa is "extremely versatile," according to Newcomb. Bourassa will be swimming in a variety of events, from the 100 to the 1000-yard races. In addition, Bourassa will be involved in the backstroke, butterfly, and individual medley events.

The sole returning diver this season is senior Joanna Walsh.

"She's going to be taking over from a very talented graduating class, and she's been stepping up well and working out so far," Newcomb said.

Kelly Hoffrage, a transfer from the University of Kentucky, will be of great help to the Minutewomen's freestyle and individual medley events. Fellow newcomers include freshmen Nicole LeBarge and Liz Lovejoy, both sprinters who will be swimming 50- and 100-yard freestyle events.

"We've added a lot of people, that's one of the things about this team. We're going to have a lot of different people doing a lot of different things and really helping out toward our success," Newcomb said. "It's not going to be one or two, it's going to be we're all going to do it or it's not going to happen."

The most important competitions this season will be against their conference rivals.

"Our biggest meets, what we aim for, are really the Atlantic 10s. We really aim to do our best there," Newcomb said.

Other than the Atlantic 10 meets, a key competition for the women's team will be the Nutmeg Invitational at Yale University. This meet comes halfway through the season, and is a good indication of the rest of the competitions, according to Newcomb.

Senior tri-captains Sean Collins, Pete Tawczynski and Conner Townsend will be looked upon to lead a young UMass men's team to its fourth consecutive A-10 title, and sixth in the last eight years.

Junior Dylan Smith, winner of the 200-yard butterfly at last year's A-10 Championship, will race the butterfly and individual medley, which are regarded as UMass' strongest events.

Last year's Atlantic 10 Coach of the Year Russ Yarworth believes the team is in for a challenge, as it looks to rebound from the loss of 10 graduating seniors, including eight who were scorers for the Minutemen in last year's A-10 championships, and three who finished among the league's top six swimmers.

"It's a reloading year really, we got 10 freshman and two transfers, so there's definitely a lot of new faces," Yarworth said. "My approach will be a lot more basic. Last year we had a veteran team, so I will be doing a lot more teaching, but there's good talent, we just need to bring it out."

Yarworth's team is built around a core of seniors that have been part of a championship team in their first three seasons.

"Aside from the seniors, there is a strong cast of juniors, as well as a solid group of freshman like Greg Chartier and Mike Cordes, who should be able to score at the collegiate level," Yarworth said.

Local recruit Chartier (Amherst) won the 100-yard freestyle and the 200-yard medley in last year's high school state championships. Cordes (Highland Lakes, N.J.) was a member of three YMCA National Championship relay teams, and was ranked among New Jersey's top high school swimmers.

"We have a lot to replace, but I'm confident that our freshmen are strong and ready to compete," Yarworth said. "We also have two divers, Logan [Alomar] and Brandon [Doane], and I look for them to be two of the top kids in the league, they are really doing well on the boards, and with Mandy [Hixon] coaching them, they have a chance to score some big points."

The Minutemen will face a strong schedule, including Division I Boston University and Boston College.

"We have a tough schedule which should help us prepare for the Fordham, La Salle and Rhode Island races, which matter for the A-10s," Yarworth said. "In the end it will be us and St. Bonaventure fighting for the [A-10 title], so we focus on peaking during the A-10 meets that are in the middle of the season, and holding that level of intensity to the A-10 Championships, where we will face St. Bonaventure for the first time."

In last year's three-day Atlantic 10 Championships, the Minutemen were able to overcome a St. Bonaventure team that led the conference tournament for the first two days.

The season opened for both the men's and women's teams this past weekend at UConn in an unscored meet. The men took three events, and the women won one. Two freshmen came in first for their respective events — LeBarge for the women in the 50-yard freestyle, and Chartier for the men in the 400-yard medley.

Interested in a Challenging and Exciting Career that will put your Social Concerns into Action?

Consider a career in Clinical Social Work!

To find out more about an MSW or Ph.D. in social work, attend the Smith College School for Social Work.

INFORMATION DAY

Including small group discussions with faculty, students and alumni and information on course work, placement, financial aid and student life.

November 1, 2003
1:00 - 5:30 p.m.
Seeyle Hall, Room 106, Smith College

For more information call (413) 585-7960
E-mail: sswadmis@smith.edu
www.smith.edu/ssw

Smith College School for Social Work

UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS-AMHERST
DEPARTMENT OF ECONOMICS
presents
THE SEVENTH ANNUAL PHILIP GAMBLE MEMORIAL LECTURE

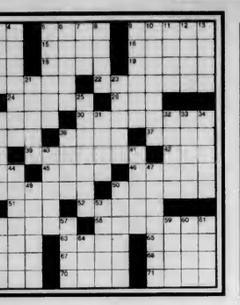
Lani Guinier
Harvard Law School

William Spriggs
National Urban League

"The Future of Affirmative Action in the Academy"

2 p.m.

Friday, October 24, 2003
Cape Cod Lounge, Student Union
Free And Open To The Public



TODAY'S CROSSWORD PUZZLE

Previous puzzle solved

Dining Commons Menu

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Roast Turkey
- Stuffed Shells
- Falafel Pocket Sandwich (vegan)

DINNER
- Dill Salmon
- Pork Souvlaki
- Brazilian Black Beans (vegan)

Daily Weather Forecast
For Amherst

FRIDAY
- High: 49
- Low: 28

SATURDAY
- High: 55
- Low: 50

SUNDAY
- High: 64
- Low: 53

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Matt Brady
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Amelia P. Lincoln
COPY EDITOR
Meghan Healy
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Irene Ros
PRODUCTION STAFF
Lindsay Clark/ Scott Pihl

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Even if you do drink a lot of beer, those abs are lookin' goooood.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Slip and slide is a fun summer game, but a dangerous winter sport.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Better slow down, there's a wall ahead.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Don't go out today. There's a price on your head.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
You just wanna bang on the drums all day. Your neighbors hate that.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Avoid going to clubs or you may end up in a hot body contest.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Someone in your hall wants you – wants you bad.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Remember: Ron Howard has red hair, and he made lots of money.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
It's cold. That means guys in turtleneck sweaters and girls in winter hats.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Your unfriendly nature scares nice people away.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Don't let those annoying phone calls to home spoil your fun.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Be more cynical. It will keep people from knowing your true optimism.

Quote for the Day

"They say I was born too soon. I say the doors were opened too late."

-Negro League star James "Cool Papa" Bell

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

AUTO FOR SALE

Purchasing a used car? Having your car repaired? Do you know your legal rights? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

1999 Explorer XLP 4x4 Excellent Condition Sunroof 6cyl. Loaded 12,500 Call 546-3477

Suzuki Sidekick SUV, Manual, 1996, good condition, 3800/bo. 577-1532/ 549-9182, www.taylanyildiz.com/suzuki

Sizzling Red Convertible, Pontiac Sunfire 1997 excellent $3900.00 549-0822

Achieva 92 Oldsmobile 66,000 Miles FWD 4, shows good condition No rust $1995.00 548-1020

1992 Honda Prelude Si, Loaded, $3900 587-0242

AUTO FOR SALE

1991 Toyota Camry Wagon, AC/Power 117,000 miles, reliable. $2500 549-4060

1992 Silver Ford Taurus AC, All-Power, Excellent Condition $2400 118,000K Call 549-3930 210-7393

$500!!! Cars from $500!!! Police Impounds for listings. 1-800-319-3323 ext4554

93 Pontiac Bonneville SDN All Power Must Sell $1500 B/O 253-5537

COMPUTERS

Quicksilver Computing Computer help Virus removal Web Design $15/hr 548-6847 Ask for T.J.

EMPLOYMENT

Bartender Positions Make up to $300/shift No experience required. Great College Job 1-800-806-0084 ext. 1525

EMPLOYMENT

$875.00 WEEKLY INCOME Mailing our Postcards from home. No experience necessary. FT/PT. Genuine Opportunity. FREE supplies. Call 1(708)686-0300 (24 hours)

Are you interested in earning $10 in one hour by participating in two simple psychology studies? Participation requirements:
*You must be female
*You must be between 18-30years old
*You must speak English fluently
This study has been approved by UMass, Amherst College, and Smith College ethics committee. Call or email (413)577-6508 Achand@psych.umass.edu

Motivated students seeking leadership outside the box. Gain experience in all aspects of running a small business Call 508-246-1230

EMPLOYMENT

Attention: South-Asian Americans: Are you interested in earning $10.00 in one hour by participating in two simple psychology studies? Are you:
*Female between 18-30 years old?
*A South-Asian American of Indian, Pakistani, Nepalese, Sri Lankan, or Bangladeshi descent born in the U.S. or living in the U.S. since age 9?
This study has been approved by UMass, Amherst College, and Smith College ethics committee. Call or email: 413-577-6508 Achand@psych.umass.edu

LOCAL RADIO STATION Entry level clerical/sales/on-air. Computer skills necessary Compensation negotiable Resume: PO Box 983 Greenfield, MA 01302

EMPLOYMENT

Make over $1000 a week many opportunities available www.studentsource.net

Drivers and Kitchen Help Wanted Apply at DP Dough Downtown Amherst

Experienced and certified high energy instructors for kickboxing and spinning classes. Call Northampton Athletic Club 585-8500

Visa/Mastercard approval agents earn $1,000/week potential. No experience necessary. Call 1-800-821-3416 ext.145

Sales Assistant for consulting/software firm. Telephone telemarketing. Economics a plus. Please send cover letter and resume to Frederick Treyz at Regional Economic Models, Inc., 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002 or fax 413-549-1038 or email resumes@remi.com.

EMPLOYMENT

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

!Bartending!$ $250/day potential No experience Nesc Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext 162

INSTRUCTION

University Bartending Classes Start Soon 1-800-U-CAN-MIX Call now for information!!! Space is Limited www.universitybartending.com

LOST

Brown Leather Wallet possibly Lost on PVTA Bus 10/24 Reward if found Call 603-682-7707

Lost: Wallet Near Parking garage 10/14 If found please call with description 413-237-1015

SERVICES

Stuck on a tough term paper? ThePaperExperts.com can help! Expert writers can help with editing, writing, graduate school applications. We'll help with any subject – visit us 24/7 at ThePaperExperts.com.

Per-Sitter available days nights & weekends. Dog walking. 9 years experience Call Gina 253-0619

All Digital Productions Pro Videography for Weddings, Bar Mitzvahs, Commercial (508) 221-8223 sweeppicker@yahoo.com

SHEAR BLISS DAY SPA SERVICES Body Sugaring (waxing) for men and women *Safe *100% Natural *Effective 253-2322 https://shearbliss.image411.com

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

SERVICES

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, an d Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Destinations, including Cruises! Foam Parties, Free Drinks and Club Admissions. Rep Positions and FREE trips Available. 1-800-231-4386 www.EpicureanTours.com

A "Reality" Spring Break 2004's Hottest Prices Book now .. Free Trips, Meals & Parties www.sunsplashtours.com or 1800-426-7710

TUTORS

Math/Physics Tutor $30/Hr plus travel Call Dr. Kline 413-552-3805

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEEKEND

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 24, 2003 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The last crusade

UM set for final tuneup

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

It's everything Massachusetts men's hockey coach Don Cahoon can do to keep his troops from getting caught up in the hype. Since the beginning of the 2003-04 season, his team has been praised and publicized and ranked by some among the college hockey elite.

This week, there'll even be history to deal with, as the Minutemen have a chance to complete the team's best start in over 30 years when they take on Holy Cross tonight at 7 p.m. at the Mullins Center. UMass started the season off 6-0-0 in 1971-72, back when the team was in the Division II Eastern College Athletic Conference.

For now, though, history takes a back seat to the Crusaders (2-1-1, 2-0-1 Atlantic Hockey) in the final tune-up before the bulk of the Minutemen's Hockey East slate.

"Everything changes," Cahoon said. "It's either getting better or its not, it's not staying the same. So we've got to make a choice to get better, and if we do that, I think we'll experience some positives. If we compromise on that front, we're going to struggle like any other team."

The Minutemen have seen improvement on special teams. The penalty killers have been a near-perfect 15-for-16 (93.8 percent), good for sixth best in the nation. The power play, while less polished than the penalty-killing unit, has also come through with timely goals, and is 4-for-17 this season.

"We're still trying to find ourselves on the power play, and we're either on or we're off there," Cahoon said. "Where I think we've made the most gain is on the PK. I think we're a little bit more in tune with what we need

Continued on page 6

GERALD H. LING/COLLEGIAN

Freshman Obi Aduba and the Minutemen will try to skate away from the Holy Cross Crusaders tonight at the Mullins Center. It will be the last non-conference game for the Minutemen until a clash with Vermont on Nov. 25.

Eagles' move just another BCS-windle

Brendan Hall

As if it's not hard enough coping with Antoine Walker, Lawyer Milloy and Aaron "Public Enemy No. 2" Boone, New England sports fans are treated to yet another fiasco.

On Oct. 12, the Atlantic Coast Conference sent an official invitation to Boston College to become the 12th member of the conference. As expected, the Eagles immediately accepted. This comes after a decision by the ACC four months earlier not to invite the Maroon and Gold into the conference, and instead invited Big East opponents Miami and Virginia Tech.

"You do what's best for your institution, and that's what we did," BC athletic director Gene DeFillipo told USA Today.

Sure, it's probably the best decision he's ever made for his school, but was it necessary to burn every bridge in the process?

With BC's departure, the Big East conference now stands practically decimated. While they can survive basketball season with 11 teams, NCAA rules require at least eight teams in a conference. And as if the departures of Miami and Virginia Tech weren't bad enough, the conference can now field just five football teams.

Even if the Big East succeeds in bringing in targeted schools Louisville, Cincinnati, Marquette and Saint Louis to the conference, that's still just seven teams for football (the latter two don't field football teams). With this strategy, it's clear now that the intent of the conference is to build a basketball monopoly. Based on last season's success, I don't blame the Big East one bit.

Talk about quick — in less than four months the Big East has gone from glory to the brink of existence.

BC and its new pals are already being sued by Connecticut, Rutgers, Pittsburgh and West Virginia, who allege BC and the ACC conspired to weaken the Big East and ultimately garner a larger portion of the television broadcast schedule.

Sure, the ACC is a very prestigious conference and all, but what about the Big East? Isn't it just as successful, given it has sent a team to three of the last six football national title games? And don't forget, every major post-season basketball tournament last season (NCAA men's and women's, NIT) was won by a Big East school.

On what is probably the only positive note, the Big East is still guaranteed a BCS bid in football through 2006. But given the current situation, there's a chance that may not even survive.

Say goodbye to the rivalries, too. Maybe this doesn't apply to the growing rivalry with Notre Dame, but hated teams like UConn, Syracuse, Villanova and Providence will surely be taking a back seat as the Eagles get set to lock horns with their new arch-nemesis ... uh, Virginia Tech?

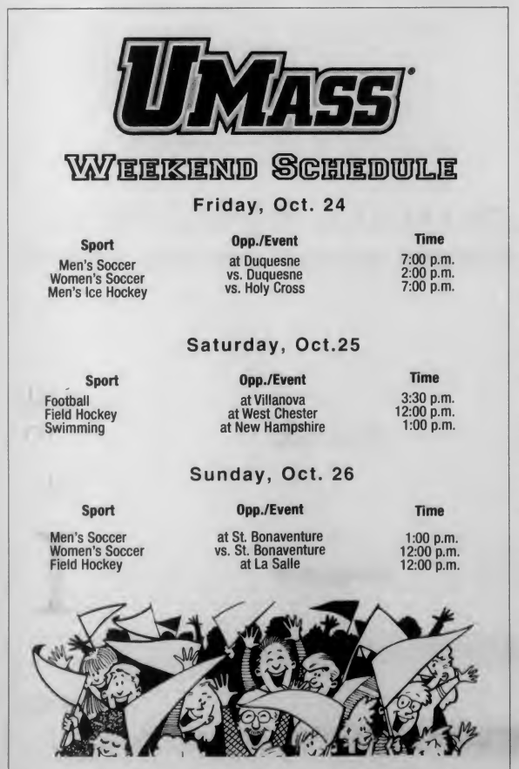
As it stands now, the ACC will be divided into two six-team divisions for football. BC will have the joy of playing Florida State, Clemson, Maryland, Wake Forest and N.C. State on a yearly basis. The current schedule also has Virginia Tech slated as BC's primary rival in their opposite division.

Oh boy. Something tells me Duke won't be feeling so lonely at the bottom in the future.

The new system also means the Eagles won't be playing "rival" Miami every year. But really, after 25 years it's been more of a clinic than a rivalry anyways.

BC's move may have been the best decision for the school, but certainly not from a geographical standpoint. The Eagles' closest conference opponent is in College Park, Md. – a good 12-hour drive from Boston, if not longer. And if you "superfans" thought the trek to South Bend was a hike, try South Florida! When BC becomes a full member (ideally by 2005), the athletic department will undoubtedly need a bigger budget to accommodate round-trip airfare for all but two of its varsity squads.

The Eagles like to tout themselves as one of the top schools in the country for developing offensive linemen, having exported Damien Woody, Marc Colombo and Dan Koppen, among others, to the NFL over the last few years. We'll see what they're made of after they get through the gut of their conference games. Chances are they won't, though. Something tells me they'll miss Rutgers dearly.



BC will also have the ability to tap into southeastern United States for recruiting. Year-in and year-out, the southern states feature some of the best high school athletes in the nation. But really, if you had a choice between Miami, Florida State or Virginia Tech, why would you even consider BC?

Basketball season looks even scarier. We're talking about the likes of Duke, North Carolina, N.C. State, Wake Forest and Maryland here. Combined, the five have appeared in a heck of a lot of Final Fours. BC has a slim chance of even making the NIT with this kind of schedule. Heck, the Eagles' best chance at success will be in the one sport unaffected by all of this (how ironic!).

BC is currently No. 1 in the USA Today national hockey poll and will remain in Hockey East, which means the novelty of thousands of drunken UMass fans cursing and chanting in unison won't wear out any time soon.

Congratulations, guys. You've sold your souls for money, stabbed your family in the back, and this is your eternal damnation — have fun!

Brendan Hall is a Collegian columnist.

All or nothing for UMass in Rudd clashes

By Matt Stewart
Collegian Staff

Do or die.

This weekend is crucial for the Massachusetts women's soccer team's postseason hopes. The Atlantic 10 Tournament is open for the taking, but if the Maroon and White wants to stay in contention it must pull off victories against Duquesne this afternoon and St. Bonaventure on Sunday.

"It's huge," UMass coach Jim Rudy said about winning this upcoming A-10 doubleheader. "If we don't win this weekend, we aren't going anywhere in the postseason."

Rudy stressed the significance of taking things one game at a time.

"There's no other way," Rudy said. "I feel that we've been doing it all season long."

Of the 12 A-10 teams, the top six make it into the tournament, with the top two receiving first round byes.

Fordham, the only team undefeated in conference play (5-0-1), finds itself leading the pack. Sitting pretty just a few strides behind the Rams are Richmond and Dayton, who have also racked up five A-10 wins apiece. While the top three seem to be set for the playoffs, there's still much work to be done. This is especially the case for Fordham, which ends its season with the most difficult part of its conference schedule, featuring games against Richmond and Dayton.

The rest of the pack is where it gets a little more interesting. It's anybody's game, as eight teams battle for three spots.

St. Joseph's has a slight lead, barely hovering above the .500 mark (4-3). For the others, one game in the win column separates the teams in the five to eleven spots, including Duquesne (3-3-1) and St. Bonaventure (3-4). UMass finds itself at the bottom of the pack (2-5, tied for 10th), but still in the hunt.

Some of the big question marks will be ironed out this weekend at Rudd Field. By Sunday evening, the A-10 Tournament picture will be much clearer. For some squads the close of the weekend will bring a rekindled hope, while for others it will bring great discouragement. Needless to say, the two games being played at Rudd are going to be extremely critical.

"The other teams are coming in here this weekend with their seasons on the line too," Rudy said. "They aren't just going to come in here and lie down."

As if the playoff implications of the games weren't reason enough to motivate the Maroon and White unit, this

Continued on page 6

The Daily Collegian

MONDAY, OCTOBER 27, 2003 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 38

Family member speaks on Kerry campaign

EMILY FOGG/DAILY COLLEGIAN

Chris Heinz talks to students Friday about his step-father, John Kerry's campaign for president. Heinz is the son of Theresa Heinz, the family name of the condiment brand.

By Ed Hudson
Collegian Staff

Chris Heinz, the stepson of Senator John Kerry, attended a roundtable discussion among a small group of students from the Five College area Friday at the Hampden Student Center at the University of Massachusetts.

He and Kerry's daughter Vanessa have been visiting college campuses across the nation with the hope of enlisting students to Kerry's campaign for the Democratic Presidential Nomination in 2004.

The self-described "Bobby Brady" of the family, Heinz recently returned from a "Dorm Storm" campaign throughout Iowa and New Hampshire.

"I'm baffled by what's going on in New Hampshire," he said. "There's a lot of support for [Howard] Dean there ... that's a little confusing."

He admitted that Howard Dean getting so much press over the past few months has helped his campaign immensely. One student noted that Dean tends to be seen as more of a "man of the people" than Kerry. However, according to Heinz, Dean grew up on affluent Park Avenue in New York.

"He is what he is," Heinz said. "There's definitely a gulf between reality and perception. ... [Kerry] doesn't pretend to be something he's not."

Heinz said the perception that Kerry has lived a privileged life is incorrect.

According to him, Kerry drives either an '87 Chrysler LaBaron or a Plymouth Voyager. Heinz said earning a lot of money has never been important to Kerry.

"I can't believe how many people think John is ego driven," he said. "[He] is not a back-slapping politician."

According to Heinz, Dean has been very vocal regarding his opposition.

"Dean went negative in his ads first," he said. But Heinz noted that Dean has simultaneously said that Democrats shouldn't attack Democrats.

"He's always sort of double talking," he said. "That's just not John's spirit."

"John is someone who is a gentleman ... not a blow-hard," he said. "John's got a good reputation in that way."

Heinz believes that Dean's perspective is limited to Vermont. He said there are a lot of issues that he doesn't think Dean is equipped for.

"I personally think Howard Dean over simplifies things," he said. "I don't think he was celebrating the fact that he signed the civil unions bill."

According to Heinz, Kerry is supports everything that furthers equal rights.

"I think he's more progressive than Howard Dean," he said.

Heinz said that Kerry is in favor of affirmative action, an issue that Umass has magnified recently with the University's abolition of the use of a point system for admission.

"We need to have affirmative action. ... we're not yet on a level playing field," Heinz said. "It's not the world's best solution, but it's a solution."

He said Kerry's stance on firearms and balancing the budget have been incredible. According to him, his stance on nuclear waste and the environmental policy is also commendable.

"People don't understand the symbiotic relationship between the environment and our future," he said.

Heinz said the Kerry campaign has worked hard to develop relationships with

Continued on page 3

Police seek identity of second man involved with disturbance

By Dan Lamothe
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Police Department released photos Friday of a second man they believe was involved in inciting the crowd during a disturbance after the Boston Red Sox' Game 7 loss early morning, Oct. 17.

The disturbance led to the arrest of 15 people on the scene after a group of at least 100 people made their way out of the Southwest residential living area, breaking windows in buildings and cars on the way up Massachusetts Avenue and attempting to set a bus stop near Sunset Avenue on fire.

UMPD Deputy Chief Patrick Archbald described their latest suspect to be a man around 5 foot 3 three inches tall with a muscular build and short, dark hair. At the time of the disturbance, he was wearing a white T-shirt with red sleeves and had long sideburns, Archbald said.

"He was a main instigator of what later developed into the disturbance," Archbald said.

Archbald said the second man has been named as a person of interest because of a review of videotape Massachusetts State Police provided and photographs a UMass student provided.

UMPD Chief Barbara O'Connor recognized the man in red sleeves herself.

"He was someone that she had identified as one of the main aggressors," Archbald said. "She's one of the main witnesses in terms of the police with this suspect."

No calls have been made to UMPD with information on the photo of the first suspect, Archbald said. He hopes that by releasing photos of both men again, someone will step forward.

"[We're looking for] just one person that can come forward and feel very confident that they can identify the person," he said.

O'Connor described the man in the first photo released the morning after the disturbance as being about 5 foot 9 inches tall with a goatee or mustache. He also most likely had bad burns on his hands, she said, after he picked up a hot smoke canister fired by police and threw it back at them.

The disturbance was the fourth related to Red Sox playoff baseball in the span of two weeks at UMass. Police fired pepperball at rioters, and rioters threw rocks and bricks at police.

O'Connor estimated at the Oct. 17 press conference that UMPD has spent more than $60,000 in overtime for police officers responding to disturbances in Southwest between Oct. 4 and Oct. 17. At least 24 people have been charged in relation to disturbances during that time period.

Anyone with information on either man can call UMPD at 545-2121 or 577-TIPS.

COURTESY OF THE UMASS POLICE DEPARTMENT

Students gather after the Red Sox loss of the end of American League Championship Series Game Seven earlier this month. Police are now looking for the names of the two students in detail.

Two speakers lecture on discrimination

By Erika Lovley
Collegian Staff

Lani Guinier of Harvard Law School, and Dr. William Spriggs, from the National Urban League, spoke Friday on "The Future of Affirmative Action in the Academy."

Nancy Folbre, current chair of the economic department, introduced the two speakers.

"I appreciate the steadfast commitment to affirmative action on this campus," she said.

Guinier was the first speaker.

"Admissions rituals are political acts," she said.

She explained that universities' admission processes are built to convey a message to the public about who wants to be educated and why the applicants are there. For instance, some schools would appear to admit mostly students who score well on the SAT's. This ratio does not accurately represent the actual pool of applicants, Guinier stated.

Therefore, racial groups that typically score lower on standardized tests, she said. Guinier spoke specifically about African Americans, whom she said can be admitted even if they have lower test scores than other applicants. This is the process of affirmative action, which higher education institutions use to create a diverse community.

The admissions process has been skewed in the United States by a process Guinier refers to as "contest mobility". Standardized testing, such as the SAT's, fix rules that determine who will be admitted and who will not, she said. The Educational Testing System is not an accurate way to determine college admittance, according the Guinier.

"Supposedly, the results are predictive of your merit," she said. She explained that standardized tests are based on quick guessing and are less than accurate.

"You're lucky if you guess right," she said.

Admissions processes base applicants' potential for freshman year performance highly on test scores.

"That's why I call the system a testocracy not a meritocracy," she said.

It has been observed that African American and Latinos do not score as well on the tests, she said, and thus, affirmative action was put into place to compensate for this deficit.

"The contest does not allow people of color to show what they can do," said Guinier. "Race is a visible marker for where the test fails. This is where I say, the contest itself is flawed."

"[Affirmative action] is a deliberate attempt to make a racial democracy that destroys a pure democracy," said Dr. Spriggs.

The admissions process needs to not only focus on providing racial and gender

Continued on page 3

Panelists meet for minority students

By Cinthia Pena
Collegian Correspondent

About 40 prospective graduate students from partnering colleges of the Northeast Alliance for Graduate Education and the Professorate toured the campus and the labs, met with faculty and staff, and spoke this weekend to current graduate students at the University of Massachusetts.

The NEA also held Fall Recruiting at the University during the weekend. The NEA recruits were minority students in mathematics, science, and engineering majors.

"We are trying to recruit minority students to these very important majors and specifically go on to get a Ph.D.," said Sandra Peterson, a faculty member of UMass. "We seem to lose many of them to other majors. We want to make them see that math and science is wonderful and show them that it's great to be a professor."

A panel of faculty, called "Why Academe?" was assembled on Saturday in the Campus Center. The panel consisted of Associate Professor of Mathematics and Statistics Professor Nathaniel Whitaker, Professor of Veterinary and Animal Science Barbara Osborne, Computer Science Assistant Professor Oliver Brock and Civil and Environmental Engineering Associate Professor Sarina Ergas. The panelists discussed their experiences in graduate school and their reasons for becoming a professor.

"It's going to be a shock when you get to graduate school," said Brock. "You'll feel like you don't belong there, but many others feel the same way."

"I caught the virus," he said. "I felt like this is the way to go. I learned to research. Now, I love my job. I can't wait to get to work every morning, talk to students and help them out. You have to catch the virus."

"I enjoy my job and the flexibility of it," said Whitaker. In the summers I work hard, but I also have time to relax and do other things. As a professor, you can be your own boss. It fits me very well."

Some students commented positively on the panel, faculty, campus, and the graduate program at the university.

"It was very motivating to hear them speak," said Jessenia Merced, from the University of Puerto Rico- Mayaguez. "The professor's availability and willingness to help is something I really liked."

The professors gave the students their contact information, which some students appreciated.

"[It] lets us know they are there for us," Merced said. "I love the university and I am considering coming here."

The Northeast Alliance consists of 10 alliance institutions. It is supported through a grant from the National Science Foundation with additional funds provided by several units within the University.

For more information, visit the NEA office in 528 Goodell, or contact the alliance at alliance@resqs.umass.edu.

EDITORIAL/OPINION
PAGE 4
MARRY ME UMPD
ONE STUDENT'S EXPERIENCE WITH THE CAMPUS POLICE
ARTS & LIVING
PAGE 5
PLEASANT SURPRISE
BRIAN JONESTOWN MASSACRE HIT NOHO
SPORTS
PAGE 10
SUPER SHANNON
JAMES CARRES UMASS PAST VILLANOVA
COMICS/CLASSIFIEDS
PAGE 8

Volunteers go door-to-door for donations to benefit homeless

By Erika Lovley
Collegian Staff

AMHERST — Amherst Friends for the Homeless held its 15th annual Shelter Sunday yesterday afternoon on the Amherst Town Common, relying solely on volunteers for its door-to-door campaign to gather donations.

Almost 300 volunteers from local organizations and groups participated. A high percentage of the volunteers were students from the University of Massachusetts. Several fraternities, including Zeta Beta Tau, participated, as well as members of the Boltwood Project.

The funds raised will be donated to local homeless and needy organizations like the Amherst Survival Center, Not Bread Alone, The Grove Street Inn, First Call for Help, and The Hampshire County Interfaith Shelter.

"This is the only event our organization does all year. We don't give to any other organizations and don't respond to individual requests for help," Betsey Johnson of Amherst Friends for the Homeless said. "We've found that we best serve through [these] experienced groups."

All administrative costs were covered by Florence Savings Bank, so all funds could be directly donated.

Last year, Shelter Sunday raised approximately $28,000. $15,000 was made through both the door-to-door campaign and $13,000 came by mail-in donations.

"We are hoping to achieve that amount or more this year," said Johnson.

On-site training and information sessions were held for volunteers on the Common where volunteer groups were formed and assigned a specific area to visit.

"People like going out and soliciting. A lot of people [in the community] are very impressed that young people with such busy lives are willing to donate their time," said Johnson.

"My mom and I were driving through Northampton and saw this huge sign for Shelter Sunday and decided to call," said Jenna Miller, a volunteer and Amherst High School senior. "I'm volunteering for the fun of it and to benefit the homeless."

"My son used to volunteer [for Shelter Sunday] with his youth group through the Jewish Community of Amherst. It seemed like a great thing to do," said volunteer Lisa Miller, a labor nurse at Holyoke Medical Center.

Volunteers canvassed through neighborhoods in the Amherst, Pelham, and Hadley area in groups of five. Some traveled by foot or by car. At households

Continued on page 3

North Korea says it can consider offer of security guarantee

By Jae-Suk Yoo
Associated Press

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Brightening prospects for ending a nuclear stalemate, North Korea said Saturday it will consider President Bush's offer of written security assurances in return for dismantling its nuclear weapons program.

It was the latest about-face by North Korea, which had called the offer "laughable" and "not worth considering" and has been unclear about its actions and plans during the yearlong dispute over its atomic ambitions.

Still, the abrupt shift raised hope of resuming six-nation talks aimed at ending the standoff. U.S. officials believe Pyongyang already has one or two atomic bombs and can yield several more bombs within months from its nuclear programs.

North Korea has already informed the Bush administration of its new intentions through its diplomats at the United Nations, said an unnamed spokesman for Pyongyang's Foreign Ministry.

The White House responded to North Korea's latest comment with guarded optimism.

"We're looking at the message, and we hope North Korea will return to the Beijing six-party talks," said Jimmy Orr, a spokesman for President Bush.

Separately, the Japanese government said North Korea may have test-fired a short-range missile off its eastern coast Saturday. It is the third suspected missile launch by Pyongyang this week.

A U.S. official said on condition of anonymity that the North Koreans normally do such testing in three stages, and this one appeared to have been previously scheduled.

During a Bangkok, Thailand, summit of Asia-Pacific leaders earlier this week, Bush proposed that the United States, Russia, South Korea, Japan and China would offer written assurances the North will not be attacked if it promises to dismantle its nuclear program.

"We are ready to consider Bush's remarks on the 'written assurances of nonaggression' if they are based on the intention to coexist with the [North]" and offer "simultaneous actions," the North Korean spokesman said.

The comments were carried by Pyongyang's official KCNA news agency.

you accidentally knock your roommate's toothbrush into the toilet. he's not home. what do you do? answer the question. compare your opinions with others. explore what matters at pwc.com/lookhere.

PricewaterhouseCoopers

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Jennifer Eastwood
Managing Editor Dan Lamothe
Business Manager Peter Foundas
Production Manager Scott Pihl
Night Supervisor Nick Markantonatos
Advertising Manager Sean Costello
Editorial Production Shannon Farrington
Arts & Living Editor Glen Straub
Comics Editor Molly Eggleston
Editorial Editor Paige Cram
News Editor Ferron Salniker
Photo Editor Gerald H. Ling
Sports Editor Andrew Merritt
Classified Advertising Marty Pappas
Distribution Manager Julie Beauchemp
Finance Manager Greg Stamm
Human Resource Sandra Marquez
Special Issues Betsy Feldman
Assistant Business Joclynn Sorenson
Assistant Advertising David Bor
Assistant Distribution Mark Lagatic
Assistant Finance Richard Pacheco
Advertising Production Lisa Lynch
Layout Manager Lindsay Clark
Graphics Advisor Charlie Higgins
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Asst. Arts & Living Meghan Healy
Asst. Arts & Living Cameron J. Woods
Assistant News Erica Lovley
Assistant News Morris Singer
Assistant Photo Emilie Duggan
Assistant Sports Mike Marzelli
Assistant Sports Robert McGovern

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Hatchet in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Collegian in 1956. Published Tri-Weekly 1967. The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

WRITE FOR NEWS
NEWS MEETING 10/27 6PM

Kerry's stepson puts down presidential candidates younger voters, but admitted that Dean has the "X- factor." Dean has been particularly Internet savvy, he said, adding that the Kerry campaign has had to respond by elevating their online presence. Heinz believes Kerry has the second-best web presence of all the candidates.

Continued from page 1

"It took a while for our people to understand that they had to make the Web site a destination." He said. "It's a great grassroots tool."

"Our campaign is a lot better than it was a few months ago," Heinz said. He gave the campaign a rating of about 7.5 to 8 out of a possible 10.

"There's a lot of things we could be doing better," he said. "But there's a lot of things we're doing well.

"It's very person-to-person," he said. "We're running a great traditional campaign."

According to Heinz, the Kerry campaign is in an early-stage strategy. Kerry plans to increase the visibility of his campaign as the Primaries approach, he said.

"People don't understand that John's a decorated war veteran," he said. "That's the info we can supply."

Heinz would like to see Kerry win the New Hampshire primaries but he admitted that he feels the state is unpredictable. He said if Kerry does not win New Hampshire, the next course of action would be for the campaign to execute a national strategy.

"I think John's a national candidate," he said. "I know John has a lot of support in Florida. ... [He] is fairly well thought of down there."

According to Heinz, Kerry has raised the second-highest amount of money in Florida behind Senator Bob Graham.

He said there is also a core of people in Iowa that support Dean, but according to Heinz, about 75 percent of the people there are still undecided.

"I feel good about Iowa," he said. "We should win there and I think we will."

Heinz said in addition to Dean, the Wesley Clark campaign has also had an effect on Kerry.

"It really slowed down the momentum," he said. "We need to just keep plugging away. ... Obviously Clark has muddled that a little bit."

But Heinz also said that at the end of the day, Clark will have a hard time making it through the primary process due to his becoming a Democrat only recently.

"But he's a great American," he conceded.

Heinz said although Senator John Edwards has done a good job, he believes voters don't think he is ready.

"Edwards is pretty new to the scene and hasn't been able to flush out things nationally," he said.

According to Heinz, Senator Joseph Lieberman is going to win Connecticut, but that as more people have gotten to know him, his poll numbers have been going down.

It has been difficult for Kerry to get endorsements from allies in the Senate with so many others members campaigning, Heinz said. He doesn't foresee any significant movement in the Senate as long as there are four others in the race, but he said Kerry has the second-best political support behind Richard Gephardt.

"He's clearly the favorite candidate by everyone who works in Washington ... by a long shot," Heinz said. "They know he's fair-minded."

Heinz, who graduated from Yale in 1995, focused much of his studies on the war in Vietnam. He said there are clear similarities between the war in Vietnam and the situation in Iraq.

"We obviously have a guerrilla warfare environment," he said.

However, he said the situation in Iraq was definitely an issue that the United States needed to address more so than Vietnam, he just believes the current administration has gone about it the wrong way.

"I fully place the blame on what's happened in Iraq on the Bush administration," Heinz said. "Anything different is just playing politics."

Kerry wants to internationalize the effort, Heinz said. He believes it is important to underscore the fact that Kerry has been very thoughtful in foreign affairs.

Heinz said he believes the Republican Party has become arrogant.

"There's nothing conservative about blurring the line between church and state," he said referring to President George Bush's allegiance to Jerry Falwell as an attempt to capture right-wing religious votes.

Heinz said Bush lives in a "world of gray." He thinks Bush brings down the level of discourse for the nation.

"The writing is pretty much on the wall," he said. "There is so much work that needs to be done to make this country better."

The next major stop for Chris Heinz will be the Iowa Democratic Party's Jefferson-Jackson day dinner on Nov. 15.

Speakers talk about discrimination diversity, but economic and geographical diversity as well.

Continued from page 1

According to one study of 146 selective universities in the country, 74 percent of the admitted students came from the top 25 percent of social economic indicators. Only 3 percent came from the low-income indicators.

"Higher education has become a gift from the poor to the rich," she said. "Education is being enjoyed by the privileged."

Referring to her book, "The Miner's Canary", Guinier described Latinos and African American's as canaries. As the canary gasps for air in the mines, she said, the miners (admissions process), aren't trying to fix the harsh environment.

"Instead, they say, 'Let's fix the canary!'" Guinier said.

Guinier explained that race is a diagnostic tool that points out problems in the admissions process, not only for colored students, but for poor and working class whites as well.

"The scores on the SATs tell you how much money your parents have, not how well your first year college grades are going to be," she said. "You can determine someone's weight from their height more accurately than freshman year grades from the SATs. That correlation to me is weak."

"We've accepted the bias that blacks score inferior, that black kids are worse," Spriggs said. "We should not be so quick to assume there are [only] racial differences in the test scores."

This means that many bright students, both from minority backgrounds and those from low-income families are often overlooked by the system because they tend to score lower on tests and less likely to be admitted.

"[The working world] wants people who will get the job done. A test score won't tell them that," explained Spriggs.

Institutions of higher education need to consider what will really keep the institution diverse. They need to be willing to experiment and discard the use of the "testocracy" in order to be truly democratic.

"This is our moment of opportunity to rethink our commitment to public service and admissions policies, not as a reward, but as an investment in the future."

Addressing the students," Guinier said. "I hope you are here not only to do well, but to do good."

Both speakers were guest speakers of the 7th Annual Philip Gamble Memorial Lecture, which honors the late Philip Gamble, a faculty member and chair of the UMass economics department.

The lecture was sponsored by the UMass economics department, " and held in the Cape Cod Lounge of the Student Union.

Emilie Duggan/Collegian

Lani Guinier speaks Friday about her assessment of race and affirmative action. Guinier is a Professor of Law at Harvard Law School.

Shelter Sunday helps volunteers make a difference for homeless

Continued from page 1

where no one was home, a brochure was left explaining the meaning of Shelter Sunday and an envelope for mail-in donations.

"People really know about [Shelter Sunday] because it's been happening for 15 years. Some people leave checks outside the door for the volunteers to pick up," said Johnson.

Solicitations were taken from neighborhoods of all different socio-economic backgrounds.

"It's amazing, even the poorest areas give so much," said volunteer John Clayton, a professor at Mount Holyoke College.

In Stutton Court, Amherst, donations ranged from 25 cents to $25.

"I have no bills, is change OK?" one Stutton Court resident asked canvassers.

She returned to the door with a piggy bank and dumped its contents into volunteers' donation envelopes.

One man, a volunteer from the Unitarian Universalist Society of Amherst, who wished to remain anonymous, volunteered for personal reason.

"I have a step son who is homeless. He's twenty-one, and he's out living on the streets," he said. "[My stepson] had lived with us since he was five. Everything I've done for him, he's rejected."

"Shelter Sunday is one way I found I could do to something," he continued.

"It became apparent recently that my stepson is mentally ill," the volunteer said. "I can't blame him for that. ... But this way, I can do something for somebody else."

For more information, call 413-253-5715 or visit www.shelter-sunday.org.

STRATTON/OKEMO
COLLEGE PASS
Only $299*
MORE MOUNTAIN. LESS MONEY.
With a combined 1,184 rideable acres of terrain, 203 trails, and 34 lifts, you can't beat this deal. Take a break from the books and get free with the Stratton Okemo College Pass. Ski and ride two of Southern Vermont's best mountains all season long for as little as $299*. College students must provide proof of full-time status with documentation from Registrar's Office.
PURCHASE BY 12•6•03
OKEMO MOUNTAIN RESORT
1-800-78-OKEMO
okemo.com
STRATTON VT
1-800-STRATTON
stratton.com
[illegible] Tax not included. Must be 25 or under

The BLUE WALL PUB
THIS WEEK at The BLUE WALL PUB
MONDAY Nancy Cole
Karaoke 7-11
Monday Night Football
TUESDAY Open Mic from 7-11
WEDNESDAY Bill Arnold
DJ-Rhythm Systems
THURSDAY Mpeli Mwakaliku
DJ-DMAD
FRIDAY HALLOWEEN PARTY
Richard Mwandemand
DJ-Aquarius
SATURDAY Mpeli Mwakaliku
DJ-DMAD
LIVE MUSIC starts at 9:00PM.
OPEN MIC starts at 7:00PM. The Sign-Up sheet goes out at 6:00PM. Bring your talent and your friends and your instruments. We'll provide the stage and sound equipment and 20 minutes for you to knock'em dead!
ALL MUSICAL STYLES are encouraged to participate!
AS ALWAYS, 18+ to party, 21+ to drink.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

MONDAY, OCTOBER 27, 2003

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Sept. 11 investigation: government uncooperative

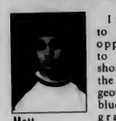
Following the terrorist attacks of Sept. 11, 2001, the United States Congress passed Act H.R. 3162, the "Uniting and Strengthening America by Providing Appropriate Tools Required to Intercept and Obstruct Terrorism Act of 2001." This controversial act by Congress is commonly referred to as the "Patriot Act." The act's language allows the U.S. government broad intrusive powers to "deter and punish terrorist acts in the United States and around the world, to enhance law enforcement investigatory tools, and for other purposes."

Title II of the Act "Enhanced Surveillance Procedures," Sec. 201, states: "Authority to intercept wire, oral and electronic communications relating to terrorism" will be allowed due to this legislation. In simpler terms, the Act allows the government the right to watch what Web sites citizens view, what books or articles they read (buy, or withdraw from the public library), what organizations they belong to or support, and so much more. The government has given itself access to our pursuit of knowledge as well as all of our communications in the name of protecting America from terrorism.

The National Commission on Terrorist Attacks Upon the United States has been given until May of 2004 to investigate the Sept. 11 attacks. Created by Congress at the same time as the Patriot Act, the Commission, consisting of 10 bi-partisan members, is supposed to have access to all documents involving the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks — regardless of their government decided security classification. This Commission's job is to analyze all sources of information and communication in the government concerning Sept. 11. In the same way that a citizen's right to privacy was lifted by the Patriot Act, the creation of the Commission lifted the government's right to secrecy (from the Commission concerning terrorism).

Thomas H. Kean, Chairman of the Commission, according to the New York Times, has accused the White House of withholding highly classified documents from his panel. Kean believes that the panel will be forced to issue subpoenas to government agencies due to the Bush administration's refusal to cooperate.

The withheld documents include the president's daily briefings which supposedly include intelligence reports relating possible terrorist attacks, given to Bush before Sept. 11, 2001.



No American president has ever released such information before, according to Kean, however, nor has the government ever gone to such legislative and controversial acts to investigate the communication of possibly harmful information. Additionally, the information received by the Commission would be used in their investigation only, and the report's details and sources will be held confidential by the panel. The President should not be asking for presidential privilege in exchange for American safety.

Whether the Patriot Act or the National Commission on terrorist Attacks upon the United States are constitutional or not is irrelevant to this matter. The government cannot decide to disavow one of our most sacred constitutional rights, designated by the fourth Constitutional amendment "The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers..." and then do the same to themselves only to later claim "presidential privilege." By denying the Commission access to all documents involving terrorism, George Bush and those in the White House send the message that they are not citizens whose rights may be decided by the government, and that they need not take responsibility for or follow the laws which they, themselves, have passed. The refusal of documents to the Commission is unpatriotic.

Information from the Electronic Privacy Information Center (http://www.epic.org/privacy/terrorism/hr3162.html) and the New York Times Sunday Edition was used in this article.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

Marry me, UMPD

Matt Brochu

I would like to take this opportunity to give a shout out to the courageous men in blue who so graciously allowed me to take part in their UMass-Amherst "Alcohol-Free 2003" campaign last April.

It was about 9 a.m., and I left the comforts of my room to return a gym bag to a friend in Puffton. Granted, I must've looked suspicious as hell in my button-down polo shirt, Dashboard Confessional hoodie (or is it hoody? I never know), and an empty purple duffle bag with pink straps in my hand. So it's pretty clear that the observant police officers in Green Lot made a mental note, "Suge Knight has entered the premises. Keep gun handy. Wait, I'm just a freaking cadet and can't carry a gun yet. Maybe if I stick my hand in my pocket he'll think I'm packing heat."

I threw the bag in my car and tried to start it, but the battery was dead. So I asked the gentlemen if they could help me out with a jump, but they were busy protecting the parking lot and couldn't help me out. You see, a white van was parked kind of crooked, so all four of them had to surround it and inspect it with their flashlights like it was one of those hidden 3-D pictures that I can never see. So I headed back to Emerson to round up some jumper cables and returned a few minutes later with two friends. That's when it all went down.

We saw my friend Jay, a 21-year-old, and his friend already en route to the parking lot, so we joined them. He was carrying a Bud Light 30-rack that just so happened to contain 30 cans of Bud Light (all of them empty), to redeem at the store for $1.50. I know, what loser under the age of 40 who isn't homeless actually does that? Jay does. But anyway, after a few minutes all five of us reached Green Lot, at which point all hell broke loose. We were swarmed by the Po. If there had been a door to break down, rubber bullets to shoot, or an attack dog to release, they would have. But it was all for good reason. It became clear that these knights in shining armor simply observed that, between the five of us, we were only a gun, a criminal record, and a set of balls short of busting a cap all up in their grills.

I must've looked suspicious as hell in my button down polo shirt, Dashboard Confessional hoodie ... and an empty purple duffle bag with pink straps in my hand.

They had every right to ask Jay for his ID (I know, I used to watch Baywatch Nights) which they subsequently did. This guy had such an incredible cop voice too: so professional, so badass, so worthy of doing voiceovers for movie trailers. Jay politely complied, immediately giving verification of his age, as well as showing them that the 30 was ... well, full of empty cans. So that should've been it. Case closed, time to go look for more illegally parked cars, right? Wrong. But again, what happened next was completely justifiable. I was clearly looking for trouble. Maybe it was my backwards hat. Maybe he caught a whiff of the Pepsi on my breath (I hadn't brushed my teeth). Or maybe he recognized my face from one of those composite sketches down at the station. Either way, I totally deserved it.

The not-quite-an-officer-yet turned to me and asked for some identification. "We witnessed the hand-off, son," he added. The what-off? This wasn't football. There was no drug deal. But apparently I had "blatantly" handed the 30-rack, which had not yet magically had sex with itself to produce beer and was still empty at this point, to Jay to avoid being caught by Mario Lopez and his buddies from Pacific Blue. I denied the accusation and my friends confirmed my story. "You mean to tell me that myself and these three officers are wrong?" Damnit, he saw right through me. How could I, myself, me, know what I was doing? For all I know I could've been operating a motor vehicle under the influence of alcohol ... on the sidewalk ... without a car. I was way too busy walking, talking, and being obnoxiously sober to be conscious of my own actions. They clearly had a better vantage point from the darkened parking lot 120 yards away.

Images of prison bars, dropping the soap, orange jumpsuits, and conjugal visits raced through my mind as I handed him my license. I came clean and told him that I was indeed only 20 and an RA from the building across the street. To my surprise, he relented and motioned to his cohorts to leave the scene of the crime. Victory. I had beaten the system, damn near gotten away with murder. So what did I do next? Jumped the getaway car and rode off into the night to litter and run red lights.

Matt Brochu is a Collegian columnist.

Inching toward victory

Matt Elder

It's a good thing we didn't win the ALCS.

I know, it's been over a week. Yes, I should get over it. However, I am biweekly here so you have to deal with it.

There are two reasons it's a good thing that we didn't beat the Spankees. One: during the Red Sox playoff run, my friends and I did absolutely no work whatsoever. We even skipped classes. I know someone who skipped a test to watch Game 6. Two: with a Red Sox victory, we'll have nothing to look forward to ever again.

My roommate is a hardcore Yankees fan. He's a good kid, but hey, no one's perfect. Throughout their playoff run, he's put off work and he's frequented the liquor store more and more. Not going to the gym, he really hasn't gotten much done since Mussina lost Game 1. He had to write last minute papers and miss classes.

I noticed my work seriously slipping during our playoff run. Game night was beer night for us. The way the Red Sox won and lost almost encouraged drinking. Scott Williamson has a two run lead, but he has to give up a home run in the bottom of the ninth. David Ortiz hits a double in the eighth to the wall in right field to clinch the A's series. And then, there was Game 7.

We can always look forward to what wasn't. As Sportscenter was playing highlights of the Game 7, I honestly felt like I was going to puke. Much like Bucky Dent 30 years ago, Aaron Boone gave himself a new middle name with one swing of the bat.

If, god forbid, the Red Sox ever won the World Series, we would have nothing else to look forward to. My parents and grandparents haven't seen the Sox get a ring. The everlasting question is: will I? After Game 7, my mom said I have graduated to becoming a Red Sox fan. I guess you have to have your heart broken to gain that status. She saw Buckner, she saw Dent. Now, she's seen Boone.

After Game 7, my mom said I have graduated to becoming a Red Sox fan. I guess you have to have your heart broken to gain that status.

For the Red Sox fans, a World Series bid would've put everything on hold. Yankees are used to this. We are used to the result of Game 7. If the Sox made the Series, life as I know it would come to an abrupt halt. The same would've happened to Sox fans across the UMass campus, across the state, and across the country. For us, a World Series happens about once every 25 years or so. When it happens, we have to go all out.

At around the 5th inning of the game, as I sent a friend out to get the victory champagne, I was thinking to myself, "yeah, I do have a test tomorrow. However, I can always take this semester over again; a World Series berth could be a once in a lifetime opportunity!" So failing the test was justified if it meant celebrating the win.

As I sat in my class Friday morning, with a test in front of me, I was half drunk and half hung over, but I came to a conclusion. Yes, a World Series berth would've been great. But the postseason just wouldn't have been as fun. At least we can look on the bright side. Hey, there's always next year.

Matt Elder is a Collegian columnist.

Typical American politics

World Perspectives

Aaron Wodin-Schwartz

"Oh, that's just typical American politics," they say in Europe, "just crazy American politics." I think that I may be inclined to agree. I look over the political events that unfolded in the United States over the past month and, much like my European peers, I find myself quite surprised by many of the political aberrations that I observe: the election of Ah-nold Schwarzenegger to the California governorship, the return of the US to the UN Security Council to appeal for help in Iraq, Washington's arbitrary and aggressive Middle East policy, the continued presence of the Bush administration in power in the White House, and ten candidates vying for power from a single party in a primary election.

How can the United States, as the self-proclaimed combatant of communism, possibly ask the Chinese government to devalue their currency for the good of American markets and expect a positive response?

"What a bizarre place the States must really be," they speculate. "These things would never be allowed to happen anywhere else in the world." I generally reply with something to the effect of, "Well, ours is a very distinct culture that approaches politics in a highly traditional manner. It is our unique history that has led us to where we are today."

However, neither my Brusselian colleagues nor I are willing to dismiss the matter so readily. After all, it is here, in the capitol of Europe, that the political affairs of the world, and particularly its lone hegemon, are analyzed and discussed; their effects are interpreted with regard to world business and European integration.

The disparity between American political thought and the rest of the world might be easily written off, though certainly not excused, as the result of Cold War inertia. However, one may notice that during the Clinton years even the US began to exist in harmony with the global system of economic prosperity and multilateral diplomacy. Furthermore, the former epicenter of the Evil Empire, Moscow, has already made much more impressive advances in the realm of political reform and modernization than has Washington, despite being ostensibly far less democratic than its western archenemy. A typically American explanation is that Sept. 11 "changed the way the world works." A slightly more astute observation reveals that it is actually the American response to the terrorist attacks that has so drastically altered the once-emerging world balance. So my European colleagues remain just a bit puzzled about the lack of explanations for America's political misbehavior.

The most perplexing aspect of American political happenings is the fact that they are tolerated by the American public despite contrasting sharply with the general notions of ethical and beneficial behavior in the realm of world politics. Rather than promoting a profitable regime of international cooperation and political reconciliation like the rest of the world's other developed nations, the United States instead moves to push the international system into a single line of thought. The natural conclusion associated with this phenomenon is that either the American public is extremely politically active but misaligned in its perception of world affairs, or that it is so politically apathetic that it allows its leaders to use national institutions and resources to pursue their own personal goals. Regardless of which of these two deductions is closer to the truth, it is indeed quite startling, and admittedly even a bit laughable, to follow American politics from outside of the context of the U.S.

A perfect example of backward American thinking is the recently passed ban on partial abortions by the U.S. Congress. Most Europeans wonder why the nation that claims to be the vanguard of tolerance and societal advancement would be taking such drastic steps backward in terms of human rights and liberal thought. Indeed, it is hard for me to even take a measure such as that seriously both because of the fact that it is so petty and insignificant politically, and because it is based on a form of thought that has nothing to do with politics and is supposed to be separated from the state. It is so absurd that even I am inclined to simply regard it as "typical American politics."

An issue of greater European concern than the abortion question is that of the U.S. policy in the Middle East. European nations and citizens were overwhelmingly in opposition of the U.S. invasion of Iraq. They were neither keen about American intervention in Afghanistan nor approving of the general declaration of war against an abstract concept in the first place. These are large issues that most Europeans have come to grips with and tend to resent American leadership for. It is the smaller issues, however, that continue to baffle both my colleagues and myself here in Brussels.

Take, for example, the seemingly arbitrary anti-Syria campaign occurring right now both in the White House and at the other end of Pennsylvania Avenue. Both the House and Senate are considering a House bill that has been publicly supported by White House spokesman Scott McClellan; it would entail severe sanctions against Syria including freezing of their US assets, a stop on investment in Syria, and a ban on Syrian airlines in the US. The peculiar detail is that Syria has done nothing since the dawning of the Bashar al-Assad administration to have incurred such wrath. The only thing that has changed is the attitude of the Bush junta and their need for answers to an increasingly discontented world.

If it is indeed stability and democratic peace that Americans and their administration want, then they should slow down and follow the model laid out by their counterparts who have already achieved it. The contradictions in American political thought and rhetoric are so well defined from across the Atlantic that it really seems quite strange and a little scary that such a conservative and fundamentalist nation should dominate the world system. This is the reason why the world is so wary of American power, and the reason why they often dismiss our unique proceedings as simply "typical American politics."

Aaron Wodin-Schwartz is a Collegian columnist on exchange in Belgium.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, OCTOBER 27, 2003

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

'Roadtrip Nation' gives direction

By Lauren Freeman
Collegian Staff

For someone that claimed to have no direction for his life, Mike Marriner has certainly accomplished a lot. With a book and a DVD already under his belt, and representatives from the likes of Teen People and Forbes Magazine looking to get a bit of his time, Marriner seems to have made a career out of not knowing what to do with his life.

In a world where advertisement slogans are declaring 'I don't want to grow up,' and popular children's films like Peter Pan glorify eternal childhood, it isn't surprising that American youths have developed something of a social phobia of growing up. This fear is something many college kids on the cusp of adulthood can relate to.

Marriner and friend Nathan Gebhard, two graduating seniors at Pepperdine University in Los Angeles, were facing the harsh reality that adulthood was inevitable. Both young men hadn't given much thought to what career track was right for them. Instead they had followed in the footsteps of their parents and just assumed that that was the right thing for them to do. Mike was going to enter medicine like both of his parents. Nathan was from a business-minded family and was likewise, following suit.

Fortunately, unlike millions of unsatisfied working-folk everywhere, Mike and Nate stopped in their tracks before it was too late. The two life-long best friends were shocked by the realization that they were headed in the wrong direction. They decided they needed to explore their options. Ideally, they wanted to talk to successful/happy people with interesting careers and find out how these individuals found a self-gratifying path to success.

Marriner and Gebhard, along with friends Mike McCallister and Amanda Gall, pooled their money, bought a RV, and set off on what became a 77-day, 15-thousand-mile journey through 40 states. During their travels they "cold called" and interviewed more than 80 people working at all kinds of jobs.

The four spontaneous road-rippers filmed the insightful advice of these established men and women and compiled the footage into what became "The Open Road" a TV documentary that aired on WGBY Oct. 19 and is now available on DVD.

What they gathered from interviews with people like the chairman of Starbucks Coffee, the conductor of the Boston Philharmonic and the 78 others was that it was possible to love a job and be happy working for a living. The foursome penned a sort of mission statement, drawing on all that their interviewees had told them along their travels.

"Everywhere you turn people try to tell you who to be and what to do with your life," the Roadtrip Nation Manifesto decrees. "We call that the noise. Block it. Shed it. Leave it for the conformists. As a generation, we need to get back to focusing on individuality. Define your own road in life instead of traveling down someone else's. Listen to yourself. Your road is the open road. Find it."

Marriner and Gebhard have also co-authored a book (along with Joanne Gordon) called, "Roadtrip Nation: A Guide to Discovering Your Path to Life." The book documents the trip in further detail and presents the interviews in written form. Those interested in journalism and interviewing might benefit from a section of practical advice for cold calling, general interview tactics and follow-up.

Massachusetts Daily Collegian: What kind of cameras, how many, and how much footage was recorded?

Mike Marriner: We used DV video, two PT 110's and a Sony VX-2000. We only got the equipment the day before we left. That's why there is a huge jump in time at the beginning of the documentary. We start off in CA and all of a sudden we are in Vermont. We were training ourselves how to film and the first week or so of footage was just awful. But we certainly had enough usable stuff. When we returned to CA and sat down to edit we had compiled over 450 hours of footage.

MDC: Was the trip overall very expensive?

MM: Yes, when we were done with our adventure we had $30,000 of credit card debt. We automatically assumed we were screwed. But when we watched the footage everyone agreed that what we had done was amazing, it was just so good. We were extremely lucky. A couple of months after we returned "Forbes" magazine did a feature on us. Random House signed us for a book deal and State Farm Insurance sponsored the TV documentary. Everything fell into place.

MDC: Were you surprised by the wide acceptance of such a spontaneous idea?

MM: Yes and no. I think that this kind of spontaneous on-the-fly filmmaking is becoming more accepted. Society is increasingly subjected to this sort of rough looking footage. It's a dawning of a new era of filmmaking. The power of creativity is thriving. The idea is what's important, not so much the technical aspects anymore.

MDC: Did you learn anything surprising about the country?

MM: I was pleasantly surprised by the state of Iowa. Everyone always says that Iowa is so boring. I found it beautiful and kind of meditative. The sun rising over the cornfields ... it's hard to describe, but I loved it.

MDC: What was the best freebie you received from the people you interviewed?

MM: The guys at Clif Bar literally gave us 2,000 Clif Bars. We were living off of them. It was awesome because we were very concerned about how we were going to pay for food. We saved an incredible deal of money ... and they're healthy.

MDC: What would you consider the main philosophy of Road Trip Nation?

MM: It can all be broken down into the difference between two of the people we interviewed. On the one hand there are people like Starbucks chairman Howard Schultz, a guy who has built a million dollar coffee empire and is damned happy about it. Then there are those of us like Manny the lobsterman. He's a humble dude, loves lobster. Studied computers but decided his true nature was that of a lobsterman. The philosophy is applied at an entirely individual level. There are people that dream of plugging numbers. They are best suited to be accountants and that is fine... as long as it fulfills them as a person. All of this is elaborated on in the book and on our Web site (www.roadtripnation.com).

New CD disappoints

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

Too many young rock acts confuse lethargy with maturity, as if giving up their youthful exuberance automatically marks them as grown-up musicians.

What it does, really, is mark them as even more naive and immature. They sap their songs of the dynamism and vigor they carried before, slowing tempos and suffocating energy in an ill-gotten attempt to sound as if they are transitioning in a world of 'adult' music. All they end up doing is crafting an album that is condescending, affected and dull.

Something Corporate
'North'
Drive-Thru/MCA

"Leaving Through the Window," the debut album from power-poppers Something Corporate, was made up of the kind of driving, hook-laden songs that gain an upstart band a young fan base. For the follow-up, "North," the quintet made the inevitable decision to show the "growth" they engaged in since "Window" sold 250,000 copies. To do this, they isolated themselves in a small recording studio, tweaking each and every song until it met the band's idea of perfection.

The result? A watery, weak album devoid of any trace of passion or excitement.

Something Corporate are struggling in the same terrain that their brethren in Brand New covered in the their follow-up album from last summer. That is, both bands are former semi-punk outfits moving into a realm of emo that is darker, more musically and emotionally complex than the adolescent murmurings of most emo acts, except — and here's the big difference — Brand New bring a real emotional heft to their music, so that it still carries the weight of their vitality. Something Corporate are positively childish in comparison, going through the motions of maturity without investing in it.

Granted, it took a few spins to appreciate the glory and the poetry of Brand New's "Deja Entendu," but it eventually grows on the listener. "North" doesn't have that kind of staying power. With each listen, it doesn't get progressively better or more nuanced; it stays stuck in the same rut of cloying, feeble, meandering pop each time.

This calculated stab at grown-up expression actually represents a de-evolution for the band. Tinkling pianos float through a succession of sticky ballads and half-hearted rockers. Singer Andrew McMahon's whiny falsetto strains for a poignancy that isn't there. "North" is Something Corporate's "deep" album — the work in which they are meant to show off how resolutely intelligent, sincere and thoughtful they are, without succumbing to juvenile earnestness. But this isn't a "deep" album — this is a concept piece for kids, playacting at the role of depth.

McMahon thinks he's being edgy and adult when he starts a song like "Me and the Moon" with a line like "It's a good year for murder/ she's praying to Jesus/ she's pulling the trigger." But really, he's being disingenuous. A song about a wife committing murder against an abusive husband? Fine, but this is a subject covered by many other artists to better success. Here, it sounds insincere, like a bid for credibility — 'look at how sophisticated and profound we sound!'

COURTESY SOMETHINGCORPORATE.COM

Something Corporate loses something with 'North.'

There are a few bright spots, like the chugging rockers "Space" and "Only Ashes" or the sleek "Down." But even those sound a bit off compared to Something Corporate's "Leaving Through the Window" or — more damningly — Brand New's "Deja Entendu." The rest of "North" is pretty narcoleptic, drifting hazily from one limp noodle of a song to another. The band can preen and pose all it wants, but that isn't exactly a quality of musical maturation.

So many other acts in and around the same genre as Something Corporate have put out new albums in the past few months, yet many of them at least sound as though they are making progress. But this band – so promising before, so sadly derailed now – comes off as fallow and indistinct. Too many damp lyrics, too much wormy insincerity, too little passion — this is one album that just ends up going south.

'Beyond Borders' pushes audience outside of comfort zone

By Lauren Freeman
Collegian Staff

'Beyond Borders'
Directed by Martin Campbell
Starring Angelina Jolie Nick Callahan Linus Roach Paramount
Rated R
127 mins.
Grade B

One thing is for certain: "Beyond Borders" is not easy to watch. There are some heartrending scenes that will emotionally jar even the strongest viewers. In fact, during the first showing at Cinemark on Friday, three disturbed young men walked out during the first fifteen minutes.

This film is akin to "Hideous Kinky," where a lost soul travels to a destitute foreign land and realizes how secure her own country is in comparison. Likewise, in both films the heroine travels from the fashionable, rainy streets of London. The biggest difference between the two films is that in "Hideous Kinky" Kate Winslett's character takes her children with her. Here, the mother abandons her children for a high cause.

The foreign places depicted here are the epitome of despair. The plot depends on this as main character Sarah Charlotte (Angelina Jolie) is inspired by a rebel-rousing doctor named Owen, played by Nick Callahan, to do what she can to help third world countries around the world.

Callahan disrupts a pricey Relief International black and white ball, where he informs the participants of the event, including Sarah, that the man they are there to praise is really a greedy fraud. That same man is Sarah's fiancé's father. The camera singles out Sarah crying hysterically, while the people at the ball laugh coldly at a banana thrown at the feet of a young emaciated boy that Callahan brings with him to prove his point.

The story travels back and forth between the security of London and the death heavy air in Ethiopia, Cambodia, and the Chechen Republic of Russia.

Sarah's drive to save the world becomes personally motivated by the love interest she finds in Doctor Callahan. She follows him around to these dangerous places for assurance that he is okay. Thus, her unselfish motives to save the world become selfish and this is where the film fails to drive home its potentially meaningful message.

Sarah leaves her family. Yes, her husband is cheating on her, but this is certainly only a Hollywood ploy to provide some reasoning for her eagerness/ability to abandon her own children.

Our heroine searches the world for sick children to care for; meanwhile her own children stay at home, without a mother. Sure, the English socialite children are in better form than those that are starving in Ethiopia, but her spontaneous neglect of her own children makes her less than likeable.

It also makes her all encompassing desire to nurture the sickly children around the world less believable. The only point in the film where this issue of her abandonment of her own children is raised she says to her husband, "I am not abandoning the children." Perhaps to her, she is just putting them on hold while she attends to more important things? Even still, it is very hard to sympathize with this character.

She is doing something normally held in high regard. Certainly she cannot risk the lives of her children and bring them with her. But putting herself in the line of fire and potentially losing her own life, makes sympathy reside with her children left at home wondering why their 'mummy' is on a suicide mission. Also the fact that she chases Callahan around like a puppy in heat, rather than tending to undeveloped nations of her own finding, makes one question her actual motives.

PHOTOS COURTESY IMDB.COM

'Beyond Borders' destracts from worthy cause with an uninteresting love storyline.

Interestingly enough, the script for this film was put on hold for quite some time and has been said to be the impetus for Jolie's actual desire to travel to and aid the suffering people of Cambodia. Jolie herself lived some of the experiences of the main character and only then did she make the movie.

Jolie claimed in her interview with Barbara Walters that she couldn't have her own children now that she has adopted her baby Maddox from Cambodia because she feels that there is always a child that needs to be adopted.

Jolie also makes bold, independent assertions such as her lack of need for a man in her life. With that in mind it is disappointing that she would choose to play a character that lacks the very unselfish motives that Jolie herself harbors.

Brian Jonestown Massacre put on killer show at Iron Horse

By Nick Romanow
Collegian Staff

When the Brian Jonestown Massacre, one of the most groundbreaking and influential psychedelic/experimental rock groups of the past ten years, came to play at the Iron Horse this past Wednesday, the band's frontman and visionary, Anton Alfred Newcombe, was having a bad day. Elliot Smith, one of the most hailed indie singer-songwriters had just been found dead by his girlfriend, a friend of Newcombe's.

Brian Jonestown Massacre
Iron Horse
Northampton
Oct. 22

Despite that and the normal wear of being in a constantly active rock group, Newcombe and his band showed no signs of falling apart during their hour-long set. The band endured poor sound, equipment problems, and limited set time — due to the city's 1 a.m. curfew — to make an impressive impact on western Massachusetts with their first trip through.

Not only did they succeed in bringing their complex arrangements to an enthusiastic audience, they did so with smiles on their faces — a great surprise given Newcombe's reputation for having a short fuse.

"People are always picking at me," Newcombe explained, sitting at a table in the Iron Horse after the show. "A lot of people only see the reaction to that kind of s ... It's really easy for people to talk about sensationalistic s. It gets reflected journalistically, and that's why it gets perpetuated. And then people go expecting to see something like that ... They [even try to] start [fighting with me] and that's bulls too."

While at the Iron Horse, no one tried to start any fights with Newcombe, so he didn't start any fights with people in the audience. Not only did he not yell or brawl, the front man is genuinely kind and easy-going.

Although Newcombe knows that he is constantly misrepresented in the media, he doesn't care.

"I'm not really concerned with my image or any of that s so it really doesn't matter to me," he said.

With Newcombe's temper taking a backseat, the focus of the show became the music. Though Brian Jonestown Massacre — also known as BJTM — are accustomed to playing sets that are well over two hours, they were able to condense their show and still preserve its quality. The band performed a career-spanning set of songs, ranging from their early days right up to their brand new album. "... And This Is Our Music," The album finds BJTM experimenting in ways that they haven't before while at the same time returning more to the Brian Jones-era Rolling Stones psychedelica that they have championed on records past.

"I think it's cinematic. I wanted to steer away from the 'garagey' aspect of our music [which previous albums had focused on] because so many people are doing that," Newcombe said, describing the sound and mission of the new album.

He is never satisfied sticking to one thing and he's certainly not satisfied with sounding like anyone else. "All these people ... have gotten a lot of notoriety recently with garage stuff. The Strokes, The White Stripes, all these bands — I wanted to do s that they aren't capable of doing. It's not, like, built into their project."

And BJTM hasvecertainly benefited from Newcombe's extremely broad and varied vision. "With my project [BJTM] there are no rules. I can have a country record, folk stuff, Indian stuff, neo-classical — it doesn't matter, it's just cool. I really wanted to explore that on this record."

While it's hard for BJTM to bring all the different sounds and Instruments they use on their records to life, the band easily made due with their live set up.

While BJTM has gone through over 40 members, Newcombe tries to keep as many of the same people around him as possible. On this tour two guitarists, Frankie Teardrop and Rick Maymi, bassist Tommy Dietrick, and drummer Dan Allaire, joined Newcombe and all proved to be quite skillful at their instruments.

Among the highlights of the show was the band's performance of "When Jokers Attack," a track off the new album that bears a close similarity to the Dandy Warhols' song "Godless." Despite the groups' ties, as friends and purveyors of a similar Stones-meets-Velvet Under-ground sound, Newcombe swears that the similar riff is a coincidence. In fact, Newcombe cites another influence in describing the sound. "I thought it sounded more like Yardbirds or something," he explained, " but a couple of the bands from the west coast have ... a sorta 'Louie, Louie' thing — kinda like this wall of guitars. A lot of Dandies, especially the earlier stuff, have that — I'm playing on 'Godless'."

Despite equipment problems, the largest of which was an odd humming noise coming from one of the amps, the band trucked on. When the clock was getting close to 12:30 a.m., the group knew it was time to wrap it up. They broke into an extended jam to end the set and the band found themselves channeling their noise-rock, feedback-drenched influences in a way that would put Black Rebel Motorcycle Club to shame. BJTM showed life on stage in a way that few bands do — including one of Newcombe's greatest influences.

"The worst thing to me is how the Stones can just go through the motions," he said. "They play 'Satisfaction' and it's like — this isn't even what it's about. You have this fantastic, fabulous amount of money, you can hire anybody in the world to play this crap and look how bad it is."

Newcombe finds himself constantly frustrated with the music Industry and the bands that cater to the prepackaged image.

BJTM released one album, "Strung Out In Heaven," on TVT, a major record label, and found that the situation wasn't one that fit with the band's mindset.

"The whole situation was wrong immediately. [TVT] put out stickers that said 'get ready for the revolution' and all this s and I was just like 'what a bunch of a bulls.'"

Newcombe does, however, believe that major labels serve some purpose. "It's obviously right for a lot of people," Newcombe gladly admitted. "Look at Spiritualized, they could never [be successful] on an indie, all that packaging. It's just off the hook because they'd never make any money from selling records — they never will. Without a big label and the packaging ... It would be over."

Fortunately, BJTM have been able to gain a degree of success and enough clout with fans — and the industry that they despise — that they can continue to pump out albums and tour constantly, bringing honest and experimental music to fans that would otherwise be swimming in a sea of mass-produced, generic, image-conscious trash.

PHOTOS COURTESY BRIANJONESTOWNMASSACRE.COM

Anton Alfred Newcombe, notorious for his raucous stage manner, left the hostility behind to charm the Iron Horse.

Exhibit explores women illustrators' journey

By Adam Gorlick
Associated Press

STOCKBRIDGE (AP) — They were the matriarchs of domestic illustration. Three friends, bound by a promise to spend their lives together, creating images of an idyllic family lifestyle.

Magazines like Collier's, Good Housekeeping and Ladies' Home Journal paid them for their drawings of cuddly children and doting mothers at a time when male illustrators were churning out pictures of swashbuckling pirates and cowboys on horseback.

But for Jessie Wilcox Smith, Elizabeth Shippen Green and Violet Oakley, motherhood only existed in the work they produced.

The women met in Philadelphia while taking classes by Howard Pyle, a pioneer of American illustration and one of the few male artists in the late 1800s to encourage women to become professional illustrators.

"He advised his women students not to marry because that would ruin their chance for professional accomplishment," said Stephanie Plunkett, curator of illustration art at the Norman Rockwell Museum in Stockbridge, where a retrospective of work by Smith, Green and Oakley opens next week.

Heeding that advice, in 1902 the women rented the Red Rose Inn, a 200-acre property in Villanova, Pa., with enough buildings to provide ample studio space. They promised never to marry and never to leave one another. Instead, they built a sisterhood to encourage and promote each others' work.

Pyle christened them the "Red Rose Girls," and the women spent the next four years at the inn painting, drawing, critiquing and collaborating.

"They created their own safety zone, but they still had a vibrant social life," Plunkett said. "They just had it without the threat of male interruption."

While Smith, Green and Oakley would not let any men penetrate their sorority, they expanded it by taking in Henrietta Cozens, a friend with no artistic ambition who gladly took over as the women's caretaker — paying bills, managing the property and freeing the artists to focus entirely on their work.

The four women recognized their union by dubbing themselves the Cogs family, arranging the first letters of their last names to form the acronym.

When the Red Rose Inn was sold in 1906, the women were forced to move to another property they called Cogslea.

"The Red Rose Girls: An Uncommon Story of Art and Love" will feature about 100 illustrations done by Smith, Green and Oakley at the Rockwell museum through May 31, 2004.

Much of their work seems simple and uncluttered. Pictures of children with daydreamy gazes, playing with toys, getting dressed or warming to their mother's touch.

"They used a linear technique, with outlines of figures," said Walt Reed, an illustration historian who runs the Illustration House gallery and auction house in New York City. "They focused on the sentiment of the story more than the details of the objects."

COURTESY NRM.ORG

'Mother and Child,' by Jessie Wilcox Smith is among paintings to be exhibited.

'RENT' dazzles at UMass

By Jennifer Eastwood
Collegian Staff

Strong characters, strong voices and a strong audience branded Wednesday's opening night performance of the touring cast of "RENT" with the stamp of excellence expected from this infamous show.

Rent
Fine Arts Center
UMass
Oct. 22

Creator Jonathan Larson, of course, set the strong characters in place long ago, giving his rock opera its ultimate appeal to fans worldwide.

Talents of actors of like Marcus Paul James (Collins) attributed to the strong voices that shook the walls of a packed Fine Arts Center.

And, by the time "Over the Moon" required viewers to moo like cows, one knew the echoing whistles and screams of the majority of that night's Concert Hall goers had garnered an audience participation level to make the University of Massachusetts proud.

The evening's trophy, however, goes to James as the smart, sensitive anarchist, Collins. Emotion ran deep in his voice throughout the performance, but at no point more so than during his lover's funeral. How appropriate, too, for Angel's funeral scene remains one of the show's best numbers to see performed on stage, as it's hidden gems never quite made it onto the show's original — and most popular — cast recording.

Of course, the scene can only be as good as the character's prior interactions – especially the scenes between Collins and Angel — building up to when all crashes.

Angel, the happy-go-lucky drummer most notably remembered in his Santa Claus skirt, striped stockings and jumbo heals was last week played by singer and dancer Daryl C. Brown.

Brown gave his character the fun, and wise, sense of humor every obsessed "Renthead" appreciates. He skipped, literally, into the heart of his new lover Collins, and in turn into the audience's hearts as well.

James brilliantly fed into Brown's performance, and the classically sweet interface between the rebellious teacher and a coy drag queen enchanted during songs like the duet "I'll Cover You," the tender "Christmas Bells" and the fun "La Via Bohеme."

But the result UMass observed Wednesday during Angel's funeral was something far more than anyone with a cast recording of "RENT" can ever experience.

As expected in every show, as if it's a special treat only for those in attendance, the monologues of characters Mark, Mimi and Maureen captured one the many themes in "RENT:" to cherish life's important moments. In a show with so little dialogue, these few sentences stand out and tug on the heartstrings to ready the mind for Collin's goodbye song to Angel, sung through a reprise of "I'll Cover You."

James' powerful voice was awe-inspiring and memorizing, and swelled with heartbreak in a way few actors can capture. His haunting rendition of Collins was one of the best ever brought to stage.

This is not to say others throughout the evening did not dazzle. Constantine Maroulis as Roger amazed with a chilling version of "One Song Glory," and Brian Gligor as Mark and Rebecca Jones as Joanne charmed in the hysterically well-done duet of "Tango: Maureen."

This touring cast brought Valley theater enthusiasts more than a nice treat last week ... it became an honor. And by the time the cast lined up for its final bows before a standing ovation, it was clear the troupe had done its job: to spread Larson's view of the bohemian spirit and humanity a little further. Bravo!

Oasis Body Wraps and Tanning
243 Russell St.
Hadley, MA 01035
(413) 587-9742
NOW FEATURING SUN SPRITZER UV FREE TANNING
• The first UV FREE tanning machine in the area
• Get $5.00 off your first visit
• A rich golden tan in just a few seconds
• You'll look and feel great
1/2 Price tanning every Tuesday
OASIS • Hampshire Mall • Conveniently Located • University Drive • UMASS • Route 9

Greenleaves
Greenleaves is a brand new adult 55 plus condo community. Enjoy home ownership without all the hassles; we will even clear your car of snow. Relax in our large community room of enjoy the cozy fireplace. FREE CONDO FEES for 2 years. Call for details. Many styles to choose from. (One 2-bedroom for rent.)
23 Greenleaves Drive (Off Rt. 9 across from Chili's)
Phone: (413) 253-1800

Game Room - Delicious Menu - Free Popcorn
Rafters
SPORTS BAR & RESTAURANT
University Drive & Amity Street, Amherst
• Monday •
MONDAY NIGHT FOOTBALL
1/2 Price Appetizers, Wings & Nachos 'til Midnight
• Tuesday & Wednesday •
1/2 PRICE WINGS
Open to Close...eat in only!
Coors LIGHT PITCHER $6.50
October Special

General Information Meeting
Wednesday, October 29 7:00 p.m.
Campus Center, Room 805-09
www.peacecorps.gov * 800.424.8580

STUDENT TRAVEL
quik BREAK
check out these airfares!
one stop, no hassles
We hook you up with:
• discount student and youth airfare
• budget hotels and hostels
• rail and bus passes
• international student ID cards (ISIC)
• travel insurance
• travel gear and more!
London.....$310
Paris.....$371
Rio de Janeiro.....$643
Los Angeles.....$262
Las Vegas.....$262
Fare is round trip from Boston. Subject to change and availability. Tax not included. Restrictions and blackouts apply.
2 nights • transfers • activities
New Orleans.....$110
Las Vegas.....$113
San Francisco.....$131
Vancouver.....$141
Miami.....$160
New York.....$192
(airfare not included)
44 Main St.
(413) 256.1261
STA TRAVEL
WE'VE BEEN THERE

TuesdayOctober28

Performing Arts

The Wind Ensemble and Symphony Band directed by Laura Rexroth, plays at the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall tonight. The show starts at 8 p.m. and admission is $3 for students, $5 for children under 18 and seniors, and $10 to the general public.

Books

Tonight at the Odyssey Bookshop in South Hadley author Heidi Jon Schmidt will read from her first novel "The Bride of Catastrophe." The reading starts at 7 p.m. and is free of charge.

WednesdayOctober29

Books

Poet and biographer Honor Moore will give a reading tonight at Amherst College. The renowned writer has published two books of poems as well as a book on the life of painter Magarett Sargent, her grandmother. The reading will take place in the Porter Lounge of Converse Hall on the Amherst Campus at 8 p.m.. It is free and open to the public.

ThursdayOctober30

Performing Arts

David Auburn's highly acclaimed play "Proof" opens tonight at The Curtain Theater at 8 p.m. "Proof," the story of a daughter struggling to come to terms with her father's legacy, has won a Pulitzer and graced stages near Broadway in the past. Tickets are $5 for students and $10 for the general public. The show can also be caught on Oct. 31, Nov. 1, and Nov. 4-8.

FridayOctober31

Music

For those that aren't interested partaking in Halloween Festivities, a trip to Northampton to catch the band Drunk Stuntmen, may be an enjoyable alternative. The rock group, which hails from western Massachusetts, will be performing shows at 7 and 10 p.m. Tickets are $8 in advance and $10 at the door.

SaturdayNovember1

Festivals

Celebrate "El Dia de los Muertos," or The Day of the Dead, in Cambridge today at the Cambridge Multicultural Arts Center. The daylong festivities will include art exhibits, performances by Veronica Robles and Mariachi Azteca 2000 and Ballet Monte Alban and a movie showing. Authentic crafts and traditional Mexican alters help to make this Dia de los Muertos a day of celebration and remembrance for those who cannot make it down to Mexico. Admission is $10 for students and $15 for adults. For more information see www.cmacusa.org.

India's rich culture comes to life in the Pioneer Valley with "The Festival of Lights" tonight at 8 p.m. The festival, to be held in Bowker Auditorium boasts internationally renowned percussionist Pandit Samir Chatterjee and Pioneer Valley based dance troupe "Nataraj Dancers." Tickets are $ for Five-College students and $15 for the general public.

Dance

The Hooked on Swing Society keep the Halloween spirit a little longer with a holiday themed dance in the Smith College Campus Center Ballroom. DJ Tommy G will provide the musical entertainment. Tickets are $3 for students and $6 for everyone else.

SundayNovember2

Music

Professor Laura Klock plays Bezanson Recital Hall tonight at 8 p.m. The accomplished horn player will be accompanied by UMass faculty members Nadine Shank and William Hite. The repertoire will consist of varied musical and cultural pieces. Tickets are $5 for students and $10 for the general public.

Performing Arts

Comedian Dave Chappelle hits Northampton tonight, bringing his form of comedy to the stage of the Calvin Theater. Best known for his appearance in films such as "Half Baked," "Undercover Brother," and "The Nutty Professor," Chappelle is a veteran of the stand-up comedy scene. Tickets are $29 and $35 and Chappelle will perform two shows at 6 p.m. and 9 p.m.

COURTESY ABC.COM

"IT'S A HALLOWEEN CLASSIC, CHARLIE BROWN"

With Halloween just around the corner, a holiday classic returns to televisions everywhere. "It's the Great Pumpkin, Charlie Brown" features Charles Schulz's beloved Peanuts gang, including Snoopy, Linus and Lucy and, of course, Charlie Brown. The two-hour animated film plays Tuesday at 8 p.m. on the ABC network.

MIT students may have beaten the system

By Justin Pope
Associated Press

CAMBRIDGE (AP) — Keith Winstein and Josh Mandel may soon be the most popular guys on campus. They say they've discovered a way to give their fellow students at MIT and elsewhere dorm-room access to a huge music library, without having to worry about getting slapped with a lawsuit from the recording industry.

On Monday, the pair planned to debut a system they've built that lets MIT students listen for free to 3,500 CDs over the school's cable television network.

And, they say, it's completely kosher under copyright law.

The students will share the software with other schools, who they say could operate their own networks for just a few thousand dollars per year. They call that a small price to pay for heading off lawsuits like those the recording industry filed against hundreds of alleged illegal file-swappers.

Here's the catch: The system is operated over the Internet, but the music is pumped though MIT's cable television network. That makes it an analog transmission, as opposed to a digital one, in which a file is reproduced exactly.

The down side is the sound quality: better than FM radio, but not as good as a CD.

But the up side is that because the copy isn't exact, the licensing hurdles are lower. Their idea piggybacks on two things: the broad, cheap licenses given to many universities to "perform" analog music, and the same rules that require radio stations to pay songwriters, but not record companies, to broadcast songs.

It also can broadcast any CD — even ones by popular artists like Madonna and the Beatles who have resisted making their songs available even to legal digital download services.

"I think it's fascinating. As a copyright lawyer, I think they've managed to thread the needle," said Fred Von Lohmann, a lawyer for the San Francisco-based Electronic Frontier Foundation. "They've basically managed to cut the record labels out of the equation altogether."

Conceivably, the system could be replicated by the cable system of a city or town, the students said.

But it seems ideally suited for universities, who often operate internal cable networks, and who already have these broad performance licenses. College students are among the most enthusiastic file-swappers, and universities are exploring ways, such as fee-based systems, to give their students legal access to music.

The MIT project is called "Library Access to Music," or "LAMP," and here's how it works: Users go to a Web page and "check out" one of 16 cable channels in the MIT system, which they can control for up to 80 minutes. The controller then picks songs from among 3,500 CDs — all suggested by students in an online survey over the past year — that Winstein, 22, and Mandel, 20, have compiled.

The music is then pumped into the user's room on that channel and played through a TV, a laptop with an audio jack or external speakers.

Only one person controls each channel at a time, but anyone can listen in. Anyone can also see on another channel what selections are playing and the usernames of the controllers (Winstein acknowledges potential privacy concerns, but there are upsides: He once got a romantic proposition from a user who admired his taste for Stravinsky).

MUSIC • SOFTWARE • MOVIES • BOOKS
MEDIA PLAY
STUDENT TUESDAYS
1. BRING IN THIS AD
2. BUY ANY 3 CDs OR 2 DVDs
3. SHOW US YOUR STUDENT I.D.
4. GET A $5 GIFT CARD INSTANTLY
OFFER VALID AT HAMPSHIRE MALL LOCATION ONLY
CASHIERS MARKDOWN CODE 101

Come Get Your FREE WEEK!
Buy any Unlimited Tanning Package or Multi-Session package, and we'll tack on a whole FREE WEEK!
Buy any bottle of California Tan and get a FREE bottle of Total Immersion or Total Submersion!
Expires 12/31/03. Limit 1 per customer.
BEACH CLUB TANNING STUDIOS
63 University Drive • ph 549-HOTT

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT
REGISTRATION FOR SPRING 2004
The WRITING PROGRAM PLACEMENT TEST will be offered on:
TUESDAY, OCTOBER 28 @ 7pm in Thompson 102
WEDNESDAY OCTOBER 29 @ 7pm in Bartlett 65
MONDAY, NOVEMBER 3 @ 7pm in Tobin 304
This test is a pre-requisite for enrollment in English 112/113. (College Writing)
This test may be taken only once. Students do not need to register for the test.

LAUNCH YOUR CAREER
Apply now for a Legal Assistant Internship at the Student Legal Services Office
*Serve the campus community while enhancing your resume
*Earn up to 15 credits working 36 hours a week or 6 to 9 credits working 26 hours a week
Student Legal Services Office
922 Campus Center
(413) 545-1995

Marlins ride ace's shutout to glory

KATHY WILLENS/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Florida Marlins manager Jack McKeon celebrates the Marlins World Series championship Saturday in New York.

Continued from page 10

watched from a box with the same incredulous looks on their faces.

This time, credit the resilient Marlins for their performance. It was as if the sellout crowd of 55,773 couldn't believe what it was seeing — then again, Florida has been an upset special this October, improving to 6-0 lifetime in postseason series.

The Marlins dropped the opener to Barry Bonds and the San Francisco Giants in the division before winning three in a row. They overcame a 3-1 deficit in the NL championship series, beating Cubs aces Mark Prior and Kerry Wood at Wrigley Field.

In this 100th World Series game at Yankee Stadium, Beckett and the Marlins never gave the Yankees much of a chance. Florida became the first team in the post-expansion era to win two titles, having joined the majors in 1993.

Beckett finished 1-1 in this Series. He lost Game three despite seven 1-3 impressive innings.

Luis Castillo snapped his 0-for-14 rut with an RBI single that saw Alex Gonzalez make a neat slide home in the fifth and Juan Encarnacion add a sacrifice fly in the sixth.

That was plenty for Beckett, who fielded Jorge Posada's tapper up the first-base line and tagged him for the final out. He struck out nine, featuring a 97 mph fastball, and walked two.

In the past five postseasons, pitchers working on three or fewer days' rest had been atrocious. In 37 such starts, they were 6-20 with a 5.93 ERA.

Beckett and the 72-year-old McKeon threw that wisdom to the wind. It was just the kind of free thinking that made McKeon so successful this season — the Marlins were 19-29 shortly after he took over for the fired Jeff Torborg in mid-May, and headed toward a last-place finish before he took them to the title.

"Nobody gave us a chance and here they are world champions," said McKeon, the oldest manager to win a World Series title.

Pettitte was sharp through the first four innings, working around an early double by former Yankees farmhand Mike Lowell. He started strongly in the fifth, too, retiring the first two batters before the Marlins struck.

Gonzalez singled and moved to second when Juan Pierre singled.

That brought up Castillo, only 3-for-23 in the Series, and he quickly fell behind in the count 0-2. Posada then made a trip to the mound to visit Pettitte and while the catcher and pitcher talked, on-deck hitter Ivan Rodriguez took several steps toward Castillo to shout some sort of encouragement.

Moments later, Castillo poked an opposite-field single to right and third-base coach Ozzie Guillen immediately waved Gonzalez home.

Right fielder Karim Garcia made a strong, one-hop throw to the plate that beat Gonzalez. Posada, who almost always tries to avoid collisions, caught the ball a step up the first-base line and had to reach back on a swipe tag.

Gonzalez saw his opening and slid wide, reaching to touch the plate with his left hand as he tumbled past. It was a close play, but there was no argument for the Yankees as umpire Tim Welke called it correctly.

Down 1-0, the Yankees tried to rally in the fifth, putting a runner on second with two outs. Beckett took care of his nemesis with his fastest pitch of the night, a 97 mph fastball that Derek Jeter missed for strike three.

It was another missed chance for the Yankees, who were hitting just .149 (7-for-47) with runners in scoring position in the Series at that point.

Perhaps Jeter was still thinking about that key at-bat when Jeff Conine opened the sixth with a routine grounder to the All-Star shortstop. Jeter bobbled it and bounced his throw past first base for his first error in his last 27 Series games.

Florida took advantage of the error. After a walk and a bunt, Encarnacion lifted a sacrifice fly for a 2-0 lead.

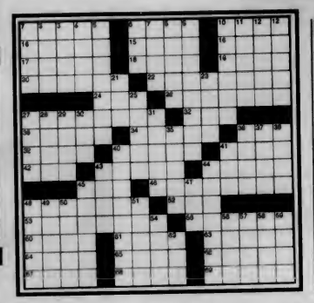
Pettitte started the game by retiring Pierre on a popup.

Beckett began his outing by striking out Jeter on three pitches.

7 jeans for all mankind.
10 pairs of eyes on you.
The pair you want on you.
1 unique you.
ZANNA downtown Amherst

Teachers College
Columbia University
Graduate & Professional School of Education
In the city of New York
Explore Masters and Doctoral programs in:
•Education •Psychology •Health Education
Representatives from the largest and most comprehensive graduate school of education will visit your campus soon. For more information, check with your career services office today.
Office of Admission
www.tc.edu/discover 212 678 3710

TODAY'S CROSSWORD PUZZLE



PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

ACROSS
1 Metalsmiths
5 Succeeded the limit
10 Brew, as coffee
14 Gladiator's venue
15 Actress Gael
16 Home appliance
17 Smooth talker
18 Bird's beak
19 Barbri singer
20 Hosts
22 Count
24 Scoundrels
26 "Hooray for Hollywood" singer
27 Uppercut punch
28 Country
31 Blunts but
33 Gem of filmg
34 Rock lowbrow who
36 John Glenn's state
37 Lyric
40 Riding the waves
41 Exhausted by overwork
43 Composer — Joel
44 Food problems
45 Charming and sly
46 Feather wrap
49 Seasonal beverage
50 Sis-shoote
51 St. Francis' town
52 Sailor's call
56 Walter's rewards
59 Rioped
61 Azzman Blake
62 Foot part
63 Film director Burnett
64 Cooking fat
65 Coastal flyer
66 Puppy noises
67 Driving hazard

DOWN
1 Plight
2 Europe-Asia border range
3 Monsieur's pals
4 What to eat
5 A.A.A.
6 Cure-all
7 Grange
8 Green veggies
9 Mess up
10 Arties against
11 Sound of revue
12 A Pinter
13 Kung-
14 Substituting
15 Prepare to propose
21 Road coating
23 Fuss
25 "Pull"
27 Untidy person
28 Mondale daughter
29 Cadillac's — Seville
30 Wild horse
31 Flaw
32 Flight of steps
34 Mideast's Hussein's daughter
35 Mimi's quarters
37 Boyle and Kudrow
38 Sandy
39 Cable channels
42 Fuel parcels
43 Flag
45 Stray dog
46 Wash
47 Willow shoot
48 Recipe amt.
50 Suburban sight
53 Sandwiches
54 Cut on the map
57 Voyage
58 Tonight
60 Tom's cousin
62 Rooney
63 Copy dwelling
64 Tibet, to Yvette

DINING COMMONS MENU

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Meatball Sub
- Chicken Fajita
- Vegetable Chili Nachos (vegan)

DINNER
- Veal Cutlet
- Savory Baked Chicken
- Roast Vegetable Wrap

DAILY WEATHER FORECAST

For Amherst

MONDAY
- High: 64
- Low: 41

TUES
- High: 58
- Low: 36

WEDSNDAY
- High: 57
- Low: 36

PRODUCTION CREW

On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Dan Lamothe

PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Emilie Duggan

COPY EDITOR
Leah Wyner

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Shannon Farrington

PRODUCTION STAFF
Sarah Lloyd, Cory Rosenberg

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Go running on the bike trail. Just don't step on that rabid chipmunk.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
If you bake cookies in the dorm kitchen, learn not to leave them unguarded.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Toothpaste is a necessity. Not an option.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Everyone needs to smile sometimes. Why not let it be this time?

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
Don't take candy from strangers. It might contain nuts.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
You have mono. Stop kissing those freshmen.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Remember the reasons why you are here. Class isn't one of them.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Diet Coke hasn't killed anyone yet. Stop worrying and drink up.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
You are not a genius. You just use Sparknotes.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Follow the orange crumbs. Your roommate ate your Doritos.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
You'll miss the killer bees from the trashcans more than most this winter.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Call your mother. She's the only one who wants to hear your whining.

QUOTE FOR THE DAY

"We shocked the world! We shocked the world! We did it in their house! In their house!"

-Juan Pierre, Florida Marlins centerfielder

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

APARTMENT FOR RENT

6 Room- 4 Bedroom apartment $1200/ month plus utilities. Northampton 584-4920

AUTO FOR SALE

93 Pontiac Bonneville SDN All Power Must Sell $1500 B/O 253-5537

CHILDCARE

Nanny Wanted Part-time to care for 1 yr. Old triplets 1 to 3 days a week. In Belchertown Call 413-323-9218 or 413-272-6267

COMPUTERS

Quicksilver Computing Computer help Virus removal Web Design $15/hr 548-6847 Ask for T.J.

COMPUTERS

Pentium Laptop $99.00 Pentium Desktop $49.00 We fix Laptops, Desktops/ PC's guaranteed 584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

Visa/Mastercard approval agents earn $1,000/week potential. No experience necessary. Call 1-800-821-3416 ext.145

Movie Extras/Models needed. No exp. required, earn up to $500-1000 a day. 1-888-820-0167 ext. U150

!Bartending!$ $250/day potential No experience Nesc Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext 162

EMPLOYMENT

Sales Assistant for consulting/software firm. Telephone telemarketing. Economics a plus. Please send cover letter and resume to Frederick Treyz at Regional Economic Models, Inc., 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002 or fax 413-549-1038 or email resumes@remi.com.

Earn up to $100 per hour or more as an exotic male dancer at club Xstatic. 240 Chesnut St, Springfield MA, 413-736-2618 or www.clubxstatic.com

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

FOR SALE

Web Hosting 9.95/month PHP, MySQL, Perl and more. www.jagfly.com or 413-253-0051

INSTRUCTION

Private Boxing Lessons- w/retired Pro Djata Bumpus, in Northampton. 584-1966 or visit- www.westernmass-boxing.com Accepts all major credit cards.

University Bartending Classes Start Soon 1-800-U-CAN-MIX Call now for information!!! Space is Limited www.universitybartending.com

SERVICES

Legal questions? The Student Legal Services Office offers free legal assistance to fee-paying students. Contact us at 922 Campus Center, 545-1995.

SERVICES

Pet-Sitter available days nights & weekends Dog walking. 9 years experience. Call Gina 253-0619

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

SHEAR BLISS DAY SPA SERVICES Body Sugaring (waxing) for men and women *Safe *100% Natural *Effective 253-2322

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

All Digital Productions Pro Videography for Weddings Bar Mitzvahs Commercial 508-221-8223 sweeppicker@yahoo.com

TRAVEL

A "Reality" Spring Break 2004's Hottest Prices Book now .. Free Trips, Meals & Parties www.sunsplashtours.com or 1800-426-7710

A SPRING BREAKER NEEDED 2004's Hottest Destinations & Parties 2 free trips / high commissions 15w sunsplashtours.com 1800-426-7710

TRAVEL

#1 Spring Break Vacations! 110% Best Prices! Mexico, Jamaica, Bahamas, Florida, Texas. Book Now & Receive Free Parties & Meals Campus Reps Wanted! 1-800-234-7007 endlesssummertours.com

Spring Break- Sign up with Student Express and get Free roundtrip airline. Tickets to over 15 international destinations including Aruba, Dominican Republic, Costa Rica, Caribbean hot spots and more. Why go with anyone else! Limited offer call now Commission rep positions also available 1-800-787-3787 www.studentexpress.com

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK 2004! Beach Life Vacations! Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas, Florida. Sell Trips, Earn Cash, Travel Free!! Call 1-800-733-6347 www.beachlife-vacations.com

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Destinations, including Cruises! Foam Parties, Free Drinks and Club Admissions. Rep Positions and FREE trips Available. 1-800-231-4386 www.EpicureanTours.com

TUTORS

Math/Physics Tutor $30/Hr plus travel Call Dr. Kline 413-552-3805

James' recovery beats 'Nova

Continued from page 10

James, recalling his thoughts as he rolled down the sideline to the winning score, "that's the only thing that crossed my mind."

Casamento came out of the game midway through the third quarter, clearly hampered by a shoulder injury that had him laboring from the outset, and resulted in two interceptions.

Villanova took the lead with 6:26 remaining on a well-executed, 54-yard drive. Burroughs' 32-yard pass to a leaping John Dieser put the Wildcats on the UMass 7-yard line. After two rushes failed to gain any significant yardage, the Minutemen seemed to have 'Nova settling for a field goal when James Ihedigbo reached around Dieser to knock down a pass in the endzone on 3rd-and-Goal from the 6-yard line. But the Amherst native was called for pass interference, setting up a 2-yard scoring run by Terry Butler to make it 14-13 Villanova.

After going 0-for-2 on field goals — both within his range — with a missed extra point last week against Hofstra, freshman Michael Torres hit a 28-yard kick with 3:03 left in the second quarter to give the Minutemen a 10-0 lead.

The Wildcats struck back quickly though, when quarterback Joe Casamento found John Dieser alone in the endzone on a deep slant to cut the UMass lead to three, where it stayed through the end of the half.

Torres added a 36-yard field goal with 9:23 remaining in the third quarter to put the Minutemen up 13-7.

After a sloppy first quarter for both squads, the Minutemen broke out in a big way, and created some history in the process. A false start penalty pushed UMass back to its own 3-yard line, but on the following play, Jeff Krohn connected with Jimmie Howard on a skinny post route. Howard slipped out of the clutches of a falling Jeremy Morgan, and took it 66 more yards to the endzone for the record-breaking 97-yard reception.

Single play decides game of the year was establish themselves as the premier teams in a talent-laden conference. And on the heels of last year's 17-16 thriller at McGuirk Alumni Stadium, perhaps a rivalry was born.

Continued from page 10

It was the kind of game that was neither won nor lost, but simply decided. But when The Sports Network releases its official Division I-AA Top 25, the Minutemen (No. 5 at press time) will surely climb, and the Wildcats (No.2) will almost certainly drop below them.

Make no mistake, though. These teams are dead even.

So as Shannon James dramatically dashed down his own sideline, carrying the pigskin towards The Promised Land, he took with him a team, a season and destiny.

Maybe the Minutemen will ride the coattails of this victory to a conference title and beyond. Or maybe, in shades of last season, their divine intervention will expire in the cruelest way.

Yet whatever their fate shall be, these Minutemen are right where they want to be. They've overcome injuries, suspensions and various adversities, and with four games remaining, they have a legitimate shot to become just the second team in A-10 history to run the table in conference play, and the first since, you guessed it, Villanova in 1997.

And now, to the dismay of Northeastern, Richmond, Delaware, Rhode Island and the rest of I-AA, the Minutemen have added their most potent weapon yet.

"God," James declared, "is with us."

Put your best foot forward!

Graduate School at SCAD

Master of Architecture · Master of Arts · Master of Fine Arts

Wednesday, October 29
11 a.m.–3 p.m.
Student Union Ballroom

Savannah College of Art and Design

www.scad.edu

Luttati's goal earns split

By Todd Foster
Collegian Staff

Michelle Luttati ended her career at Rudd Field in storybook fashion.

The senior defender scored the game-winning goal on a header in her last home game off a corner kick from Nadia Villaroel. The goal came 3:40 into the overtime session to give the Massachusetts women's soccer team (4-10-1, 3-6-0 Atlantic 10) a 2-1 win over St. Bonaventure yesterday.

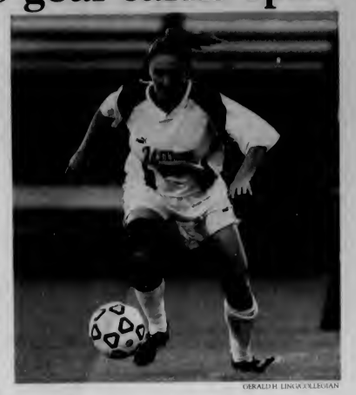
St. Bona.	1
UMass	2
Duquesne	2
UMass	1

"That was my first goal of the season, so it was special," Luttati said. "It's exciting and sad. It's sad because it was our last home game, but it's exciting to end on a win."

The win gave the Minutewomen (4-10-1, 3-6 A-10) a weekend split after losing a 2-1 heartbreaker to Duquesne in the final minutes Friday. The heartbreaking loss seem distant as the seniors were all smiles on Senior Day leaving their last home game victorious.

"This is the best part of this day and a senior scored the winner," UMass coach Jim Rudy said. "For the all the stuff we go through from the extra work to the injuries to the lack of a social life and everything else they have to do to be an athlete here, you want them to feel like it was worth it. They will always remember this game."

The Maroon and White opened the scoring in 24th minute when Erin Muir hit the back of the net for her first goal this season. Luttati, who had three points Sunday, sent a long pass to a streaking Muir, who fired the shot into the lower left corner.



UMass controlled the possession game throughout the second half, and were in line for a regulation win until the 87th minute, when Bonnie sophomore Lois Bennett's shot found the top right corner, sending the game into overtime.

Friday's game held a different weight, as the Maroon and White were looking to stay in A-10 contention. But it was denied by the Duquesne Dukes, who took a thrilling 2-1 decision.

UMass struck first on Erin Lilly's goal in the 27th minute, her first this season after leading the team in 2002. Sophomore Adair Blyler made a nice pass to freshman Nadia Villaroel just outside the box. Villaroel drew the defense's attention then crossed the ball to a streaking Lilly, who scored from five yards out, just inside the near post. Blyler and Villaroel each received assists.

Though they led 1-0 at half-time, the Minutewomen could not sustain the advantage. Duquesne forward Lauren Bracco scored on an unassisted goal in the 55th minute to knot the game at one, and with only 1:30 left in regulation, Katie Schwager made it a 2-1 Duquesne advantage when she hit a slow, lofting ball over Rutland's outstretched hands into the top right corner.

"I'm really disappointed for the players," Rudy said. "We just haven't got the breaks this season."

Gerald H. Ling/Collegian

Michele Luttati's overtime goal yesterday won a 2-1 decision for the Minutewomen, who lost to Duquesne on Friday.

Gentle, effective, natural treatment for neck pain, back pain, headaches, sports injuries, auto injuries, work injuries.

"Results you can feel."

Dr. Lee Kane
Chiropractic Physician

Member:
- American Chiropractic Association
- Massachusetts Chiropractic Society

Participating provider with most insurance, including student insurance & GIC

Amherst Family Chiropractic Center for Natural Health
228 Triangle Street, Amherst (next to Bertucci's)
549-1500

40 EPISODES. 3 DVDS. 1 INCREDIBLY SILLY SPONGE!

THE COMPLETE 1ST SEASON

A Must-Have For SpongeBob Fans! The Entire First Season Of SpongeBob SquarePants Plus Special Features That Include:
- 4 Featurettes
- "Karaoke" Segment
- "Bikini Bottom's Up Tour"
- Audio Commentary with Cast & Crew discussing their favorite episodes
- 3 Music Videos
- And much more!

AVAILABLE TO OWN ON DVD OCTOBER 28

Check out collegetelevision.com for a chance to win an Ultimate SpongeBob Fan Pack brought to you by CTN: College Television Network— the college source for music, news and every other aspect of college life.

Offer expires 11/1/03. No purchase necessary to enter. For official sweepstakes and entry rules go to collegetelevision.com. college television network

CTN

Happy Halloween

Friday, October 31st
Steak & Lobster Special
From 4-7pm in all dining commons

Pumpkin Carving Contest
Free t-shirts for the first 50 customers dressed in costume.
Join the festivities by dressing up!

DINING SERVICES

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, OCTOBER 27, 2003 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

James to the rescue

One play to rule them all

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

VILLANOVA, Pa. — Maybe it was just a freshman quarterback making a grave mistake. Maybe it was the Massachusetts defense capping off its best day with its biggest play of the season. Maybe it was karma rewarding the Minutemen after a questionable pass interference call cost them the lead and nearly the game, or maybe it was saving headset-hurler Mark Whipple from triple bypass.

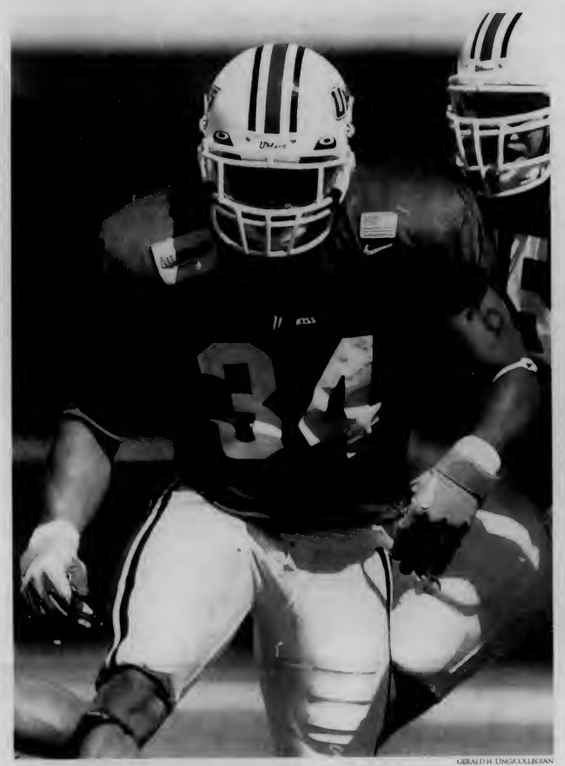
Maybe it was all of the above.

But when Villanova quarterback Marvin Burroughs took the snap on second down and four from his own 40-yard line, nursing a one-point lead with only 2:26 remaining, he needed only those four short yards to ice what was undoubtedly the season's best game — saving his team's perfect record and allowing the 'Cats to maintain a share of first place in the Atlantic 10.

Four yards.

However the exchange never got there, and before Burroughs knew it, the unfathomable had happened. Something so shocking that it drove an unnamed Wildcat fan to exclaim that he had "never seen anything like it in 40 years of watching football," and another to conclude that, "the powers that be must be wearing maroon and white tonight."

How unbelievable was it when linebacker Serge Tikum happened to accidentally kick the fumble directly to safety Shannon James, who scooped it up and stunned the 9,125 in attendance by sprinting 40 yards the other way for the game-winning touchdown?



Call it a miracle.

From the longest pass in A-10 history — a 97-yard scoring strike from Jeff Krohn to Jimmie Howard which gave UMass a 7-0 lead in the second quarter — to the benching of starting quarterback Joe Casamento in favor of Burroughs in the third quarter, to the questionable interference call on UMass safety James Ihedigbo in his own endzone, and everything in between, this was the marquee game of the season in the A-10.

Because what took place between two Top 5 teams on national television, under the lights at Villanova Stadium, was all-out war.

From the opening coin toss until Burroughs' desperation fourth down heave to wide receiver John Dieser fell incomplete, what the Minutemen and the Wildcats did

Continued on page 9

GERALD H. LINGO/COLLEGIAN

Shannon James' fumble recovery for a touchdown with 2:08 left in the game gave the Minutemen a 19-14 win over Villanova Saturday. UMass is now one of two undefeated teams, along with Delaware, in the Atlantic 10.

DB recovers fumble for winning TD

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

VILLANOVA, Pa. — With the No. 2 and No. 5 teams, both tops in the Atlantic 10 facing off in a mid-October battle of the unbeaten, sporting fate would dictate that an extraordinary play would decide the game.

That was the case Saturday as Massachusetts (7-1, 5-0 A-10) downed Villanova (6-1, 4-1 A-10) 19-14, thanks to the nimble work of sophomore Shannon James, who picked up a fumble by backup quarterback Marvin Burroughs and scored the winning touchdown in front of 9,125 at Villanova Stadium.

The play capped off a game that had everything — reversal of fortune, hard hitting, and even some history, thanks to a 97-yard pass from UMass quarterback Jeff Krohn to Jimmie Howard, the longest pass in A-10 history, and the longest play from scrimmage in UMass history. Howard's reception also eclipsed the 82-yard Krohn-to-Jason Peebler connection against New Hampshire on Oct. 4 as the longest pass in the history of Minuteman football.

UMass	19
Villanova	14

In one of the stranger sequences in recent memory, Burroughs fumbled the snap with 2:08 remaining, the ball rattled off legs at the line of scrimmage, and ended up at James' feet. James scooped up the loose ball and took it 59 yards for the touchdown, with the UMass bench erupting into celebration. The Minutemen became so exuberant, in fact, that coach Mark Whipple was visibly upset, and when a flag was thrown for excessive celebration, Whipple fired his headset into the ground.

Despite the penalty, and a failed two-point conversion attempt, the Maroon and White held on to the five-point lead, and senior Mike Ziccardi punctuated the effort with a sack on Burroughs with less than a minute to go.

"Shannon James did a really good job, because he got beat on a couple of things at the end of the half," Whipple said, by way of referring to a 5-yard touchdown completion by 'Nova starting quarterback Joe Casamento to John Dieser. "He was the one who kind of made a mistake, got beat up by Dieser, and he just hung in there and made a huge play at the end of the game … somehow the kids just found a way to get it done, so credit those guys."

"All I could think of is 'god is with us,'" said

Continued on page 9

Fish fry Yanks

CHARLES KRUPA/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Josh Beckett grins as champagne flies in the locker room after the Florida Marlins won the World Series over the New York Yankees Saturday in New York. Beckett was named Series MVP.

Beckett cruises as Florida wins World Series

By Ben Walker
Associated Press

NEW YORK (AP) — The Josh Beckett gamble turned out to be pure genius.

The wild-card Florida Marlins wrapped up their wild ride with a most improbable World Series championship, stunning the New York Yankees 2-0 Saturday night behind the strong right arm and sheer determination of their young MVP.

Florida	2
New York	0

Manager Jack McKeon was second-guessed the moment he said Beckett would start Game six on three days' rest. But the 23-year-old fastballer, called "Rook" by his manager, made McKeon look brilliant.

Starting on short rest for the first time in his career, Beckett threw a five-hitter to give the Marlins their second title in seven seasons.

"You'll believe me now that anything can happen," McKeon said. "This guy has the guts of a burglar."

Beckett outdueled Andy Pettitte and defeated a Yankees team that had won four of the last seven crowns, never allowing a runner past second base.

"That kid showed that he was going to be a great one down the road, if he hasn't already," Yankees manager Joe Torre said.

Not since 1981 had another team celebrated a Series championship on the field at Yankee Stadium. When the Los Angeles Dodgers did it then, Yankees owner George Steinbrenner apologized to the city for the distant performance.

Yankees general manager Brian Cashman and former star Reggie Jackson, chins resting on hands,

Continued on page 7

UM tops Crusaders

Capraro scores clincher again

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

For the second straight game, sophomore Chris Capraro brought heroics to the Mullins Center. This time, however, it came with a little more weight, as his tally midway through the third period Friday helped the Massachusetts hockey team edge Holy Cross 2-1.

Capraro also scored the game-winner against St. Lawrence last Saturday, although that was just the second of a five-goal spree by the Minutemen (4-0, 1-0 Hockey East) who are off to their best start since 1971.

Holy Cross	1
UMass	2

The Crusaders put up quite a fight, holding an obvious advantage at times, but succumbed to Capraro's third goal in two games.

The winning tally came thanks to a scrum in front of Tony Quesada's goal, where Capraro took a feed from Mike Warner to pot the clincher, making it 2-1 with 11:18 remaining. Stephen Werner set the play up with a shot that ricocheted to Warner and then Capraro.

"[It's good] when you can get a win when you're not playing your best hockey," Capraro said, "a win's a win. Yeah, it was ugly, but that's what we're here to do. They're not always going to be pretty."

Quesada was the spark for Holy Cross with 28 saves on 30 UMass shots, many of those made in spectacular fashion. His quick glove and 6-foot-2, 185-pound frame were deterrents for a number of quality shots. Holy Cross coach Paul Pearl was appreciative of the freshman's efforts.

"If they come down on two-on-one and bury it, everyone's going to go 'ugh,'" Pearl said. "If they come down on a two-on-one and he makes a couple of saves, everyone on the bench perks up a little bit, like 'Hey, we can make a mistake and it won't end up in our net.'"

As he has in previous games where the Minutemen struggled, Thomas Pöck tried to turn the game around himself early in the second. He took the puck from his own blue line, blazed into the offensive zone, and beat Quesada over his left shoulder. But the shot was a touch high, and it clanged off the crossbar.

The Crusaders tied it 1:24 into the second. Andrew McKay carried nearly all the way to the endboards, and fired an impossible shot that Gabe Winer deflected with his paddle. James Sixsmith was at the ready on Winer's doorstep, however, and banged the rebound home between the goalie's legs to make it 1-1.

GERALD H. LINGO/COLLEGIAN

Gabe Winer made 20 saves to stifle Holy Cross and help UMass to a 2-1 win Friday night.

John Toffey nearly had his first goal in a UMass uniform late in the first period when he left a drop pass for Pöck, who ripped off a cannon shot that echoed loudly off Quesada's pads. Toffey skated in on the loose rebound sitting precariously in the middle of the crease, but was on his stomach underneath a Holy Cross defender, and couldn't knock the puck over the goal line.

Although the overall performance by UMass was less than spectacular, the penalty killers continued to sparkle with the help of Winer. In its only cameo of the game — one penalty was called to each team the entire 60 minutes — the penalty killing unit handled the Crusaders for much of the two-minute respite awarded to Toffey for holding. When Holy Cross invaded the offensive zone, Winer made an initial stop, and then smothered a flurry of attempts by the men in purple, finally allowing the Minutemen to clear the zone.

Junior Greg Mauldin hit paydirt for the Minutemen 9:56 into the first period. Toffey doggedly chased a Crusader into the corner to Quesada's left, and fished out the puck, whipping around and finding Mauldin wide open in the slot. Mauldin fired a wrist shot that beat Quesada stick side low. It was the first UMass point for Toffey, who transferred from Ohio State last season and played his first game in the maroon and white Friday.

The Daily Collegian

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 28, 2003 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 39

Speaker warns of changing temperatures

By Matthew Consolini
Collegian Correspondent

The environmental consequences of global warming have profound effects on the planet, but just as devastating are its political, economic and social ramifications, said Ross Gelbspan, a Pulitzer Prize-winning journalist who has written extensively on the subject.

His speech last night is part of the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group's grassroots effort to educate students about the effects of global warming.

"Ross Gelbspan is one of the premier writers of our time on this issue," said Harris Parnell, campus organizer for MassPIRG. "We want to educate people in the community, which is why we're having him talk to students," she said.

Gelbspan launched his speech to about 50 students by stating that they have a unique stake in this issue.

"We look to colleges and universities for new direction and ideas," Gelbspan said. He hopes that by setting an example, America's educational institutions can incite change at the national level.

"You also have a direct and personal interest in this issue. This isn't just about the quality of life, but the stability of future lives," he said.

Gelbspan summarized the multitude of adverse effects on the environment because of global warming. Increasingly intense heat waves, longer droughts, increased acidity in oceans and atmospheric warming are just a few of the dramatic changes to the environment this past century.

"The planet is heating up faster in the past 100 years than in the past 10,000 years," Gelbspan said.

Humans have altered the cycle of the seasons with the burning of fossil fuels.

"Spring begins two weeks earlier in North America," Gelbspan said. "Accidentally, we are changing the rhythm of nature."

Infectious diseases, such as West Nile Virus and malaria, are also spreading because of climactic changes. According to Gelbspan, the increasingly warm atmosphere accelerates the growth of pathogens that cause disease. It also affects insect populations, causing disease-carrying mosquitoes to enter areas where West Nile is not commonly found.

"These warnings are becoming much more imminent and much more frightening, especially as the White House and Congress continue to dole out tax breaks for the polluting oil and coal industries," he said.

The economic ramifications are just as important to Gelbspan. Increased global warming can create "rising disaster relief budgets," and the insurance industry is losing money because of the growing number of disaster-like floods, fires and diseases, Gelbspan said. He even cited a statement from a British insurance company which said the economic strain of global warming "could bankrupt the global economy."

Unbalancing the earth's delicate ecosystem can even have social and political effects, Gelbspan said.

"Climate change is an issue of social justice and human rights," he said. Food supplies and human habitats the all over the world are affected, especially in developing countries.

"These countries do not have the money for infrastructures to buffer these effects [of such climate change]," he said.

Gelbspan argued that the reason the U.S. hasn't done much about reducing emissions is because the White House "is doing the bidding of the fossil fuel lobby." For years, coal and oil companies have skewed scientific research about the issue by "repositioning global warming as theory instead of fact," he said.

He cites pressure from President Bush as the main reason why Governor Mitt Romney isn't moving ahead with the state's current plan to handle greenhouse emissions.

Gelbspan urged students to counteract these efforts by lobbyists with grassroots efforts.

"It is critical to act — locally with the governor and nationally — since our elected officials aren't taking a stand," Gelbspan said.

Task force works to change alcohol attitude

By Deborah Geiger
Collegian Correspondent

A University of Massachusetts task force called for new rules in controlling the "alcohol culture" on campus, many of which brought forth a long-awaited public reaction.

The 21-member Chancellor's Task Force for the Prevention of Alcohol Abuse endorses new policies, the most recent of which have received a mixed public reaction. The establishment of alcohol-free residence halls for first-year students is among the first changes UMass hopes to implement.

"I think they can do whatever they want, because kids are still going to drink whether they're 21 or 18," said Josh, a first-year student who wished that his last name not be used.

Drinking laws may help prevent the public usage of alcohol of those under 21, but University officials and Residence Life staff question the usage of alcohol by minors behind closed doors and the ramifications it can bring along.

"Kids will think twice and cover their tracks more," Josh said. "But they'll drink as much as they always did. It doesn't matter what dorm they're in."

Over-21 undergraduates shared a different sentiment.

"I think that it would be beneficial to have separate dorms for students under 21," said Nancy Cody, a 24-year-old undergraduate who is also a resident assistant.

"Most of the alcohol policy violations are underage drinking. People try to tell you they're 21," Cody said. "But when you look up the room 10 minutes later, both parties who live in the room are 17, 18 years old."

Drinking habits of first-year students that were cultivated in hometowns or big cities where drinking laws were not strictly enforced may also play a role in attitudes toward college drinking.

"I was never a huge drinker back at home," Josh said. "So my attitude toward partying here is the same."

"Freshmen were by far the most inexperienced and unaware when it came to alcohol," said a former Southwest resident assistant, who requested that her name not be used. "I am all for an alcohol code."

In her experience, ignorance about quantities and tolerances sometimes lead to drinking in possible lethal amounts.

"As an R.A., I found that most of the cases that I had to call an ambulance for were freshmen students … underage students," she said.

"I have a lot of alcoholic friends back at home who've been drinking their whole lives," Josh said. "I don't know if their lives are going downhill overall, but I've seen my [freshmen] friends get in trouble — serious trouble."

The task force further endorses that all alcohol-related damage should be billed to students living on the residence hall floor where the damage was done when guilty parties cannot be identified.

"I agree with the community billing policy because I feel that students should be held accountable, as well as hold others accountable, for the destruction of their floor," said senior Katie Quinn. "People who feel responsible for something will do their best to protect it. We need to instill more community pride … [and] get people active on campus."

Quinn feels that applying a formulaic "drinking code" at UMass will not work.

"They have a lot of good ideas about strengthening the alcohol code," Quinn said, "but I'm not sure that all of them will work for our campus. Each college campus is unique. It's best to understand … the needs of the students."

Quinn continued: "We do need to be a bit more strict on alcohol violations, especially underage drinking, and to do so, we must show that we'll implement these programs, that they are important, and that they will be getting funds from us."

While the Red Sox rioting abounded at other universities, many undergraduate students have expressed that UMass "rioting" is different than at other schools, and because of these differences the school may need a modified, more specialized alcohol code.

"I think that alcohol had a big part in the deviant behavior of the students involved in the riots," Quinn continued. "There's still a lot of work to be done to refine the alcohol codes, but I think they're moving in the right direction."

Quinn thinks it is integral to discourage

Continued on page 2

TD ALLEN/COLLEGIAN

On your mark …

Cadets from the 1st Platoon Alpha Company Minuteman Battalion, comprised of both University of Massachusetts and Western New England College students, breeze through an obstacle course at the Camp Edwards Field Leadership Obstacle Course with seconds to spare. The Minuteman Battalion held "Operation Fall Warrior" at the Camp Edward National Guard Base on Cape Cod over the past weekend.

Anthrax battle to be discussed

By Gabriel Leiner
Collegian Correspondent

Dr. R. John Collier, Maude and Lillian Presley Professor of microbiology and molecular genetics at Harvard Medical School, will present his lecture, "Addressing the Threat of Anthrax," tomorrow at 4 p.m. in Room 150/151 of the Computer Science Building.

Dr. Collier will present two lectures while he is on campus. In addition to tomorrow's talk, he will give a lecture entitled, "Anthrax Toxin: Structure, Activity and New Inhibitors," today at 4 p.m., which is intended for a more scientific-oriented audience.

The events of fall 2001, when anthrax-laced letters killed several people in the United States and scared millions more, emphasized the importance of his work. In September of last year, Dr. Collier and his colleagues worked to develop strategies to block the anthrax toxin.

In 1989, Dr. Collier began studying anthrax because he found interest in the biological workings of the bacterium. Most recently, as a result of work previously done by his laboratory to investigate the toxin of the anthrax bacteria, new therapeutic strategies to counter anthrax are now being developed.

Based on new information about the anthrax toxin's structure and activity collected during research with different research teams, Dr. Collier discovered that the bacterium releases separate proteins that assemble themselves into a "molecular syringe." The syringe binds to the surface of a healthy cell and then pokes a hole in it.

Dr. Collier and his colleagues found that if only one of the syringe's seven subunits is flawed, the syringe cannot inject its poison into a human cell. This information has led to the formation of a strategy to combat anthrax, which introduces mutations in the subunit of the toxin that convert the pore-forming subunit into a "dominant negative inhibitor." This renders the syringe inactive and ulti-

Continued on page 2

Grant funds web-based learning

By Dan O'Brien
Collegian Staff

The School of Education at the University of Massachusetts Amherst and Lowell campuses have received a three-year, $1.2 million grant from the National Science Foundation to support the development and implementation of a web-based licensing program for middle school science teachers.

The project will provide an online master's degree in education with a concentration in science education. The program meets national and state standards and leads to professional licensure for general science teachers for fifth through eighth grade who live in the state of Massachusetts.

Andrew Effrat, dean of the School of Education at UMass, says that this increase in funding should raise the interests of the school to recruit more science teachers.

"These resources are helping the Schools of Education on the Amherst and Lowell campuses to reinvigorate our efforts to train high-quality science teachers for all Massachusetts children," he said. "The program increases the number of classroom teachers licensed in science education, an area which the shortage is particularly pronounced."

Effrat says that this external support should bring positive recognition to the school.

"This brings tremendous recognition to the quality of work here," he said. "This is great because it supports online education, and it enhances the quality of science teachings."

This project to promote future teachers is directed by Kathleen S. Davis, associate professor of education on the Amherst campus. The co-directors are Stephen Schneider, professor of astronomy at UMass Amherst and Anita Greenwood, associate professor of education at UMass Lowell.

Each course developed for this web-based program, Science Education Online, will have a number of outside materials such as educational kits to engage the participants in interactions among themselves and the instructors. Threaded discussions, electronic journals and e-mail and document sharing will allow the participants and instructors to easily engage in discussion.

Donald E. Pierson, dean of the Graduate School of Education at UMass Lowell, said the discussions should be effective for learning.

"We have found the online medium to be effective for other subject areas, and we are eager to extend this application to improve the teaching of science," he said.

The courses will be designed and taught by teams comprised of UMass faculty and expert public school science teachers. The first group of 30 teachers from urban and rural school districts in Massachusetts will begin its two-year program in the spring semester of 2004.

Sharon says Israel has no plans to kill Arafat

By Josef Federman
Associated Press

JERUSALEM (AP) — Prime Minister Ariel Sharon said for the first time yesterday that Israel has no plans to kill Yasser Arafat, even as he accused the Palestinian leader of continuing to orchestrate attacks on civilians.

Sharon delivered his assessment as Israel confirmed plans to begin providing services to eight settlement outposts in the West Bank. The announcement dealt another blow to the faltering U.S.-backed peace plan.

That plan, known as the "road map," calls for a construction freeze in Israeli settlements and removal of outposts erected since 2001. Palestinians have complained that Israel is undermining the peace plan — but have also balked at the requirement that they dismantle militant groups.

In another development, Palestinian Prime Minister Ahmed Qureia said that he is making progress in talks with Islamic militants about halting fighting with Israel.

Sharon met with a delegation of lawmakers from the European Parliament, where he was asked about Arafat. Israel"s Cabinet last month decided to "remove" Arafat at an unspecified time in response to Palestinian suicide bomb attacks, prompting speculation the Palestinian leader would be expelled or assassinated.

"I don"t see any plans to kill him," Sharon told the lawmakers, while accusing Arafat of orchestrating attacks on Israelis during three years of fighting.

"You don"t have to worry, he"s alive and not only is he alive but very active in taking all the … steps … that bring to murder of children, civilians, the old," Sharon said.

Sharon was also asked whether it is right to build new settlements in the West Bank and Gaza Strip, areas where the Palestinians hope to establish an independent homeland.

"We do not build now. We do not aid a new settlement there or Jewish communities there," Sharon said. "If sometimes it happens, the army removes them."

Sharon spoke hours after the Defense Ministry confirmed that residents of eight West Bank outposts would be given some services. The outposts, which usually consist of little more than a couple of trailers and an Israeli flag, will be fenced in and receive lighting, and children will be bused to schools, said a ministry official, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Ron Shechner, the settlement adviser of Defense Minister Shaul Mofaz, told the Yediot Ahronot daily that this does not mean the outposts are being legalized. However, the decision appears to imply recognition and would be in violation of the road map.

Palestinian negotiator Saeb Erekat accused Israel of sabotaging the plan. "These actions have to be condemned by the United States and the Quartet (of Mideast mediators), and I call upon them to intervene immediately," he said.

Separately, an Israeli parliamentary committee gave final approval to transfer what opposition lawmakers estimated as $20 million in extra funding to Jewish settlements in the West Bank and Gaza. The funds are earmarked for constructing infrastructure for public buildings and to supplying temporary buildings to outlying outposts.

All could be interpreted as contrary to the road map, a blueprint for Palestinian statehood by 2005. The road map was launched in June with great fanfare but quickly bogged down over disagreements and violence.

Israel has said it would take no further action on the road map until the Palestinians begin dismantling militant groups, as required by the plan. Qureia, like his predecessors, has said he will use persuasion but not force against the armed groups.

Qureia said talks with Palestinian factions on reaching a cease-fire are progressing, but the final decision would depend on Israel.

"There is an ongoing dialogue, and we are having dialogue with everyone, and there is a dialogue between the factions themselves," Qureia said.

"We are working toward a mutual cease-fire," he added. "If they [Israel] are ready, then we are also ready." But if Israel doesn't accept the initiative, he cautioned, "there is no meaning to a cease-fire."

Israeli Foreign Minister Silvan Shalom ruled out a cease-fire, saying that militants had exploited a period of quiet over the summer to rearm.

"There is no way to achieve peace while the infrastructure of the terrorist organizations still exist," he said. "We can't accept any proposal of one more cease-fire."

EDITORIAL/OPINION
PAGE 3
SMART'S STORY
REMINDING US OF OUR JOURNALISTIC DUTY
ARTS & LIVING
PAGE 4
REORIENTALISM
PERFORMERS DISCLOSE MIDDLE EASTERN STEREOTYPES
SPORTS
PAGE 8
SOX LET LITTLE GO
MANAGER'S OPTION IS NOT PICKED UP
COMICS/CLASSIFIEDS
PAGE 7

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Jennifer Eastwood
Managing Editor Dan Lamothe
Business Manager Peter Foundas
Production Manager Scott Pibl
Night Supervisor Nick Markantonatos
Advertising Manager Sean Costello
Editorial Production Shannon Farrington
Arts & Living Editor Glen Straub
Comics Editor Molly Eggleston
Editorial Editor Paige Cram
News Editor Ferron Salniker
Photo Editor Gerald H. Ling
Sports Editor Andrew Merritt
Classified Advertising Marty Pappas
Distribution Manager Julie Beauchamp
Finance Manager Greg Stamm
Human Resource Manager Sandra Marquez
Special Issues Betsy Feldman
Assistant Business Ben Ratner
Assistant Advertising David Bor
Assistant Distribution Mark Lagatic
Assistant Finance Richard Pacheco
Advertising Production Liza Lynch
Layout Manager Lindsay Clark
Graphics Advisor Charlie Higgins
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Asst. Arts & Living Meghan Healy
Asst. Arts & Living Cameron J. Woods
Assistant News Erica Lovley
Assistant News Morris Singer
Assistant Photo Emilie Duggan
Assistant Sports Mike Murrelli
Assistant Sports Robert McGovern

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently published, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1401, the Weekly Collegian in 1918 and the Bay Weekly Collegian in 1936. Published daily since 1967. The Collegian has been recognized since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

For the record

Correction: Daisy's Restaurant hours are as follows: Monday through Friday, 7 a.m. to 2 p.m., Saturday through Sunday, 7 a.m. to 3 p.m. Daisy's is closed on Tuesdays. In our "Dining Out Guide" that appeared in last Tuesday's paper, the hours were incorrect.

Stolen cars turn up in Springfield

Two bicycle thefts from Wheeler Hall reported

compiled by Thomas Coyle

Saturday, Oct. 18

12:08 a.m. An officer reported checking on several subjects carrying a lit tiki torch by the Southwest horseshoe. The officer reported that the subjects had extinguished the torch.

12:36 a.m. A cadet reported a large group of people shouting and fighting in Lot 32E on Massachusetts Ave. An officer stated that the group had moved along.

1:27 a.m. A caller reported witnessing a vehicle east of Van Meter Hall hitting a curb, and then stopping in the middle of the street. The officer advised that the situation checked OK and College Street was on the scene to tow the vehicle; a report was taken.

2:02 a.m. A party reported being assaulted by known individuals in Mackimmie Hall; a report was taken.

2:27 a.m. A fire was reported in a dumpster behind Totman Gym. Emergency Health and Safety and the Amherst Fire Department were notified. An officer reported the cause of the fire as unknown.

4 a.m. An officer reported a fight at the top of the Southwest horseshoe. The fight was reportedly a verbal altercation between several parties.

6:06 a.m. Housing reported that a vending machine in Cance Hall was vandalized and items from the machine were taken. The vendor was contacted and a report was taken.

6:04 p.m. A report was received of people stuck in the #5 elevator of the W.E.B. DuBois Library. The Physical Plant reported that the people were out of the elevator and it was taken out of service.

Sunday, Oct. 19

12:15 a.m. An officer responding to a disturbance in Van Meter Hall reported that one subject was brought to Health Services. The officer reported being on scene with two other subjects and was attempting to get witness statements.

6:21 a.m. An intoxicated person in Crabtree Hall was placed in protective custody.

7:54 a.m. Housing requested help removing a group of people sleeping in the hallway of the 17th floor of Coolidge Hall. The parties all agreed to return to their rooms.

3:03 p.m. A red Nishiki bicycle valued at $500 was reported stolen from Wheeler Hall.

11:48 p.m. An officer responded to a report of an odor of marijuana in John Adams Hall. An odor was detected and the officer spoke with the resident who called and reported the incident to the resident assistant for follow-up.

Monday, Oct. 20

1:02 a.m. A caller in Brown Hall reported receiving two phone calls from an unknown party. No threats were made and the caller was advised to call back if the problem persisted.

8:04 p.m. A party called from his home in Hadley to report that he was unable to locate his vehicle in Lot 12. An officer reported an area check was negative and the vehicle was entered into the system as stolen.

Tuesday, Oct. 21

7:56 a.m. A caller reported that sometime during the weekend, someone had used a water-fire extinguisher, tipped over trashcans and spread garbage in a hallway in Hills House.

9:14 a.m. Springfield Police reported recovering a vehicle that had been reported stolen from UMass.

10:39 a.m. A black Mongoose bicycle was reported stolen off the rack at Wheeler Hall sometime last week.

6:16 p.m. A party stated that her vehicle was missing from Lot 25 on Commonwealth Ave. An area check was negative and the car was entered into the stolen vehicle directory.

11:41 p.m. A UMPD officer was checking the Admissions building bus stop after UMass transit reported that an irate customer had contacted them and wanted a confrontation; an area check was negative.

Wednesday, Oct. 22

1:11 a.m. Springfield Police report finding a vehicle that had been stolen yesterday from the UMass campus. The vehicle was reportedly damaged in the front and the stereo was missing; the owner was advised.

1:42 a.m. A party reported a group of people walking and screaming loudly near Prince Hall. An officer stated that he had spoke to the group and stated that they were rehearsing for a show; they were moved along.

1:43 p.m. A party in Brown Hall reported computers, clothing and boots stolen; a report was taken.

9:58 p.m. An officer responded to a report of an odor of marijuana in Brooks Hall. Several items were confiscated and a report was taken.

Thursday, Oct. 23

9:53 p.m. A party reported that a "white moving truck" had sideswiped him and that he had struck the vehicle in front of him. The van didn't stop and left the scene. The exact location of the accident was not determined and a report was taken.

11:29 a.m. The custodial staff at McNamara Hall reported finding a window with what appeared to be BB gun pellets in it. An officer was to meet with the staff.

3:32 p.m. Police responded to an odor of marijuana in Dwight Hall. The officer advised that the party was spoken with and several items were confiscated.

Friday, Oct. 24

12 a.m. A party reported that there were five men trying to start a fight on the east side of Hamlin Hall. The officer reported affiliating all five and dispersing the group.

12:56 p.m. Officers reporting to a disturbance in John Adams Hall and reported arresting Andrew Ahearn, 20, of 61 Chase St., Hyannis, Mass., for accosting/annoying someone of the opposite sex and assault and battery.

2:12 a.m. A resident assistant reported several agitated individuals knocking on doors in Mackimmie Hall. Responding officers checked a group on the Southwest mall; the area checked out OK.

Alcohol

Continued from page 1

drunken rowdiness and violence in any capacity. "They just need to determine what's essential in discouraging deviant behavior … underage drinking behavior. That's the real issue here."

"The students that engaged in the riots were most totally intoxicated, and that increase made [them] act without thinking of the consequences," said Matthew, a junior who lives off campus, who also wished that his last name not be used. "Let's get some consequences underway."

"I don't care if they have a drinking code on campus. I don't even live there," Matthew said. "But I think it would definitely help the situation for future freshmen."

Anthrax expert set to speak about research on bacteria

Continued from page 1

mately blocks entry of the toxin into cells.

Dr. Collier also worked with Dr. John Young of the University of Wisconsin when the anthrax toxin receptor, or ATR, was identified on the surface of animal cells. The researchers then found the specific region of ATR to which the anthrax toxin binds. With this information, they produced a "decoy" molecule to divert the anthrax toxin.

Dr. Collier's previous research has contributed to the development of vaccines for Pertussis (commonly known as whooping cough) and the design of immunotoxins to specifically destroy certain cancer cells.

Dr. Collier holds a B.A. from Rice University and a Ph.D. from Harvard, both in biology. After postdoctoral study at the University of Geneva, he joined the faculty of the department of bacteriology at the University of California at Los Angeles. In 1984, he joined Harvard, where he served six years as graduate dean, followed by a year as acting chair of the department of microbiology and molecular genetics.

In July of 2003, Dr. Collier was awarded the 13th Annual Bristol-Myers Squibb Award for Distinguished Achievement in Infectious Diseases Research for his contributions to understanding the molecular mechanisms by which bacteria cause disease.

Dr. Collier also received the Eli Lilly Award in Microbiology and Immunology in 1972, the Paul Ehrlich Prize in 1990 and the Selman Waksman Award in 1999. He was elected to the National Academy of Sciences in 1991. Since 1967, his research has been supported primarily by the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases.

The Nordin lecture is funded by a donation from Arthur Rosenthal, Ph.D., an alumnus of the University of Massachusetts Amherst biochemistry and molecular biology department.

As an engineer in the U.S. Air Force, there's no telling what you'll work on.
(Seriously, we can't tell you.)

United States Air Force applied technology is years ahead of what you'll touch in the private sector, and as a new engineer you'll likely be involved at the ground level of new and sometimes classified developments. You'll begin leading and managing within this highly respected group from day one. Find out what's waiting behind the scenes for you in the Air Force today. To request more information, call 1-800-423-USAF or log on to airforce.com.

U.S. AIR FORCE
CROSS INTO THE BLUE

www.dailycollegian.com www.dailycollegian.com

Hawai'i Pacific University

Hawai'i Pacific University offers nine graduate programs that emphasize practical applications, providing students with current solutions and innovative strategies needed for success.

PROGRAMS OF STUDY
- Master of Business Administration
- Master of Arts in Communication
- Master of Arts in Diplomacy and Military Studies
- Master of Arts in Global Leadership
- Master of Arts in Human Resource Management
- Master of Arts in Organizational Change
- Master of Arts in Teaching English as a Second Language
- Master of Science in Information Systems
- Master of Science in Nursing

Attractive scholarship and assistantship opportunities are available.

CENTER FOR GRADUATE STUDIES
1164 Bishop Street, Suite 911 • Honolulu, HI 96813
Phone: 1 (808) 544-0279 • Toll-free: 1 866-GRAD-HPU
E-mail: graduate@hpu.edu

Visit the Hawai'i Pacific University representative on campus: Wednesday, Oct 29

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

Tuesday, October 28, 2003 Editorial@dailycollegian.com

Smart ordeal reminds us of our journalistic duty

The Elizabeth Smart story has captured national attention since she was abducted at knifepoint from her bedroom in 2002 and went missing for nine months. When Smart was finally found and returned home last March, the media harped on the anguish and pain of the Smart family. That was last time their lives were to be exploited, or so it seemed.

Now, the release of a book from the Smart family, "Bringing Elizabeth Home: A Journey of Faith and Hope," has left major media outlets competing to boost viewer ratings with the new propaganda.

NBC aired Smart's first televised interview done with Katie Couric last Friday. CBS is set to release a television movie on Nov. 3, "The Elizabeth Smart Story." Oprah Winfrey's own Elizabeth Smart interview aired on ABC yesterday.

The renewed force of publicity on such a sensitive case is unsettling. The media, desperate to recapture the dwindling attention span of the American viewer, has been turning to low-grade, poor taste mediums to uphold viewer ratings. News is watched for entertainment, rather than for information.

It is questionable whether today's media is continuing to uphold the integrity of journalism. Have reporters, in their attempts to hold viewer attention, lost sight of the basic respect that needs to be upheld? These issues come to mind when audiences are being entertained by the kidnapping and sexual assault of a 14-year-old girl.

As journalists hound Smart, seeking captivating details of her misfortune, a line of privacy is being crossed. Justification of the acts claims that by sharing her experience, Smart is making headway in the healing process.

"My impression is that part of the recovery process for Elizabeth is taking control of her own life and making decisions for herself," Couric said.

Does the recovery process really need to take place on national television? When the Smart case has been exhausted and dropped from public view, it is arguable if Elizabeth will be able to put closure on this horrible chapter of her life. Her name will most likely remain engraved in the media memory.

Cases like the Elizabeth Smart story reminds us at The Massachusetts Daily Collegian of what we stand for as journalists. In our everyday work, we must strive to give a voice to the voiceless, to inform and educate, to be objective, sensitive, and above all, to respect our subjects' right to privacy.

These same questions need to be reviewed by the major networks. Most all of the coverage, except for Couric's interview, has not been news related. Rather, the programs have been designed solely for entertainment value. Oprah Winfrey's talk show is not a suitable place for a minor to begin trauma recovery. A CBS movie will not truly impart knowledge; rather, it will more likely become an over dramatized ordeal.

The media needs to return to the true art of journalism: to educate, not entertain.

Information for this editorial was used from www.usatoday.com.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

A frustrated republican fires back

I write this article at great risk … The Committee of Tar and Feathering will surely come knocking at my door once this column is published. I submit myself to the mercy of the mob. But what heinous crime have I committed?

Adam DeSimone

Deviation. I am not in the majority. I am like few UMassers. I have led myself astray from the chosen political demagoguery on campus. Instead, I exercise my First Amendment rights, and ally with people with whom I more closely identify. These people do not constitute a rebel faction or social miscreant, and yet they are systematically dichotomized into a battle between good and evil.

I am a republican.

Some of the dominant paradigms on campus have the audacity to stereotype us — yes, stereotype us — as bigots, racists, homophobes and even sexists. I am none of these. Unfortunately, a few choice people scribble half-hearted, incoherent thoughts onto paper, believing that their ability to write makes them intelligent. As any freethinking person knows, blanket statements and pigeonholing only makes the accusers' lack of knowledge more evident.

I'm pretty sure that Richard Nixon, a republican if I'm not mistaken, started affirmative action. President Nixon made an honest effort — and yes, I am aware of the danger of using the word "honest" — to elevate the mass status of minorities. I can only speculate that since the progressive program did not work as well as planned, the republicans abandoned it as a platform issue.

The democrats, a party rooted in social justice since the 1960s, adopted it. Although individuals may have benefited from affirmative action, only a simpleton could pretend that democrats have solved minority woes with this noble, yet fundamentally flawed peace of legislation.

Some of the dominant paradigms on campus have the audacity to stereotype us — yes, stereotype us — as bigots, racists, homophobes and even sexists.

Other than affirmative action, I'm pretty sure republicans have done nothing else to elevate the standard of living for African-Americans. Oh wait … they abolished slavery! Now, give credit where credit is due. It is a historical fact that the democrats fought to keep African Americans enslaved, while the newly formed Republican Party fought to free them. Tossing my obnoxious overtone aside, I apologize if I have offended any democrat readers.

Allow me to refocus my position. As I stated earlier, the Democratic Party is rooted in social justice. This much is evident in our daily lives. As a country, we — both democrats and republicans — have made leaps and bounds in race relations. Clearly the goal of total social justice has not been achieved, but we're on the right track.

I am tired of being called a racist. I am tired of being called a sexist. If this article does nothing else, I hope to show that by labeling all people of one race, of one sex or with one political affiliation, the accusers are only engendering more hatred, more baseless lies and a greater schism along an already split political spectrum.

"Judge not, lest ye be judged (Matthew 7:1)," because with your current viewpoint, you will probably just write me off as a religious zealot, along with all the other derogatory adjectives you've already tacked onto my name and my party.

Adam DeSimone is a UMass student.

Returning focus to American politics

Robert Carey

When I first began writing columns for this paper, I was inspired. I had tons of good ideas, and a zeal for writing them down. Praises for my writing from peers, classmates and people I didn't really know came in droves.

But as the months and now years passed on, I slowly began to run into a funk. The topics that meant the most to me I had already covered, and the search for new ones became toilsome and self-defeating. My writing, along with my topics, began to suffer. I felt that my words had become dry and purposeless. And soon, the praises turned to criticism. On days when my column runs, I can expect my friend, who we'll simply call Katey l. (wait … that's too obvious; let's just call her K. Jones), to have a litany of acerbic criticisms on whatever my most recent article was about.

But no more. I have at last found a topic that means something significant to me. The race for the democratic presidential nomination is shaping up to be a wide-open free-for-all, including a slew of colorful people, of which only the keenest will survive. This is a far cry from the 2000 campaigns.

Four years ago, I remember watching "60 Minutes" and seeing an oafish middle-aged Texan fail a test on which he was asked to name the leaders of five well-known countries, and thinking to myself, "Why is this idiot wasting his time?" And here we are four years later, warming up for another round, wondering which white man with a "vision" will come out on top this time.

The most recent polls in New Hampshire have Howard Dean, governor of Vermont, leading with 37 percent. This lead is 13 percent away from Dean's closest democratic competitor, John Kerry, a Massachusetts senator and former scarecrow. Dean is pedaling himself as a humble, self-made rube, and successful New England governor worth about $4 million. Like Bush, Dean attended Yale, but unlike his republican counterpart, he wasn't making day trip to

Four years ago, I remember watching "60 Minutes" and seeing an oafish middle-aged Texan fail a test on which he was asked to name the leaders of five well-known countries, and thinking to myself, "Why is this idiot wasting his time?"

New Haven to "score" God-knows-what. And as far as acronyms achieved after graduation are concerned, Dean received his M.D. while Bush got a D.U.I.

I like Dean right now; he seems to have the sly charisma of Bill Clinton with the laudable, though pernicious, sense of humanity of JFK. And as a man who has taken the Hippocratic Oath, he'll do his best to minimize human suffering while leading the free world. Still, there is a long way to go until all the primaries are over, and any number of things could take place.

There still is Kerry to consider: a man who, though not at all photogenic, is still one who is well experienced in Washington politics. And then there is the recent entry of Wesley Clark, retired general and liberal (a combination that, for me, seems as contradictory as a "Save the Rain Forest" bumper sticker on a new Hummer). But nevertheless, the media has been giving Clark a lot of attention as a serious candidate.

This race is especially important for liberals everywhere. They're all banking on the same thing — that Bush's imbecility will finally show through at some point in the 2004 campaign, he'll retreat down south somewhere, buy a ranch with former Red Sox manager Grady Little, and the two of them can live the rest of their days ostracized, wondering if their brains had just worked a little faster, how different it all would have been?

The first step to making this fantasy a reality is to sway the independent voter, many of whom vote on a four-year cycle — like those who go to church only at Christmastime. I cannot say that to some extent I am not guilty of this as well. But unlike half-hearted attempts at religious integrity, the choice to vote in the presidential elections should be done with personal responsibility and wisdom. Many people in this country underuse democracy, and often when they exercised it, it is done in a stupid and uninformed fashion.

The best way to counter this is to begin following election coverage now and to get into good habits for next November, because as much as I hate to say it, this election is vastly more important than any sporting event imaginable.

Robert Carey is a Collegian columnist.

Dubya accountable for Sept. 11

Johnny Donaldson

In 1979, what was then known as the U.S.S.R. invaded the small Middle Eastern country of Afghanistan. In 1980, Osama bin Laden, a member of a wealthy Saudi business family, offered monetary support to the Afghan Mujahaddin to defeat the imperialist Soviet forces, with aid from the American government.

1993: Bill Clinton deals with aftermath of a heinous car bombing at the World Trade Center, and begins initiatives to stop further terrorist activities.

2001: Knowledge of possible terrorist attacks using commercial American aircraft begins circulating amongst law enforcement authorities. Authorities at piloting schools report suspicious students taking flying lessons in their classrooms. Meanwhile, numerous alleged terrorists are spotted engaged in various suspicious activities. The American president, meanwhile, is engaged in gutting counterterrorism-oriented bills started by the previous administration.

Sept. 11, 2001: the unthinkable happens.

On that sunny day in September, an airplane struck the side of one of the World Trade Center towers, followed by another strike to the other tower, and then two more: at the Pentagon and in Pennsylvania. The United States was under attack.

It was a day that would, to paraphrase Franklin Delano Roosevelt, forever live in infamy, a day when the United States would irrevocably change. It was a day that could have been avoided.

There is one man I hold accountable above anyone else for the tragedies that befell us on that horrible day — one man who is responsible for the sickest mass murder in modern American history. He should be held accountable for the murder of over 3,000 American citizens, and the subsequent deaths of over 300 American soldiers and 9,000 Iraqi citizens in a needless follow-up war. That war criminal's name is George Walker Bush.

Dubya is one of the single most evil men roaming free right now, a man whose deviousness and maliciousness is equaled by only a few. Bush is a creature on the same level as bin Laden or, more appropriately, Hitler. He is a lying fascist who uses the myopic fervor of patriotism and the calculated lying of propaganda to exert his will on a nation and lead its people down the rabbit hole of war and terror. He institutes laws that deprive citizens of any and all basic rights as humans, and exploits tragedy for his own political agendas.

His betrayal of the people he is supposed to protect is astounding. This man and his cronies — his 21st century version of the Third Reich — should be held accountable for the atrocities that they have inflicted.

The NSA, CIA, FAA, FBI — the alphabet soup of American governmental associations — warned Bush and his administration of imminent attacks by al Qaeda operatives. But Bush ignored any such threats. In fact, prior to Sept. 11, the Bush administration made efforts to reduce expenditures on counterterrorism efforts initiated by Clinton. Ashcroft slashed budgets, reducing the financial input of many of these crime-fighting organizations. Bush instead focused on a tax cut that eventually proved only beneficial to those in the top one percent tax bracket — i.e. the millionaires would not have to pay the same ratio of income that lower classes did, while those same lower classes only made a small refund on the deal (if anything at all).

Bush refused to do anything about the al Qaeda because he had a stake in Afghan land. Halliburton, the oil company once chaired by Vice President Dick Cheney, and a small company called Unocal were making deals with the Afghan government — a repressive regime known as the Taliban — to build a pipeline through the country. Helping to fund it was a Saudi oil company named Delta Oil. The Saudi prince is a friend of Bush's (in fact, his nickname is Bandar Bush), and the bin Laden family are investors in the Carlyle group, a defense contractor with business ties to George Bush Sr.

The Saudi government is a regime even more fascist and repressive than that of the Taliban, yet Bush has never once denounced it. Instead, Bush has attacked the "threat" of Saddam Hussein, utilizing "evidence" that was nothing more than lies and forgeries and even reports that were plagiarized by 12-year articles written by grad students. Nevermind the fact that the majority of the 9/11 hijackers were Saudi and none were Iraqi. Nevermind the fact than North Korea is led by a despot who admits to nuclear capabilities and has threatened to use them. Nevermind that Osama bin Laden has yet to be found.

Bush rushed into a war that no one wanted to happen, preying on the fears of his constituents to justify his campaign. His war was one built on lies, saying that Hussein had weapons of mass destruction (he didn't) and has connections to bin Laden (he doesn't). Is it possibly because his family has ties to Osama bin Laden's?

Bush did not plan the attacks of 9/11, but his refusal to heed warnings and his almost total immersion into a false war makes him implicit in the attacks. For that, he must be held accountable.

Information in this article was obtained at cooperativeresearch.com.

Johnny Donaldson is a Collegian columnist.

Letters to the Editor

To the Editor:

Regarding "Due process of the law owed to University students" by S.J. Port: UMass students should know they have a place to turn for legal advice and assistance if they are threatened with or receive a notice of suspension.

The Student Legal Services Offices regularly advises students facing suspensions. Our office will advise students and provide a legal assistant to accompany them to judicial conferences before the Dean of Students. We will also link you with an outside attorney at a greatly reduced fee. That attorney can help you obtain the due process to which you are entitled.

Columnist S.J. Port described the horrific experience of an "interim suspension" — expulsion from the University before a hearing. Students should know that courts generally limit the use of interim suspensions at publicly funded universities to emergency situations in which university authorities have reasonable cause to believe that danger will be present if a students is permitted to remain on campus pending a full hearing.

Additionally, interim suspensions should not be imposed without holding at least a preliminary hearing unless it is unreasonably difficult to hold such a hearing. See, e.g. Goss v. Lopez, 419 U.S. 565, 583 (1975).

UMass regulations state that the remedy of interim suspension can be used "whenever there is ground to believe that the student is an imminent threat to himself or herself, to others, or to property, or the cause of serious disruption to the University community ("Code of Student Conduct," VII (A), 2002-2003)." Under the scenario in her column, it would be difficult to see how a lone student sitting alone at the scene of a riot like T.J. posed a threat to himself or others, or was the cause of a serious disruption.

"T.J." and students like him should not despair when they are summarily dispelled. Students have the right to due process, but they must act to preserve it when it is threatened. Because they came to our office early on, many of our clients have had their cases dropped or charges lessened. The key is calling for legal assistance as soon as possible after you receive notice of a suspension or other University disciplinary action.

If you have questions or need legal assistance, call the Student Legal Services Office at 413-545-1995.

Lisa Kent
Staff Attorney
Student Legal Services Office

To the Editor:

Having recently acquired the right to vote, I am disappointed in the lack of actual information provided by The Massachusetts Daily Collegian columnists regarding their political parties' specific views and opinions. In this time of international turmoil, and with a crucial presidential election rapidly approaching, I would hope to be given some real facts instead of the virtually meaningless party mud slinging that I have been seeing.

Recently in The Collegian, I've seen many sarcastic attacks by both liberals and conservatives, yet all were virtually void of any real facts and filled with exaggerated stereotypes and generalizations. To me, this parallels the negative patterns that we too often see in most modern political elections.

Politicians skirt around all tangible issues and instead focus their efforts on casting the worst possible light on their opponents. What our country really needs to avoid making some potentially disastrous decisions in the Middle East and other high-tension areas are informed citizens who know what their parties and politicians really represent — a rarity in most of today's elections.

If we are to really solve the complex issues currently facing our nation, insults and accusations are going to be of no help at all. As they are representing a new generation of voters, I'd like to see Collegian columnists end this trend and give us some real material to read, instead of just taking up space bashing each other.

Emily Arnold
UMass student

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 28, 2003

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

'ReOrientalism' displays Arab culture through performance

By Helenice Valentim
Collegian Correspondent

A crowd was seduced by the tastes, smells, colors, sounds, images and words of the Middle East at the University of Massachusetts' Bowker Auditorium Thursday night.

"ReOrientalism," a presentation that featured the text of Suheir Hammad inspired by Edward Said's "Orientalism," concluded with a standing ovation.

'ReOrientalism'
Bowker Auditorium
UMass
Oct. 23

The night — one "without the other thousand nights" — also featured a genie and even a magical rug. Despite those typical stereotypes of the Arabian culture encompassing the performance, the atmosphere of the evening allowed one to be sarcastic about the pain that comes along with them. It was essential to both entertain and inform the public at the same time.

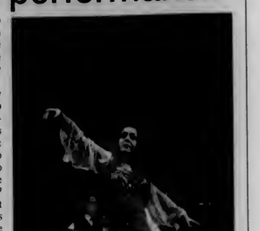
Subtle humor was used to describe how the Middle East, its people and its descendents are portrayed by Hollywood. Combining old movie pieces — including a part of the famous Broadway musical "Kismet," (except a Middle Eastern version) — was played back-to-back in an effort to illustrate the misrepresentations of Arabic people in the entertainment arena.

Najla Said, Arab actress and daughter of Edward Said, who performed as the voice of the Middle East in the presentation, listed some names that are ironically often seen as symbols of American culture, but are of Middle Eastern descent. Some of those listed included Shannon Elizabeth, who became a sex symbol in the blockbuster "American Pie," Paula Abdul during her pop star days and recently as judge on the television show "American Idol," and America's most recognized radio voice, Casey Kasem.

The simple and precise lighting created a clean and intimate atmosphere on the stage, bringing the audience into the Middle Eastern world.

A video was featured during the presentation, which took place in New York City — a location with a large Arabic population. The audience was able to express laughter upon witnessing its culture's own suffering. In the video, one of the participants explained how being born in Brooklyn has affected her musical taste, mixing hip-hop with traditional cultural music.

To balance the depth of the topic, music came into some scenes at various times. The belly dancer Seyyide Sultan gracefully performed one of the most feminine expressions of art that exists. The musicians were particularly remarkable, coordinating live sounds of acoustic and corded instruments.



Karim Nagi Mohammed, an Egyptian percussionist, not only played music, but also sang in Arabic with a simultaneous English translation on the back screen. Mohammed also interacted with the crowd in an almost-successful attempt to teach a couple of Arabic sounds, which consisted of basic open and closed clapping.

One of the highlights of the show was when olives were distributed to the audience, which provided an explanation for why napkins were given out prior to the program. The souvenir was used to symbolically explain the many Arabic roots.

A touching performance of "Why do they hate us?" was an attempt to expose the Eastern view of understanding the reason for why there is so much misinterpretation of Arabs: "They say we are bloodthirsty / Who dropped the atomic bomb? / Who went into Vietnam? / Where did the European Jewish Holocaust happen? / Not in Jerusalem. Not in Fez / Not in Baghdad." The passage contains an image of a snowy desert in the background, and the poem left the crowd in absolute silence.

"I just hope it'll open people's minds," Said said. "If they go home and have learned something or something has changed, I feel like I've accomplished my mission."

Said can certainly be positive for as long this powerful show continues to expose who the Middle Eastern people really are.

AMELIA LINCOLN/COLLEGIAN

Seyyide Sultan's Middle Eastern style dance was an event during "ReOrientalism."

Third time is no charm

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

M. Night Shyamalan's alien invasion thriller, "Signs," and the killer video spookfest, "The Ring," are put on the skewer and roasted in "Scary Movie 3," the latest installment in the silly series. But maybe it's about time to put this limp franchise to rest. There are few chuckles and a handful of decent laughs, but there's not enough to cure this film of its creative arthritis.

'Scary Movie 3'
Directed by David Zucker
Starring Anna Faris, Charlie Sheen Dimension
Rated PG-13
90 mins.
Grade C

The first "Scary Movie" was an outrageous, rude, funny, taboo-smashing shock to the system when it sprang out from nowhere in the summer of 2000. Aiming its ample funny bone at "Scream" and its numerous copycats, the movie exploded old notions of taste and comedy, employing an arsenal of gooey, gross jokes and biting satire to dig its talons into pop cultural touchstones deserving of mockery. Its success spawned the inevitable cheapie sequel.

"Scary Movie 2" got off a couple of good potshots at the expense of "The Exorcist" in its prologue, but it quickly lost steam and ended in a heap of warmed-over body fluid jokes.

"Scary Movie 3" marks a marginal step up from its predecessor, mainly because it stumbles drunkenly around in search of laughs rather than simply stopping dead in its tracks halfway through. The movie lurches from scenes that sit there liked beached whales, to scenes that are hilarious in the kind of stupid way of all good parodies. But there's too much of the former and not enough of the latter. This uneven film only manages to muster half the wit and humor of the original.

That's not to say that the famous faces parading through the film don't try their hardest. Queen Latifah, Darrell Hammond, Eddie Griffin, George Carlin, Charlie Sheen, Simon Cowell, Macy Gray, Ja Rule and the king of all parodies, Leslie Nielsen, all stop by for a few minutes of tomfoolery — some of which are more successful than others. Scandals involving Catholic priests and Michael Jackson are mocked, and so are a host of movies, including "8 Mile," "The Others" and "The Matrix Reloaded." But it's all for naught, as the jokes connect only some of the time.

Unlike the previous "Scary Movies" this sequel is rated PG-13, limiting the raunch that the other movies were known for. This proves to be a blessing and a curse: the first movie pushed boundaries, but "Scary Movie 2" was just dumb and gross. "Scary Movie 3" has its silly moments, but it mostly comes off as toothless.

If you are going to mock Shyamalan, why not do it for his penchant for soupy spirituality and endless pauses? If you take on "The Matrix Reloaded," why not mock the movie more for its pretentious philosophical meanderings? There are so many opportunities for sharp satire that are missed in favor of broad, goofy sight gags and physical pratfalls.

The Wayans brothers stepped down from production duties on this sequel, leaving the reins to

COURTESY DIMENSION

Pamela Anderson makes a cameo appearance in "Scary Movie 3."

David Zucker, a veteran of this material from his halcyon "Airplane!" days. This is certainly an improvement for Zucker after the complete and total failure of "My Boss's Daughter," but it hardly recaptures the magic of his former successes.

Anna Faris, now a bright and bubbly blonde, returns as beleaguered heroine Cindy Campbell, which is a relief; Faris is a comedienne as skillful in her blissfully comic unawareness as Nielsen. And little Drew Mikuska displays the chops of a pro as the movie's version of "The Ring's" creepy psychic boy.

I would be remiss to spoil the movie's best — or even the slightest — gags, considering how few great ones this movie really has. It's best that Dimension puts this scattershot series out of its misery before it inflicts any real pain on the audience.

COURTESY DIMENSION

Anna Faris, left, Eddie Griffin, center, and Queen Latifah star in "Scary Movie 3."

What the deal with Depo-Provera?

Sex-iversity is a question and answer column designed to provide important information and answers to questions regarding sex, sexuality, sexual orientation, sexually transmitted infections and reproductive rights. Voiced by Julia Kristan, a member of the Voices for Planned Parenthood (VOX) group here at the University of Massachusetts and an active volunteer for the Everywoman's Center on campus, the column is intended to help educate the university community about reproductive health, rights, legislation and responsibilities. Much of the statistical information provided in this column derives from research done through and obtained by Planned Parenthood and its national affiliates.

Q. I've seen Depo-Provera ads all over campus lately. What is Depo and what does it do?

A. Depo-Provera, or "the shot," is an injectable hormonal contraceptive. The shot puts progestin into a woman's muscle tissue where it remains time-releasing for approximately three months. For that duration, Depo thickens the cervical mucus, can prevent ovaries from releasing eggs and can prevent a fertilized egg from implanting in the uterine lining. The contraceptive effectiveness is extremely high, at 99.7 percent with continuous use. It is one of the most effective contraceptives on the market today.

Sex-iversity
Julia Kristan

Depo-Provera has been used in cases to treat endometriosis because one of the side effects of the shot can be amenorrhea, or the loss of menstruation. Conversely, many women experience extra-heavy bleeding while on Depo. The majority of women receiving Depo-Provera will experience changes in their menstrual cycle.

It has also been used in the prison system to treat sex offenders, as another one of its side effects is loss of libido. Depo has some serious power in a person's body.

The shot has been shown to cause a decrease in bone density. This is concerning for all women, although especially so for adolescent girls. Bone density growth is vital for healthy bodies and is needed stave off the problem of osteoporosis later in life. However, Depo-Provera is often prescribed for teenage girls to "combat the epidemic of teen pregnancy" that many people reference. Consideration is seemingly not given to the health of the young women when they are being put on this potent drug.

Aside from the aforementioned serious side effects, Depo can bring a change in appetite, weight gain, hair loss, increased hair on the face or body, nervousness, skin rashes or spotty darkening of the skin, headaches, nausea, dizziness and sore breasts. Any of these side effects are not reversed until the shot has worn off, or after three months. On top of all that, Depo-Provera provides no protection against STDs, so if you are intimate with a partner who has not been recently tested, please use a condom or a dental dam!

Depression is a major side effect of Depo-Provera, and should you be on the shot, you should be under the supervision of a doctor. Women can be their own best advocates, so women on the shot should monitor themselves for mood swings, irritability and feelings of depression, and seek medical intervention if needed.

With so many serious side effects, why would anyone want to take Depo? Under proper medical care combined with personal diligence to health, Depo can be a viable option for contraception for some people. Unfortunately, Depo-Provera has been marketed heavily to poor women, women of color, young women with multiple pregnancies and mentally retarded women. The shot is often administered to women thought to be "too stupid" to use condoms or other means of birth control on a consistent basis.

Depo might be a good option for plenty of women out there. Before you or someone you care about goes on the shot though, get some more information and ask questions. Will your doctor be honest and forthcoming with information on Depo? Is there another more suitable method for you? Think about it.

Information from www.plannedparenthood.org, "A Critical Look at Depo-Provera" by Steven Baran and "A Critical Perspective ... Depo-Provera" by Maureen Mc Hugh was used in this article.

Questions? Comments? E-mail sexiversity@hotmail.com with subject "Sex-iversity." Confidentiality is always respected.

Ween kicking off second leg in NoHo

Boognish is paying extra close attention to Northampton, as it just seems a little browner this evening. The Ween brothers are set to take the stage of the Calvin Theater tonight, with a showtime set for 8 p.m.

Ween is kicking off the second leg of its fall tour with a brief run through the Northeast. They are getting it going in NoHo and ending up in Chicago for three nights of madness. The boys from Pennsylvania will then be heading out to Europe for another leg.

Ween
Tonight
8 p.m.
Calvin Theater
Northampton
$22

Ween's tour is following the release of its first album in about three years. They have titled this album "quebec."

Unlike many of Ween's previous releases, the album has a slightly serious feel to it, but it is nonetheless a Ween record. It does the usual by perfectly placing tracks that seem to contradict styles and transcend genres. The styles range from hard rock with "It's Gonna Be A Long Night," to psychedelic spaciness with the tunes "Zoloft" and "Alcan Road," as a couple of examples. Each tune is carefully placed in a perfect section of the disc, making it an album (in true Ween fashion) that should be played straight through, rather than jumped from track to track.

Ween is the last of a dying breed of musicians struggling to keep rock alive, and they will continue to leave it all on stage night after night during their shows.

— Anthony Pasquarosa

COURTESY ELEKTRA

Brothers Dean, left, and Gene Ween make up the rock 'n' roll band, Ween. The duo is playing at the Calvin Theater tonight at 8 p.m. in support of their new record entitled, "quebec."

Interpol play to diverse crowd

While most watched baseball, fans at the Avalon rocked out

By Timothy Gabriele
Collegian Staff

BOSTON — As thousands of Red Sox fans tuned in to watch Game 7 of the playoffs, hundreds more flooded the bars by their home field, only to be achingly disappointed late into the night. Riot guards lined Brookline Ave in anticipation of the scourge of heartbreak.

Down the street from Fenway, five young men draped in black played to a nearly full crowd in Boston's Avalon nightclub. Like at the Red Sox game, there was plenty of heartbreak inside Avalon on Oct. 16, as would be expected from the new kings of New York gloom. Unfortunately, there was also a share of disappointment for the fans who had braved the hypersensitive baseball fanatics to come to a rock show in what frontman Paul Banks dubs his "second home."

Interpol
Avalon
Boston
Oct. 16

The Avalon is a very glossy, space age nightspot with warm, effervescent lighting cascading around the symmetrically aligned bars with overpriced drinks and attractive wait staff. Above the crowd hovers a cozy-looking V.I.P. area that we lowly minions on the ground level eyed with simultaneous admiration and contempt while waiting for the boys in black.

There was nothing particularly cozy or vaguely dangerous about the four walls surrounding us at Avalon. It was simply a neat and fairly accommodating venue that reflected where Interpol are in their musical career.

Interpol have released only one full-length album and toured the hell out of it. They've moved beyond rotting dives, but have yet to gain a wide enough fanbase to move on to massive amphitheaters and civic centers.

When Banks started to pluck the reverberated opening chords of "Untitled," the opening track off 2002's "Turn on the Bright Lights," it appeared as if they had that crossover potential. Banks jangled a sweet melancholy melody to the glittering reflections of strobelit eyes in the audience.

The assorted motley crowd was an unlikely blend of Harvard kids hoping for the reincarnation of R.E.M., hipster kids thinking they'd found the reincarnation of Christ in the heavenly figures of the undeniably gorgeous five-piece on stage. All were delighted that their already worn-out copies of "Bright Lights" were being amplified before them, with a spectacular lighting arrangement that was spot on throughout the performance.

Where, pray tell, is the disappointment in all of this, you ask?

I suppose it began when Banks was heard to croon, "I will surprise you sometime," during that magnificent reproduction of that opening number. Throughout the show, I was hopelessly waiting for the surprise to come.

Occasionally it did on the two new songs that were performed that night. They veered into even darker territory than "Bright Lights" had imagined, and bled with promise for that awaited follow-up release.

Earlier this year, Interpol released "The Black EP." Basically a pointless exercise, "The Black EP" replicated the black and red color scheme from their debut album and collected a handful of previously released material in live and demo formats. It was not that there was anything wrong with these versions of the songs, but there was nothing radically new about them, either. Besides, some of the tracks were making their third or fourth EP and single appearances anyway.

It was beginning to look as if Interpol either had no new ideas, or were afraid to try them out.

This is essentially the core of any negativity in the show that Thursday night, and it is the reason why those two new songs were perhaps the highlights of the evening. At some points, the band members themselves seemed bored with the songs they had been obsessively bringing to town after town each night.

For a man that can barely walk and chew gum at the same time, it seems easy for this reviewer to sit back and criticize Banks, who does the bulk of the guitar work while simultaneously singing Interpol's anguished lyrics. However, part of what made "Turn on the Bright Lights" such a masterful piece of work was Banks' ability to brilliantly lasso his heart when it appeared as if he was holding on by a thread, and explode into fierce cries of purgatorial release. Such is the case on "Stella Was a Diver and She Was Always Down," when the tortured cries of "Stella / Stell-ah-uh!" emerge from Banks' throat.

That "ah-uh" climax was absent from the overwhelmed vocalist on that night during the first of two performances at Boston's Avalon, and it was not the only moment that was somewhat dulled from exhaustive touring. A similar transcendent moment from "Bright Lights" appeared after the trance-like build-up in "Say Hello to the Angels," arguably the best track off that album. It's hard to expect a band to deliver the same magically heartfelt emotions every night that take numerous studio sessions to fully capture, but Interpol left the audience so little to work with that even a stoned evening with the album could not have perfected it.

Apart from the slightly muted vocal cues, the studio effects were duplicated perfectly onstage. This is not an easy task, but one still can't help but to hunger for more from this band that delivered so much on their debut album.

Visually, the lighting setup was the real star. Live, Interpol falls into that vast category of musicians who rarely move from each of their selected stances during a song (except for Bassist Carlos D, who wields his bass like an axe at times). This does not always mean certain tedium and boredom for the audience, many of whom were shaking and dancing like Pentecostal snake handlers the entire night. However, it takes that certain unspeakable something to make it click when it's just five guys and their instruments playing to a crowd.

COURTESY MATADOR

Paul Banks, above, is the frontman for Interpol. At the band's Oct. 16 show at the Avalon in Boston, he called Beantown his "second home."

Cuba shines in mediocre flick

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

It's part of the job of a movie critic to offer counseling for stars in need of guidance, and no one needs it more right now than Cuba Gooding Jr.

The actor who became a star after his jubilant acceptance speech for his "Jerry Maguire" Oscar has exhibited the kind of taste in scripts that would make John Travolta jealous. Hopefully, Gooding was shown the money — and lots of it — because his post-"Maguire" output leaves a lot to be desired.

These past two years have been especially hard for Gooding, who has been hitting rock bottom over and over ("Snow Dogs," "Boat Trip," "The Fighting Temptations" — it doesn't get any worse than that), and whose career is hanging on by the last thread of audience good will. He's not doing himself any favors, either, by starring in "Radio," a smarmy, sleazy bit of hackwork that brings the entire inspirational-drama genre down to its nadir.

'Radio'
Directed by Mike Tollin
Starring Cuba Gooding Jr., Ed Harris
Columbia
Rated PG
120 mins.
Grade B-

This maudlin garbage claims that it is inspired by a true story —"claims" because the movie is as fraudulent and manipulative as they come. It tugs on heartstrings so hard it pulls them out. It's filled with the kind of vacuous dime-store profundities that even Hallmark would reject. And everything else about the movie — from the honey-glazed cinematography to James Horner's overbearing, neon-highlighter score — is sugary enough to cause diabetes.

Everything besides Gooding's performance, that is. The actor is surprisingly back to form — that is, he's back to acting instead of mugging hyperactively. He plays James Robert Kennedy Jr., a mentally impaired young man with a love of radios, who quickly comes to be a beloved figure in his town.

Gooding walks with an awkward, stoop-shouldered gait and talks in the half-formed gurgle of an excited child, but he honors the real man by refusing to condescend to his character. Gooding captures the heart beating beneath the movie's noble lie.

Gooding's performance is so good, actually, that it just manages to illustrate the general worthlessness of the rest of the movie. "Radio" jerks tears with such force that it constitutes abuse. It should be illegal to release such emotionally manipulative swill to the marketplace.

Kennedy was befriended by Howard Jones (here, played by a bored-looking Ed Harris), the popular athletic director and football coach of the local high school, who more or less becomes the team's happy-go-lucky mascot.

"Radio" treats its title character as a totem — as a symbol for acceptance and as a symbol for the noble heroism of Coach Jones for befriending this kid. The movie only pays a tiny bit of lip service to Kennedy's condition: "He's just like everybody else," says his mother, "just a little bit slower." That's as deep as the movie gets.

Despite the fact that the movie is set in South Carolina in 1976, the film sidesteps the issue of race completely. Kennedy is black and so is the high school principal, but no mention is made of the fact that both are African-American in a time when the civil rights movement is roiling across the lands. The movie's measured attempts to avoid any matters of confrontation, its desire to airbrush anything that may be construed as troubling, is more galling than the movie's bankrupt sentimentality.

Harris drains as much of the schmaltz away from his character as he can, and Gooding is back to being good again. But both of them are drowned in a tidal wave of goopy, sticky syrup. "Radio" is the kind of movie that's billed as "inoffensive" and "inspirational" so that you look like a cynical, heartless SOB for denouncing it. I hate to spoil it for Hollywood, it's neither cynical nor heartless to dismiss such displays of unearned emotion. In fact, this kind of arrogant, sugary tripe is what's most offensive.

COURTESY COLUMBIA

Cuba Gooding Jr. gives a heartwarming performance as the mentally-challenged James Robert Kennedy Jr. in Mike Tollin's "Radio."

HAMPSHIRE FITNESS club

90 Gatehouse Road, Off Rt. 9 Two miles East of Amherst Center • On the Bus Route

www.hampfit.com

Click On:
• Class Schedule
• Pool
• Courts

And More!

Hampshire Fitness Club has it all for you

•Full Sized Indoor Pool
•Aqua Aerobics
•Cybex Nautilus Circuit
• Boxing Studio
•Cybex Free Weights
•Full Court Basketball
•Volleyball
•Indoor Tennis
•Yoga / Pilates
•Aerobics / Step / Bosu
•Jacuzzi / Saunas
•Cardio-Vascular Equiptment

OPEN 6am to 10pm Mon-Fri, 8am to 9pm Sat-Sun TEL 256-6446

OPTOMETRY

THE NEW ENGLAND COLLEGE OF OPTOMETRY

Aurora Denial, OD.

On Campus
Wednesday, October 29th

At The Graduate and Professional School Fair

Familiarity breeds content.

AMHERST downtown
We have it all!

Little out in Boston

Continued from page 8

out to talk to Martinez, he left him in rather than trust the lead to the bullpen that struggled all year before finding some consistency in the playoffs.

The Yankees tied it off Martinez in the eighth, then won the game and the series in the 11th on Aaron Boone"s homer.

"There"s no reason to blame Grady," Martinez said. "Grady doesn"t play the game, I do. If you want to judge me or curse me or whatever, I will swallow that, because I am responsible."

Two days later, Little defended the decision to stick with his ace.

"If people want to judge Grady Little on the results of a decision I made in that last game the other day, so be it," he said in his Fenway Park office. "In my heart, I know we had a great season here."

Although publicly commending Little"s work in keeping the clubhouse together, the Red Sox delayed an announcement on Little"s future while angry Red Sox fans called for his job. Team officials insisted that their choice did not hinge on one decision.

"The decision to make a change resulted from months of thought about that long term direction [of the ballclub]," Lucchino said.

In a conversation he said he had with Little a day after the Game 7 loss, Epstein said Little told him he would only return to lead the Red Sox if management showed their support by giving him a contract for longer than one year. It became clear that support was not there, Epstein said.

Epstein is known to rely more on statistical analysis in assessing players and matchups than Little, who often used his instincts in making decisions. Owner John Henry is also in the statistical analysis camp.

"We all have different backgrounds, different access to the clubhouse and different perspectives to the game," Epstein said.

"We got together, discussed the issues thoroughly, reached a consensus, and now we will move forward together."

Epstein was complimentary about Little"s work managing the strong personalities in the Boston clubhouse.

"A lot goes on behind the scenes that people never know about," Epstein said, "different things that Grady Little does to help preserve and improve the chemistry of the ballclub.

"He knows that he did his absolute best and he knows he really helped this team get to the doorstep of the World Series this year and he"s proud of that."

Victim of an injustice?

Continued from page 8

Game 4 at Fenway Park that led to second-guessing, another quick postseason exit after three consecutive losses and the departure of fan favorite Mo Vaughn.

Williams brought playoff baseball to Yawkey Way again in 1999, in a season highlighted by an epic All-Star Game, Numar Garciaparra"s first batting title and Martinez"s best season ever, a Cy Young campaign. The Sox again won the Wild Card and again won 90-plus games, and came back from two games down to beat Cleveland with a record-breaking Game 4 romp and a dramatic and memorable fifth game victory at Jacobs Field.

It was the gargantuan efforts Williams received from both Troy O"Leary and Pedro Martinez in Game 5 that carried the team more than ol" Jimy ever did, however. And when the Sox went down quickly and quietly to the hated Yankees in five games in the ALCS, the magical October night at the Jake was a faint and distant memory.

So now Grady Little is the former manager of the Olde Towne Team, supposedly fired not because of the aforementioned misplaced trust in Martinez, but because of an overall lack of faith in him among the Red Sox brass.

Shame on you, Theo Epstein.

A Red Sox fan your whole life, you"ve watched managers flame out quicker than Jeff Weaver; and others (read: Joe Kerrigan) never get started. You know that it"s the toughest job in baseball.

You should"ve known that Dick Williams dreamed an impossible dream in "67. That Darrell Johnson had Carbo and then Fisk in "75. That Dave Henderson was "unbelievable" for John McNamara in "86, and Bill Buckner was even more so just a short time later.

In other words, the job of Red Sox manager has never been about one individual"s ability, just simply about fate. Jim Lonborg was supposed to pitch the season of his life and Yaz was supposed to win the Triple Crown. Bernie Carbo was supposed to look awful — twice — and then send one into the bleachers to tie the game, and Fisk was supposed to will his ball fair The Night New England Stayed Up. Dave Henderson was supposed to redeem himself and play hero. Bill Buckner was born to be public enemy number one.

That"s just the way things are around here. They happen for a reason. And what happened in 2003 for the Boston Red Sox was the single best regular season in 36 years, being as strong a whiff of the World Series as a team can get without actually tasting it.

Yes, this team was good enough, and should have gone to — and won — the Series. But Pedro Martinez wasn"t supposed to breeze through the eighth, and Tim Wakefield wasn"t supposed to survive the 11th — it was those who were supposed to be heroes who squandered the deciding game, not Grady Little.

Lonborg could have won 10 games, and Yaz could have hit .290. Carbo could have struck out, and Fisk could have watched his ball sail foul. Donnie Moore could have thrown a better forkball and gotten Dave Henderson out, and Bill Bucker could have scooped up Mookie Wilson"s grounder and tagged first, just as easily Grady Little could have called on Alan Embree and watched him blow away Hideki Matsui and Jorge Posada.

But Little did just what Dick Williams did in "67, what Darrell Johnson did in "75, what John McNamara did in "86 and what worked for him all season long: he trusted his players to win him the game, the series and the season ... and whether Epstein or Lucchino will admit it or not, it unfairly cost him his job.

Mike Marzelli is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at Marzelli_collegian@yahoo.com.

Minutewomen shut out of A-10 tourney

By Paula Aden
Collegian Staff

This weekend in Philadelphia, the Massachusetts field hockey team dropped a pair of conference games to West Chester University (4-11, 1-3 Atlantic 10) and LaSalle (9-10, 2-3 A-10). The Minutewomen (3-14, 1-4 A-10) were unable to score against either team, losing 1-0 to West Chester Saturday and 2-0 to LaSalle Sunday.

The losses ensured that the team will not attend the A-10 Tournament for the first time in UMass history. Since becoming a conference member in 1988, the Minutewomen have attended the Atlantic 10 championships every year. Richmond and Temple have clinched playoff spots, as both boast 4-0 conference records.

WCU	1
UMass	0
La Salle	2
UMass	0

UMass added two new faces to its roster this weekend, both transplants from the women"s lacrosse team. Junior Joey Rubin and senior Kelli Kurtz both played field hockey in high school, though they had not played at the collegiate level. Rubin played all 70 minutes against the Golden Rams, allowing one goal while making four saves.

After senior Ashley Egland decided not to play this year, junior Christine Tocco was the Minutewomen"s only goalie, playing all 1,070:31 this season until this weekend. Tocco is ranked sixth nationally in saves, and has been the dominant force keeping UMass in games this year.

With less than two minutes left in the first half, senior Caleen Owens passed to sophomore Jen McGinley who beat Rubin to the goal for the game"s only score. WCU outshot the Minutewomen 7-4, and outnumbered them in penalty corners 8-4.

Sophomore goalkeeper Carrie Hanshue made two saves, keeping the Maroon and White from scoring in her second shutout of the season, and her first in against an A-10 foe.

The last time UMass did not win against WCU was a 0-0 tie in 1988.

On Sunday, Tocco returned to action against the Explorers. Tocco and LaSalle"s goalie, junior Colleen Bolger, kept the first half of the game scoreless. By the end of the game, Tocco tallied nine saves, while Bolger had five in her third shutout of the season.

Junior Becky Garry had a hand in both of LaSalle"s goals, scoring the first unassisted and assisting on the second.

After less than five minutes into the second half, Garry stole the ball from the Minutewomen defense and managed to slap the ball past Tocco. The game was sealed with less than three minutes to go when junior Sara Camilli took a pass from Garry, and tapped it into the cage.

Camilli"s goal was her 10th of the season, nearly matching the Minutewomen"s combined 12. The Explorers dominated most of the game, tallying 18 shots and 13 penalty corners, while the Maroon and White only managed five of each.

Although UMass had plenty of scoring opportunities in the second half, Bolger prevented the Maroon and White from getting on the scoreboard, preserving her shutout with an especially impressive sprawling save toward the end of the game.

Sunday"s defeat marks the Minutewomen"s first loss to LaSalle since first meeting in 1995.

The Minutewomen end their season this week with a pair of home games at Garber Field. Tomorrow, they will face Dartmouth at 5 p.m., and the season will end on Saturday with their final conference game at noon against Rhode Island.

Despite UMass" season ending this weekend, Garber Field will host the 23rd annual NCAA Championships this year. The Championships will be held on Nov. 22 and 23.

Swimming dives into season against UNH

By Matt Barstow
Collegian Staff

Youth triumphed in Saturday"s season opener, as eight freshmen won 10 events for the Massachusetts swimming and diving teams in a dual meet with New Hampshire.

The Minutemen upended the Wildcats by 78 points, in a 174-96 victory, while the women were bested by defending ECAC champion UNH 166-132, in a meet that featured 19 UMass freshmen making their collegiate debuts.

Defending Atlantic 10 champion UMass was led by freshman Jake Hogue, winner of both the 200-yard butterfly, and the 1,000-yard freestyle, with times of 2:01.90 and 10:31.15, respectively.

"This was a good day for us. I"ve been challenging the freshman since they got here, and I really saw them step up," UMass coach Russ Yarworth said. "Jake was highly recruited from Colorado for his toughness, and if he continues to swim with the intensity he had today, he"s going to have an immediate impact on the league."

Junior Dylan Smith, winner of the 200-yard fly in last year"s A-10 championships also won two races for UMass, the 100-yard backstroke with a time of 55.77, and the 500-yard free in 4:54.47.

A number of UMass freshmen won single events, including Greg Chartier, who took the 200-yard free with a time of 1:45.44, and Mike Cordes, who finished first in the 100-yard breast with a time of 1:01.09. Scott Mendell and Gordon Leonard were victorious in the 200-yard backstroke and 50-yard free, respectively, with times of 2:02.98 and 22:32.

"All the production from freshmen was a pleasant surprise. Chartier in particular is doing what I hoped to see from him," Yarworth said. "Plus, Pete [Tawczynski] and my other two captains [Sean Collins and Conner Townsend] are providing leadership that the young guys can rally behind."

Tawczynski"s time of 1:15.71 in the 200-yard breast was good for first place, and Townsend anchored the victorious 200-yard medley relay team.

The strongest event for the Minutemen was the 200-yard butterfly, as UMass swimmers took all four scoring positions.

"Right now we seem to be in a good position. Our biggest question mark seemed to have been answered on Saturday," Yarworth said. "We lost 10 seniors last year. It"s impossible to know how long it will take before young guys can get adjusted, but we need them to compete now, and so far they"ve shown that they can."

The UMass diving teams kicked off the new season under the coaching of Mandy Hixon, as senior Logan Alomar won the 1- and 3-meter diving events for the men, with 275.10- and 272.25-point marks, respectively. The sole returning diver for the Minutewomen, senior Joanna Walsh, came in first in the 1-meter competition, finishing the meet 15 points above her personal best.

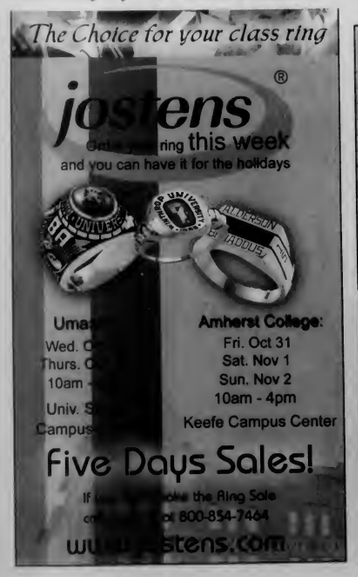
Sophomore Shannon Daly, a member of last year"s UNH relay team that set ECAC and UNH records for the fastest 800-yard free relay time during last year"s Eastern College Athletic Conference Championships, led the Wildcats to victory over the Minutewomen with three wins.

Daly won the 200- and 100-yard breaststroke, and the 200-yard free, with times of 2:24.65, 1:07.48 and 1:56.14, respectively. She also anchored the winning 200-yard IM relay team.

UNH senior captains Ashley Fish and Melissa Lague contributed to the team"s success, with victories in the 100-yard fly (2:24.65) and 200-yard backstroke (2:07.49).

"I was very satisfied in the team"s effort. It"s a great sign that such a young team could come out and hold close to such a good team after having only practiced for seven weeks," women"s coach Bob Newcomb said.

Sophomore Aimee Bourassa led UMass scores with victories in the 500-yard free and 200-yard IM, with times of 5:15.13 and 2:11.64, respectively.



"Aimee is starting to gain confidence. She works incredibly hard during practices and came into the season in great shape," Newcomb said. "She"s our most versatile swimmer, and it won"t be a surprise if she continues to excel in a number of different events."

University of Kentucky transfer Kelly Hoffrage won her first race for the Maroon and White, swimming the 100-yard free in 55.00. Freshman Nicole LeBarge swam the 50-yard free in 25.29, placing her atop the six competitors. Hoffrage and LeBarge teamed up with fellow freshman Liz Lovejoy and Bourassa, to take first place in the 200-yard free relay.

"We have an incredible amount of speed in this year"s freshman class. They"re mostly sprinters," Newcomb said. "I"m going to keep Lovejoy and the others in events like the 200-yard relay because they"re good enough to compete right now, and they"ll only get faster as the season goes on."

Newcomb is optimistic about the young team"s potential, in part because he doesn"t have a choice. The Minutewomen lost nine swimmers to graduation, including three of their four divers.

"This early in the season I don"t look at the score — I look at how the team swims. And you can tell that everyone"s been practicing hard and came ready to race," Newcomb said.

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT
REGISTRATION FOR SPRING 2004

The WRITING PROGRAM PLACEMENT TEST will be offered on:

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 28 @ 7pm in Thompson 102
WEDNESDAY OCTOBER 29 @ 7pm in Bartlett 65
MONDAY, NOVEMBER 3 @ 7pm in Tobin 304

This test is a pre-requisite for enrollment in Englwrit 112/113. (College Writing)

This test may be taken only once. Students do not need to register for the test.

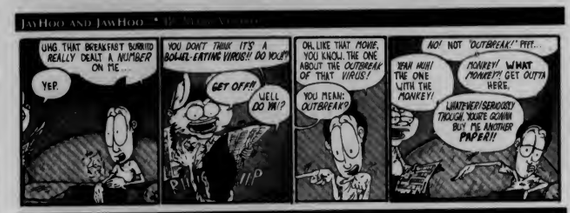
Email questions or comments to:
Sports@dailycollegian.com

It's your degree.
Shouldn't it be your research?

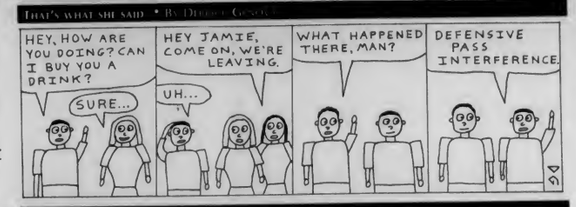
At Worcester Polytechnic Institute, our smaller programs mean students collaborate with accomplished faculty to conduct world -class research. And our hands-on approach means you get to lead and author your own research.

To learn more about our programs visit our table at the Five Colleges Graduate and Professional School Information Day on October 29, 2003 from 11:00 a.m. – 3:00 p.m.

Graduate Academic Departments

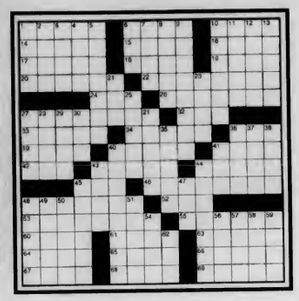


Biology and Biotechnology
Biomedical Engineering
Chemical Engineering
Chemistry and Biochemistry
Civil and Environmental Engineering
Computer Science
Electrical and Computer Engineering
Fire Protection Engineering
Management
Manufacturing Engineering
Materials Science and Engineering
Mathematical Sciences
Mechanical Engineering
Physics



www.wpi.edu/+GAO

WPI The University of Science and Technology. And Life.™



Today's Crossword Puzzle

Across
1 Revealed
6 Animal refuges
10 "Terrible" czar
14 Pimiento holder
15 Rani's servant
16 Twig juncture
17 Kick (money in the bank)
18 Hoped
19 Sarcoscat event
20 Eucalyptus eaters
22 Substituted
24 Pigeyless bird
25 Pepper holders
27 Fuel rod
32 Before, to a poet
33 Low ski spreads
34 — Roma
36 Get-tag word
39 Fake face
40 Sharpened
41 Charles Lamb brand
42 Thunder day's start
43 Puffs of wind
44 Fork part
45 Block
48 Seattle eleven
49 Have great confidence in
52 Gymnastics maneuver
53 Sailor's color
55 Inquiring
57 GIF expertise
61 Light brown
63 Hidden
64 Decrease again
65 Glides downhill
66 Warm drink
67 Tidied place
68 Kid
69 Lose a lap

Down
1 Make reservations
2 Puppy-chow brand
3 Comic Rudnar
4 Umland
5 Flees
6 Channel-surf
7 Gen. Bradley
8 Type of author
9 Type of dog
10 Consult
11 Diva's asset
12 Snare
13 Requires
21 Worthless coin
23 Dr. Zhivago's love
26 Tyrannos
27 Crooner Perry
28 Astronaut Shepard
29 — lobe
30 Stingy scientist
31 Lakota dwellings
35 Put back to zero
36 Stream
37 Chuck's companion
38 Old clothes
40 Meet meek
41 Ages
43 Agitated
44 Study of quarks
45 Ohio city
47 Triumphant shout
48 Petal, maybe
50 Blood
51 Idol capture
53 Icky
54 Viking — the Red
56 No-frills hando
57 Early Peruvian
58 Marquee sign
59 Diploma possessor
62 Purpose

THE HARP
Irish Pub
413-548-6900 www.theharp.net
163 Sunderland Rd.- N. Amherst
Just north of the apartments
Great new deck!
TUES. Team Pub Trivia! Win Money and Prizes
WED. Harp Reggae Night
October Special!
Labatt Blue:
$1.75 A pint / $6.25 A pitcher
Halloween Party Thursday! Prizes, etc.

Dining Commons Menu

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

Lunch
- BBQ Pork Sandwich
- Chicken Pesto Pasta
- Falafel Pocket Sandwich (vegan)

Dinner
- Chicken Pot Pie
- Boston Scrod
- Native American Stew (vegan)

Daily Weather Forecast

For Amherst

Tuesday
- High: 58
- Low: 38

Wednesday
- High: 59
- Low: 36

Thursday
- High: 61
- Low: 40

Production Crew

On staff today

Night Editor
Barbara Lotto
Photo Technician
Sarah Lloyd
Copy Editor
Andrew Merritt
Production Supervisor
Dan Simmons
Production Staff
Nikolas P. Markantonatos/ Dave Pessah

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Stop being so evil.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
BAAAAAAH! Don't be a sheep. Think for yourself.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Grunge is out. Take a shower.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Watch yourself ... you're gonna die eventually.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
Go see a concert tonight. Ween is playing.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Don't meander around swans.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
The ladies will be all over you today — whether you like it or not.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Someone appreciates that car trip you took the other day.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Eat more chocolate.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Take better care of your feet; they are precious commodities.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Don't break the bed tonight.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
If you keep secrets, someone is bound to find out the truth.

Quote for the Day

"Always watch where you are going. Otherwise, you may step on a piece of the Forest that was left out by mistake."

-Pooh's Little Instruction Book, inspired by A.A. Milne

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Announcements

Fraternities- Sororities- Clubs- Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with a proven CampusFundraiser 3 hour fundraising event. Our free programs make fundraising easy with no risks. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so get with the program! It works. Contact CampusFundraiser at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

Auto for Sale

1999 Explorer XLT 4x4 Excellent Condition Sunroof 6cyl. Loaded $12,500 Call 546-1477

Suzuki Sidekick SUV, Manual, 1996, good condition, 3800/bo. 577-1532/ 549-9182, www.taylanyildiz.com/suzuki

Sizzling Red Convertible, Pontiac Sunfire 1997 excellent $3900.00 549-0822

1992 Honda Prelude SI, Loaded, $3900 587-0242

Achieva 92 Oldsmobile 66,000 Miles FWD 4 shows good condition No rust $1995.00 548-1020

1991 Toyota Camry Wagon, AC/Power 117,000 miles, reliable. $2500 549-4060

1992 Silver Ford Taurus AC, All-Power, Excellent Condition $2400 118,000K Call 549-3930 210-7393

$500!!! Cars from $500!!! Police Impounds for listings. 1-800-319-3323 ext4554

93 Pontiac Bonneville SDN All Power Must Sell $1500 BO 253-5537

Employment

Earn 10K+/month potential from home Training provided Free info. 800-896-9413

Movie Extras/Models Needed For local Casting Calls No exp. or age required EARN up to $200 a day 1-888-820-0167

Telephone Interviewers NO SALES! Conduct interviews over the phone at our Hadley location Flexible Evening and Weekend Hours $7.50/hour to start 20+ hours/week PVTA accessible For more info: 1-888-423-5381 FMI

Bartender Positions Make up to $300/shift No experience required. Great College Job 1-800-806-0084 ext. 1525

Are you interested in earning $10 in one hour by participating in two simple psychology studies? Participation requirements:
*You must be female
*You must be between 18-30years old
*You must speak English fluently
This study has been approved by UMass, Amherst College, and Smith College ethics committee. Call or email (413)577-6508 Achandl@psych.umass.edu

Employment

Attention: South-Asian Americans: Are you interested in earning $10.00 in one hour by participating in two simple psychology studies? Are you:
*Female between 18-30 years old?
*A South-Asian American of Indian, Pakistani, Nepalese, Sri Lankan, or Bangladeshi descent Born in the U.S. or living in the U.S. since age 9?
This study has been approved by UMass, Amherst College, and Smith College ethics committee. Call or email: 413-577-6508 Achandl@psych.umass.edu

LOCAL RADIO STATION Entry level clerical/sales/on-air. Computer skills necessary Compensation negotiable Resume: PO Box 983 Greenfield, MA 01302

Motivated students seeking leadership outside the box. Gain experience in all aspects of running a small business Call 508-246-1230

Employment

Visa/Mastercard approval agents earn $1,000/week potential. No experience necessary. Call 1-800-821-1416 ext.145

Sales Assistant for consulting/software firm. Telephone telemarketing. Economics a plus. Please send cover letter and resume to Frederick Treyz at Regional Economic Models, Inc., 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002 or fax 413-549-1038 or email resumes@remi.com.

Bartender Trainees Needed: $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

!Bartending!$ $250/day potential No experience Nesc. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext 162

Instruction

University Bartending Classes Start Soon 1-800-U-CAN-MIX Call now for information!!! Space is Limited www.university-bartending.com

Lost

Lost: Wallet Near Parking garage 10/14 If found please call with description 413-237-1015

Services

Stuck on a tough term paper? ThePaperExperts.com can help! Expert writers can help with editing, writing, graduate school applications. We'll help with any subject – visit us 24/7 at ThePaperExperts.com.

Per-Sitter available days nights & weekends. Dog walking. 9 years experience. Call Gina 253-0619

All Digital Productions Pro Videography for Weddings, Bar Mitzvahs, Commercial (508) 221-8223 sweetpicker@yahoo.com

SHEAR BLISS DAY SPA SERVICES Body Sugaring (waxing) for men and women *Safe *100% Natural *Effective 253-2322 https://shearbliss.image411.com

Services

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, an d Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

Travel

Spring Break '04 with StudentCity.com and Maxim Magazine! Get hooked up with Free Trips, Cash, and VIP Status as a Campus Rep! Choose from 15 of the hottest destinations. Book early for FREE MEALS, FREE DRINKS and 150% Lowest Price Guarantee! To reserve online or view our Photo Gallery, visit www.studentcity.com or Call 1-888-SPRING-BREAK!

A "Reality" Spring Break 2004's Hottest Prices Book now .. Free Trips, Meals & Parties www.sunsplashtours.com or 1800-426-7710

Travel

SPRING BREAK 2004! Beach Life Vacations! Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas, Florida. Sell Trips, Earn Cash, Travel Free!! Call 1-800-733-6347 www.beachlifevacations.com

Spring Break- Sign up with Student Express and get Free roundtrip airline tickets to over 15 international destinations- including Aruba, Dominican Republic, Costa Rica, Caribbean hot spots and more. Why go with anyone else? Limited offer call now. Commission rep positions also available 1-800-787-3787 www.studentexpress.com

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Destinations, including Cruises! Foam Parties, Free Drinks and Club Admissions. Rep Positions and FREE trips Available. 1-800-231-4386 www.EpicureanTours.com

Tutor

Math/Physics Tutor $30/Hr plus travel Call Dr. Kline 413-552-3805

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 28, 2003 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Little out as Sox manager

Lack of support, fateful move dooms skipper

By Jimmy Golon
ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOSTON (AP) — Red Sox manager Grady Little will not be back next year, paying the price for his decision to stick with Pedro Martinez in Game 7 of the AL championship series.

The Red Sox let Little go yesterday, less than two weeks after Boston blew a chance to play in the World Series when its ace couldn't hold a lead against the New York Yankees.

The Florida Marlins beat the Yankees in the Series that wrapped up Saturday, ending baseball's embargo on major moves and freeing the Red Sox to cut Little loose.

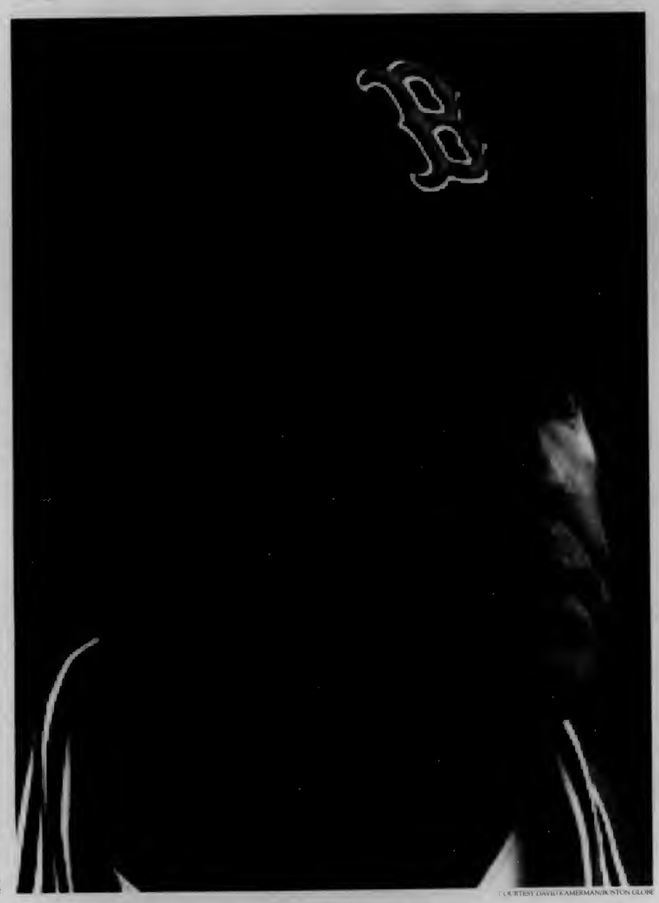
Little's contract expires Friday, and the team decided not to exercise its 2004 option.

Team president Larry Lucchino said team officials notified Little of the decision in a telephone conversation yesterday morning.

"He took it very well," Lucchino said. "He was very gracious. There was no anger or raised voices. On the contrary, he thanked us for the opportunity he had been given to manage the Red Sox and to manage in the big leagues."

General manager Theo Epstein declined to discuss Little's possible successors, but Jim Fregosi, Bud Black, Glenn Hoffman, Charlie Manuel and Jerry Remy have been mentioned as candidates.

"We're going to take as long as necessary to find the right manager," Epstein said.



The Red Sox won 93 and 95 games in Little's two years as manager, reaching the playoffs this year for the first time since 1999. They lost the first two games against Oakland, then swept three straight to advance to the ALCS, and Little's job seemed secure.

The Yankees took a 3-2 lead in the Series as it headed back to New York, and Little seemed to be making all of the right moves.

He left struggling Nomar Garciaparra alone, and the shortstop snapped out of his slump with four hits in Game 6, helping force a seventh game. And, because Little chose not to use Martinez on short rest, he had his ace available for the decisive game.

Boston staked Martinez to a 4-0 lead, and he led 5-2 in the eighth. Even after Little came

Continued on page 6

COURTESY DAVID KAMERMAN/BOSTON GLOBE

Grady Little's two-year tenure as Red Sox manager came to an end yesterday, when the club declined to pick up his 2004 option. Little won 188 games in his two seasons in Boston, and took the Red Sox to within five outs of the World Series.

Let go for the wrong reasons

Mike Marzelli

I never really liked Grady Little.

Sure he's as good a clubhouse manager as you will find in the game, respected and admired by every player who has ever played under him, but was he ever the right man for the toughest job in Beantown?

A trip to Game 7 of the American League Championship Series and back-to-back 90-plus win seasons aside, he probably wasn't. Because when it comes down to it, he just did too many things wrong.

He wasn't the seasoned tactician Hub fans trust to run their beloved nine. He rarely used statistics and hardly went by the book, relying solely on hunches and players' desires. He didn't bunt and never moved runners over. He was hesitant to hit and run and even less likely to call for the straight-out steal. His lineups sometimes made you wonder, and while his bullpen was notably fragile, he didn't help its cause with his questionable handling of both his starters and relievers — none more infamous than boldly walking off the Yankee Stadium mound without Pedro Martinez, before the Sox ace blew a 5-2 lead and Boston eventually lost the game and its shot at a World Series berth.

With that said, Grady Little got a raw deal.

I've followed the Red Sox faithfully since Tom Brunansky's sliding catch in the right field corner sewed up the division and a trip to the playoffs in 1990. And since those days of Morgan Magic, Little has done the best job of any of the beleaguered men who have occupied the far left corner of the home dugout at Fenway Park.

When Kevin Kennedy won the division in his first year as manager in 1995, he did so by winning only 86 games and beating a Yankees team that was sub par at best — a year away from the start of its glorious run. That team went on to flame out in the first round of the playoffs, being swept by Cleveland on the heels of a heroic walk-off homer by old friend Tony Pena to beat Zane Smith and the Sox in Game 1, and the Albert Belle corked bat fiasco that engulfed the rest of the series.

When Jimy Williams brought the Sox back to the playoffs in 1998 after 92 wins and the AL Wildcard, a seven-game playoff losing streak was snapped with an 11-3 pounding of the Indians in Game 1. However it was Williams' decision to go with shaky lefthander Pete Schourek in

Continued on page 6

GERALD H. LIN/CC COLLEGIAN

Midfielder Dan Colwell and the Minutemen split a pair of Atlantic 10 contests on the road this weekend.

Minutemen split with Dukes, Bonnies

By Bob McGovern
COLLEGIAN STAFF

With less than a minute left in their game against St. Bonnaventure, the Massachusetts men's soccer team was staring down the barrel of another Atlantic 10 loss.

Then Oral Bullen put the safety on.

Bullen scored the game-tying goal with 52 seconds left in regulation off an assist by freshman Ralph Pace. He only needed 1:39 in overtime to net the golden goal, salvaging the Maroon and White's position in the A-10 power struggle.

Duquesne	2
UMass	1
UMass	2
St. Bona.	1

Thanks to Bullen's heroics, the Minutemen split a weekend series on the road against St. Bonaventure and Duquesne. They followed up a 2-1 loss to the Dukes with the dramatic victory over the Bonnies, also a 2-1 affair.

The Minutemen dominated St. Bonaventure in nearly every aspect of the game. UMass outshot the Bonnies 12-5 and controlled the tempo of play for most of the contest. The only problem was finishing what they started.

"Offensively, even though we didn't score a lot of goals we created a lot of chances, and that's what our goals are," Koch said.

The Bonnies had the ball in their half for most of the game. This forced them to bring a majority of their team into the backfield to stifle the Maroon and White attack.

The St. Bonaventure defense seemed up to the challenge, stopping a barrage of scoring attempts in the first half. The game was tied at zero going into the half, with the Minutemen looking for some offensive spark.

"We controlled the whole first half. We moved the ball well," Koch said. "I give them a lot of credit. They defended well ... their backs blocked a number of shots."

The second half was a little more balanced, with the Bonnies putting pressure on the Maroon and White for the first time. The score remained even at zero for most of the half until the 71st minute, when St. Bonaventure struck first.

Junior defender Miseal Pedraza kicked the ball over a UMass defender and found Kevin Omukhua on the right side of the net, who was able to put the ball past UMass keeper Colin Burns..

In the confusion that ensued, Ralph Pace was able to find Bullen, who was coming up in support. Bullen then laced a shot past St. Bonaventure keeper Sean Eyde to tie the game.

In the overtime period, Dan Colwell hit a ball to Bullen, who drove through several Bonnie defenders to go one-on-one with Eyde. Bullen drove the ball in, ending the game and salvaging UMass' A-10 prestige.

The game against Duquesne was an entirely different challenge for the Maroon and White. The Dukes are one of the elite teams in the A-10 this season and exhibit a squad that attacks early and often.

The Dukes controlled the first half, outshooting UMass 12-5. Colin Burns kept the Minutemen in the game, making four huge saves in the half.

Duquesne wouldn't go quietly into the half, as Damien Pottinger scored his team-leading ninth goal before the whistle to break the ice.

UMass came out of the break with a full head of steam and put an aggressive attack on the Duquesne goal. Freshman Richard Higa was able to sneak one by at 59:43 off a Bullen assist.

Pat Dillon scored with 12:28 remaining to give Duquesne the victory.

The Daily Collegian

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 29, 2003 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 40

MARK J. TERRILL/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Ventura County firefighters watch an Los Angeles city helicopter drop water on a hot spot in Simi Valley, CA. The fire has destroyed several homes and burned over 80,000 acres.

Firefighters battle blazes to protect LA

By Seth Hettena
ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Firefighters beat back flames on Los Angeles' doorstep Tuesday, saving hundreds of homes in the city's San Fernando Valley. But exhausted crews were pulled back in San Diego County even though two devastating blazes threatened to merge into a super fire.

"They're so fatigued that despite the fact the fire perimeter might become much larger, we're not willing to let the firefighters continue any further," said Rich Hawkins, a U.S. Forest Service fire chief. "They are too fatigued from three days of battle."

Ten thousand firefighters were on the front lines throughout the state, battling California's deadliest wildfires in more than a decade.

Since Oct. 21, at least 10 wind-driven wildfires — many of them arson-caused — have rampaged through Southern California, demolishing neighborhoods, gutting businesses and blackening more than half a million acres of land from the Mexican border to the Ventura-Los Angeles county line. At least 15 people have died and nearly 1,600 homes have been destroyed. Two burn victims were in critical condition in San Diego.

"This may be the worst disaster the state has ever faced and is likely to be the costliest," Gov. Gray Davis said, estimating the cost at nearly $2 billion. He added: "This is a total disaster. It reminds me of when I was in Vietnam, communities were burned out."

Firefighters had feared they would lose hundreds of homes late Monday and early Tuesday as a fire in the hills between Los Angeles and Ventura counties threatened to push into neighborhoods in the densely populated San Fernando Valley, including one gated community of million-dollar mansions.

But winds subsided enough to let pilots douse the area with water and fire retardant. Backfires and bulldozers were used to clear away the fuel in the flames' path. Reinforcements were sent to help on the ground, and temperatures dropped.

"They saved every one of them," said Bill Peters, a spokesman for the California Forestry Department.

In San Bernardino County, firefighters struggled to defend resort towns high in the mountains. The flames destroyed 20 structures on Strawberry Peak and several homes in Rimforest, and threatened an estimated $3 billion worth of houses in the Crestline, Lake Arrowhead and Big Bear areas, Peters said.

Working on narrow mountain roads, firefighters battled fires along the 20-mile stretch. About 80,000 full-time residents have been evacuated from the mountains since Saturday.

"Just about everything is burning," said William Bagnell, fire chief of the Crest Forest Fire Protection District.

The flames are feeding on millions of dead trees, weakened by drought and killed by a bark beetle infestation. Officials were particularly worried about "crowning," where flames leap from one treetop to another, leaving firefighters on the ground all but powerless to stop them.

"If that occurs, we don't have the capability to put those fires out," U.S. Forest Service spokeswoman Carol Beckley said. "It will be a firestorm."

California's biggest fire, a blaze of more than 200,000 acres in eastern San Diego County, formed a 45-mile front stretching into Scripps Ranch and Julian, a mountain community renowned for its apple crop. The fire was just miles from merging with a 37,000-acre fire near Escondido.

The two fires have destroyed more than 900 homes. If they joined up, the flames would cut off escape routes and whip up the wind.

"These fires actually create their own weather," said Dave Wheeler, a state Forestry Department spokesman.

On the highway near Julian, high walls of flames lit up a mountain ridge along Lake Cuyamaca. The blaze sounded like an explosion as flames tore across the dry brush and trees.

Thirteen of the deaths over the past few days came as victims tried to flee those two fires.

Glenn Wagner, San Diego County chief medical examiner, said he expects the death toll to rise as crews begin inspecting the hundreds of charred homes.

"This fire was so fast," he said. "I'm sure we're going to find folks who simply never had a chance to get out of their houses."

Some victims died within view of San Vicente Lake, a boating and fishing destination in Ramona. "Could you imagine looking out at all that water in San Vicente Lake and still dying in the fire?" Wagner said.

Hawkins, of the Forest Service, said lunches intended for firefighters on Monday were not delivered until Tuesday morning.

"It's like war. This whole fire has been a war so far," Hawkins said. "What the firefighters are facing is a lack of sleep, a lack of food, a lack of diesel fuel in some cases and a lack of logistical support."

SGA Diversity roundtable meeting set for today

By Ed Hudson
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The year's first diversity roundtable meeting convenes today, where students and administrators will have the opportunity to share their ideas of how to create a more welcoming and inclusive community at the University of Massachusetts.

Russell Plato, secretary of diversity issues in the Student Government Association, will facilitate the meeting, which takes place at 4 p.m. in room 163C of the Campus Center, with the hope of helping students identify areas of common concern and inspiring them to become proactive in the campus community.

"I would hope that students will form connections across the boundaries that sometimes separate us," he said, "so that they will be able to identify some common goals."

He said one of his primary goals is to provide an environment for students to communicate with members of the SGA and campus administration.

"The round table gives them a really good opportunity to talk to people that make decisions on this campus," he said.

Some of the issues that Plato anticipates being addressed will have to do with cuts to the funding of English as a Second Language programs, the Restroom Revolution — a campaign for gender neutral restrooms. Also covered will be the recent change in the admission policy at UMass, whereby a point system for admission will no longer be utilized, as well as other concerns for academic and cultural support programs.

"I would expect that administrators will get a better feeling of how students feel about these issues," he said. "[And] I would hope that they take those feelings into account when they make policy decisions."

Plato said he is expecting 40 to 50 people, including about 30 faculty members, who have personally committed to attending.

"But anyone else is welcome to come," he said. "I expect that more students will come through word of mouth." He encourages students to invite anyone they think might be interested in attending.

Plato said he tried to identify campus offices such as housing, dining, admissions and various other academic programs related to diversity and personally send them, as well as University administrators, invitations to the event.

He said invitations were also sent to every Registered Student Organization via campus mail and email asking them to notify all of their members. He said every member of the SGA and area governments were invited as well.

"I really wanted RSOs and senators and everyone to be involved," he said. "I hope for a large showing of students from the SGA," he added.

According to Plato, who transferred to UMass in Spring 2002, this will be the first diversity round table meeting in at least the past two years. Plato said the Executive Cabinet position of Secretary of Diversity Issues in the SGA was not filled prior to his term. According to him, it is a requirement of his position to hold the meeting at least once per month.

Plato said he didn't think it made sense to have a meeting this past September because the Senate had not yet been elected.

"People were still getting their bearings," he said. He added that the frequency of additional meetings would be determined today. "The bylaws can be adjusted to what the campus needs," he said.

According to Plato, the diversity roundtable is not a policy-making body, but he believes it will be useful for students to share their concerns. Plato said he would be providing guidance throughout the meeting. "I'm looking forward to just having conversation," he said. He believes the meeting will be a space where that conversation can take place.

Sun hurls another solar flare at Earth

By Joseph B. Verrengia
ASSOCIATED PRESS

Scientists again warned that communications on Earth could be disrupted this week by another spectacular eruption on the surface of the Sun and that it might even hamper firefighting efforts in California.

"It's headed straight for us like a freight train," said John Kohl, a solar astrophysicist at the Harvard-Smithsonian Center for Astrophysics in Cambridge, Mass.

"This is the real thing."

Predictions are it could strike Earth's magnetic field by midday Wednesday.

The explosion of gas and charged particles into space from the corona, the outermost layer of the sun's atmosphere, isn't harmful to people. But it can knock out satellite communications, which some emergency crews are relying on in battling California's wildfires.

Similar solar events in recent years have disrupted television transmissions, GPS navigation, oil pipeline controls and even the flow of electricity along power lines.

Space weather forecasters first warned of that possibility last week, when a previous solar flare erupted, and then they saw a new sunspot region developing in another region of the sun's face.

The cloud of charged particles from last week's eruption struck Earth "with only a glancing blow," Kohl said. It disrupted some airline communications.

But Kohl said scientists observed the biggest such explosion in 30 years shortly before 6 a.m. EST Tuesday. It produced a particle cloud 13 times larger than Earth and hurtled through the solar system at more than 1 million miles per hour.

The resulting geomagnetic storm could be ranked among the most powerful of its kind and last for 24 hours.

It is expected to disrupt the communications satellites and high frequency radios.

In southern California, wildfires already have knocked out many microwave communication antennas on the ground, making satellite communications important to emergency efforts. Researchers said safety personnel might encounter communications interference.

Federal researchers said they already have turned off instruments and taken other precautions with science satellites.

A positive note: strong geomagnetic storms can produce colorful auroras in the night sky visible as far south as Texas and Florida beginning late Wednesday.

Sunspots and solar storms tend to occur in 11-year cycles; the current cycle peaked in late 2000.

Scientists compared the latest flare to the "Bastille Day storm" that occurred in July 2000.

"The Bastille Day storm produced considerable disruption to both ground and space high-tech systems," said Bill Murtagh, a space weather forecaster for the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration.

EDITORIAL/OPINION
PAGE 4
LANGUAGE BARRIER
UNIVERSITY REQUIREMENTS NEED TO BE CHANGED

ARTS & LIVING
PAGE 5
NO GIMMICKS
OBIE TRIOT RELEASES FIRST ALBUM

SPORTS
PAGE 12
WERNER SHINES
FORWARD SELECTED TO REPRESENT US

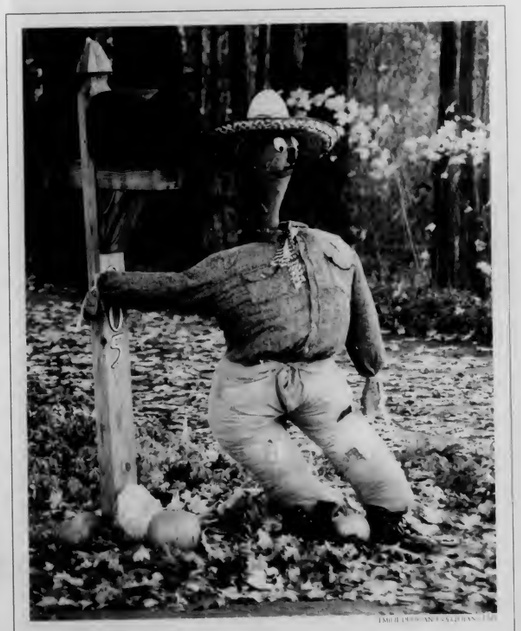
COMICS/CLASSIFIEDS
PAGE 11

Professional school day explores student futures

By Ferron Salniker
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Today the Career Services Office at the University of Massachusetts will give students the opportunity to explore future options in education during the Annual Graduate and Professional Schools Information Day. The event will be held in the Student Union Ballroom from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m.

Over 160 graduate, medical, dental, law and other professional schools will be represented, along with other schools of international relations, education, social work, theology and library science. A range of other post-baccalaureate options from the U.S. and abroad will also be represented.



A number of graduate schools from Massachusetts will be represented at the event including Emerson College, Boston College, Northeastern University, Boston University and Tufts University. Representatives from the Harvard schools of education, public health and government will also be present. Representatives from universities across the U.S. including Colombia University, Georgetown University, Stanford University, Rutgers University and the University of Southern California will be in attendance.

A number of environmental programs will be represented such as the Center for Environmental Policy at Bard College, the Nicholas School of the Environment and Earth Sciences at Duke University and the Graduate Program in Environmental Studies at The Evergreen State College.

Information about the various financial aid, entrance requirements, housing and other arrangements for each program will also be available. In addition, representatives from Kaplan Services and the Princeton Review will be present to answer questions about graduate program entrance exams.

Students from all five colleges are encouraged to attend the event. Dress is casual.

For a list of participating institutions visit the Career Services web page at www-ccn.acud.umass.edu.

DAILY COLLEGIAN FILE

Happy Halloween!

A homemade scarecrow waits to greet trick or treaters on Strong Street in Amherst.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Jennifer Eastwood
Managing Editor Dan Lamothe
Business Manager Peter Foundas
Production Manager Scott Pihl
Night Supervisor Nick Markantonatos
Advertising Manager Sean Costello
Editorial Production Shannon Farrington
Arts & Living Editor Glen Straub
Comics Editor Molly Eggleston
Editorial Editor Paige Cram
News Editor Ferron Sahliker
Photo Editor Gerald H. Ling
Sports Editor Andrew Merritt
Classified Advertising Marty Pappas
Distribution Manager Julie Beauchamp
Finance Manager Greg Stamm
Human Resource Manager Sandra Marquez
Special Issues Benes Feldman
Assistant Business Manager Ben Ratner
Assistant Advertising Manager David Bor
Assistant Distribution Manager Mark Lagatic
Assistant Finance Manager Richard Pacheco
Advertising Production Manager Liza Lynch
Layout Manager Lindsay Clark
Graphics Advertising Manager Charlie Higgins
Assistant Operations Manager Linda Wallack
Assistant Arts & Living Manager Meghan Healy
Assistant Arts & Living Manager Cameron J. Woods
Assistant News Manager Erika Lovley
Assistant News Manager Morris Singer
Assistant Photo Manager Emilie Duggan
Assistant Sports Manager Mike Marcelli
Assistant Sports Manager Robert McGovern

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently owned, operating in advertising revenue founded in 1890. The paper began as Aggie Life in 1890 and the College Signal in 1909, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967. The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com

Weekly Calendar of events

October 29 - November 4 2003

Compiled by Sara-Megan Walsh

Today

R. John Collier, Maude and Lillian Presley professor of microbiology and molecular genetics at the Harvard Medical School, will give the lecture: "Addressing the Threat of Anthrax" at 4 p.m. in room 150/151 of the Computer Science Building at UMass. Informal meetings with Collier can be arranged by contacting Jenn Dier at jbdier-@bichem.umass.edu.

At 4:30 p.m., the Smith College Orchestra will host their Family Halloween Concert, featuring music from Harry Potter and the premiere of "Dansee Demonique" by Clifton J. Noble, Jr. It will be held in Sweeney Concert Hall. Attendees are encouraged to dress in costume.

The Global Migrations Program of Hampshire College is sponsoring a lecture by Angus Mitchell entitled: "Under the guise of law;' Imperial resource wars and popular agitation for an ethical foreign policy in the Atlantic World, 1884-1913". The lecture is open to the public and will begin at 7:30 p.m. in the Faculty Lounge of Franklin Peterson Hall, Hampshire College.

Tomorrow

Amherst College's Religion Department, in conjunction with the Willis D. Wood Fund, is sponsoring a lecture entitled: "Justice, Force and Terrorism: Thoughts on U.S. Policy," by David Little. T.J. Dermot Dunphy, professor of the practice in religion, ethnicity and international conflict at Harvard Divinity School. The lecture will begin at 4 p.m. in Chapin 201.

Judyie Al-Bilali, theater artist and Fulbright scholar, will host a poetry and prose reading in the Augustus Savage Gallery of the New African House at UMass at 7 p.m. Al-Bilali will share the Brown Paper studio approach that she developed while working in South Africa.

The psychological horror hit movie Bhoot (2003) will be shown at 7:30 p.m. in Herter Hall, Room 231. The film tells the story of a couple whose new home is haunted. Bhoot is recommended for adult audiences only.

Friday 31

The UMass annual Festival of Lights, choreographed by Ranjanaa Devi, is a dance performance parade of gods, goddesses, demons and heavenly beings descending to Earth. It will occur at 10 a.m. at Bowker Auditorium. Tickets are $5 for students, $7 for non-students and are available through the FAC Box Office.

Professor Daniel Robinson of the psychology department at Columbia University will give a lecture entitled "Moral Science at the Founding: Ruling Passions" in the Babbott Room of the Octagon at Amherst College at 4 p.m.

At 8:30 p.m., Amherst College Orchestra will present Mahler's First Symphony along with works by Johan Strauss, Jr. and Mozart, conducted by Mark Lane Swanson. The performance is free for Amherst students, and $5 for the general public. It will be hosted in Buckley Recital Hall of the Arms Music Center.

Saturday 1

Annual Fall Chrysanthemum Show daily from 10 a.m.-4 p.m. starting this Saturday in Lyman Conservatory.

Smith's Brown Fine Arts Center will host "Snazz!" an opening party for two contemporary art exhibits entitled "Undomesticated Interiors" and "Photographing Undomesticated interiors." Admission is $15 for members, $20 for non-members. The event will include music, refreshments, a cash bar and a chance to meet the artists.

Monday 3

At 4:30 p.m., Carol Bailey of the University of the West Indies will give a lectured entitled: "Gendered Voices? A Reading of Lovelace and Collins," which will explore political implications of the deployment of Caribbean genres in works by Earl Lovelace and Merle Collins. Also, the authors' notions of gender will be discussed. The lecture will be held at the Five College Women's Studies Research Center, located at 83 College Street.

Diane Durston, long time Kyoto resident and author of "Kyoto: Seven Paths to the Heart of the City" and "Old Kyoto, A Guide to Traditional Shops, Restaurants and inns," will give a lecture about the lives of traditional Japanese artisans in Kyoto. It will be held at 4:30 p.m. in Smith College's Neilson Library Browsing Room.

At 7:30 p.m., Tony Judt, director of the Remarque institute, will give a lecture titled: "Uncle Sam and the Euro-Trash: Contemporary Europe Through American Eyes." The lecture will be held in Seelye 201 at Smith College. Refreshments will be served afterward.

Tuesday 4

Mount Holyoke College will host its Annual Eqbal Ahmad Lecture. This year's is titled: "There is a Vision: Civil Society and the Prospects for Peace in the Middle East." It will be delivered by Dr. Mustafa Barghouthi. The lecture will begin at 4 p.m. in the Robert Crown Center.

At 4 p.m., Dr. Jesse Snedeker, assistant professor of psychology and co-director of the Laboratory for Developmental Studies at Harvard University, will speak about his hypothesis concerning a child's linguistic development in the lecture: "Starting over: 'Early' word learning at 1, 4 or 20." The lecture will be held in room 917 of the UMass Campus Center

Arafat asks prime minister to form a new government

By Lara Sukhtian
Associated Press

RAMALLAH, West Bank (AP) — Yasser Arafat on Tuesday asked Palestinian Prime Minister Ahmed Qureia to stay on the job and form a new government by next week, officials said, a move that could give a small lift to troubled U.S.-backed peace plan.

Qureia, whose one-month term as head of an emergency Cabinet ends next week, said he hasn't received a formal offer yet, but that he would accept once he receives it.

The United States and other international mediators have been closely watching Palestinian efforts to form a government, saying a stable Palestinian leadership is needed to push the road map peace plan forward. Still, Tuesday's announcement failed to resolve the sticky issue of who would oversee Palestinian security forces.

Undercover Israeli troops killed a fugitive Palestinian militant in a West Bank refugee camp, witnesses said. Ibrahim al-Naneesh, 37, was a member of the Al Aqsa Martyrs' Brigade, a militant group loosely linked to Arafat's Fatah faction.

The army said the fugitive was responsible for several attacks on Israeli civilians and fired at soldiers who killed him. Soldiers found an M-16 and several magazines on the body. Shortly after, a second militant opened fire. Soldiers fired back and hit him. The wounded militant was taken to a Tulkarem hospital.

The developments came as Israel held local elections in which Prime Minister Ariel Sharon's Likud party was expected to lose several key mayorships.

The Israeli Foreign Ministry summoned a senior Swiss diplomat to protest Switzerland's backing for an informal Mideast peace plan reached by former Israeli and Palestinian negotiators, an official said Tuesday.

Qureia currently heads an emergency Cabinet whose term expires Nov. 4. There had been some uncertainty over whether Qureia, upset by arguments with Arafat over control of the security forces, would agree to continue in the job.

Palestinian officials gave conflicting accounts about Tuesday's meeting of the PLO leadership.

Foreign Minister Nabil Shaath and Abbas Zaki, a senior PLO official, said Qureia had accepted Arafat's offer to form a new government. But reached later, Qureia said he had not been formally invited, although he plans to accept the offer.

"The plan is to have this government ready" by the time the term of the emergency Cabinet expires, Shaath said. "We do not want any more time wasted."

Qureia's previous efforts to form a larger government have failed because of wrangling over appointments. In particular, Qureia had been unable to agree with Arafat over the key post of interior minister, which would control the various Palestinian security agencies.

Shaath said the interior minister's post so far remains unfilled.

"There will be a strong a capable interior minister who will exercise all security responsibilities assigned to him," he said. "No names were discussed this morning, but as I said the principles and the basis are all agreed to."

Israel and the United States say the forces must be consolidated under one body, in order to be effective in dismantling militant groups.

Qureia, who hopes to reach a cease-fire with Israel and get peace talks back on track, had unsuccessfully tried to attract representatives of Islamic militant groups into his first government.

In Israel, about 3.8 million Israelis were eligible to vote in the local elections. Turnout was expected to be low.

A Likud loss could weaken Sharon, who led the party to a sweeping victory in February general elections but has been hurt recently by corruption allegations.

Sharon is expected to be questioned by police this week in connection with those allegations, according to Israeli media. The Maariv newspaper reported Sharon would be questioned Tuesday.

Analysts said Likud might be hurt on the local level by infighting and competition from independent candidates as well as Sharon's decision to keep traditional allies, including the ultra-Orthodox Shas party, out of the governing coalition. Shas is very active on the municipal level.

The Israeli Foreign Ministry summoned a senior Swiss diplomat to protest Switzerland's backing for an informal Mideast peace plan reached by former Israeli and Palestinian negotiators, an official said Tuesday.

Foreign Ministry spokesman Jonathan Peled said Switzerland's acting head of mission, Claude Altermatt, was summoned on Monday. Peled said Israeli officials expressed "misgivings about the Swiss involvement in promoting" the peace plan.

Clip & Curl 665-2629
Hair Skin & Nails Massage Therapy
Route 116, Sunderland (Located on bus route)
Accepted: Visa MC
Open Tuesday - Friday 9 to 6:30, and Saturday 9 to 4
Stress Relief Package
30 Minute Massage
30 Minute Aveda Facial
Hair Shampooed & Dried
Regularly $73, Now $60
(Add a Complimentary Lavender Paraffin hand dip!)
Expires 11/22/03
Aveda • ARUM • Paul Mitchell
Two full service rooms!

Hawai'i Pacific University offers nine graduate programs that emphasize practical applications, providing students with current solutions and innovative strategies needed for success.

PROGRAMS OF STUDY
- Master of Business Administration
- Master of Arts in Communication
- Master of Arts in Diplomacy and Military Studies
- Master of Arts in Global Leadership
- Master of Arts in Human Resource Management
- Master of Arts in Organizational Change
- Master of Arts in Teaching English as a Second Language
- Master of Science in Information Systems
- Master of Science in Nursing

Attractive scholarship and assistantship opportunities are available.

CENTER FOR GRADUATE STUDIES
1164 Bishop Street, Suite 911 • Honolulu, HI 96813
Phone: 1 (808) 544-0279 • Toll-free: 1 866-GRAD-HPU
E-mail: graduate@hpu.edu

Visit the Hawaii Pacific University representative on campus: Wednesday, Oct. 29

Car bomb kills at least four

By Robert H. Reid
Associated Press

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — A car bomb exploded Tuesday west of Baghdad, killing at least four people a day after three dozen people died in a wave of suicide bombings in the Iraqi capital. U.S. officials said one of Baghdad's three deputy mayors was killed in a hit-and-run shooting.

The latest attacks, including the killing Sunday of Deputy Mayor Faris Abdul Razzaq al-Assam, raised fears that a strengthened insurgency is increasingly targeting Iraqis who work with the U.S.-led coalition as well as international groups that had considered themselves at less risk than U.S. soldiers.

Despite the escalation in attacks on Iraqis, American forces remained targets, with insurgents firing on a U.S. military base and convoy in two northern cities Tuesday.

In Baghdad, a rocket-propelled grenade attack killed one U.S. soldier and wounded six others while they were trying to destroy roadside bombs, the U.S. military said Tuesday.

The soldiers, from the 1st Armored Division, were attacked Monday, the same day a team of suicide car bombers devastated the Red Cross headquarters and three police stations, killing three dozen people and wounding more than 200.

In Tikrit, Saddam Hussein's hometown, insurgents opened fire late Tuesday on the southern gate of the main U.S. military base, wounding at least one American soldier from the 4th Infantry Division, witnesses said. A patrol was sent out to search for the assailants, who soldiers said apparently fired from a nearby rooftop.

And a U.S. military convoy was attacked Tuesday night by small arms fire in the northern city of Mosul, the military said. There were no casualties.

In Fallujah, a flashpoint Sunni Muslim city 40 miles west of Baghdad, a car exploded Tuesday afternoon on a major street, killing at least four people. The explosion occurred about 100 yards from a police station and 100 feet from a school, but the target was unclear.

Later Tuesday, eight huge explosions were heard after sundown from the southern area of Fallujah. U.S. officials in Baghdad said they were unaware of the blasts, which residents described as "deafening."

In Baghdad, at least three mortar shells exploded late Tuesday in the Jadriya district across the Tigris River from the palace headquarters of the U.S. led coalition, Iraqi police said. There was no immediate word on casualties or damage.

Coalition officials reported little progress in determining who was behind Monday's car bombings in Baghdad.

A fifth would-be suicide bomber, who was caught Monday before he could detonate his explosives, told police he was Syrian, according to a coalition official. Investigators were trying to confirm his nationality, the official said on condition of anonymity.

President Bush blamed both loyalists to Saddam and foreign terrorists for the attacks in and around Baghdad, including a rocket barrage on a hotel Sunday that killed a U.S. lieutenant colonel and wounded 18 other people.

Bush told a news conference Tuesday that "basically what they're trying to do is cause people to run."

A coalition spokesman, Charles Heatly, told the British Broadcasting Corp. "there certainly are indications that there are foreign terrorists who are coming into Iraq," but he did not explicitly accuse them of responsibility.

Britain's special representative in Iraq, Sir Jeremy Greenstock, also said Tuesday that foreign terrorists could be entering Iraq from Afghanistan and elsewhere.

The use of suicide bombings in Monday's attacks "is a sign of foreign terrorist tactics, rather than the Saddam loyalist elements that we are still trying to chase down," Greenstock told BBC.

The car bombing in Fallujah was the first in the city, a center of resistance to the U.S. occupation.

Tawfiq Mijbel, who was badly wounded by shrapnel from the car bombing, said he was driving directly behind the vehicle that exploded. "It stopped in front of the power company. A man got out, while another stayed in the car. A few seconds later it blew up," Mijbel said from his hospital bed.

Khamis Mijbal, who owns a shop opposite the spot where the car blew up, said the blast produced a massive ball of fire and debris flew in all directions.

The school was closed, but police said one body was found inside. Police Col. Jalal Sabri said all the victims appeared to have been bystanders. Sabri said at least four people were dead but the number could reach six. The count was difficult because some victims were dismembered, he said.

The slain deputy Baghdad mayor, al-Assam, was "shot in a hit-and-run incident" Sunday, said Tom Basile, a coalition spokesman. Basile said he had no information that any suspects were apprehended.

Resistance forces have assassinated or attempted to assassinate several figures allied with the occupation. The most prominent was Aquila al-Hashimi, a member of the Governing Council, who was fatally shot Sept. 20.

Space capsule lands in Kazakhstan

By Mara D. Bellaby
Associated Press

ASTANA, Kazakhstan (AP) — A Russian space capsule delivered an American, a Russian and Spaniard home Tuesday from the International Space Station, depositing them safely in Kazakhstan and earning a place in the history books as the first Russian spacecraft to both launch and land an American astronaut.

The bell-shaped Soyuz thumped down beneath a parachute at 5:40 a.m. Moscow time near Arkalyk in north-central Kazakhstan, scorched and smelling of burning metal. Its passengers, American Ed Lu, Russian Yuri Malenchenko and Spaniard Pedro Duque, emerged smiling after their 3 1/2-hour descent to Earth.

"It is great to be back home," said Lu, after Russian workers lifted him — seat and all — from the capsule and covered him in a fur-lined shawl to keep out the cold wind blowing over the steppe.

Lu had planned to ride to the space station onboard the U.S. shuttle Atlantis until the disintegration of the space shuttle Columbia in February put the American manned spaceflight program on hold. Since then the smaller, non-reusable Soyuz crafts have become the linchpin of the space station program.

Lu and Malenchenko blasted off in the same Soyuz capsule last April for a nearly six-month stay in space, while Duque arrived eight days ago along with a U.S.-Russian crew. The capsule he rode up in will stay with the station until that crew returns.

In May, the first time that American astronauts returned on the Soyuz, a computer malfunction sent the crew on a dive so steep that the astronauts' tongues rolled back in their mouths. The crew landed so far off-target that more than two gut-wrenching hours passed before rescuers knew the men were safe.

This time, everything went mostly as planned.

"We were very fortunate. It was as smooth a landing as could have been hoped for," said Gen. Vladimir Popov, who heads the team responsible for Russia's space search and rescue operations. NASA spokesman Ron Navias agreed. "It was a dream landing. It is almost as if they hit the X-mark on the ground," he said.

The operation was marred only by the inadvertent pushing of a button by one of the space capsule occupants during the undocking, which caused the space station to rotate 25 degrees, and it required a large expenditure of fuel to correct the alignment, Russian media reported. Vladimir Solovyov, the chief of Mission Control outside Moscow, said in televised remarks that there was "some deviation but we quickly fixed it."

However, hours after touchdown, thick, low-lying clouds enveloped the Kazakh capital Astana, forcing helicopters carrying the crew, officials and journalists to briefly turn back to the landing site near Arkalyk.

The astronauts were met in Astana by Kazakh girls adorned in gold-trimmed national costumes and holding bouquets of red roses. Duque walked easily up the stairs to the Astana airport's VIP lounge, but Malenchenko and Lu — both feeling the effects of gravity after almost half-a-year of weightlessness — leaned on aides for support.

Russian engineers had said there was only a slim chance that this crew would suffer from the same computer malfunction that affected the previous flight, but officials took no chances and altered the usual search operation to cover more ground.

NASA, still getting used to its astronauts landing on foreign ground, also requested a medically equipped U.S. Air Force C-17 to stand by in Astana.

Additionally, this Soyuz was equipped with satellite phones and a global positioning satellite system — courtesy of NASA — so if the crew had landed off-course and communications systems were damaged as happened in May, they would still have been able to phone in their location.

The three-man crew arrived late Tuesday in Moscow, where Malenchenko's new bride, Texas resident Ekaterina Dmitriev, Lu's fiance and Duque's family awaited them. Malenchenko became the first person to marry in space, holding a wedding by proxy.

AP Chief unvails new "eAP" technology

By Dave Carpenter
Associated Press

CHICAGO (AP) — Tom Curley, the new president and CEO of The Associated Press, unveiled details Tuesday of the news cooperative's impending shift to the "electronic AP" — a new interactive network of multimedia content.

The "eAP" initiative will help transform the 155-year-old wire service with new technology that should better connect it with its newspaper members and other customers, Curley said.

Curley and John Reid, AP's director of services and technology and a senior vice president, explained the initiative in a multimedia slide presentation to newspaper publishers at the annual meeting of the Inland Press Association.

Reid said the new technology, which he characterized as a new generation of content management and distribution systems, "takes us a giant leap forward in making it easier to get just the content that you want, and in a way that makes it much easier to use."

"It's something that, going forward, really is going to revolutionize the way that we provide content, the way that members electronically interact with AP, just as much as the photojournalism revolution of a decade ago did" with the introduction of digital satellite technology, Reid said.

Curley called the eAP initiative part of efforts to make the AP the "essential global news company," including offering news stories that move faster and carry more impact.

The six elements of eAP, as outlined by Reid are:
— eAP Central: A common database repository for all AP content.
— eAssign: A new system within AP for making, coordinating and tracking assignments; elements can be made available to members and other customers as well.
— eCategorize: A software engine to categorize, index and search.
— ePackage: Tools for editors to build multimedia packages that are easy to use as part of a newspaper page, Web site, television presentation or wireless device.
— eDistribute: Providing AP content through the Internet that is tightly integrated with customers' systems.
— eSolutions: AP's use of all the advancements to provide technology or technical services to customers.

Tests show priest fathered children

BROCKTON, Mass. (AP) — Paternity tests have confirmed that a Catholic priest fathered two children of a woman with whom he had an affair.

James J. Perry, 38, of Middleboro and his sister, Emily S. Perry, 32, of Stoughton, have received results of the DNA tests showing the Rev. James Foley is their biological father, The Enterprise of Brockton reported.

Foley, who admitted to an affair with the Perrys' mother in the 1960s and 1970s, was ordered by a probate court judge in July to undergo DNA testing to determine if he is the Perry's father.

Last February, James Perry filed a motion in Plymouth County Probate and Family Court seeking paternity testing; his sister filed the same request in Norfolk County Probate Court. The cases were folded together into the Plymouth County case, and brother and sister were in court on Monday to receive the results.

Rita Perry, their mother, died of a drug overdose in 1973. Foley, who was with her at the time, has apologized for not doing more to save her.

The Perrys said Foley told them in a meeting early this year their mother collapsed after becoming upset with him because he refused to spend the next day with her, and he soon realized she'd taken some pills. When efforts to revive her failed, Foley said he panicked, made a call to Needham police, and fled. He denied an account in church documents that he fled after she collapsed, and only called police after he returned to the house later.

Foley admitted the affair to church officials in 1993 and was sent away for two years of counseling before returning to St. Joseph's Church in Salem in 1995.

When details of the affair and Rita Perry's death became public in December, he was removed from the parish.

--Associated Press

A calling plan that will make your day!

Unlimited Night & Weekend
Airtime Minutes when on the America's Choice Network
Plus
1000 Anytime Mobile To Mobile
Minutes to call any of our 32.5 million customers on our nationwide mobile to mobile network.

Fall into Savings!
Get up to 4 FREE Motorola V120E Phones!
New 2 year annual agreement required. While supplies last. Limited time offer

America's Choice
400 anytime minutes FOR $39.99 monthly access with 1 or 2 year agreement.
Unlimited nationwide long distance. No roaming charges coast-to-coast.
All when calling on the America's Choice network.
The America's Choice network covers more than 265 million people in the U.S. Network not available in all areas. Calls placed outside the calling plan area are 69¢/min. Mobile to Mobile not available throughout the America's Choice Network.

@Wireless www.shopatwireless.com
HADLEY
322 Russell St. • 413.587.3248
HOLYOKE
50 Holyoke Mall • 413.533.2500
Stop in and ask how you can keep your same phone number and switch wireless carriers. Coming this fall!

verizon wireless
Authorized Retailer

Night & weekend hours: Mon-Fri. 9:01pm-5:59am, Sat. 12am-5am. 11:59pm. Taxes & surcharges apply & may vary. Federal Universal Service Charge of 2.80% (varies quarterly based on FCC rate) and a 5¢ Regulatory Charge per line/month are our charges, not taxes.
Important Consumer Information: Subject to Customer Agreement and Calling Plan. $35 activation fee applies. $175 early termination fee applies. Requires credit approval. Cannot becombined with other service promotions. Usage rounded to next full minute. Unused allowances lost. Subject to taxes & other charges. Not available in all markets. Geographic and other restrictions apply. See brochure and sales representative for details. ©2003 Verizon Wireless.

Free Rides!
Halloween Weekend
Around Amherst

You never know what might be lurking...
Call 413-253-5972
Halloween weekend
Friday and Saturday Night
10pm-2am
www.knowmercy.org

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 29, 2003

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

'The Price Is Right' legend will live on

For anyone who has ever been an avid watcher of television game shows, Monday was truly a sad day. A legend in his field, Robert Ray Roddy, a.k.a. Rod Roddy, the famous announcer from "The Price is Right," died of a combination of colon and breast cancer. His unique qualities are irreplaceable and game shows will not be the same without him.

Roddy was the voice behind many game shows, including "Love Connection" and "Press Your Luck," but of course he was most well known for his booming, "Come on down! You're the next contestant on 'The Price is Right!'" as audience members eagerly waited to hear him call their name. His cheerful attitude, flashy style of dress and familiar voice helped to make the show the success it was. The undeniable chemistry between he and Bob Barker created an atmosphere unlike any other game show. Their partnership lasted for an incredible seventeen years.

Although he knew about his illness for quite some time, Roddy had a courageous and fighting spirit and continued his work up until the very end. He recorded his last episode about two months ago, right before he was hospitalized. For nearly two years, he smiled through his pain to bring viewers their daily dose of Rod. His first cancer-related surgery was back in 2001. Until recently, doctors believed they had his disease under control, but unfortunately for Roddy, and all the watchers of his show, they were incorrect. His adoring fans are the only family he has left behind.

There is a lesson to be learned from Robert Ray Roddy's death. After his diagnosis of cancer several years ago, Roddy began to speak out on behalf of early detection. Before his death, he gave an interview on a CBS website where he said, "I could have prevented all this with a colonoscopy."

In regards to his breast cancer, he added, "To everybody out there, 'Get a mammogram!' It can happen to men, too." It's a little known fact, but it is true that approximately 1,500 men a year are afflicted with breast cancer.

Roddy made a very good point. Although cancer can be a deadly disease, it can be prevented. Early detection is the first and most important step in the battle against it. We should learn from his mistake, and take his advice. Regular check-ups and exams can prevent us from suffering a fate like Roddy's.

Although no funeral plans have been announced, the game show fans all over the country will be mourning for the loss of this lively and ever cheerful announcer. He brought flair to his shows that will never be replaced. "The Price Is Right" will never be the same. To CBS, the entire game show community, and of course, us at the Massachusetts Daily Collegian, Robert Ray Roddy will truly be missed.

Information from cnn.com was used in this editorial.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

The nature of resistance in Palestine

Yousef Munayyer

What can begin to explain a suicide bomber? We look at the horrific deaths of innocent civilians, and we wonder this all the time. What we usually ask ourselves though is why someone would choose those targets. What we should be asking ourselves is why is a person willing to die to achieve these targets.

There comes a point when a person would rather die than live in the situation that they are in. This is vital to understand. If we can separate that point, understand its origin, then we can eliminate terrorism.

I am speaking of the conflict in Palestine, of course. This is the last country in the Middle East to still experience colonialism — except for Iraq, but that is a recent phenomenon. Have you ever thought of the conflict as a colonial one? If you haven't, you should. Consider that during the first half of the 20th century, Palestine received an influx of European immigrants. These immigrants declared a state in 1948 on land in which they were a clear minority. To this day, these immigrants control a land that belongs to a native people who were suppressed by the use of violence. Does this sound colonial yet? That's because it is. Egypt, Syria, Lebanon and Jordan all became independent of the colonial powers that controlled themselves in the midst of the 20th century. Palestine however still remains in that stage, resisting an occupation by a foreign entity.

It's hard not to think of this conflict in a colonial context when you think about the population of Israel in the region. Like a drop of water in boiling oil, it is in a place where it doesn't belong and has only caused problems since it got there.

Of course the Palestinians are going to resist Israeli occupation. Israel has taken land from the Palestinians and has not given a drop back. The Palestinians have resisted the influx of Europeans for years before 1948. And now that Israel continues a 37-year occupation of internationally recognized territory and is building an apartheid wall that will grab even more land, the Palestinians will only continue to resist.

Israel has a problem: It cannot give up on its colonial nature without giving up on its Jewish character. This is a problem that could only have been expected when a minority declares itself the ruler of a majority population. However, Israel cannot withdraw from the territories it took and go back to its mainland like France did with Vietnam or Algeria or Britain did with India, because Israel created its homeland. The idea itself is paradoxical. There is no place to retreat to because their colonialism started before their statehood did. There is no other situation like it in the world.

All that considered, and understanding the conflict in its colonial context, what can be done? Well the answer is hard to swallow for Israel, but it is its only choice. Israel cannot control the Palestinians with violence and must negotiate and be willing to make concessions that will end the conflict once and for all.

Israel, being the stronger party, dictates the discourse of the relationship between itself and the Palestinians. If it treats Palestinians as violence being the only language they understand, then they will only respond in that very tongue. A philosopher on resistance said, "Colonialism is violence in its natural state, and it will only yield when confronted with greater violence."

Israel will have to face a difficult decision. It will have to consider giving up its Jewish character or continue facing resistance from the Palestinians.

Of course many of you are thinking about the suicide bombings and wonder if I consider that "legitimate" resistance. It is easy for any of us to answer this now. However we cannot dictate our morals upon a society that has been consistently demoralized.

The suicide bomber gives his life when he sees no other options. When he sees most of the world supporting him but still no justice, and when he has tried negotiation but has seen nothing positive, he is disenfranchised from the system and resorts to what is the only option left for himself.

The suicide bomber decides to give his life at the point when dying is better than living. Israel can control that. Sure, people will say that they are brainwashed by religion, but what brings them to that? What makes a non-religious person believe giving his life will bring him to heaven? Something pushes him to this and Israel controls that as well. Am I to believe as well that female suicide bombers are doing this to get to heaven and meet their 72 black-eyed virgins?

There is obviously much more to suicide bombers than that. The nature of resistance is what one has to understand to see a way out of this. You have to realize that you can only push people so much before they start to push back. Israel passed this point over 50 years ago. Now the ball is in their court and they have to make some fundamental decisions. They must begin tearing down walls and building bridges. But Israel cannot expect security by continually repressing Palestinians; too many Palestinians have passed the point where death is better than life, and they are waiting their turn. It is truly sickening, but what is worse is that Israel can stop this at any time; its government simply chooses colonial policies that do otherwise.

Yousef Munayyer is a Collegian columnist.

Abortion: the last resort

Sara Hakim

Abortion is one of those taboo issues that I generally try to avoid discussing. It seems that every time I open my mouth about it, someone winds up getting offended and either taking my words the wrong way or assumes that I am trying to force my opinion upon them. Of course neither of these situations are true, and my opinion is all it is. Take it or leave it.

Many feel that it is immoral to take a life, even if that life has not yet begun. Abortion, is it a good thing or a bad thing? This is a complex issue, and to simplify the response to a one-word answer would not do it justice. Personally, I feel that abortion is not a good thing, and should not be permitted.

There are recent theories that abortion helps keep down the crime rates. Ten to 15 years after abortion was first legalized, crime rates were down significantly. It is theorized that the crime rates went down because abortions helped to keep the population of criminals down, or rather, it helped keep people from turning to crime. A large percentage of criminals are either people who grew up in broken homes or people who grew up with single parents. Having an abortion would prevent a single mother from having to turn to crime in order to feed her child. It would also prevent a child from having to grow up in a negative environment due to poverty.

It seems to me that the problem with abortions is that they are too readily available, and are categorized as just another option. Should it really be an option to terminate a pregnancy when all that was needed to prevent that pregnancy was the use of some form of contraceptive? This idea seems ridiculous to me. Perhaps this is because of the conservative way that my parents raised me, or perhaps it is because I would never put myself in a position that I would need to decide whether or not an abortion is a suitable option for me.

I believe that everyone has the right to pursuit of happiness by any means necessary, as long as no one is hurt by that pursuit. It is selfish to think that your mistake can be fixed by ending the life of your unborn child. When a woman becomes pregnant there are many reasons why she might not want to have a child. She may be a teenager in high school, she may be living on the street or she may be unable to support a second human being. Whatever the reason may be, it is easy for an ill-timed pregnancy to interfere with a young mother's life.

On the other hand, it is also unfair to have a child if the mother cannot support it. The child has a right to happiness too, and if a mother cannot give it food, shelter and a good environment, then in many cases it would be better off not to be put through that.

Most of the facts support abortions. Abortions help prevent people's lives from being messed up by unexpected, unwanted, unplanned births. In the media we hear about women saying what a difficult choice it is to make when they decide to get an abortion, and there is no question in my mind that it is, in fact, a difficult decision. People need to become more responsible and stop putting themselves in such a position that it is necessary to make this difficult decision. To assist people in becoming more responsible, the law needs to step in and make abortions illegal. The minute two people decide to have sex, they also need to think about what is going to happen if, by chance, the woman does happen to get pregnant.

I believe that everyone has the right to pursuit of happiness by any means necessary, as long as no one is hurt by that pursuit.

In an ideal society, where people avoided unplanned pregnancies at all costs, abortion should be legalized. Unfortunately, we are not living in that ideal society, and every year there are approximately 46 million abortions performed in the United States alone.

Speed limits on highways control the people who respect and follow the laws. Just as speed limits manage the flow of traffic, by not legalizing abortions, we will at least bring down the numbers. Abortions will always be available, but to make them illegal will control a good chunk of the population.

In the society we live in, abortion is viewed more as a form of birth control than the actual killing of a living thing. It needs to be recognized and taken seriously for what it is: the last resort.

Sara Hakim is a UMass student.

Ridiculous language requirements

Ben Feder

The language requirement at this university is completely unreasonable. Now, I'm mainly talking in my own school — the College of Arts and Humanities. For those unfamiliar, a student in the school has to take up to four semesters of a language. Don't get me wrong, I'm all for a multi-lingual culture. Where my problem lies is in the methods and logistics of the language program here.

First of all, I'm a journalism major, a field that shows more parallels with communication than with literature or any other discipline in my college. Communication, however, is in the Social and Behavioral Science College, which holds the global education requirement. I'll admit I'm not thoroughly versed in the details of this requirement, but the part that interests me is that those students only have to take two semesters of a language.

My question is this: What's the difference between the two schools that they have different language requirements? Why do I have to take four semesters, when those students only need two?

Along with global education, students also have to take three additional courses in that language department. This may sound fair, but let's face it, I can take the introductory level language courses and find three general education courses that somehow pertain to that language and have an easier time than students on the four-tier language plan.

Maybe I wouldn't mind if the language requirement here actually made sense.

Maybe I wouldn't mind if the language requirement here actually made sense. Ideally, you would hope that each semester would build on the one before it. In reality, the second year just rehashes the first year with the only difference being that they use bigger words to teach you the same material. How do I know this? They use the same grammar boxes and teach the same material in the same order that they taught the previous year.

Another thing I've realized is that the people who want to take the second year of a language are people who want to be fluent. This may account for the stringent reiteration of the first year since these students will most likely travel to those foreign speaking countries. I would love to become fluent in my language of study. But let's be realistic, as much as I would love to impress my friends and romantic interests with my abilities in foreign tongues, I am going to forget everything I've learned.

I, along with most others in my position, feel the same way toward the four-semester language requirement while my friends breeze by with two semesters or don't even have a language requirement at all. Someone explain why School of Management majors don't have one? Is it because English is the universal language of business? Hardly.

The one complaint through this is that I would like a better language program that seems reasonable and makes sense. Or at the very least it should be consistent from school to school.

Ben Feder is a Collegian columnist.

Letter to the Editor

To the Editor:

People who know me know how much I love bumper stickers. The most insightful one reads something like this: "Good will be the day when the military has to hold a bake sale to raise money." To the author of "Freedom at what cost?" I ask how dare you — at a school struggling to stay afloat amid this financial crisis of persistent joblessness and a wavering economy — how dare you put military action first?

I could call you republican, but that's too harsh. Let's rather use some fancy title like, "public relations director for the 'American Way'" Did it ever occur to you that, perhaps, if we put more money into education in the first place, maybe we wouldn't repeat history and enter into yet another war that has nothing to do with us, especially in this case where we not only entered the war, but practically started it? More education equals smarter businesspeople who go for company restructuring rather than easy-way-out axing of one-third of their workforces for that "quick jolt" of positive earnings. More education equals smarter presidents who first get elected on their own and then actually give a damn about public sentiment.

Perhaps more education would've helped you realize that there are plenty of other industrialized nations where it's OK to speak out against the M.O. of the government — or is it all to easy to compare us to the poorest of nations? And maybe we could take a hint from many of these nations as well: Stop sticking your head so far into everyone else's business that you forget the rest of your body is on fire.

Take it from one of the few kids in high school who actually got up every single day to say the Pledge of Allegiance. I love this country and everything it stands for, but I, like everyone else, am entitled to rally against what I haven't voted for and don't believe in. Here's another bumper sticker for you: "Support our troops, bring them home!"

Joe A. Finley II
UMass Student

Submit a letter or opinion

editorial@dailycollegian.com | 413-545-3099 | Letters to the Editor, 113 Campus Center Way, Amherst, MA 01003

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 29, 2003

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

McMahon family needs to stop messing around

Corner to Corner

Emilie Duggan

When the spring semester ended last school year, I put this column on the shelf, swearing that I was going to branch into other topics and not pigeonhole myself into wrestling. But like soap operas and wrestling storylines, anything can happen at the Collegian, and so here I am with the fall semester's first edition of "Corner to corner."

With work and classes taking up the majority of my time, I watch wrestling with half of my attention now. A couple of months ago that would have been a travesty; my friends would have vilified me for daring not to give my full attention to RAW or SmackDown! Now, however, if I miss a show, I'm not really missing much, and the fact that my friends are still talking to me is clear evidence of their — and other fans' — apathy towards the product.

Vince McMahon, the illustrious owner of the WWE, has decided that being more hands on (read: being a part of every show and pay-per-view event) would be a good thing. Prior to October 19 — when the WWE held their annual "No Mercy" pay-per-view in Baltimore, Md. — fans could tune into SmackDown! on Thursday nights and were just about guaranteed a fight between McMahon and his general manager daughter, Stephanie. It would appear that Mr. McMahon wasn't too happy with the way things were run on that show, and so he challenged young Stephanie to an 'I Quit' match at the Baltimore show. As with any stipulation match, the title pretty much says it all — the loser had to quit the WWE.

Let's analyze this for a moment: a 50-some-odd-year-old man, in amazing physical shape, took on his 27-year-old daughter in a wrestling match. It was almost a certainty that this was going to be an ugly, ugly event. Without going into too many details I'll sum this up: Stephanie McMahon "quit" the WWE because her father attempted to beat her silly with a lead pipe.

Yes, folks, this is my favorite sport.

One of the fans' favorite wrestlers on the roster used to be Kane, a masked monster that would choke-slam any opponent without blinking an eye. Still, underneath it all, fans knew that he was somewhat humane. The WWE, however, decided that it was time to change things, shake things up a little. So, in their infinite wisdom, they unmasked the monster.

They took a character that had a solid fan following and they decided to mess with it — because they decided that it was time for Kane to do something more exciting than fight in tag teams with Hurricane (a little green man who thinks he's a superhero), or RVD (a seemingly drugged out, easy-going guy). Both tag teams were amusing to watch, but that wasn't good enough for the McMahons so, of course, that had to change.

It was bad enough when the WWE tried to make fans hate Kane by throwing him into a morally disgusting necrophilia angle. Now, he's just supposed to be psychotic.

When an interview with announcer Jim Ross made Kane feel as though he was being teased, he responded by dousing the man with gasoline and lighting him on fire. He injured Vince McMahon's wife, Linda, when she tried to stop his disturbing behavior. In stepped Shane, the other child in this dysfunctional family, to defend his mother and the family honor. What did Kane do? He attached jumper cables to his testicles and touched the other end repeatedly to a car battery.

Again I say this is my favorite sport. I'm so proud.

The state of the wrestling industry has gone downhill in a major way. Is it any wonder that there is a steady decrease in ratings when these are the storylines being sent our way? The problem is the lack of competition. The McMahons have a monopoly on the televised portion of this Industry. Until another federation steps up and provides direct competition during at least one of the time slots they currently take up, the product is going to suffer.

The McMahons know that true wrestling fans will watch what's there, and with no other options, this is what we get.

Emilie Duggan is a Collegian Columnist.

Sleeping At Last try to wake up listeners

Up and coming young band shows promise with debut album

By Nick Romanow
Collegian Staff

Sleeping At Last
'Ghosts'
Interscope

The Chicago trio Sleeping At Last's major label debut, "Ghosts," has been nearly three years in the making and it's evident that while the band still needs a bit more time to completely develop its sound, it is on its way to making an imprint in the music industry.

The band — brothers Ryan and Chad O'Neal along with Dan Perdue — was playing shows in the Chicago area when, in 2001, former Smashing Pumpkins frontman Billy Corgan was spotted at one of their shows.

"He missed the set," recalls singer/guitarist Ryan O'Neal in a conversation sitting in the Axis in Boston waiting for sound check to start, "but we found him after the show and gave him our CD." The CD was the independently made and released album "Capture," and Corgan saw promise in it. The next day he called them at the O'Neals' home in the Chicago suburbs. Corgan helped the band gain the attention of major labels and the band began work on what would become "Ghosts."

When crafting the tracks that eventually found their way on to "Ghosts," Ryan O'Neal says he had an atypical method of songwriting. Rather than composing lyrics set to music he would just sit at a typewriter and allow words to come out of him.

"I wrote every day and spun-off from ideas," Ryan describes. "Ghosts" demonstrates Ryan's talents for songwriting. Although his emotive delivery certainly assists the lyrics, haunting lines such as "Creeping inside / Through our sleepy eyes/ Contagiously bright" from the track "A Skeleton Of Something More" prove that Sleeping At Last has found a strength with their songwriting.

COURTESY ASLEEPATLAST.COM

Sleeping At Last maybe too talented for their first release, "Ghost."

The musical arrangements are not to be overlooked either. The blinking light sound of the keyboards in "All That Is Beautiful" and the gentle guitar arpeggios in "A Skeleton..." leading into the crashing of the guitar, bass and drums show that Sleeping At Last have the talent that musicians twice their age (it should be noted that the band's average age is probably close to the age of the average UMass student) would envy.

The band cites U2, Radiohead and The Beatles as some of its favorite bands and it certainly shows on the record. The band's oft-soaring instrumentation is reminiscent of U2 at their lushest, and Ryan's vocals can, at times, be similar to Thom Yorke's. "Hurry" has a quiet sound with a constant pounding beat in the background that sounds like something Radiohead would've made if they had decided to stick to a more traditional soundscape after "OK Computer." All the songs on "Ghosts" show Sleeping At Last's love for the brit-pop sound and style that has been crafted and re-crafted time and time again.

Ryan also cites the "Edward Scissorhands" score as one of his favorite albums and, as out-of-place as that may sound for a rock band, its influence can be heard on the album. Many of the songs feature string arrangements and even the ones that don't have largeness to their sound that recalls a film score.

Some bands get so caught up in their influences and a certain "style" or "sound" that they want to achieve that they forget to write good songs and they forget that they have to be their own band. Sleeping At Last isn't trying to live in anyone's shadow and they most definitely have the talent to become a truly great band.

At this point in their career, however, they are more a band to watch out for in the future. "Ghosts" is a very good record, each listen reveals more and more subtleties and close inspection shows there is great music being made, but the listener can't help but hope for a bit more from the band on future releases.

About a Badly Drawn Boy in NoHo

"I think this band seems to get better each tour," singer Damon Gough of Badly Drawn Boy said in a recent interview. If Gough's inclinations have any truth to them, then Northampton is in for quite the treat this Saturday when Badly Drawn Boy plays two shows at the Iron Horse.

The British musician has had his fair share of success on this side of the Atlantic, including penning the entire soundtrack for the 2002 Hugh Grant flick "About a Boy." With his latest album releases, "The Hour of the Bewilderbeast" in 2000 and "Have You Fed The Fish?" in 2002, Gough has achieved somewhat of a musical phenomenon. He truly has a unique sound.

Though Gough has seen an ever-increasing fan base in the past few years and is enjoying the perks that being successful grant an artist, he claims he is still trying to keep it small.

"I've always had to work with the basic tools that I have got which is a couple of mics, a four track and a few effects, and now I have moved on to a bigger scale of working I still want to try and keep that alive because that is what made me good in the first place to anyone that liked it."

Gough will bring this small-scale sound to the Iron Horse to kick off a solo tour throughout the United States. Tickets are $20 in advance and $23 the day of the show. Badly Drawn Boy takes the stage at 7 p.m. and plays a second show at 10 p.m.

Information from this article was taken from www.badlydrawnboy.com

— Meghan Healy

Shady protege hits big with LP

By Jason Clark
Collegian Correspondent

Not long ago, most of the world knew him as little more than 'that guy on the beginning of the Eminem track "Follow Me,"' but with his first album Obie Trice proves he is more than just one of Slim Shady's lackeys.

Trice comes correct with his major label debut, "Cheers." The album is a manically compassionate salute to his mother, his people and, of course, his liquor. Trice's style is tight and oftentimes clever. His beats are on par with some of today's most talented hip-hoppers. However, like most new acts, Trice does, at times, fall short in the lyrical content department.

"Cheers" debuted at No. 3 on the Billboard R&B/Hip Hop Chart. The album's first single, "Got Some Teeth," is a current club favorite with a huge amount of radio and video airplay. The track, like a selection of others on Trice's disc, proves that the rapper can deliver catchy phrases that will roll around in the listener's head for days.

This wit is likely best demonstrated on "Don't Come Down," a dedication to Trice's mother. In a comical, yet sympathetic way, he conveys his understanding of her plight and decisions, served with a hint of remorse. Tracks like this flesh-out Trice, granting him the sincerity all up-and-coming artists need for credibility. The song captures the talent of the rapper, proving to audiences that there's a reason he hangs with the likes of Eminem.

Fueled with beats orchestrated in the labs of superstar producers such as Dr. Dre, Timbaland, Eminem, and others, "Cheers" even features an appearance by Shady/Aftermath label-mate 50 Cent. The rapper adds his own two cents to "We All Die One Day." This 'Git-At-Me-Dog' track also features Lloyd Banks of G-Unit and Eminem verbally abusing Ja Rule and the Murda Inc. roster. They cover a lot of topics in the song: guns, how they're not punks, and women.

Yes, it's another one of those songs that rap fans are all too familiar with by now.

Though freezer bags filled with dope, syphilis and smacking Ja Rule seem to be fads in rap right now, Trice should not have to resort to this, a regurgitation of the same old stuff everyone else has done to death. He is talented enough that he doesn't need such a gimmick to push his tracks. Yes, it does work for rappers — the ones that you hear on the radio and see on MTV and for those whose music can't be played on either — but that does not make good lyricists.

On the whole, Trice's style is creative and catchy — a sick formula for selling records, period. If he managed to add lyrical content to that test tube, his album would have exploded.

For a first attempt, "Cheers" is a tight album. It is a laugh out loud, bump in your whip, blast at a party goodtime.

But if a listener is in search of lyrical content, he should find another source.

Exhibit displays master artist

Public given opportunity to view Rembrandt

By Bipasha Ray
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) — A new exhibit of Rembrandt's prints, paintings and drawings displays the breadth and diversity of his works, and showcases how the Dutch artist's style changed through his career, while maintaining common themes.

"Rembrandt's Journey: Painter, Draftsman, Etcher" at the Museum of Fine Arts, includes about 150 etchings, 20 paintings, 35 drawings and six original copper etching plates, making it one of the largest retrospective Rembrandt exhibits in the United States in a generation, museum officials said.

The exhibit starts Sunday and continues through Jan. 18, after which it will travel to the Art Institute of Chicago.

"The normal view of Rembrandt's work is his etching, the self portraits — some of him with a plumed cap, maybe him cloaked in velvet. We want to show that, but we also want to show that he used convention and he transcended convention," said Clifford S. Ackley, the exhibit's curator.

Rembrandt's use of light and darkness, his subjects ranging from daily life and self-portraits to biblical themes and landscapes, and his intimate study of facial expression, gesture and body language set trends in etching and art in the 17th century.

COURTESY PHOTO

With the opening of the Rembrandt exhibit, art enthusiasts will get a rare chance to view his work.

Visitors can explore the interrelations between his prints, drawings and paintings, and see the transition from his early works — when he used rough, energetic strokes, allowed irregular scratches into his etches and sculpted his paint with the end of the paintbrush — to later in his career when he created more serene, meditative pieces.

Ackley pointed to an early sketch of "Christ Carrying the Cross," made in the mid 1630s in pen and brown ink and dominated by rough lines, with only the faces of a collapsing Jesus and his swooning mother drawn in great detail. A smudge, apparently dabbed on with a finger, guides the eye to the sketch's emotional focus.

"This is astonishing to people who follow contemporary art, because of its shorthand character and its roughness but there's a certain freedom to his work of that time," Ackley said.

The exhibit also shows how Rembrandt revisited the same subjects, from different perspectives. In three prints — each from a different decade — depicting the presentation of the baby Jesus in the temple, Rembrandt progressively zooms in the central subject, until the 1654 version when light and shadow dominate the print.

"If you didn't know Rembrandt's career, you might think this is the work of three different artists," Ackley said. "There's that big a change."

The exhibit, featuring works on loan from museums and private collections from Russia, Japan, England and the Netherlands, also shows related works rarely displayed together, Ackley said.

Rembrandt used a chalk drawing of an old man, and an ink sketch of two women and a turbaned figure as models for an etching and an oil painting of "Joseph Telling His Dreams."

"These might have been compared in slides and books, but never side by side," Ackley said.

The exhibit also wards off some of the mythic status attached to Rembrandt, said Suzanne McCullagh, a curator at the Art Institute of Chicago, who collaborated with Ackley and will manage the exhibit when it goes there.

"(Rembrandt) is one of the most famous names in art, but he's very little understood or seen," she said. "His depth and range of art are little appreciated."

The prints, which aren't often displayed but form the "spinal column" of the exhibit, help show the complete artist, she said.

"You often see Rembrandt the drafter, Rembrandt the painter," McCullagh said. "This exhibit gives you the whole picture, the breadth of his sheer creative spirit."

'Elephant' portrays Columbine culture

Gus Van Zant's latest film explores troubled youth tragedy

By Christy Lemire
Associated Press

During the closing credits of "Elephant," after the names of the kid who played Punk Guy (Wolfgang Williams), the dolly grip (Brian Lawson) and the gaffer (Bruce "Sarge" Fleskes) comes the obligatory disclaimer that this film is a work of fiction, and that any similarity to real people or events is purely coincidental.

Yeah, right.

"Elephant" is director Gus Van Sant's depiction of a seemingly ordinary day at a seemingly ordinary high school. But during its climax — when two camouflage-clad students walk around campus, killing their classmates one by one with the arsenal they've assembled — it's impossible not to think of what happened during an extraordinary day in 1999 at Columbine High School.

The film, which was a surprise winner of the Palme d'Or at this year's Cannes Film Festival, is so similar to the events of that day and so graphic, it could be seen as an attempt to exploit the shootings for entertainment or shock value.

Michael Moore went further: He showed the actual surveillance footage from the high school in his 2002 documentary "Bowling for Columbine," which relentlessly sought a solution to the problem of school shootings. (That segment, by the way, was the most moving part of his entire film.)

Van Sant, who previously explored troubled youth with "My Own Private Idaho," "Drugstore Cowboy" and even the feel-good "Finding Forrester," seems less interested in pointing fingers; he'd rather let the events of the day play out, and challenges us to interpret answers for ourselves.

And there are no easy answers. Alex (Alex Frost) and Eric (Eric Deulen) seem to be misfits. The popular kids tease them. They're into guns, they play violent video games and watch a TV show about Hitler. Before going on their shooting spree, they share a tentative kiss. All of this – or none of this – could have driven them to kill.

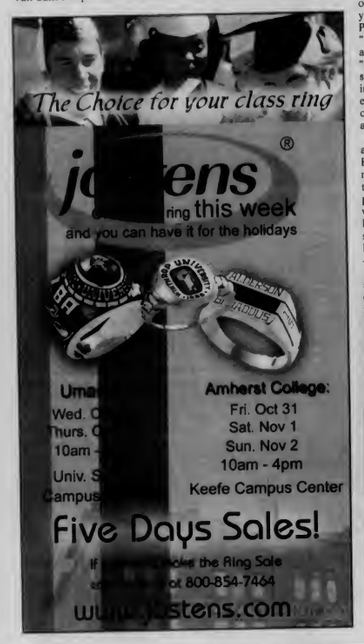
Van Sant also challenges us simply to pay attention, employing the same extreme minimalism that made his film "Gerry" – in which Matt Damon and Casey Affleck trekked through the desert and barely spoke – so agonizing.

This time, Van Sant uses the technique much more powerfully. With long tracking shots, he follows several students as they walk across campus, through the halls, into classrooms, into the bathrooms. Harris Savides' crisp cinematography heightens the sense of realism.

"Elephant"
Directed by Gus Van Zant
Starring Alex Frost, Eric Deulen
Five Thumbs Features
Rated R
81 mins.
Grade B

The "actors" are actual students who helped write the script, which was largely improvised and consists of long stretches of silence. This can get boring, but that's necessary if Van Sant is going to fling himself fully into the conceit of depicting a day in the life.

The approach is oddly riveting, though – not unlike the inexplicable pull of reality television – because the tension builds slowly, and you know what's going to happen at the end of the day.



But first, Van Sant lulls us with the rhythms of routine.

Easygoing Eli (Elias McConnell) develops pictures for his photography class. The popular couple, Carrie (Carrie Finklea) and Nathan (Nathan Tyson), sign out to have lunch off-campus. Brittany, Jordan and Nicole (Brittany Mountain, Jordan Taylor and Nicole George) pick at their salads and make plans to go shopping before stopping in the girls' bathroom to make themselves throw up.

That bulimia scene is so very "Heathers" — a movie that satirized teen angst and high school terrorism in 1989 — and which today would have really seemed exploitative. "Elephant" doesn't.

COURTESY JEFF VESPA/RTKIMAGE.COM

The cast of "Elephant" portrays high school kids experiencing a tragedy that is all too similar to the one at Columbine High School.

Truly the idiot box

Television hurting education

By Siobhan McDonough
Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) — Children who live in homes where the television is on most of the time may have more trouble learning to read than other kids, a study says.

Tuesday's report, based on a survey of parents, also found that kids 6 months to 6 years spend about two hours a day watching television, playing video games or using computers. That's roughly the same amount of time they spend playing outdoors and three times as long as they spend reading or being read to.

The study, by the Kaiser Family Foundation and Children's Digital Media Centers, found about one-third of children 6 and younger have TVs in their rooms and a similar proportion live in homes where a television is on most or all the time. In those "heavy TV households," 34 percent of children ages 4 to 6 can read, compared with 56 percent in homes where the TV is on less often.

"Watching TV is far inferior to playing with toys, being read to or playing with adults or talking with parents," said Dr. Henry Shapiro, chairman of developmental and behavior pediatrics at the American Academy of Pediatrics. "Watching TV without a parent is a junk experience, especially for young children."

The report found that 27 percent of 4-to-6-year-olds use a computer each day, spending an average of one hour at the keyboard.

Among kids in that age group, the report said half have played video games and one-quarter play several times a week or more. In a typical day, 24 percent of boys played video games compared with 8 percent of girls.

"These kids will have a great advantage in terms of how media can aide their learning, but parents must understand the pitfalls," survey researcher Victoria Rideout said.

Despite the heavy media exposure, the report found that reading continues to be a regular part of many children's lives. Almost 80 percent of those 6 and under read or are read to every day. Still, the report said, children spend only 49 minutes on average with books per day compared with 2 hours and 22 minutes in front of a TV or computer screen.

The report found parents have a largely positive view about TV and computers – 72 percent say computers mostly help in children's learning and 43 percent felt that way about television. Twenty-seven percent said TV mostly hurts kids' learning and 21 percent said it doesn't have much effect one way or another.

Shapiro said it isn't all bad that many kids are sitting in front of TVs, computers and video games. "Kids are home, safe, they are learning things," he said. "This is just part of the process over history of using the new medium and this is giving kids a chance to be competitive in the world."

But, he said, there is a downside – so much time in front of TVs can cause kids to become fat, eat junk foods and not get enough sleep or adult interaction.

Ghost Tour haunts UMass

Have you heard about the woman who was struck by a car on North Pleasant Street in 1923? Students have claimed to see her at night, standing under a certain elm tree, but she vanishes when called. Legend also says that under that same elm tree there is a patch of dead grass that never grows, supposedly the patch of grass where she actually died that cold rainy night.

The history club will hold a ghost tour today at 8 p.m. The haunting tour will start in the lobby of Herter Hall in front of the elevators and last about hour and a half, returning back to Herter Hall. If poor weather occurs, the stories will be told indoors in Herter.

"It will be a good time and enjoyable for ghost enthusiasts and also for skeptics. Come along and maybe you'll see a spirit yourself," says Joe Downs, a member of the history club.

- Christine Papazidis

No matter what your major is... if you're thinking of going to Graduate School now, next year, or even two years from now, you should plan to go to the

ANNUAL FIVE COLLEGE GRADUATE AND PROFESSIONAL SCHOOLS INFORMATION DAY

TODAY!

Attend a "Creating a Personal Statement" Workshop
Make your Grad School Application stand out!
12:30 and 2:30

Wednesday, October 29
11 am - 3 pm
Student Union Ballroom
UMass Amherst

Find out about the GRE, LSAT, GMAT and MCAS tests

Representatives from over 160 schools from across the United States (think CA, FL, TX, Washington DC...) and abroad!

achitecture • theology • business education • medical • dental • law socia work • l brary science • engineering nursing • public health • design • natural sciences nternational relations • political science

CareerServices
Call 413-577-0417 for more information
•
Check out www-ccn.acad.umass.edu for a list of attending schools/departments

Lakers in turmoil

By Ken Peters
Associated Press

EL SEGUNDO, Calif. (AP) — The tension engulfing Kobe Bryant and the Los Angeles Lakers is growing, and the season hasn't even begun.

As the Lakers' "Dream Team" of Bryant, Shaquille O'Neal, Karl Malone and Gary Payton prepared for Tuesday night's opener against Dallas, Bryant indicated he might not play, and again lashed out at O'Neal, calling the center childish and accusing him of coming to training camp "fat and out of shape" in previous years.

"My knee is not strong enough to play yet. I know it. When it is, I will play," Bryant told ESPN by phone Monday. "I probably won't play tomorrow night or until I'm ready."

Bryant, coming back from offseason knee surgery, traded barbs with O'Neal through the media over the weekend. Neither spoke with reporters after practice Monday, although Bryant did speak to the telephone interview with ESPN.

The Lakers weren't so sure Bryant will miss the game.

"Our understanding is that Kobe might not play because of the knee injury," Lakers director of public relations John Black said Monday night. "We think he probably will. That decision will be made tomorrow based on how Kobe is feeling and how his knee feels prior to the game."

Malone and Payton each had said the team's other two superstars were getting along fine during practice Monday. They also said that, during a team meeting, they stressed working out problems in the locker room rather than airing them in the media.

Coach Phil Jackson said after practice that the Lakers needed to tighten up control over what players say to reporters, adding, "We're going to make sure that guys understand that this is something we don't want to have happen."

Bryant still spoke out in the phone interview, saying he didn't need any advice from O'Neal on how to play hurt.

"I've played with iVs before, during and after games. I've played with a broken hand, a sprained ankle, a torn shoulder, a fractured tooth, a severed lip and a knee the size of a softball," he said.

"I don't miss 15 games because of a toe injury that everybody knows wasn't that serious in the first place."

O'Neal was hampered by an arthritic right big toe throughout the 2001-02 season and had surgery on Sept. 11, 2002. He missed the first 12 games of last season — nine of them losses.

Bryant had knee surgery July 1 in Colorado.

He faces trial on a charge of sexual assault that allegedly occurred the night before his operation. He has acknowledged having sex with a 19-year-old resort worker, but claimed it was consensual.

Bryant said he heard nothing supportive — or anything else — from O'Neal over the summer.

He did receive phone calls, Bryant said, from other teammates and team officials, other teams' players and coaches, from Michael Jordan, Tiger Woods, even O'Neal's uncle.

"But yet from my so-called big brother (O'Neal), I heard nothing," Bryant said.

The latest in a series of feuds between the two flared over the weekend when O'Neal said Bryant needs to be more of a team player.

"That's ridiculous. I have been successfully sacrificing my game for years for Shaq," Bryant said Monday. "That's what Phil wanted me to do, so I did it. Last year, Phil told me Shaq was not in physical condition to carry the thrust of our offense, so he asked me to do it.

"But then he saw Shaq was getting upset that the team wasn't running through him, so Phil asked me to pull back and I did. This year is no different. My role is whatever Phil wants It to be, period."

Bryant intends to opt out of his contract after the end of this season, but said he won't decide until then whether he will remain with the Lakers.

"If leaving the Lakers at the end of the season is what I decide, a major reason for that will be Shaq's childlike selfishness and jealousy," he said.

O'Neal has said it's fine with him if Bryant leaves, addling the Lakers are his team.

"It doesn't matter whose team it is. But this is his team, so it's time for him to act like it," Bryant told ESPN. "That means no more coming into camp fat and out of shape, when your team is relying on your leadership on and off the court.

"It also means no more blaming others for our team's failure, or blaming staff members for not over-dramatizing your injuries so that you avoid blame for your lack of conditioning. Also, 'my team' doesn't mean only when we win, it means carrying the burden of defeat just as gracefully as you carry a championship trophy."

O'Neal and Bryant led the Lakers to three straight championships before the team was eliminated by San Antonio in the Western Conference semifinals last May.

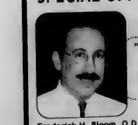
After the Lakers' practice Monday, Bryant was already off the floor when reporters were allowed into the gym. O'Neal grinned and pointed at the large group of writers and broadcasters waiting as he walked into the locker room.

Neither Jackson nor anyone else said anything about a possibility that Bryant might not play against Dallas in the season-opener at Staples Center. He played in exhibition games Thursday and Friday, and practiced the past two days.

EMILIE DELGANO/Collegian

No Bullen
UMass junior forward Oral Bullen scored the game-tying and game-winning goals last weekend against St. Bonaventure. The Minutemen return home to play Temple and St. Joseph's this weekend.

$ 250 to $500 a week
Will train to work at home
Helping the US Government file HUD/FHA mortgage refunds
No experience necessary
Call Toll Free 1-866-537-2906



GREENLEAVES
Greenleaves is a brand new adult 55 plus condo community. Enjoy home ownership without all the hassles; we will even clear your car of snow. Relax in our large community room of enjoy the cozy fireplace. FREE CONDO FEES for 2 years. Call for details. Many styles to choose from. (One 2-bedroom for rent.)
•
23 Greenleaves Drive (Off Rt. 9 across from Chili's)
Phone: (413) 253-1800

www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT
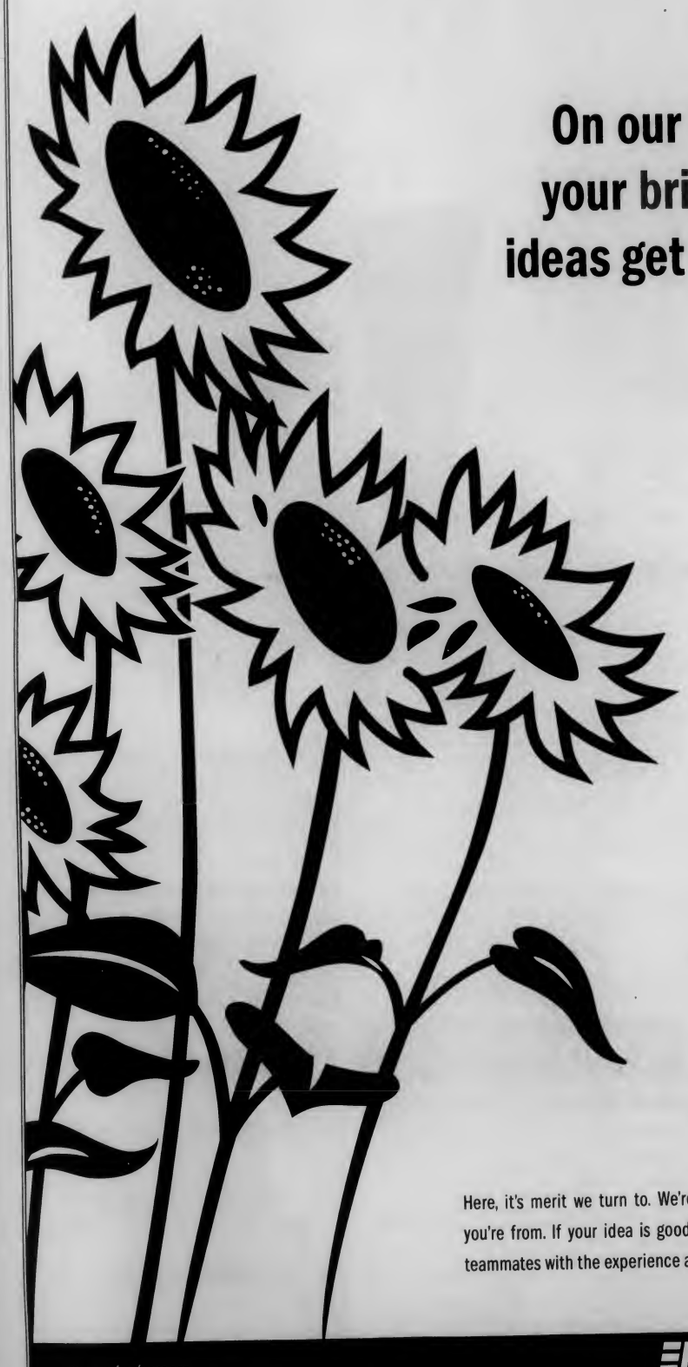
REGISTRATION FOR SPRING 2004
The WRITING PROGRAM PLACEMENT TEST will be offered on:
TUESDAY, OCTOBER 28 @ 7pm in Thompson 102
WENDNESDAY OCTOBER 29 @ 7pm in Bartlett 65
MONDAY, NOVEMBER 3 @ 7pm in Tobin 304
This test is a pre-requisite for enrollment in Enghwrit 112/113. (College Writing)
This test may be taken only once.
Students do not need to register for the test.



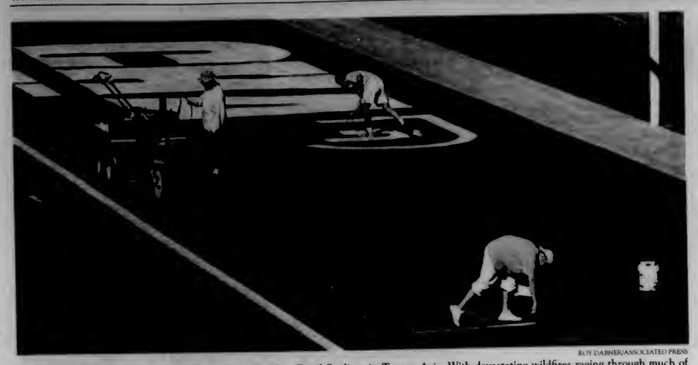
Nick's...for the morning after
63 Main Street, Amherst
Traditional & eclectic breakfast fare, featuring a Southwestern flare, Jewish favorites, & vegan items.
20% STUDENT DISCOUNT
Monday-Friday for the fall 2003 semester
Monday-Friday 6:30am-2pm
Satuday & Sunday 7am-2pm
256-4643
OCMP

$2.49 22oz Boomer mug of beer
The Ground Round
12 Beers on Tap
Golden Tee · Points Bistro · Chicken Fingers · Mozzarella Sticks · 30 Wings
LATE NIGHT APPETIZER SPECIAL
$5.00 8PM-CLOSE 7 DAYS A WEEK!
Thursday 9pm-midnight KARAOKE!
Positive ID Required 21 and older
Smoke, Eat, Drink, and Sing at THE GROUND ROUND!
Hampshire Mall - 582-0017

GREAT Reasons to use UHS Eye Care Services
1 Savings on routine eye exams for students at UMass
2 A great place to get contact lenses
3 FREE sample start-up contact lens solutions
4 Same day replacement of disposable contact lenses, in many cases
5 Contact lenses mailed directly to your home or office
6 FREE eyeglass adjustments and one year warranty on frames
SPECIAL OFFER: 10 PERCENT STUDENT DISCOUNT ON ALL FRAMES AND EYEGLASS LENSES!*

"I invite you to use the Eye Care Services"
* Cannot be combined with other insurance discounts.
For appointments or questions, call 577-5244
Frederick H. Bloom, O.D. Director, UHS Eye Care Services
UHS EYE CARE SERVICES

It's your degree.
Shouldn't it be your research?
At Worcester Polytechnic Institute, our smaller programs mean students collaborate with accomplished faculty to conduct world-class research. And our hands-on approach means you get to lead and author your own research.
To learn more about our programs visit our table at the Five Colleges Graduate and Professional School Information Day on October 29, 2003 from 11:00 a.m. – 3:00 p.m.
Graduate Academic Departments
Biology and Biotechnology
Biomedical Engineering
Chemical Engineering
Chemistry and Biochemistry
Civil and Environmental Engineering
Computer Science
Electrical and Computer Engineering
Fire Protection Engineering
Management
Manufacturing Engineering
Materials Science and Engineering
Mathematical Sciences
Mechanical Engineering
Physics
www.wpi.edu/+GAO
WPI The University of Science and Technology As Life.



On our team, your brightest ideas get noticed.

Here, it's merit we turn to. We're not interested in how old you are or where you're from. If your idea is good, it's good. That's why we'll put you alongside teammates with the experience and knowledge to spot it. It's your time to shine.

ey.com/us/careers

ERNST & YOUNG

Quality In Everything We Do

ROY DABNER/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Workers paint the Chargers logo in an endzone at Sun Devil Stadium in Tempe, Ariz. With devastating wildfires raging through much of San Diego County, the NFL moved Monday night's Chargers-Dolphins game from San Diego to Tempe, Ariz. The Dolphins won, 26-10.

Home away from home unkind to SD

By BOB BAUM
ASSOCIATED PRESS

TEMPE, Ariz. (AP) — With their home stadium being used as an evacuation center and the nearby hills in flames, the San Diego Chargers moved their long-awaited Monday night game 365 miles to the east — and fell flat Brian Griese, in his first start for Miami, completed 20 of 29 passes for 192 yards and three touchdowns and the Dolphins intercepted Drew Brees three times in a 26-10 victory over the Chargers.

Miami	26
San Diego	10

Griese, at least for one night, lived up to the heritage that his last name carries in Miami. He completed his first six passes and was 13-of-14 for 145 yards and three scores as Miami built a 24-3 halftime lead.

Patrick Surtain had two interceptions, setting up Miami's first touchdown with the first and stopping a San Diego scoring threat with the second.

Less than 24 hours before kickoff, NFL commissioner Paul Tagliabue decided to move the game to Sun Devil Stadium because of the deadly wildfires that have devastated the San Diego area.

Admission was free, and the place was rocking and rowdy. There was no official crowd count, but all 73,014 tickets were distributed. Five Arizona Cardinals players helped collect donations for the San Diego Fire Relief Fund at the stadium entrance.

The game, San Diego's first on Monday night since 1996, was supposed to be the celebrated return of Junior Seau, who was the heart and soul of the Chargers for 13 seasons before he was traded to Miami before this season. But the return to Qualcomm Stadium never happened.

Instead, Seau had to be content with a dominant performance by the Dolphins' defense, and a magnificent night for Griese.

Griese signed a free agent by the Dolphins after five seasons in Denver — four as a starter. He knew he would be a backup for a franchise that his father Bob led to two Super Bowl championships. They are the first father and son to play quarterback for the same NFL team.

He got the start because of Fiedler's sprained knee ligament. Fiedler was in uniform for the game, but there was no need for him to try to play.

Surtain intercepted Brees' first pass, on the game's third play, and returned it 32 yards to the San Diego 6. Two plays later, Griese's first pass as a Miami starter went 5 yards to Chris Chambers for a touchdown.

On the Chargers' next possession, Brees' pass bounced off the hands of LaDanian Tomlinson and was picked off by Zach Thomas, who returned it 19 yards to set up Olindo Mare's 44-yard field goal that made it 10-0 barely 6 1/2 minutes into the game.

After Steve Christie's 51-yard field goal cut the lead to 10-3, the Dolphins went 65 yards in 10 plays, Griese passing 2 yards to James McKnight for the score with 13:28 left in the first half.

San Diego drove from its 30 to the Miami 9 later in the second quarter, but on third-and-6, Surtain stepped in front of David Boston to intercept Brees' pass in the end zone.

The Dolphins promptly went 80 yards in just six plays. Griese threw 7 yards to Randy McMichael in the right corner of the end zone and it was 24-3 with 1:55 to play.

Miami handed San Diego its lone touchdown when Ricky Williams fumbled and Quentin Jammer recovered for the Chargers at the Dolphins' 1. Three plays later, Tomlinson scored to cut the lead to 24-10 with 12:21 to play.

Brees' awful night got worse when he was thrown down in the end zone by Rob Burnett. Brees fumbled, and the Chargers' Damion McIntosh recovered for a safety with 8:06 to play.

The Chargers drove inside the Miami 10 three times and came away with nothing. Boston, who played his first three seasons for Arizona, was booed roundly every time he made a play.

Tomlinson gained 62 yards on 24 carries and caught 11 passes for 80 yards.

Immediately after Arizona beat San Francisco 16-13 in overtime on Sunday, crews erased the "Cardinals" from both end zones and replaced them with "Chargers," complete with the lightning bolt logo.

Only a handful of NFL games have been moved or rescheduled because of natural disasters. The San Francisco 49ers shifted their game against the Patriots to Stanford Stadium after the earthquake of 1989.

Guenther shines

Continued from page 12

win and a tie this week to the tune of 59 saves and earning Hockey East Player of the Week honors.

Guenther stopped 35 Northeastern shots on Friday night, 19 in the third period, en route to a 4-2 Merrimack win, and followed that up with a 24-save shutout that preserved a scoreless tie at home against Providence, upping its record to 6-1-1 against the Friars in the Chris Serino era.

FINALLY FRIED

Providence got a 26-save performance from junior David Cacciola in Hockey East's first scoreless tie of the season. The netminder earned Hockey East Player of the Week honors, stopping 49 of 50 shots on the weekend. He made 23-of-24 saves filling in for starter Bobby Goepfert in a 6-4 loss to Boston University, PC's first blemish of the season. Goepfert allowed four goals on just 13 shots in the contest, as BU got a win in its first conference action of the year.

The Terriers got goals from five different players in the victory, two from sophomore defenseman Dan Spang, to place themselves in a three-way tie for second place in the conference, knotted with UMass and UNH one point behind Merrimack, which has two games in hand over each team.

TALK ABOUT SHORTHANDED

UNH coach Dick Umile knew what he was doing when he suspended eight players for this weekend's contests in the Punch Imlach College Hockey Showcase, due to their being bystanders at a downtown riot in Durham following a Red Sox victory. Unfortunately, Umile's determined act led partially to the No. 1 Wildcats dropping a 5-2 decision to Niagara on Saturday night.

The eight players included seniors Nathan Martz and Tyler Scott and junior Tyson Teplitsky, all key players for the Wildcats. Junior Barrett Eghoetz scored a hat trick for the Purple Eagles, who repeated history in mirroring their 4-1 victory over UNH from the first round of the 2000 NCAA tournament.

Rejuvenate

WITH OUR FALL $PECIAL

Restore the fullness and shine and replenish the moisture to your hair with our patented Color Touch conditioning treatment...that lasts four to six weeks...a $50 value

~ AND ~

Sooth your dry hands with our Citrus & Aloe Paraffin treatment...a $20 value

ALL FOR ONLY $30 a $70 value

including FREE all-nutrient hand & body lotion!

PATRICK & Company

Open Tues. thru Fri., 9:30-7:00
Sat., 9:30-4:30

102 Russell St., Rte. 9, Hadley • 586-7477

We are Rensselaer

Five College Graduate and Professional School Information Day

Wednesday, October 29, 2003
11 a.m. – 3 p.m.
Student Union Ballroom

36 Undergraduate Degrees
61 Master's Degrees
40 Doctoral Degrees
Professional Programs
Education for Working Professionals
You can find us in Troy, NY, and Hartford, CT.

Contact us for more information:
Graduate Admissions
Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute admissions@rpi.edu
http://gradadmissions.rpi.edu
(518) 276-6216

- ARCHITECTURE
- ENGINEERING
- HUMANITIES AND SOCIAL SCIENCES
- INFORMATION TECHNOLOGY
- MANAGEMENT AND TECHNOLOGY
- SCIENCE

Rensselaer

L.A. offense unstoppable

Courtesy Lakers.com

Kobe Bryant and the Lakers exhibit one of the most potent offense forces in the NBA.

Zach Oelschlegel

There is always debate in the NBA over who will win the championship, who will be MVP and who will become the toast of the league. Where there shouldn't be debate this year, however, is who will be the best offensive team in the league.

Three years ago, Sports Illustrated tagged the Sacramento Kings as the team most fun to watch because of their high-octane offense. Two years ago the Nets came out of nowhere with their Princeton offense as Jason Kidd led the team to the Finals.

Last year, Dirk Nowitzki, Steve Nash and the Mavericks dazzled the league with an eye-popping 103.0 points per game average. This year, however, one should look no further than the Lakers when it comes to putting up outrageous scoring figures.

Lakers GM Mitch Kupchak pulled out quite the coup this summer when he signed perennial all-stars Gary Payton and Karl Malone, adding to what was already a dominating cast with Shaq and Kobe running the show. Now he's assembled what should amount to the most stacked team in history, and the 1995-1996 Bulls winning record of 72 wins is no longer safe. Here's why.

Shaq is still the most dominating player to ever play the game. Never before has a player commanded the attention of so many double and triple teams. Now, with Payton and Malone out on the floor, an opponent's defense must be outstanding in order to have any chance of stopping the big man. It doesn't hurt that Shaq excels at passing out of the double team as well as any center. With two more big options, look for his assist total to increase this year.

Other than during the 2001 playoffs when the Lakers beat the Sixers for the championship, Derek Fisher was nothing special running the team, and his meager 3.6 assists per game show this. Gary Payton, who accumulated 8.3 assists per game last year while playing for the mediocre Sonics and Bucks, surely will add to the Lakers' offensive production.

With one of the best in the business running the show, expect the other three to flourish. Another attribute Payton brings to the team is his tenacious defense, which should free up Kobe Bryant to focus more on his offensive duties as opposed to shadowing the opposing team's best player. It also nice that "The Glove" averaged 20 points a game last year.

His legal troubles aside, Kobe is still the best all-around player in the league. No one can put up the combination of scoring and defensive presence Bryant brings to the game. Once again, with that amazing cast around him, he won't feel the pressure to kill himself carrying the team as he did last year, and still will be the phenomenal player we all saw take over the league last season.

Karl Malone wants a championship. He's been to the Finals twice and had MJ deny him both times. Questions about his apparent thirst for the scoring record should subside because if he wanted it that badly he would've resigned with the Jazz last summer as opposed to taking the veteran's minimum to play with L.A. Look for everyone to take a bit of a backseat this year in the name of teamwork.

Of course, there's no guarantee the team will be as big of a juggernaut as many are predicting. What is the best team on paper is also the team with the most distractions, which is the biggest pitfall coach Phil Jackson needs to address.

Obviously, the Kobe Bryant mess can disrupt this team for the next two years, and can even take him away altogether. Gary Payton can turn into a team cancer if he's not happy, and Karl Malone might still have hopes for that scoring title. However, if anybody can take this team to the top, it's Jackson.

If the Lakers do falter, look for the usual suspects to put up the massive scoring figures. The Kings fortified themselves even more this summer with the signing of all-star Brad Miller, and can be especially dangerous if Mike Bibby puts up numbers like he did in the 2002 conference finals.

The Mavs went out and acquired Antawn Jamison for the steep price of Nick van Exel, although his importance to the team is lessened with the presence of Steve Nash. Don't count out the Timberwolves, who put together a fab four of their own this summer and look to be a force in the West with a lineup that includes Wally Szczerbiak, Sam Cassell, Latrell Sprewell and the ever-incredible Kevin Garnett.

Zach Oelschlegel is a Collegian Columnist.

Marlins are more than just a fish tale

Bob McGovern

Legitimacy is one of the hardest things to achieve as an athletic franchise.

Six years after the Florida Marlins bought their first World Series, they brought it home again. This time it's legitimate.

Sure, the Cubs would have been a great, storied team to have in the series. It would have been amazing to see the most cursed franchise in sports go up against Yankee Nation, but what about the Fish? What about the team that has one of the smallest payrolls in the majors? What about the team that took just enough risks to emerge as the best team in baseball?

The Marlins have gone through a rebuilding period, which saw the worst side of baseball business, and bounced back into the national spotlight.

After the Marlins won the 1997 World Series against Cleveland, owner Wayne Huizenga made one of the most disgraceful moves in recent baseball history. He didn't even let the champagne go flat when he sold the bulk of the Marlins' talent.

This fiasco led to a gradual rebuilding period, which caused a forming fan base to lose its foundation. The energy was sucked out of the baseball crowd in South Florida, and fans were left as empty as Pro Player Stadium when summer came around.

With this, the Marlins were scoffed at by opposing fans and dubbed as a worthless franchise, dwindling on the brink of contraction.

Players like Mike Lowell, Luis Castillo and Josh Beckett have been in Southern Florida on all of those rainy summer nights, playing in front of less than 20,000 in a 70,000-seat stadium built for the fan-favorite Miami Dolphins.

In the years that followed, the Marlins would let go of their veteran talent and replace them with "prospects" and "players to be named later." The Fish didn't make a blockbuster signing until New York art dealer Jeffrey Loria bought the franchise and opened up his wallet.

Coming into this season the Marlins picked up Ivan (Pudge) Rodriguez as a headliner free agent and traded Preston Wilson to the Rockies for Juan Pierre in a trade that had Marlins fans saying, "Here we go again."

Just when fans were getting excited with the fact that the Marlins actually had a veritable all-star in Pudge, A.J. Burnett went down and with him went the team's expectations.

After losing their ace in Burnett, the Marlins were looking toward another disappointing season. This was before Dontrelle Willis brought his crazy-legs windup to the mound.

Willis was put into a starting role in a rotation consisting of a lot of soldiers, but not enough generals.

Beckett had been suffering from blisters on his throwing hand, damaging his velocity and overall value. Mark Redman was a wild card coming off of his worst statistical season with the Tigers. Brad Penny and recently acquired Carl Pavano were given starting roles, whereas anywhere else they would be reserved for relief jobs.

As the season started, the Marlins looked as pitiful as they do every year. Coach Jeff Torborg was at a loss with what to do with his young, speedy team and the Marlins started sinking into the deep end of the NL East.

Then came Trader Jack.

Jack McKeon, the 72-year-old journeyman manager was hired to fix what Torborg obviously broke. McKeon took one good look at his team, and from that point there was no turning back.

The Fish possessed one of the most balanced lineups in the majors. With hands down the fastest team in the game, courtesy of Juan Pierre, Luis Castillo and Derrek Lee, the Marlins began chipping away at the elusive Wild Card spot.

The journey to the series was long and dramatic for the Marlins, who basically had to go through four teams in order to attain the ring.

The Fish had to thwart Thome and the Phillies in one of the tightest Wild Card races in recent history. After this they had a date with the defending National League champions, the San Francisco Giants and all-everything Barry Bonds.

After sending the Giants home, the Marlins were left with Sammy Sosa and the storybook Cubs. From behind heroics, it was a series to remember.

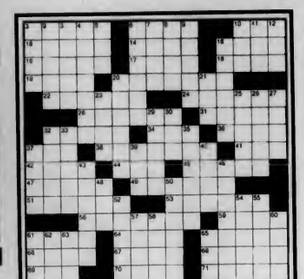
Then it happened.

Josh Beckett, World Series MVP, pitched one of the best games in World Series history, shutting out and shutting down the Yankees.

Sure it was a long road, especially for a fan longing for a respectable season. Now that it's all said and done the Marlins are world champions, and no I didn't stutter.

So when next season comes and the rain sets in over Pro Player, the Marlins will be there, and this time the fans will too.

Bob McGovern is a Collegian columnist.



Today's Crossword Puzzle

THE HARP
Irish Pub
413-548-6900 www.theharp.net
163 Sunderland Rd. - N. Amherst
Just north of the apartments
Great new deck!
WED. • Reggae Night Dance Party
THU. • Special Blue Halloween Party! Prizes, etc.
FRI. • Open Irish Seisiun
SAT. • Dan Kaplan Band
October Special!
Labatt Blue:
$1.75 A pint / $6.25 A pitcher
"Start your own tradition."

Dining Commons Menu

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

Lunch
- Meat Lasagna
- Chicken Nuggets
- Sweet Potato Quesadilla (vegan)

Dinner
- Roast Turkey
- Fried Scallops
- Thai Seitan (vegan)

Daily Weather Forecast

For Amherst

Wednesday
- High: 58
- Low: 36

Thursday
- High: 61
- Low: 40

Friday
- High: 65
- Low: 45

Production Crew

On staff today

Night Editor
Matt Brady

Photo Technician
Emilie Duggan

Copy Editor
Morris Singer

Production Supervisor
Shannon Farrington

Production Staff
Lindsay Clark/ Gerry Auger

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Stop strutting and start moonwalking.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Don't stare at the wall; it isn't polite.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Smile at them, what could it hurt?

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Go, Go, GO!

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
No, you are not going bald.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Sing in the shower. It will make you cleaner.

leo • Jul., 23-Aug. 22
Don't hide your skills.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Call your parents.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Stop biting your nails.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Reach out and help someone.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Make sure to press "save" this time.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Don't be a squishy noodle.

Quote for the Day

"You can't let one bad moment spoil a bunch of good ones."

-Dale Earnhardt

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Announcements

X Productions and Mission 101 Entertainment present . . . Ladies Night at ATLANTIS 18+ All Ladies get FREE admission before 11pm EVERY Wednesday night DJ FreddyFresh on the turntables Atlantis is located behind Antonios Pizza in Amherst Center

Fraternities- Sororities- Clubs- Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with a proven CampusFundraiser 3 hour fundraising event. Our free programs make fundraising easy with no risks. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so get with the program! It works. Contact CampusFundraiser at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

Auto for Sale

1999 Explorer XLT 4x4 Excellent Condition Sunroof 6cyl. Loaded $12,500 Call 546-3477

Suzuki Sidekick SUV, Manual, 1996, good condition, 3800/bo. 577-1532/ 549-9182, www.taylanyildiz.com/suzuki

1991 Toyota Camry Wagon, AC/Power 117,000 miles, reliable. $2500 549-4060

1992 Honda Prelude SI, Loaded, $3900 587-0242

$500!!! Cars from $500!!! Police Impounds for listings. 1-800-319-3323 ext4554

93 Pontiac Bonneville SDN All Power Must Sell $1500 B/O 253-5537

Employment

Landscaping Services: Part-time positions available for fall clean-up and snow work. Need to be ambitious, hardworking, own transportation, and flexible hours. Call Steve at 413-665-3493

Earn 10K+/month potential from home Training provided Free info. 800-896-9413

Movie Extras/Models Needed For local Casting Calls No exp. or age required EARN up to $200 a day 1-888-820-0167

Telephone Interviewers NO SALES! Conduct interviews over the phone at our Hadley location Flexible Evening and Weekend Hours $7.50/hour to start 20+ hours/week PVTA accessible For more info: 1-888-423-5381 FMI

Employment

Bartender Positions Make up to $300/shift No experience required. Great College Job 1-800-806-0084 ext. 1525

Motivated students seeking leadership outside the box. Gain experience in all aspects of running a small business Call 508-246-1230

Visa/Mastercard approval agents earn $1,000/week potential. No experience necessary. Call 1-800-821-3416 ext.145

Sales Assistant for consulting/software firm. Telephone telemarketing. Economics a plus. Please send cover letter and resume to Frederick Treyz at Regional Economic Models, Inc., 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002 or fax 413-549-1038 or email resumes@remi.com.

Employment

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

!Bartending!$ $250/day potential No experience Nesc Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext 162

For Rent

Ski House for Rent So. Londonberry, VT: 15 mins to Stratton, 7 mi. to Bromley 3 mi. to Magic Mtn. 7 Bdrms, 3 Baths, sleeps 30- $1000/week. katy.browne@verizon.net or 410-404-6326

Instruction

University Bartending Classes Start Soon 1-800-U-CAN-MIX Call now for information!!! Space is Limited www.universitybartending.com

Lost

Lost: Wallet Near Parking garage 10/14 If found please call with description 413-237-1015

Services

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

All Digital Productions Pro Videography for Weddings, Bar Mitzvahs, Commercial (508) 221-8223 sweeppicker@yahoo.com

SHEAR BLISS DAY SPA SERVICES Body Sugaring (waxing) for men and women *Safe *100% Natural *Effective 253-2322 https//shearbliss.image411.com

Services

Pet-Sitter available days nights & weekends. Dog walking. 9 years experience. Call Gina 253-0619

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

Travel

#1 Spring Break Vacations! 110% Best Prices! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, Florida, Acapulco. Book Now & Receive Free Parties & Meals Campus Reps Wanted! 800-234-7007 endlesssummertours.com

SPRING BREAK 2004! Beach Life Vacations! Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas, Florida. Sell Trips, Earn Cash, Travel Free!! Call 1-800-733-6347 www.beachlifevacations.com

Travel

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Destinations, including Cruises! Foam Parties, Free Drinks and Club Admissions. Rep Positions and FREE trips Available. 1-800-231-4386 www.EpicureanTours.com

A "Reality" Spring Break 2004's Hottest Prices Book now .. Free Trips, Meals & Parties www.sunsplashtours.com or 1800-426-7710

Tutors

Math/Physics Tutor $30/Hr plus travel Call Dr. Kline 413-552-3805

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace wants your classified ad! Come to the Campus Center Basement or call 545-3500!

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 29, 2003 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Werner makes USA Juniors

Four from HE named

By MATT BRADY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts hockey team's first U.S. National Development Team product. The first Minuteman to be a unanimous selection to the Hockey East Rookie team. And now, Stephen Werner has become the first UMass hockey player to be selected for the World Junior Championships in 2004.

Werner is one of 16 players named to the preliminary roster for the United States to compete in the tournament, which will take place Dec. 26, 2003-Jan. 5, 2004 in Helsinki and Hameenlinna, Finland. Werner is one of four Hockey East players to be among those initially selected to the team, joining Boston College forward Patrick Eaves and a pair of Black Bears – forward Greg Moore and goaltender Jimmy Howard.

"We are obviously very excited for Stephen and our hockey program, in general, that he was named to the squad," UMass Coach Don Cahoon said in a press release. "USA Hockey knows the kind of player they are getting, and he has proven himself in not only collegiate hockey, but also in international competition. All parties are obviously very excited about this honor."

Team USA will release the final six players on the 22-man roster on Dec. 2.

JOE WHO?

With the departure of superstar goaltender and team MVP Joe Exter, Merrimack knew it would be in a pickle with inexperienced Casey Guenther its leading returner between the pipes. But Guenther silenced his critics this week, leading the Warriors to a

Continued on page 9

GERALD H. LIN/COLLEGIAN

Stephen Werner and the Minutemen will play a two-game home-and-home set this weekend against the Providence Friars. Game 1 is a 7 p.m. matchup at the Mullins Center on Friday, followed by a trip to Schneider Arena the next night.

James earns nat'l award

By MIKE MARZELLI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The hero in Massachusetts' 19-14 win over then-No. 2 Villanova, sophomore defensive back Shannon James was named National Defensive Player of the Week on Monday by The Sports Network and ESPN/USA Today.

In addition to returning Wildcat quarterback Marvin Burroughs's fumble 39 yards for the game-winning touchdown with just 2:08 remaining, the Stratford, Conn. native also contributed eight solo tackles and intercepted his second pass of the season, returning it 30 yards. His 55 unassisted tackles on the season are a team-high.

The fourth-ranked Minutemen held the Wildcats to a season-low 14 points in winning at Villanova for the first time since 1962.

THE RISE AND THE FALL

With its loss to UMass, Villanova fell five spots to No. 7 in The Sports Network Division I-AA poll, while the Minutemen rose just one spot to No. 4.

Delaware, which downed Division 1 Navy 21-17 for its first win over a D-I program since it bested the Midshipmen in 1992, was the beneficiary of the 'Cats plight, as it rose one spot to No. 2.

The Blue Hens are now 8-0 overall — their first 8-0 start since 2000 — and are tied with UMass atop the Atlantic 10 standings at 5-0.

RECORD BREAKING RECEIVERS

Following Jimmie Howard's 97-yard touchdown reception from Jeff Krohn Saturday at Villanova, which established a new conference record for longest play from scrimmage and a new school record for longest touchdown pass, William & Mary All-American Rich Musinski is set to become the second receiver in as many weeks to make A-10 history.

The West Pittston, Pa. native enters play this weekend just 14 receiving yards shy of becoming the conference's all-time leader. The record is currently held by former Rhode Island standout Brian Forster, who recorded 3,944 yards for the Rams from 1983-1987.

Musinski, who was named A-10 Offensive Player of the Week for, surprisingly, just the first time in his career, caught a career-best 13 passes for 191 yards in the Tribe's 37-24 victory at Rhode Island on Saturday. It was the 20th time the senior has topped the 100-yard receiving mark, as he moved ahead of former Villanova standout and current Atlanta Falcon Brian Finneran into second place in A-10 history in receiving yards.

Musinski is now ninth in league history and tops in school history in receptions with 209, and is also tied for eighth in the A-10 record books in touchdown receptions with 30 after catching two against the Rams.

BRIGHT SPOT

While Rhode Island continues to struggle through another tough season toward the bottom of the A-10, the Rams do have a silver lining in the play of their special teams.

Just three weeks after placekicker/punter Shane Laisle was named both A-10 and ESPN/USA Today National Special Teams Player of the Week, URI again saw a member of its teams unit honored by the conference.

Senior kick returner Wendall Williams returned a kick 93 yards for a score at William & Mary on Saturday, and totaled 114 yards overall on returns in being named PCTW for the second time this season.

The 93-yard return was the first kick return for a touchdown by a Ram player since 1991, when Chris Pierce returned one 96 yards versus Northeastern.

ALL IN THE FAMILY

If Delaware linebacker John Mulhern's surname sounds familiar, it should.

Mulhern, a sophomore, is the younger brother of former Blue Hen standouts Pat and Dan Mulhern, and is making a run at becoming the third player in family history to receive All-Conference honors.

Pat, a two-time All-Conference selection in 1993 and 1994, ranks seventh in UD history in tackles (338), and his 50 games played are the second-highest total in school history.

Notebook

GERALD H. LIN/COLLEGIAN

Patricia Borneo and the Minutewomen take on the Big Green of Dartmouth today at 5 p.m. The Maroon and White will play its final game of the season against URI Saturday at noon.

Pride on the line against Dartmouth

By BRENDAN HALL
COLLEGIAN STAFF

There will be nothing to lose for the Massachusetts field hockey team (3-14, 1-4 A-10) as it prepares for its last non-conference match against Dartmouth (3-10, 1-4 Ivy League), this evening at 5 p.m. at Garber Field.

For the first time since they joined the conference in 1988, the Minutewomen failed to qualify for the A-10 tournament.

"It's the worst feeling in the world," coach Patty Shea said. "No coach ever wants to be [in this situation], no team ever wants to be [in this situation]. The critical thing is we learn from what we're feeling right now. ... We have to learn to hate this feeling."

On a brighter note, senior back/midfielder Kristin Hopwood has been selected as an alternate for the NFHCA Division 1 North/South Senior All-Star Game. Through 17 games this season, she has tallied one assist with three shots. The game will be held Nov. 22 at Garber Field.

"[Kristin] is a true team player. She will do whatever we ask her to do. She's a coach's dream," Shea said.

Hopwood will be joined in the backfield by freshman Kwylan Jaggassar, sophomore Katelyn Woolfrey and sophomore Jaime Bawden. Bawden currently leads the team with three goals and one assist for seven points.

The pressure will be on the defense, which is allowing an average of 18 shots per game. They will be facing a Big Green squad that has scored 15 goals over their last three games.

Dartmouth has an answer to Hopwood in senior back Rebekka Stucker, who was also named an alternate in the same senior all-star game. Stucker not only overwhelms Hopwood in the stat columns, but also leads the team with nine goals and one assist for 19 points. Seven of those goals have come over the last three games, including a hat trick in Saturday's 7-2 thumping of Columbia.

Leading the recent offensive explosion alongside Stucker will be freshman Audrey Knutsen, senior Lauren Talbot and junior Ashley Choren. Combined, the trio has scored enough goals (nine) to match Stucker's season total.

The Big Green have been able to keep things close all season long, having lost seven decisions by only one goal, thanks to the defense. Through the 2003 season, Dartmouth is allowing just 10 shots per game, which has made the goalie's job that much easier. They will be led by junior Lexie Otto, sophomore Jessica Saraceno and senior Averill Doering.

Goaltender Christine Tocco has shouldered the load all season for the Maroon and White, but last weekend she finally got some backup. The Minutewomen added two goalies from the women's lacrosse team to their roster last weekend, sophomore Joey Rubin and senior Kelli Kurtz. Rubin stepped in net for Tocco last Saturday while Tocco attended a wedding.

Despite not having any experience at the collegiate level, Rubin stopped four shots while allowing one in the loss. Tocco was back in net Sunday against LaSalle, stopping nine shots and letting up two.

"Christine's been our starter, that's not going to change," Shea said.

Tocco will be up against Big Green goaltender Lauren Balukjian in another goalie's duel. Her 56 saves place her fifth in the Ivy League, her 2.42 goals against average ranks second-worst in the conference and she currently holds a save percentage of .637.

The Daily Collegian

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 30, 2003 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 41

SGA Diversity Roundtable offers safe space for dialogue

By FERRON SALNIKER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Over 50 faculty members, students and members of the University of Massachusetts community gathered yesterday afternoon to discuss recent issues regarding diversity for the first Student Government Association Diversity Roundtable of the year.

Organized by the Secretary of Diversity Issues, Russell Plato, the meeting was designed to create a space for dialogue on how to make the UMass campus a more inclusive community.

"This is space for anyone on this campus who wants to talk about diversity issues," began Plato. "We want to make it so that we know each others names and faces."

Carla Moy, Secretary of Registry and Lisa Jollimore, Secretary of Administrative Affairs were also present to administer the discussion.

Participants included faculty members from many departments including the pre-major services, the Isenberg School of Management, Health Services and Student Legal Services. Mary O' Conner, coordinator of the English as a Second Language program and Linda Slakey, Dean of Commonwealth College were also present. In addition, Nelson Acosta, director of the Office of ALANA Affairs, was present as well as representatives from the African Student Association, the Pride Alliance and the Office of Jewish Affairs. SGA President, David Carr among other senators, was also at the roundtable.

Before taking comments from the group, Plato introduced the idea of a Safe Space Agreement. "These can be sensitive issues," he said. "This should be an environment where everyone feels comfortable." Participants threw out concepts to keep in mind during the discussion such as respect, listening, openness and sensitivity.

The group began by composing a list identifying issues on campus that relate to diversity. The first issue mentioned was the recent Supreme Court ruling regarding admissions policies on race following a lawsuit at the University of Michigan. Administrators at UMass and across the nation are dealing with the aftermath of the ruling and have begun to establish changes regarding affirmative action in admissions procedures.

The list continued on, changes occurring on campus because of budgetary struggles like the shrinkage of the English as a Second Language program, the dismantling of academic support programs and the effect of the rising cost of tuition on low-income students, were mentioned. Other issues such as the establishment of gender-neutral bathrooms and solving the problem of violence on campus were touched on as well. Participants commented on the declining minority enrollment rate at UMass and the lack of understanding diversity in various departments on campus.

Still, one participant commented on the increasing number of out-of-state and international students on campus.

After a list was composed, the group broke into six subsets. Some

Continued on page 2

GERALD H. LIN/COLLEGIAN

Russell Plato, Secretary of Diversity Issues, facilitated the first SGA Diversity Roundtable held yesterday afternoon in the Campus Center.

BRENDAN O'MEARA/COLLEGIAN

Representatives from across the country inform students on their future options during the Annual Graduate and Professional Schools Information Day held yesterday in the Student Union Ballroom.

Career Services Office hosts graduate school information day

Over 150 graduate and professional schools were represented at the Annual Graduate and Professional Schools Information Day, hosted by the Career Services Office, held yesterday afternoon in the Student Union Ballroom at the University of Massachusetts.

Students were greeted at the door and given a booklet comprised of school listings and information. School representatives from across the nation and from different areas of graduate studies offered information regarding application and enrollment. Hundreds of students walked the aisles, stopping at different tables to speak about their future education plans.

Both students and school representatives saw the fair as a great opportunity to make the initial steps toward graduate school enrollment.

"A lot of times students know about the different schools, but this is a time for us to make that initial face-to-face contact," said Bob Bochnak, a representative for Tufts University graduate school. "They can get the materials from us about each specific school or department personally, as opposed to looking on the web or getting it via mail. I think it's really great as a first step to make those connections."

The information available about different graduate school options provided students to explore a wide spectrum of choices and career paths.

"I definitely want to go to graduate school," said David Clarkson, a UMass senior. "It's a matter of where I want to go and what I want to study. Here I have so much to choose from ... it opens up new options."

Students addressed specific concerns to the representatives; many agreed that it saved time in the application process.

"I have all this [information]. I don't have to write to every single person," said Pierrette Neh Ntsang, a UMass student. "They [can] answer certain questions that you really want to know, instead of flipping through the whole book to find it. It's a good program, I'm glad they did it."

Graduate school representatives used the fair as a chance to meet prospective students and help with decisions regarding continuing education.

"I spoke to a few students who've already started their application process, that have follow up questions," said a representative for the Columbia University School of Social Work. "It's helpful for them and it's certainly helpful for us, too. This is [a fair] we always plan on attending."

-Nicole Lewis

Collier speaks on anthrax toxin

By GABRIEL LEINER
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

After years of study on the anthrax toxin, Dr. R. John Collier, a researcher at Harvard Medical School, and his colleagues have found a way to prevent anthrax from contaminating human cells. The Maude and Lillian Presley professor of microbiology and molecular genetics spoke yesterday to an audience at the University of Massachusetts.

Collier has identified an area in domain two of the anthrax toxin, one of the four domains in which the toxin is biologically broken down, that can be mutated and used to inhibit anthrax from polluting the bloodstream.

When anthrax enters the body, it seeks to latch on to a cell by a method that Collier says is a "cleverly designed recognition process." Once anthrax attaches to a cell, it forms a cylindrical tube and diffuses its toxin into the cell. The solution to fighting anthrax, as Collier has found, lies in disrupting this chemical self-assembly of the anthrax molecule.

"Once the toxin is fully assembled, it injects proteins into the cell; that's the established picture we have of how it works," said Collier. "Now we can find ways so defeat this toxin. We had discovered a loop in domain two, which we predicted might be involved in pore formation. It turned out we were correct."

Collier began to examine domain two. His conclusion, that the cylindrical shape made anthrax is created when different parts of the molecule recognize each other and interlock, was vital in creating a vaccine.

"This new information gave us a method using what we call a dominant negative inhibitor, or DNI. The DNI, which is a mutated form of part of domain two of the anthrax toxin, prohibits formation of a pore from pre-pore such that the toxin cannot be plunged into the attacked cell," he said. Essentially the DNI does not allow the anthrax molecule to interlock, even after it has latched on to a cell.

"The spore of anthrax proceeds normally, but then because of the DNI, it prohibits any threat of lethal elements being expelled. You've blocked the process," Collier said. Tests on laboratory rats using Collier's vaccine have eliminated anthrax fatalities. Collier explained that during tests of his vaccine, "we inserted the anthrax toxin with and without the DNI into the animals and in rats with the mutated type of molecule we had blocked toxicity almost completely. This says that the DNI worked to form."

Collier believes that his method of stopping anthrax from attacking the body is more effective than others because, "It also induces the body to form antitoxic antibodies," he said. But Collier did not discount other viable methods of inhibiting anthrax, such as the engineering of human antibodies and using certain viruses to attack the anthrax bacteria.

Currently Collier's main concern about anthrax is that the gov-

Continued on page 3

EDITORIAL/OPINION PAGE 4
VOTING WHAT'S STOPPING AGES 18-24?
ARTS & LIVING PAGE 6
SPOOKY HAUNTING FLICKS FOR THE HOLIDAY
SPORTS PAGE 12
REVENGE NO. 4 UM TAKES ON NORTHEASTERN
COMICS/CLASSIFIEDS PAGE 11

SGA rejects diversity proposal

By ED HUDSON
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A motion to create a select committee with the goal of forming an action plan for the ensuring of diversity in all governmental bodies within the Student Government Association was voted down by a majority of the SGA Senate last night. The lack of undergraduate representation on the University of Massachusetts' Presidential Search Committee and the need for a Judicial Advisors program were among the other issues addressed at the meeting.

The motion to create the select committee regarding diversity issues, which failed by a vote of 23 to 17, was supported by Speaker of the Senate, Jared Nokes, who would appoint the committees' members. Nokes does not believe the SGA bylaws provide enough support for diversity in the governmental bodies representing the student body. According to him, the former diversity committee dissolved last year and their duties were delegated among the existing committees within the SGA.

Nokes said he has never seen a standing committee attempt to put together any type of action plan for the two years he has been involved with the SGA. "I think we owe it to our constituents to make an effort," he said. "We have never gotten an action plan for creating diversity." Nokes said his idea was to form a committee with the ability to create an action plan for the ensuring of diversity within the student government as a whole, not just the Senate. Nokes said the committee would have been a much more inclusive and all-encompassing body.

Nokes said he didn't believe he is educated enough regarding the issues to make decisions on his own and felt the committee was ultimately necessary for the SGA. "I'm not qualified to do it alone ... I'm just one person," he said. "You try to find people who can have those answers."

Many members spoke out against the creation of a separate committee.

"This is a really bad idea," said Russell Plato, Secretary of Diversity Issues. "You're marginalizing the issue of diversity."

Plato believes the SGA should be integrating the concerns for diversity within the existing committees. "We already know what we need to do," he said. "If we're doing our jobs ... then we don't need that committee in the first place."

Plato said he was concerned with Nokes' ideological perspective. "You should be setting the agenda," he declared to the Senate. "He doesn't even know what [diversity] is," he added, referring to Nokes. "I've seen the way he's treated the issues in the past." Plato said everything the SGA does is already related to diversity.

However, Nokes said he would appoint all members who were interested in being a part of the committee and leave it up to the Senate to remove them.

"There's no harm in creating the committee," he added.

Everyone should still stay an extra hour in their standing committee and talk about it [diversity]."

Many members of the Senate eventually concluded that the ALANA caucus was fully capable of making decisions regarding an action plan for ensuring diversity.

Continued on page 2

Northeast Area Governor Bill Stetson addresses the SGA about residential events during last nights meeting.

UMass community discusses admissions policy

Continued from page 1

further addressed the issues previously listed; others discussed the concepts in a broader sense.

In one group, a representative from the ESL program spoke of the program's origination 30 years ago. She argued that if the program is extinguished, UMass will not be a flagship school, but a University that does not have a full range of academic programs.

In other groups, members shared personal experiences and background with each other. Michael McKinstry from the Pride Alliance, whose table was joined by Patrick Archibald, University of Massachusetts Police Department Chief, spoke about the lack of feeling connected to other students at UMass.

"Students come from little high schools and arrive at Southwest," he said. "It's intimidating." The group discussed how these feelings of disconnection to the University relate to the recent riots on campus. "People don't feel connected to the University, but they can feel connected to the World Series. They can find something in common with the kid across the hall."

The group continued to discuss the problem of segregation on campus. "UMass is too big to connect with everyone," said McKinstry. "Students feel like they have to find people who are like them, we drive to segregate ourselves."

Another group talked about standardized tests. One student commented on the bias of standardized tests given to students in elementary levels of education. He argued that the tests are not directed toward minorities or low-income students. The group agreed that the method to solve the problem of unfairly written tests was to have UMass admissions discontinue the use of them.

"The tests [SATs] only measure one or two aspects of intelligence and data also shows the tests themselves are often culturally bias," said Chuck DiMare, the director of Legal Services Offices. "We must simply do away with it or reform it."

He explained that the amount of scientific data is overwhelming in that there is greater correlation of SAT scores to students' parents' income then to their success in an undergraduate environment.

Other groups touched on the necessity to have a united campus culture and more student events that could deter students from participating in riots or dangerous activities.

The discussion concluded with participants giving suggestions and explaining what they would like to achieve through the roundtable discussions. Many agreed that more students should be in attendance. The group also discussed the possibility of addressing the new admissions policy at UMass in the next roundtable, participants agreed that having members of the admissions office would be crucial and would be essential to adding input to the new policy.

GERALD H. LING

A participant in the SGA Diversity Roundtable listens to the discussion yesterday afternoon.

Chancellor of elections appointed

BRENDAN O'MEARA/COLLEGIAN

Lillian Dignan, Orchard Hill Area Governor, spoke about the parking issues in the purple lot near Dickinson dormitory last night.

Continued from page 1

Student Trustee Hannah Fatemi addressed the Senate regarding their concerns about the lack of undergraduate representation on the University's Presidential Search Committee. According to Fatemi, the seat held by Rosalyn Lankowski, an undergraduate from the University of Massachusetts-Lowell campus was replaced by Sean Reed, a medical student from UMass-Worcester after Lankowski resigned from the committee. None of the 24 members serving on the committee are currently representatives of the undergraduate student body at any of the five UMass campuses.

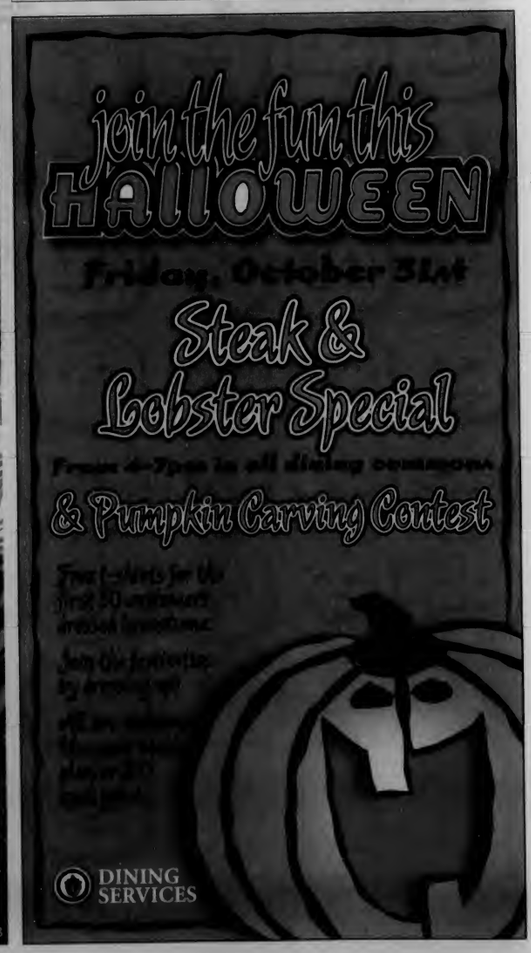
"The Presidential Search Committee is closed," she said. "But it wasn't the intent of the board to have no undergraduate representatives." According to Fatemi, undergraduates are a concern for them. She said she would be meeting with the committee next week.

A motion to appoint Jared Nokes to the Student Legal Services governing board was also passed by the Senate. According to Nokes, the University of Massachusetts Graduate Student Senate owes over $200,000 to the to Student Legal Services, including $80,000 from just this year. "They need to pay us what they owe us," he said.

Attorney General Mark Morrison addressed the Senate regarding the need for a Judicial Advisors program. Morrison estimates that it will cost about $6,000 for a Judicial Advisors pilot program. He said it is important to keep students informed of their rights.

According to Morrison, there were 14 interim sanctions that came from the Hobart riots last year, of which only two have been resolved, and there were 33 that came from the recent riots following the Red Sox playoff games.

"That gives you some perspective as to how egregious these actions were," he said. However, he added, most of the sanctions were not the result of UMass students.



A motion to appoint Steven Hoeschele as Chancellor of Elections also passed before the conclusion of the meeting. Hoeschele is an advocate of electoral reform and supports the practice of "runoff voting," a system whereby candidates are ranked by students and a practice that he said best reflects the will of voters.

Despite questions regarding the system's violation of plurality in the SGA bylaws, Hoeschele said it improves the election process.

"I most closely reflects the will of the voter," he said. According to him, the system only applies when there are three or more candidates campaigning for one position. "I honestly believe it's the most fair and effective method of voting. It ensures that the winner has majority rule."

Hoeschele said he also believes the inability of write-in candidates to campaign and that they are not allowed any funding is something that should change. The next elections will take place in March 2004, he said.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Jennifer Eastwood
Managing Editor Dan Lamothe
Business Manager Peter Foundas
Production Manager Scott Pihl
Night Supervisor Nick Markantonatos
Advertising Manager Sean Costello
Editorial Production Shannon Farrington
Arts & Living Editor Glen Straub
Comics Editor Molly Eggleston
Editorial Editor Paige Cram
News Editor Ferron Salniker
Photo Editor Gerald H. Ling
Sports Editor Andrew Merritt
Classified Advertising Marty Pappas
Distribution Manager Julie Beauchamp
Finance Manager Greg Stamm
Human Resource Sandra Marquez
Special Issues Betsy Feldman
Assistant Business Ben Ratner
Assistant Advertising David Bor
Assistant Distribution Mark Lagstic
Assistant Finance Richard Pacheco
Advertising Production Lisa Lynch
Layout Manager Lindsay Clark
Graphics Advisor Charlie Higgins
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Asst. Arts & Living Meghan Healy
Asst. Arts & Living Cameron J. Woods
Assistant News Erika Lovley
Assistant News Morris Singer
Assistant Photo Emilie Duggan
Assistant Sports Mike Morrelli
Assistant Sports Robert McGovern

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became The College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967. The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Collier speaks

Continued from page 1

ernment has what he calls, "a well worked out plan and decision making process in how to deal with the stock piling and distribution of anthrax."

"Who knows what some people might have cooking in their basements," he said. According to Collier, the recent terrorist attacks in which anthrax was placed in mail demonstrated how vulnerable the United States actually is to anthrax attacks.

"The Center for Disease Control's recent lists of biological threats have ranked Anthrax consistently at or near the top," Collier said. But Collier remains confident of his work. "I think there is some reason to be optimistic about dealing with anthrax.

"Within two to three years we could really have some new drugs that would act as countermeasures against anthrax," said Collier. "If we can continue to fill in the gaps in what is an already good understanding of anthrax, we can be well prepared for the future."

Shenhav discusses Jewish marriage law

By Bill Gallagher
Collegian Correspondent

Sharon Shenhav, lawyer and director of the International Jewish Woman's Human Rights Watch addressed woman's rights in the Middle East last night at Amherst College.

Shenhav emphasized the problematic Jewish marriage law, which she said is a male dominated system, and is under the jurisdiction of religious courts in Israel. "The courts are run by men, and have a monopoly of interpretation," Shenhav said.

She pointed out that a couple that desires to get married has no choice but to go through either the Jewish, Muslim or Catholic court. There are no civil marriages, which leave out atheists or members of other religions. It is also impossible to intermarry between religions within the boarders of Israel.

The real problem Shenhav believes lies in divorce. In the 4,000 year-old tradition of the Torah interpreted today, marriage can end only if both parties consent. Some Jewish men exploit this stipulation and will not consent unless their wishes are granted. She said men often use property, child support and even the children themselves as a pawn. The rabbinical courts (Jewish religious court) often turn a deaf ear to the wives in these cases.

"It's really blackmail," Shenhav said.

She said the result is chained women who are unable to remarry or are unable to get a divorce. Despite the wife's consent, the divorce will not be granted. The consequences for the women are dire: any subsequent children from another man will be cast out as the religious stigma of Mamzerim. Mamzerim are restricted to marry only other Mamzerim. Without the divorce the women cannot remarry. Men, however, have the recourse to apply for a permit to take a second wife.

As a lawyer Shenhav and the Center for Women in Jewish Law, are committed to solving the problem of agunot or chained women.

Shenhav was born in Chicago and educated at Georgetown Law. She now permanently resides in Israel where she tirelessly gives a voice to these otherwise unheard woman.

On Dec. 13, 2002 Shenhav was the first woman ever elected to the Commission to appoint Dayanim (Jewish religious judges). She represents the women's organizations interests in appointing members of the Israel court.

"I will select only those who are sensitive and compassionate to women's needs," Shenhav said.

From 1994 to 1998 Shenhav was a member of the Israeli government delegation to the United Nations Commission on the Status of Women. She founded the Center for Women in Jewish Law at the Schechter Institute for Jewish Studies in Jerusalem. Spanning the globe with her conferences and speeches on this subject she has appeared on television and radio in over 10 countries. In 1988 Shenhav received the State of Israel Award for her efforts to improve the voice of women and children in the judicial system.

"My only goal is to restore justice," Shenhav said.

The event was co-sponsored by The University Student Division of the Hagshama Department, which brings programs for students to experience Israel, in cooperation with the American Zionist Movement.

Fires blaze in San Bernardino

By Andrew Bridges
Associated Press

LAKE ARROWHEAD, Calif. (AP) — Firefighters struggled desperately yesterday to save emptied-out resort towns in Southern California's San Bernardino Mountains as 200-foot walls of flame engulfed dead and dried-out trees.

In San Diego County, the state's largest fire claimed another victim when a firefighting crew was overcome by flames, killing one and injuring three. It marked the first firefighter death since the series of blazes began last week and brought the total number of dead to 18.

The hot, dry Santa Ana winds from the desert that had been whipping the fires into raging infernos eased, only to give way to stiff breezes off the ocean that pushed the flames up the canyon walls around evacuated resort towns like Lake Arrowhead and Big Bear, east of Los Angeles.

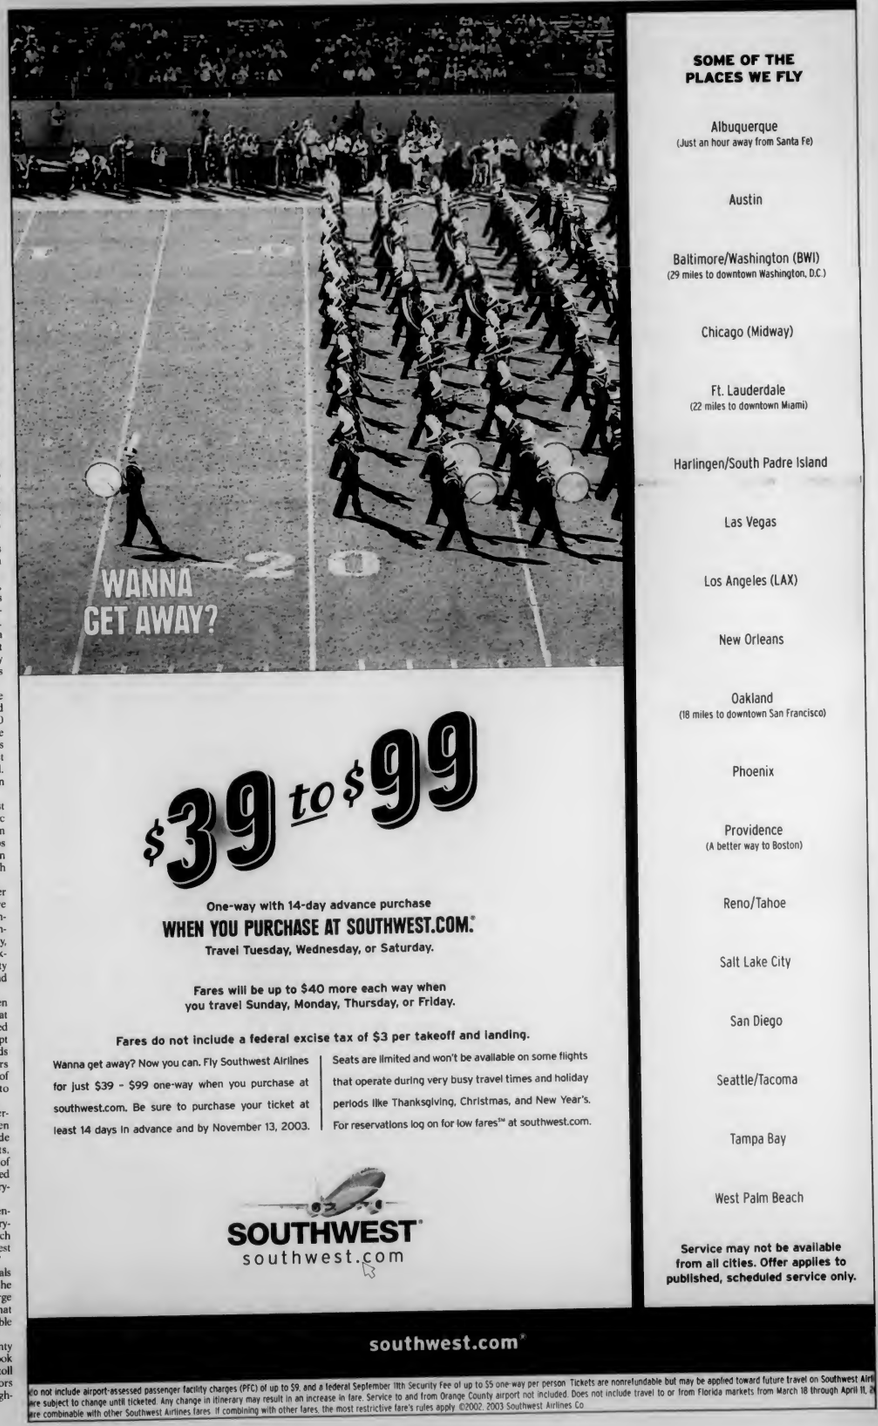
By early afternoon, homes were burning in the mountain community of CedarPines Park.

"There's fire on so many fronts, it's not even manageable at this point," said Chris Cade, a fire prevention technician with the U.S. Forest Service, as he watched a pillar of smoke he estimated at 9,000 feet rise into a hazy sky thick with ash. "I am at a loss what you can do about it."

The fires have burned more than 620,000 acres and destroyed 1,800 homes. More than 12,000 firefighters and support crew were fighting what Gov. Gray Davis said may be the worst and costliest disaster California has ever faced. He estimated the cost at $2 billion so far.

The fires, which began last week, burned in a broken arc across Southern California, from Ventura County east to Los Angeles County and the San Bernardino Mountains and south to eastern San Diego County.

On Southern California's other major front, about 100 fire engines encircled the historic mining town of Julian in the mountains of eastern San Diego County, hoping to save the popular weekend getaway community renowned for its vineyards and apple orchards.



However, some two dozen engines and water tenders that were headed to Julian were forced to turn back when flames swept over a highway. And as the winds picked up, floating embers sparked spot fires near the town of 3,500, forcing some crews to retreat.

South of Julian, about 90 percent of the homes had been destroyed in Cuyamaca, a lakeside town of about 160 residents. Charred cows lay by the side of the road and houses were reduced to little more than stone entryways.

"Everything's kind of happening all at once. These fires are trying really hard to tie in with each other," said Bill Bourbeau, a forest safety officer. "It's tremendous."

San Diego County fire officials feared a 233,000-acre fire and the 50,000-acre blaze would merge into a huge, single blaze that would make it nearly impossible to keep it from reaching Julian.

Officials in San Diego County — where most of the deaths took place — predicted the death toll would rise after investigators began scouring devastated neighborhoods.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 30, 2003

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Scahill complaints with Church merit consideration

The Catholic Church sex abuse scandal has been big in the news for more than two years, going back to before the conviction of John Geoghan in February of 2002.

Since the initial shock of the scandal wore away and the width and breadth of sexual abuse cover-ups in the Catholic Church have been exposed, the story and damage control have been spread out across the nation and the world. And while the Church has done everything it can to squelch the public relations nightmare that exploded, certain stories still slip through the cracks, reminding all of us that the problem is not solved.

That includes stories within our own area, the Springfield Diocese.

Recently, Rev. James J. Scahill, pastor of St. Michael's Parish in East Longmeadow, testified in a deposition against the Most Rev. Thomas L. Dupre, bishop of the Roman Catholic Diocese of Springfield. Scahill said Dupre told him he could be suspended for holding back the portion of weekly collections earmarked for the bishop's office.

Scahill has refused to send the funds in protest of the diocese financially supporting Rev. Richard R. Lavigne, a man accused of abusing more than 30 children. The diocese is trying to have him defrocked.

We at the Massachusetts Daily Collegian see Scahill's position as one that is both courageous and controversial.

He says that Dupre threatened him on numerous occasions, accusing him of costing the Church and diocese thousands of dollars by timing his refusal to send Church funds with the annual Catholic Stewardship Appeal, a fundraiser that brings in hundreds of thousands of dollars every year.

The deposition testimony has not been confirmed yet, and Dupre has denied threatening Scahill at any point. However, that does not change things.

The Catholic Church's frustration with people like Scahill is that they do not conform to the "party line." Scahill has been openly critical of the Springfield Diocese for months, previously saying Dupre told members of his advisory council that the late Bishop Christopher J. Weldon destroyed records that included details of possible sexual abuse accusations in the diocese.

By continuing his campaign against the Church's handling of abuse cases by withholding funds and pointing to the treatment of Lavigne's situation as the reason why, Scahill did everything in his power as a pastor to draw attention to what he feels are injustices involving the Church.

Make no mistake: His actions make him disobedient to the diocese and the bishop. But make no mistake: That also makes him a hero. Scahill's efforts have helped to force the Springfield Diocese to continue dealing with decades worth of misconduct. Scahill's actions hold the Catholic Church as accountable, much as the Boston-based lay group the, Voice of the Faithful, has. Regardless of what it does to his own standing within the Church as an institution, Scahill took a stand. How can that not be admired?

Dupre and the diocese would be best off to reconcile with Scahill and consider some of his complaints as legitimate concerns that need attention. The negative feelings he has for the Catholic Church are no different than the feelings of many discontented Catholics throughout the region, and they merit serious evaluation.

Information from The Republican was used to write this editorial.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

College life at NYU

Gilad Skolnick

For many University of Massachusetts students, the University was their safety school. In other words, it ranked as a fourth or fifth choice. For others, it was the most affordable school they were interested in, and for a select few, UMass was their first choice. Most students, however, are not appreciative enough of what our beautiful school has to offer and sometimes forget that things UMass students take for granted are not available for many, less fortunate others.

Make no mistake: His actions make him disobedient to the diocese and the bishop. But make no mistake: That also makes him a hero. Scahill's efforts have helped to force the Springfield Diocese to continue dealing with decades worth of misconduct. Scahill's actions hold the Catholic Church as accountable, much as the Boston-based lay group the, Voice of the Faithful, has. Regardless of what it does to his own standing within the Church as an institution, Scahill took a stand. How can that not be admired?

A little while ago, I ventured to New York University to investigate what the perks and benefits are of attending a 40-grand-a-year school. I had to see what makes NYU so special.

The pride of every school rests in their library. Aside for a few freak occasions, the size of a school's library is a symbol of their prestige, their beauty and how important knowledge is for them. Naturally, one would expect a school that costs over twice the amount of UMass to have a library about twice the size. Thus, I found myself surprised and baffled that NYU does not have a library equal in height to our own — even by half. This was quite the turnoff. Size isn't everything, but it sure is important.

My eyes already in pain over the the hideous abomination of a library, an insult to the very word, I asked my tour guide, a sketchy guy named Shyam, to guide me to the campus pond. Surely a school as grand and expensive as NYU would have such a vital place of leisure and relaxation, such as a campus pond. After all, even Brandies has a pond, although they only have one swan. After seeing that thing that they call a "library," I set my standards low, expecting maybe only a few ducks.

Sadly, the best my tour guide could do was lead me to a place called Washington Square Park, a breeding ground of disease, infested with pigeons along with the occasional rat or cockroach. This small track of undeveloped pavement, doted with the occasional patch of grass or tree, was quite pathetic.

Upon entering the dorm building, I was approached by a real security guard. An NYPD officer was standing at the front refusing entry to those who did not sign in. This was just one more of NYU's many inconveniences, as I was in no mood to show them my ID. While waiting for the officer to write down my information, I grabbed a nearby newspaper — NYU's student paper. This was one of the weakest excuses for a newspaper that I've ever seen: My seventh grade class newsletter was more interesting than this.

Sophomores are not forced to have a University meal plan ... I saw one guy sitting on the street corner with a sign asking for food, most likely a starving and confused sophomore.

Neither did they have an equivalent to our amazing UVC-19, as a student run TV station was not in existence. Additionally, there was a lack of a campus radio station, such as our WMUA 91.1 FM, and overall, finding out basic news about what was going on around campus was a tedious chore.

After this ordeal, I hoped that watching NYU students play their rivals in football or hockey could calm me down, but the best that could be offered was watching two NYU students battle it out on their Nintendo game system. This pathetic place didn't even have their own sports teams. Other than their fencing team, which although popular among many, is not always that stimulating to watch.

Their arts center does not provide popular discounted plays, forcing students to make the long trek to Broadway to see such entertainment. Fall foliage walks were not found, and sophomores were not forced to have a University meal plan, leaving many second year students utterly confused about how to go about acquiring food. I saw one guy sitting on the street corner, with a sign asking for food, most likely a starving and confused sophomore.

Even worse, many dorm rooms get poor reception of Fox, a vital channel for any television connoisseur. Moreover, each suite has its own bathroom with only one toilet, unlike UMass where students are given a choice of four to eight toilets. Perhaps the most important problem with their dorms is the view. Our window views of rolling hills filled with trees is a luxury that NYU students simply don't have, their window views consisting of ugly gray buildings.

If this was not enough, not only were "Yankees Suck" riots lacking, but shockingly, the majority of students actually liked the Yankees. Going to a university in a city that has over 400 homicides a year must be tough, but going to a university that does not support the 2004 baseball world champions must be even tougher. I, for one, wake up every morning happy to be at such a great school.

Gilad Skolnick is a Collegian columnist.

Raising voter turnout

Engaged in a political conversation with one of my classmates this past week on my cell phone, the conversation went like this:

Classmate: I am really worried about the conflict in Iraq.

Mike: I know; it is a tragedy; a lot of people have died.

Classmate: I am very concerned about the crisis, since it is people our age who have died. I wish I had voted in the last election. I was 18, but I didn't feel like my vote mattered.

Michael W. Lenz

According to the Web site Moveon.org, in the 2000 Presidential election between then Vice President Al Gore and Governor George W. Bush, 51 percent of all Americans participated. Seventy-two percent of males and females age 55 and older voted. Thirty-six percent of voters between ages 18-24 entered the booths.

Recently, Joe Klein, a columnist for Time magazine entertained an audience at the University of Massachusetts. He discussed his best selling book, "The Natural," answered questions about Iraq and addressed the question of dissent. But Klein's prevailing message that day was directed at the men and women of Generation Y. Klein urged those in attendance to participate in politics. He pointed to the apathy prevalent in both the 2000 Presidential race and the 2002 Congressional elections.

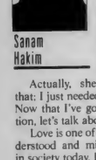
Some will argue that it is merely a utopian ideal that the 18-24 age bracket will sudenly emerge in the democratic process.

Imagine, for one moment, if the 18-24 age bracket made up 15 to 20 percent of the total voting population, as opposed to 7.8 percent in 2000. Theoretically, if young people made their presence felt at the polls, we (Generation Y) would have the ability to elect leaders, whether Democrat, Republican or what have you, who will represent our best interests.

Some will argue it is merely a utopian ideal that the 18-24 age bracket will suddenly emerge in the democratic process. However, it is entirely possible to return to the heights of the high voter turnout of the 1960s and '70s. in order to do so, several hurdles must first be cleared.

Klein argued that in the post-Vietnam era, young Americans began to feel disenfranchised from politicians. Beginning with the assassinations of Robert Kennedy and Martin Luther King Jr. voters felt like they lost the two fathers who came to represent the central issues relevant to them: Vietnam and civil rights. With the eventual withdrawal of U.S. troops in Indo China and the culmination of the Civil Rights Movement came a change in public policy. In the '80s and '90s, politicians focused on domestic issues such as welfare, social security and campaign finance reform. While those platforms are important to a large percentage of the population, they are not as pertinent to America's youth.

The Administration's handling of the war in Iraq could have the same political impact on Generation Y, as it did on the men and women during the Vietnam era. Like Vietnam, it is our youth who must pay the ultimate political price. If one is upset with the current leadership, then he/she should feel compelled to bring forth a list of grievances via-vote.



Another hurdle that has yet to be solved is the voting process itself: Many young Americans complain that going to the booths is "a hassle" or that they don't really understand the differences between the candidates. In response to voting presenting itself as a hassle, at my past school, voting administrators actually drew arrows leading from campus to the voting booths. Once one filled out his/her voting ballots, he/she was greeted with coffee, donuts and lemonade. One side note: The people who run the booths are very welcoming and generous, and often times, will smile and applaud a newly registered voter. As for voting itself, one feels a sense of satisfaction after completion of the ballot. I would compare it to a basketball game where you cheer for your favorite player or team. The same goes for voting; you cast your vote for the man or woman who will live up to your personal expectations and ideals.

Determining which candidate to vote for can sometimes be a challenge for one who is not engaged with the political process. However, this should not stop you. Beginning with six to nine months before an election, visit the respective candidates Web sites and educate yourself about the candidate's platform. For example, is the candidate pro-life or pro-choice? A hawk or a dove? Does the candidate support civil rights/civil liberties, or is he/she opposed to such expansions? Will your candidate of choice look out for your interests and truly represent you? For the un-informed voter, a newspaper is also a good place to start. However, avoid newspapers and news stations with a bias. Good publications include the Washington Post, New York Times, Boston Globe and CNN.

The men and women of Generation Y could emerge as a force in American politics if these hurdles are conquered. If the campaign of Howard Dean, a Democratic Presidential Candidate, is any indication, voter turnout among the 18-24 age bracket could sky-rocket from the sad turnout of 2000. The 2004 election is crucial, as our nation will sit at a crossroad.

Michael W. Lenz is a Collegian columnist.

Let's define the "L" word

Sanam Hakim

I can't even count how many times my roommate and her boyfriend have spoken to each other in baby voices, exchanging the line, "No, I love YOU more."

Actually, she's never done that; I just needed a catchy intro. Now that I've gotten your attention, let's talk about love.

Love is one of the most misunderstood and misused emotions in society today. Raised in this 40 to 50 percent divorce rate society, we become accustomed to the concept of having four families — paternal, maternal, step paternal and step maternal. Marriage is the union of two people who choose and accept to love each other unconditionally. Because marriage is an act of choice, the idea of love being unconditional is, therefore, questionable. Why is it that people marry in the name of love and divorce in its failure?

The answer is in the derivation of love itself. Love is believed to come from the heart. It is quite a romantic notion: an emotion strong enough to burst through your chest and overpower all. The belief of love coming from the heart, however, is false and, arguably, ridiculous. The heart pumps blood to the vital organs, and that is basically it. You can look at it as metaphorically as you want, claiming that love is, perhaps the "blood" that gets "pumped" to all the vital "organs." But in reality, it's just an organ that pumps blood.

This idea is upheld as a traditional belief that comes from multiple places. In elementary school, one of my favorite history lessons was the one about how Egyptians mummified the dead. The coolest thing I learned in the class was how they removed the brain. They stuck two hooked instruments up the corpse's nostrils and just tugged at the brain tissue until it was out. The rest of the organs were removed, preserved in jars, and buried with the mummy. More important than the nostril story is the actual logic behind the brain removal. The only part of the mummy that was left in the body was the heart, which was believed to be the center of intelligence.

Similarly, Greeks also upheld this belief. One of the most well respected Greek scientists and philosophers was Aristotle, who did a lot of work with chicken embryos. In these embryos, he noticed that the first thing that grew in all of them was a heart. He, thus, described the heart as "the seat of intelligence, motion and sensation." He also said that the organs surrounding the heart, including the brain, were not necessary at all, and that they were just there to keep the heart warm.

About 3,000 years later, it was accepted that the brain was the seat of intelligence, and not the heart. Strangely, however, love and the heart were still linked together, as they still are today. The argument tied to this is that your heart beats faster when you are in love. Therefore, your heart and love must be connected. If you look at it from a scientific point of view, however, linking love to your heart is as strange and abstract as linking love to your intestines. Scientifically speaking, strong emotions, such as love, hinder digestion. Therefore, according to the logic used to connect love to the heart, you could say love comes from the intestines.

Realistically speaking, however, love comes from the mind or, more specifically, your cortex and your hypothalamus. Perhaps that is the problem in society these days. Poets and musicians fill our minds with the notion that we should always follow our hearts. Our hearts will lead the way, they say. But when the idea of love being connected to the heart is disproved by science, what are we following? An organ?

If you listen to your heart, all you will hear is the opening and closing of your valves. Maybe that's why we end up with spouse's we don't really want or friends we don't really care to keep. We're taught to fight our minds with an organ that has no controlling power over us in the first place. All of our memories and all of our mentalities are tied together with our logic and our ability to make a decision, not inside of our heart, but inside of our minds.

Viewing love as a battle between heart and brain is tearing them all away from each other and making us think we have to choose between them. We have the choice of keeping one eye closed at all times, but when we want to see something clearly, we open both eyes. Perhaps when the eyes of the mind are truly open, we will learn what love really is.

Sanam Hakim is a Collegian columnist.

UMass security ineffective

Coming in as a freshman to the University of Massachusetts, I'm exposed to a whole new atmosphere and must adhere to a different set of rules. Here, students go by one rule: Anything goes, as long as you don't get caught.

Julie Tran

Campus and Amherst police provide security. Given the number of people who attend UMass and how big the campus is, it seems futile to even try to enforce any sort of order. Coming in and out of my building, I would see check-in desks operating at certain times and not at other times. For the first few weeks since school started, I was confused about how the system worked. The desks would be set up around 8 or 9 p.m. and would remain there until midnight. Students coming in must check in by flashing their student cards and visitors must sign in with a resident. This system is supposed to discourage people from visiting friends in other dorms too late at night and causing trouble.

Here, students go by one rule. Anything goes, as long as you don't get caught.

From what I've seen so far, it's crazy that there would even be such a system. Late at night, I would hear sounds of people screaming, partying and trashing dorms. Most of those people don't live in the building. How is it that these people can get by and cause so much trouble? Only people who come in between 8 p.m. and midnight are signed in, but what about the people who happen to come in before 8 p.m. and after midnight? It seems that the check-in desks in the lobbies aren't very effective at all.

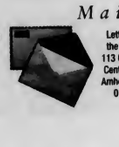
Residents are told to carry their ID cards at all times. They swipe their cards to get in but encounter a check-in desk and need to flash their cards. Students open the doors for visitors all the time. When they do, then it would seem like the right time to start checking IDs and signing people in. People who swipe to get in shouldn't have to go through the trouble of showing their card again. Obviously, If they were able to swipe and get in, they live in that building. This system concerns me because it isn't very practical and extremely inconvenient for residents.

Another thing that irks me about these security checkpoints is that they are run by the students. There have been many times when I've seen them wave people by and not check their IDs. Maybe they are too lazy to check them or they could care less. Either way, people don't take them seriously because they are students. It would be much different if there were cops sitting there or some authoritative figure. If the school administration really wanted the system to work, they should have check-in desks in the lobbies 24 hours a day, seven days a week. Not everyone starts visiting other dorms at 8 p.m., nor do they go to sleep at midnight. It is a waste of the student's time checking IDs and a waste of the residents' time having to show their IDs and signing people in.

I can understand that these attempts are made to execute some sort of order on campus, but no one is going to take a system run by a bunch of sophomores and juniors seriously. Most of the check-in people don't even take it seriously themselves. If students wanted to come into the dorms and cause trouble, who's going to stop them from walking right by? Is it going to be that apprehensive girl behind the desk with her open binder checking in five other people? Is she really going to get out of her chair and follow them? I think not. You need to ask yourself if this system is really effective in achieving the goals the school's administration has sought using the check-in desks.

Julie Tran is a UMass student.

Submit a letter or opinion



In order to be considered for publication, all submissions must include the writer's name, address, and telephone number or e-mail address. Letters should be between 200-400 words in length and addressed as 'Letters to the Editor.' Commentaries should be no more than 750 words and addressed as 'Editorial/Opinion.' Submissions may be edited for clarity and condensed. You may write, fax, or e-mail your submissions to:

E-mail: editorial@dailycollegian.com

Fax: 413-545-3699

Mail: Letters to the Editor 113 Campus Center Way Amherst, MA 01003

Revolution in Bolivia

Israel, Palestine, Iraq. The front pages are littered every morning with another story of an American or Israeli killed in a terrorist attack; a Palestinian militant teenager killed in conflict with Israeli soldiers. The media puts endless efforts into the Middle East and completely disregards what is happening in many other places in the world. What's happening in Bolivia through all of this? What do the mainstream media report about the situation in South America? I'm sure any of my readers can easily answer this question, right? Let me probe your minds a bit: Do you know what has been happening in Bolivia for the last month? Why not?

Aaron Victor

It's not your fault. If we aren't exposed to current events, how can we make a difference? I read the newspaper daily, and it is true: If I didn't travel through Bolivia this summer and meet the people, if I didn't spend two hours a day over the last two weeks researching the topic extensively through independent media sources and foreign newspapers, if I didn't discuss the matter regularly with friends who also care, I wouldn't know or care either.

Bolivia is a "modern democracy" with "free trade" and an "open market." They recently went through a civilian revolution. Teachers, miners, students and bus drivers all went on strike. Natural gas was discovered in the country and the president has been collaborating with American corporations, backed by the World Trade Organization, to export all of the natural gas, through a pipeline, to Southern California, after processing it in Mexico where there is cheap labor due to NAFTA. Who will benefit from the billions of dollars in profit that this project will produce? American corporations. Is this right? Are we really allowing this? We have no choice.

As long as we watch CNN and FOX News; as long as our "liberal" media outlets like the Boston Globe and the New York Times barely glaze over the issues in small boxes in the middle of the paper, Americans who have influence over these events will remain ignorant and large corporations will continue to profit while hard-working fathers and mothers watch their children starve to death and are forced to throw stones in the streets to defend their right to assemble. Did you know there was a revolution in Bolivia? Why not? Stay tuned for more information.

Aaron Victor is a UMass student. This submission is the first in a series of three.

Pointers on how to de-stress

Stephanie O'Shea

Yes. I too am jumping on the riot paddy wagon. After a few weeks of biding my time, I have come up with the definitive answer to why hundreds of students at this school are compelled to vent their frustrations by screaming obscenities and breaking things in front of an audience. Contrary to popular assumption, the answer is not as obvious as boredom, a sale on 30 racks or even hatred in the form of tradition. The real reason is that during the midpoint of the semester when everyone is stressed out and chunky, the small yet therapeutic things in life are all too often put on the back burner.

My explanation begins by pointing out that if a student calls Parking Services after 4:30 p.m., he or she will hear the recorded greeting, "You have reached Parking Services at UMass University in Amherst." Clearly, the salary of the woman who spoke this phrase could be better spent on making the salty goodness of Cheez-it more prevalent on this campus. The issue at hand, however, is that throwing a car into fifth gear while rocking out to a scratched CD is a top notch way to relieve stress. I love getting in my hoopdie and making it obvious to the people next to me at stop lights that there is a Steph concert going on. Unfortunately, due to the crappy nature of parking at UMass, it is difficult for students who live on campus to enjoy this same outlet.

Another way to maintain balance during hectic times is to have a hobby — not to disrespect the tried and true activities of watching television or collecting T-shirts with different phrases written across the chest. But it is my relentless pursuit to create the perfect beef burrito that gives me a sense of control in a world full of chaos. I get into food ruts in which I eat the same thing every day for months, and since tuna got passé, my Gladware has been full of rice and refried beans. It is my ultimate goal to reach the level of Bueno Y Sano in my own kitchen. I have been high for the past week on the discovery that Monterrey Jack is a far superior cheese to use then Mexican blend. Every student deserves to have such a passion.

As a senior, much of my time is devoted to going on job interviews. While many of my counterparts get tense about ironing a shirt and proving their worth to another human being, I live by the wise words of a guest speaker from class: There is no such thing as a nervous person, only a person who is not prepared. Like everyone else, I spend time practicing my responses to typical questions and coming up with insightful comments to say about the economy.

Another way to maintain balance during hectic times is to have a hobby ... it is my relentless pursuit to create the perfect beef burrito that gives me a sense of control in a world full of chaos.

What the suits do not tell students, however, is that real confidence comes from a pre-interview ritual. Mine involves getting sassed up by blasting "Only the Good Die Young" by Billy Joel and thinking about Conan O'Brien doing his monologue. On the way out the door, I throw up an away message with hot pink letters and then call my Mom to tell her that it is show time. Of course, this exact formula will not work to relax everyone, but an upbeat song is a good place to start.

Last but not least, UMass students need to get out of their rooms and rock and/or roll. Even the most repressed should make a social appearance onbe a week. Wetting one's whistle, spouting ludicrous comments and making out with strangers are restorative acts. The trick is to party without getting one's name or face in the paper and to later fall asleep while watching "The Family Guy" on DVD.

I hope that my pointers on stress management put an end to the riot discussion. Although throwing a tantrum seems like a good idea while drunk and irate, there are more respectable ways to vent. I do not care about funds that are spent on police overtime and property damages, and I am confident that my degree will have value despite negative publicity because of the hard work that I put into earning it. People need to stop smashing and burning things so that I have new topics to read about while eating my burritos.

Stephanie O'Shea is a Collegian columnist.

Listen up, Massholes

Is there a reason why you can stand directly across from someone in an elevator and not say a single word? Or how about when you pass some unknown person in the hallway and avoid eye contact at all costs? Whatever happened to being polite or just plain friendly? Is it really that difficult to say "hello?"

Stacy Desmarais

Well, only in Massachusetts it is. Everyone has had the experience. You know, when the elevator doors close and you find yourself holding your breath as you stand awkwardly next to a single person whom you have never seen before. You stand there tongue-tied, as if you've never spoken a word in your life. At times, the silence is unbearable and seems to be the loudest noise you have ever heard, yet there's nothing you can do to put yourself at ease. Here, you find yourself staring desperately above the door anticipating your departure and the sense of relief.

What makes this painful situation even worse is if, by accident, some force of nature causes you and this stranger to briefly look at each other, nod and quickly turn away. Oh god no! What do you do? Say something? Keep your mouth shut? Deep down inside you would like to say something, anything, just to break the silence but in fear of embarrassing yourself, you stand there and twiddle your thumbs, making the situation even more unbearable. Your entire body sweats, your face turns red, your hands become clammy. "Someone get me out of here," you cry to yourself.

If you were to utter a few words, what would you say anyway? The conversation would be brief, insignificant and you would find out random facts about some person you don't even know. It's not like you would actually pay any attention. Smile, nod and bolt the moment the doors open. Who cares if your getting off on the fifth floor, and you want to be at the nineteenth? Take the stairs.

Of course this would be the tactic of any "Masshole." Most can say that you will only find yourself in this horrifying situation when you become trapped in Massachusetts like an unwanted kitchen rat. This is a place where no one wants to know you, and it takes too much effort to even pretend to care. You could run into the same person everyday for a year, and an introduction would still be refused. Why? Because you're in Massachusetts — the state where everyone is known to be unfriendly and just plain rude.

You're in Massachusetts - the state where everyone is known to be unfriendly and just plain rude.

If you were to travel down south, you would notice the drastic difference between southerners and northerners. Take a walk down the street you will be bombarded with greetings of another language such as "howdy" and "how ya'll doin," from people you didn't even know. From my travels down under, I have found that they are welcoming, hospitable, outgoing, interested, in-your-face want-to-be-your-friend kind of people. Quite the contrast, compared to the cold-blooded northerners, especially those from Massachusetts.

Granted, I am a native to this state and am quite aware of being deemed a "Masshole" for life, but before I came to college it seemed to me virtually impossible to be so incredibly impolite. Coming from a tiny New England town, there where no strangers to avoid, and we didn't have buildings tall enough for elevators. I didn't realize that even i was unfriendly. Now, after interacting with 25,000 other people, I actually admit I am in fact one of those people who would rather stare at the ground then create a conversation.

There is no need for such awkwardness in social situations but on the other hand, I support it myself. I stand in silence, avoid eye contact, and if by some chance someone tries to break the silence and talk to me, I walk away thinking "what a freak!" And if you are truly from Massachusetts, you know you do too.

Stacy Desmarais is a UMass student.

Letters to the Editor

Taking a step back with affirmative action

To the Editor:

There is one word to describe the feeling I had upon reading the article titled "Two speakers lecture on discrimination" in Monday's paper: outrage. The article seemed to state that affirmative action was necessary because of the fact that minority applicants to universities had lower Standardized Achievement Test scores. Affirmative action, therefore, was in place to combat SATs, which the speakers considered racist. In my opinion, saying to someone of minority status that they need the push of affirmative action to get into school, rather than being admitted on their own merit, is disgusting.

To say the SAT is flawed in terms of race is to imply that people don't have an equal chance on the test. That is simply not true. No matter what your race, creed, religion, or socio-economic background, you can go to the library, check out an SAT help book, study and increase your score. I know, because I have done this and improved my SAT score 100 points. The Massachusetts Daily Collegian reported that one lecture speaker, Lani Guinier, said, "The scores on the SATs tell you how much money your parents have, not how well your first year college grades are going to be." This is faulty logic based on the fact that everyone can increase his or her SAT scores with practice. Anyone can push themselves to succeed.

The speakers did not offer any alternatives, other than affirmative action, to combat this problem. They are creating another faulty situation. Although the college admission process is far from perfect, we do not improve things by give outs. Yes, the most important things a school wants, like hard working people with positive personalities, will never appear on any test, but a test will give an overall idea of general intelligence. I have found that the people at the top of my class scored very highly on the SATs.

Overall, there is a correlation between high SATs scores and intelligence. Even if someone does not do very well on the SATs, colleges generally look at grades, extracurricular activities and essays as well. There are many aspects that contribute to the admissions process. It is generally not an applicants SAT scores that will make or break your acceptance.

Guinier continued, "We've accepted the bias that blacks score inferior, that black kids are worse." By stating this, Guinier implies that the SAT purposefully targets minority students. There is no reason that any group should do better or worse on the SATs. Signaling out the fact that minorities do worse on the SATs is racist in and of itself.

It is important to have diversity on a college campus or in the workplace; however, this diversity should not come at the expense of majority workers who are more qualified, not getting jobs they deserve. To truly eliminate racism we have to not just 'pay back' minorities but also completely consider them as equals. This means we cannot give people an extra hand just because of their ethnic background.

In addition, this generation of college students should not feel the burden of our elder's errors. It is not i that put down any ethnic minority. Why should i pay the price for someone else's errors?

We need to admit people to universities solely based on merit. Giving minorities help implies that they are in need of help and are inferior. Therefore, we have taken a step backward in terms of integration and equality.

Melanie Southworth and Nicole Giannini
UMass students

Name calling not enough when concerning world affairs

To the Editor:

I write this not to put down Johnny Donaldson's viewpoint in his article "Dubya accountable for Sept. 11," but to provide another facet to contrast his one-sided view.

"Dubya" is not a name for a president of the United States, and labeling him that initially insults the prestige of the presidential office. By giving the president's name a negative connotation, the reader will subconsciously transfer this connotation throughout the article. Although this mind-manipulating technique may be taught as effective in persuasive-writing lectures, the valid writer will express his opinion in a completely objective way. This guise of objectivity that Donaldson uses is merely a scapegoat to an insecurity felt by the American popuiation in regards to the actual operations of the United States government.

The president is merely a figurehead of a mass of politics and, in a majority of cases, less affective than those "below" him. Bush is a puppet that everyone loves to hate and wrongly loves to label "Hitler."

Let's take a metaphysical journey to Iraq. Utilizing the circular reasoning present in the article, I would assume that the United States is just as good as Iraq, because the leader of the United States, just like the leader of iraq, represents the total embodiment of evil. I viewed a teievision program, where there was an iraqi man with a smile of unending joy on his face, brandishing to any opposition against the United States a faxed picture of our president. He said he loved our president, he loved American troops, and he loved America. That such a "backwards" man from such a "backwards" country could hold a faxed, colored picture lightened my whole day. Should we blame the ineffectual puppet represented by George Bush for the attacks of 9/11 now?

Since this is a reaction to an opinion article, it is incorrect to say, "This is right." However, consider the exaggeration, slander and unnecessary name-calling used in the article. Consider also, the fact that a likely response to my anecdote would be, "This is American propaganda." Propaganda is no more than subjectively-based opinion. Utilizing the valid property of transitive reasoning, one can infer that Donaldson's article is no more than propaganda.

When readers viewed that article, it established assumptions and conditioned subjective reasoning in their minds. Through the use of name-calling and unfounded facts, Donaldson was able to execute his literary "skill" to manipulate the minds of American readers. When we don't have a base of objectivity and rely on propaganda to amuse our minds, then that's when we know our nation is in trouble.

As a lecturer, who will remain anonymous, said, "[Change] does not come from the White House, it comes from our house." Our views are not defined through one person; they are defined through the entirety of our culture. We, as a people, do not know what our government is doing, and unfounded guessing will not help. We must stop blaming others and stop complaining that our leader is "Hitler."

Here's an answer if you believe you can do a better job: Become the president, a true figurehead. Dubya did!

Sean Kern
UMass student

Actions speak.
Words are louder.
Write for Ed/Op.
Be heard.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS+HAUNTING

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 30, 2003

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

HALLOWEEN

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

October 31st. Halloween. A night when the ghouls, goblins and drunken idiots dressed like Dracula and 50 Cent pour out onto dark, rain-slicked streets in search of candy and other treats (and tricks.) It's a night to be scared, to huddle up shivering in the arms of your beloved or to gather with your alcoholic friends for a rowdy night fueled by booze.

One of the biggest traditions of Halloween is the horror movie. What All Hallow's Eve is complete without marathon airings of bloody, dripping gore-fests filled with ugly, slimy monsters and gratuitously naked breasts? But every Halloween the TV seems to be airing the same old things: "Halloween" and its myriad sequels, "Alien" and about a dozen crappy B-movies from the mid-'80s — the heyday of crappy B-movies.

So you wanna chill out and get chilled with your buddies by watching a halfway decent horror flick, but you don't want to go through watching some tame, over-edited version of a scary movie that would be horrible even in its full version. What do you do?

You head over to your nearest video rental to pick up a brand spankin' new horror movie to entertain yourself and/or the sizzled masses that have gathered or maybe you just want to watch a movie while you are alone and

Continued on page 8

DESIGN BY PERRI HYAN

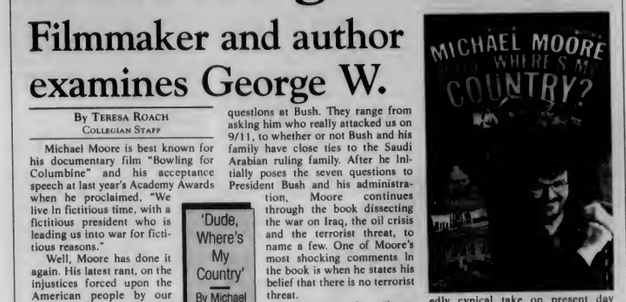
Readers get Moore

Filmmaker and author examines George W.

By Teresa Roach
Collegian Staff

Michael Moore is best known for his documentary film "Bowling for Columbine" and his acceptance speech at last year's Academy Awards when he proclaimed, "We live in fictitious time, with a fictitious president who is leading us into war for fictitious reasons."

Well, Moore has done it again. His latest rant, on the injustices forced upon the American people by our fearless leader, "Dude, Where's My Country?" is a wonderful, delightful and sometimes unnerving account of George W. Bush's presidency leading up to and after 9/11.



'Dude, Where's My Country'
By Michael Moore
Warner Books

Each chapter of "Dude, Where's My Country?" is a question to Bush that Moore poses and then offers his own answers to them.

This book is a well-written account of what President Bush is hiding from the American public. Moore starts off by directing seven questions at Bush. They range from asking him who really attacked us on 9/11, to whether or not Bush and his family have close ties to the Saudi Arabian ruling family. After he initially poses the seven questions to President Bush and his administration, Moore continues through the book dissecting the war on Iraq, the oil crisis and the terrorist threat, to name a few. One of Moore's most shocking comments in the book is when he states his belief that there is no terrorist threat.

In contrast to these "heavy topics," one of the most enjoyable parts of the book comes toward the end where Moore has devoted an entire chapter to "How to Talk to Your Conservative Brother-in-Law." In this particular section, Moore gives tips on how to talk to those overbearing conservatives that do not budge on issues of welfare and tax cuts.

Readers will find it hard to put this book down because of Moore's matter-of-fact writing style and his decidedly cynical take on present day America. What makes this book so different from others that deal with politics and administration is that Moore makes it comical. Readers will undoubtedly find themselves smiling and laughing at the ironic ways Moore poses questions and makes comments. In a sense, he is making fun of the Untied States and the man who rules this country now.

COURTESY MGM

Riding the success of his documentary "Bowling for Columbine" and his last book "Stupid White Men," Michael Moore released "Dude, Where's My Country?"

Moore, however, does not make everything comical. He certainly does not hold back the vicious statements that he hurls at Bush. "So why exactly were brutal dictators being wined and dined in your state when you seem to be against brutal dictators?"

Readers will ultimately have to ask themselves where they stand on the issues surrounding Bush's presidency. They may even question what America really stands for. Moore completely succeeds in his desire to tear Bush down. Readers, however, may find themselves not wanting to read on, in fear that they may read something completely horrific about the administration that is running our country. "But America was doing far more than just handing Saddam Hussein the stepping-stones for chemical, biological and nuclear weapons."

All (even conservatives who cringe at the thought of Michael Moore) should read this gem of an account on the Bush presidency. It is truly an eye-opening account of the country we are now living in — post 9/11.

P. Diddy clothing line in trouble with labor group

By Madison J. Gray
Associated Press

NEW YORK (AP) – Sean John, the clothing line of rap music mogul Sean "P. Diddy" Combs, is under scrutiny from a workers' rights group for allegedly using laborers from a Honduran sweatshop.

The director of the anti-sweatshop National Labor Committee, Charles Kernaghan, released a report Tuesday detailing poor working conditions at the Southeast Textiles factory in Choloma, Honduras, where Sean John clothes are made.

Kernaghan and 19-year-old Lydda Eli Gonzalez, a former worker at the factory, stood outside the site of a Sean John store set to open next spring as Gonzalez described the alleged abuses that took place at the factory.

"We should be paid what we're owed. We make so little that it's not enough to have a dignified life," said Gonzalez, who said she was fired after she tried to organize a union.

Workers are subjected to daily body searches, contaminated drinking water and 11- to 12-hour daily shifts, the report said. In exchange, they are paid 24 cents for each $50 Sean John sweat shirt they sew.

The factory owner, Steve Hawkins, told The Associated Press in a telephone interview that Gonzalez was a disgruntled worker fired for producing poor quality merchandise, not clocking in when she arrived and repeatedly arriving late.

Hawkins, a native of North Carolina, said the charge that conditions at his factory were substandard "is completely groundless."

When Gonzalez was fired, she received a severance check equivalent to two-and a-half months' salary, Hawkins said. And while the minimum wage in Honduras is 55 cents an hour, he said his workers make an average of 90 cents per hour.

A representative of Sean John said the clothing line was unaware of the conditions alleged by Kernaghan.

"We had absolutely no knowledge of the situation; however, we take these matters very seriously," said Jeff Tweedy, executive vice president of Sean John. "We have a director of compliance who will be looking into this matter immediately."

The report also found women were given mandatory pregnancy tests, and that those who tested positive were fired, Kernaghan said.

The abuses are violations of Honduran labor laws but are rarely enforced for fear of corporate divestment, Kernaghan said. His organization's repeated attempts to contact Sean John have gone without a response, he said.

Kernaghan said the study was not an attack on Combs.

"This is his company," Kernaghan said, pointing toward the store at Fifth Avenue and 41st Street. "He could turn this around tomorrow. He could set a new standard."

Sean "P. Diddy" Combs is under attack from the National Labor Committee for allegedly using sweatshop laborers in Honduras to make his "Sean John" clothing line

Free Rides!
Halloween Weekend
Around Amherst

You never know what might be lurking...
Call 413-253-5972
Halloween weekend
Friday and Saturday
Night
10pm-2am
www.knowmercy.org

The
BLUE WALL PUB

THIS WEEK at
The BLUE WALL PUB

MONDAY — Nancy Cole
Karaoke 7-11
Monday Night Football

TUESDAY — Open Mic from 7-11

WEDNESDAY — Bill Arnold
DJ-Rhythm Systems

THURSDAY — Mpeli Mwakaliku
DJ-DMAD

FRIDAY — HALLOWEEN PARTY
Richard Mwandemand
DJ-Aquarius

SATURDAY — Mpeli Mwakaliku
DJ-DMAD

LIVE MUSIC starts at 9:00PM.
OPEN MIC starts at 7:00PM. The Sign-Up sheet goes out at 6:00PM. Bring your talent and your friends and your instruments. We'll provide the stage and sound equipment and 20 minutes for you to knock'em dead!
ALL MUSICAL STYLES are encouraged to participate!
AS ALWAYS, 18+ to party, 21+ to drink.

The very best of the very unknown horror films to rent this Halloween season

Continued from page 6

waiting to scare the little kids trick or treating in your neighborhood.

But what do you rent? Well, here's a sampling that might keep you entertained over the long haul of the Halloween weekend.

'House of 1000 Corpses' (2003)
Dir: Rob Zombie. Cast: Bill Moseley, Karen Black, Sid Haig. Rated R. 88 mins.

Rob Zombie's gruesome, campy thriller pitches a quartet of callow youngsters into a nightmare of slaughter and destruction at the hands of a demented Texan family. Sound familiar? It has to be said that "House of 1000 Corpses" owes a huge debt to the legendary "Texas Chainsaw Massacre," the recently remade low-budget masterpiece about a highly dysfunctional southern family. But Zombie's genetic restructuring of the "Massacre" format has its own gory rewards.

Here the doomed youngsters are two couples in researching roadside attractions when they make the mistake of stopping at the serial killer museum owned by the creepy, clown-faced Captain Spaulding (Sid Haig.) When Jerry (ex-"Singled Out" host Chris Hardwick), the most obnoxious member of the group, goes in search of the truth behind a legendary local murderer named Dr. Satan, the foursome becomes involved with the Firefly family and are plunged into terror.

Prior to its release, there was a lot of to-do made about the movie's supposed nastiness; no less than two major studios dropped the film like a hot potato and "Corpses" languished for two years on Zombie's shelf before being rescued by Lions Gate Films. But for all the surface silliness of Zombie's bloody knockout, there's a genuine aura of dementia to the film. It's formulaic and often cheap, but "House of 1000 Corpses" is a truly disturbing and discomforting picture, a movie that makes you feel uneasy every second that passes by. There aren't any real jump-out-of-the-dark cheap jolts to be had, which is quite a good thing. This is a horror movie that gets right under your skin and stays there.

'Ginger Snaps' (2001)
Dir: John Fawcett. Starring Katherine Isabelle, Emily Perkins, Kris Lemche. Rated R. 108 mins

"Ginger Snaps" is a movie in which a young woman's menstrual period is compared to the cycle of a lycanthrope. And I can't imagine why this movie didn't make it to many theaters when it was released.

As unpromising as the kernel of its story is — and for most people, especially guys, it probably is quite off-putting — the movie is quite a nasty jolt in the side for horror aficionados. It's the story of Ginger and Bridget Fitzgerald (Katherine Isabelle and Emily Perkins), two Goth-styled teen sisters who are content to be depressive outcasts at school. Both girls stand scowling in the corner — Ginger the tough older girl, Bridget the quiet younger girl — and for class, they design a slideshow of phony, gory suicide scenes.

One night, while a full moon hovers fat in the sky, the girls are attacked by the Beast of Bailey Downs, a large white creature that has been killing the neighbor pets, and Ginger is bit. Soon she begins changing; she begins to become more sexual, more flirtatious and more outgoing … oh, and she develops a tail.

It's a brilliant idea, really: equating the cycle of the werewolf with the cycle of a young woman. It gives director John Fawcett and writer Karen Walton, playing into the sensitivity of the material without sacrificing the horror, ample chance to dissect the tumultuous, confused lives of young teens. Ginger and Bridget are both fully realized characters with shades of dark and light, and both Isabelle and Perkins give wonderfully nervy performances. Fawcett's keen direction pays the ultimate tribute to its characters by treating them with respect and does a nice job of conveying the banality of suburbia. This is a spectacular, multi-layered horror-drama, one that both discusses the topic of teen angst in a perceptive, sympathetic manner and delights in wallowing in bright red sprays of blood.

'Dog Soldiers' (2002)
Dir: Neil Marshall Cast: Sean Pertwee, Liam Cunningham. Rated R. 105 mins.

Along with "Ginger Snaps," this viciously entertaining roller coaster ride gives a comeback to the werewolf movie. Unlike "Ginger Snaps," this giddy action-packed thrill ride doesn't strive for social relevance or metaphorical underpinnings. It just wants to kick butt, and it does so — hard.

"Dog Soldiers" borrows plot points from the 1987 Schwarzennegger extravaganza "Predator" with a group of soldiers battling a nasty animal menace in the forest. This time though, it's a British troop on a war games mission that comes in contact with a pack of hungry, powerful, seven-foot bipedal werewolves. The monsters trap the squad in an isolated cabin, with the dwindling numbers left to fend for themselves with increasingly smaller amounts of ammo.

This is one killer ride, even if it's a really familiar one. "Dog Soldiers" has some of the coolest looking werewolves of any lycanthrope picture; they're tall, lean, gangly beasts covered in matted gray fur. The monsters tower over the soldiers like drooling, dripping basketball centers, and the image is damn striking. The pace of "Dog Soldiers" is non-stop, loaded with graphic monster attacks, blazing automatic weapons and inhumane betrayals. It's just good, gory fun.

'Ravenous' (1999)
Dir: Antonia Bird. Starring Guy Pearce, Robert Carlyle, David Arquette. Rated R. 100 mins.

"Ravenous" features a hip, indie-ready cast (Guy Pearce, Robert Carlyle, Jeremy Davies, David Arquette and others) playing with a quirky, grisly smorgasbord of blackly comic horror. This is an arty and eccentric film about cannibals in the Old West, and adventurous souls may be pleased with their little find.

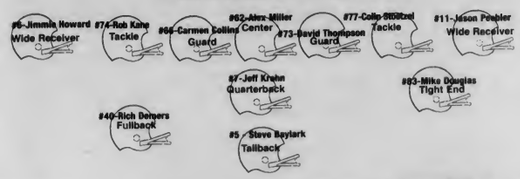
It begins with Pearce, a cowardly soldier who by chance wins a battle in the Spanish-American War, sent to remote outpost in the Sierra Nevadas filled with other military misfits. He isn't there long before a scrawny Scotsman (Carlyle) stumbles into the camp with a horrifying tale of survival and cannibalism. A rescue party is formed to find the rest of the man's party — only it becomes abundantly clear far too late that this man is far from what he seems.

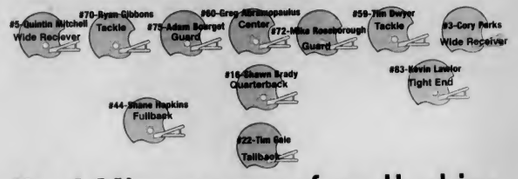
Already a burgeoning cult film, this under appreciated oddity is exactly what bored horror fans are looking for: distinct, unusual, willing to go beyond the norm for a few sick laughs or disoriented scares. Well-acted for its genre, stylishly directed by Antonia Bird, and featuring a nicely weird, disjointed score by Damon Albarn and Michael Nyman, this little, disgusting gem is a sick keeper worth finding.

■ ■ ■

If you wanna spend a night out with the friends getting drunk, or if you just wanna stay home all night long noshing on mounds of chocolate and fruit-flavored sugar, or if you wanna throw a ghoulishly good Halloween party, these film choices — from the action packed to the nutty and disturbing — are a good choice to start the festivities … before you get into those crappy B-movies from the '80s.

Happy Halloween, everybody. Now don't forget to send me chocolate …





Northeastern (5-3 3-2 A-10)
@
No. 4 Massachusetts (7-1 5-0 A-10)
Saturday 12:30 p.m.
McGuirk Alumni Stadium (17,000)

GERALD R. LINDQUIST/Collegian

Sophomore tailback Steve Baylark has rushed for 677 yards in seven games on the season.

No. 4 Minutemen to face Huskies

Continued from page 12

left to want this game a little more," Whipple said. "And I think our seniors want it bad too, because they've never lost to [Northeastern] at home."

One problem facing the Maroon and White this week, as it has for the majority of the season, is injuries. With linebacker L.A. Love bothered by a bad ankle, and still without starting cornerback Bobby Boyer, defensive coordinator Tom Masella may have to do even more mixing and matching in his depleted secondary, as starting strong safety Anton McKenzie is questionable and may not see much action.

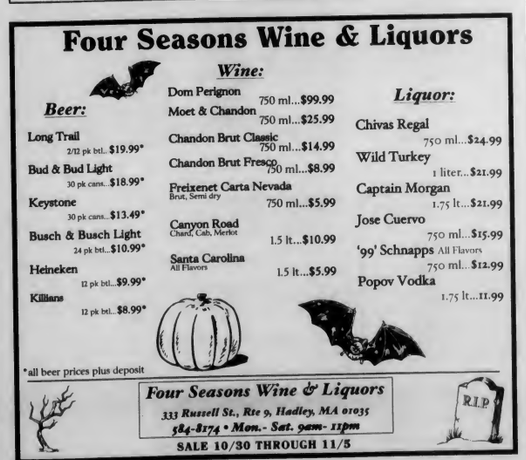
No. 42's absence could prove costly after partially tearing a quad in last week's win. Whipple, however, feels that UMass will be ready to play without its tri-captain.

"We've already gone a whole half without him, and its harder if you lose someone in the middle of a game," he said. "We're not sure if he can go or not, but we at least have a plan if he's on the shelf."

The news is not all bad on the injury front for the Minutemen, however, as leading receiver Jason Peebler is expected back from a hamstring injury along with fellow wideout Dominique Stewart, who separated his shoulder.

Tailback Rammy Rosario, who saw spot action against the Wildcats, is also expected to play, but in a limited roll. However, that may change if tailbacks Rich Demers and Steve Baylark are unable to get untracked, as was the case last week when the duo rushed for a total of 78 yards on 24 carries.

In addition to establishing its own rushing attack, Whipple knows that his team must stop the vaunted Husky ground game to be successful, as tailbacks Tim Gale, Peter Harris and Anthony Riley have rushed for 527, 493 and 397 yards on the season, respectively.



As a team, the Huskies have gained just over 2,000 yards on the season. However, the Maroon and White possess the nation's fifth-ranked rush defense, allowing only 89.8 yards per game on the ground and will look to force NU and quarterback Shawn Brady to throw.

On the season, Brady is 82-of-163 for 1282 yards, an average of 160.2 ypg. He has thrown for nine touchdowns and five interceptions.

"We feel better about stopping their run than we did last year," Whipple said. "But [Tim] Gale is healthy for them, and they have a good line and a good scheme and they know what they want to do."

Defensively, NU is led by All-Conference Performer and Buck Buchanan Award candidate Liam Ezekiel. The junior linebacker has 79 tackles on the season, to lead the Huskies, including 30 solo stops.

Hey Seniors!
Need help with your job search?

Come to one of our Job Search Workshops!

Today! Tuesday, Nov. 4
3:00 pm

Wednesday, Nov. 5
12:00 pm

Thursday, Nov. 6
1:30 pm

All Job Searches made easy
Workshops take place in 104 Career Services Bldg. (across from Newman center)

For more Information about our workshops, go to www-ccn.acad.umass.edu
or call us at 545-2224

CareerServices

Dartmouth topples UMass

Stucker's three goals pace Big Green

By Paula Aden
Collegian Staff

With a 3-1 loss to Dartmouth last night, the Massachusetts field hockey team's record has dropped to 3-15 (1-4 Atlantic 10.) Although the Minutewomen dominated in every aspect of the game, they were unable to turn their opportunities into goals. The Big Green (4-10, 1-4 Ivy League) earned their first road victory of the season last night, with senior Rebekka Stucker scoring all three of the team's goals.

Dartmouth	3
UMass	1

The first goal of the night was unassisted, following a barrage of three consecutive shots on goal by sophomore Lindsay Gossage. Junior goalie Christine Tocco saved all three shots, but Stucker caught the rebound of the third attempt and managed to slip the ball into Tocco's cage.

Dartmouth's specialty this season has been penalty corners. The final two goals — one in each half — were scored in identical fashion.

"We know that they're playing for one specific play in the game, and we can't let them do it," Massachusetts coach Patty Shea said.

The Big Green earned two penalty corners in last night's game. Both times Gossage set up the penalty corner with a pass to Averill Doering, who stopped the ball for Stucker. Stucker's shot flicked into the corner of the net, where Tocco was unable to stop it.

"We dominated the entire game," senior Kristin Hopwood said. "We just can't get it in and we had bad luck with that girl [Stucker] who could just flick it right in the corner, and you can't do anything about those. There's no girls even anywhere in the country who can do that."

Knowing that penalty corners were the Big Green's forte, the Minutewomen tried to prevent any from occurring. Despite their best efforts, Dartmouth was awarded two penalty corners, and managed to convert both into goals with their practiced maneuver.

"They had one specific skill, that worked well for them, and we knew that was what they were going to have," Shea said. "It was one of the jobs not to give it to them, and we gave them two opportunities and they took advantage of it. That's a credit to them, that's a credit to their skill, to their specialty player to do that."

The sole goal for UMass was scored halfway through the second half by freshman Sarah Mulvanity. The unassisted tally was Mulvanity's first of the season.

"I was excited [to get my first goal]," Mulvanity said. "Now I have confidence I can do it again."

The Minutewomen had several chances to score, but were simply unable to convert any into goals. UMass had 19 shots, forcing Dartmouth goalie Lauren Balukjian to make 11 saves. The Big Green took 12 shots, and Tocco earned eight saves during the game.

"I just thought the fact that we played the entire game — usually we're sort of up and down, up and down — but we played the entire game really strong. We outcornered them, we outshot them, and by, like, twice as much," Hopwood said.

"We totally dominated," Shea agreed. "We controlled the ball, we were in their circle, we outshot them, outcornered them. We did a little bit of everything; it's just being a little bit more aggressive to finish down there."

The Minutewomen finish out their season this Saturday at Garber Field against the University of Rhode Island. The game starts at noon, and will honor Hopwood prior to its start.

"Saturday's game is really critical," Shea said. "That's our starting point for the beginning of next season, and I think it's really, really critical."

The Rams are currently 7-11 overall, and 1-3 in the A-10. URI has managed 149 shots and 20 goals against its opponents this season, compared to UMass's 145 shots and 13 goals.

"We want it," Hopwood said about this Saturday's game against Rhode Island. "We're not going to go down 1-5 in our conference. We're gonna win this game. Plus it's senior day. We never lose on senior day."

Gerald H. Ling/Collegian

Freshman defenseman Mark Matheson and UM will look to stay perfect against the PC.

Gerald H. Ling/Collegian

Adrianne Monaco and the Minutewomen fell to Dartmouth in their second to last game of the season.

UM set for Friars

Continued from page 12

Geopfert has posted a 3-0-0 record along with a 2.75 goals against average and 90.2 save percentage. Geopfert was just one of the names Cahoon touched upon when discussing the strengths of the Friar squad.

"Their goaltending was very good," Cahoon said. "Goepfert who was knocked out of the BU game is a very solid goaltender. They've got strength in the goal. They have a really strong senior defender in Stephen Wood, who's a really good leader; and they have a host of forwards that are good. Probably the most dominating forward is Chase Watson, who scored some big times goals for them.

As far as changes in the lineup for this upcoming contest are concerned, coach Cahoon said that no drastic changes have been done.

"We made a couple of subtle changes with our lines," Cahoon said. "I think other than that things should be basically status quo. There's always one or two people moving in or out, which will be the case this weekend."

Chicago Pizzaria

What is a pirate's favorite kind of pizza?
Hot Chicago PizzARRRia with ARRRtichokes!

FREE DELIVERY!
549-6073 Located on the corner of Fearing St.
Open Sun Wed. 11AM - 1AM and Sunset Ave.
Thurs Sat. 11AM - 3AM 150 Fearing St.
We accept all major credit cards and OCMP!

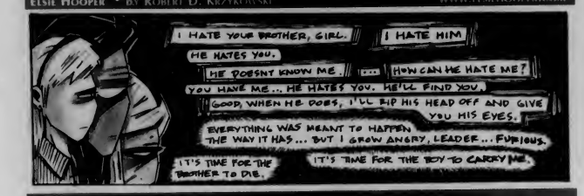
Oasis Body Wraps and Tanning
243 Russell St.
Hadley, MA 01035
(413) 587-9742
NOW FEATURING SUN SPRITZER UV FREE TANNING
• The first UV FREE tanning machine in the area
• Get $5.00 off your first visit
• A rich golden tan in just a few seconds
• You'll look and feel great
1/2 Price tanning every Tuesday
Conveniently Located
OASIS • Hampshire Mall • University Drive • UMASS • Route 9

www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT
PRE-REGISTRATION FOR SPRING 2004
The Writing Program Placement Test
will be offered on:
MONDAY, NOVEMBER 3
@ 7 P.M.
IN TOBIN 304
This test is a pre-requisite for enrollment in Englwrit 112/113, College Writing.
(This is the last scheduled test before registration)
This test may be taken only once.
Students do not need to register for the test.

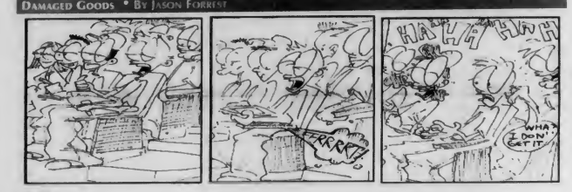
Can't Afford to be Sick?
Get a Flu Shot!
Flu Clinic Dates:
November 7
November 11
Cost: $15.00
University Health Services
150 Infirmary Way, UMass
Call 577-5101 for an appointment. uhs

Nick's...for the morning after
63 Main Street, Amherst
Traditional & eclectic breakfast fare, featuring a Southwestern flare, Jewish favorites, & vegan items.
20% STUDENT DISCOUNT
Monday-Friday for the fall 2003 semester
Monday-Friday 6:30am-2pm
Satuday & Sunday 7am-2pm
256-4643
OCMP



Get Fuzzy • By Darby Conley

1 in 40 Billion • By Mechanic Rosati



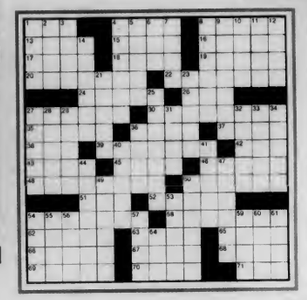
Elsie Hooper • By Robert D. Krzykowski www.elsiehooper.com

That's What She Said • By Derrick Genova

Damaged Goods • By Jason Forrest

Quote for the Day

People do not like to think. If one thinks, one must reach conclusions. Conclusions are not always pleasant.



-Helen Keller

Today's Crossword Puzzle

Across
1 — Soo Jung
4 Wrestling type
8 Stockholm native
12 Buddy, as a boss
15 Mouse catcher
16 Commotes
17 Constantly
18 Efficient
19 Romantic
Valentino
20 Yellow race
22 Breakfast foods
24 Teen-age
25 Beauty of "Superman II"
27 Electrical unit
30 Store owner
34 Unchanging
35 Have supper
37 Worldwide Websites
38 Magazine filers
39 Acts speakers
42 Golf teacher
43 Bowling alley
45 Sump for EPA's
46 Fashion
48 Exhaust part
50 Frothy dessert
51 Consume
52 Flakes
54 Sailor
56 Store computers
62 Eastwood of Hollywood
63 Brickmaker's oven
66 Send forth
67 Horse
68 Old Vargas canal
69 Cable need
69 Polar explorer
70 Garden intruder
71 Beat softly

Down
1 Waistband item
2 Yielded
3 Cookie, sAmond
4 Uccello figure
5 Not rural
6 Bad, for Pierre
7 Oil org.
8 Flowerly shrub
9 Immersed
10 "Paint the Sky with Stars" composer
11 Wooded valley
12 Annexes
14 Kind of rug or beads
21 Sculpture pen-ego
23 Ms. Blake
25 — Ima's team
27 Separate
28 Newspeople, collectively
29 "Home Alone" Joe
31 Baseballer Cabrera
32 Unnumbered gains
33 Ms. Merkerson
34 — Island Red
36 Moist
40 Country singer Bonnie
41 Tread heavily
44 Movie dancer Verdon
47 Outdated, as clothes
49 Sweet roll
50 Signed loudly
53 Dragon of Dunsinery
54 Sgt. Preston's dog
55 Roosevelt Wheaal
56 — colada
57 Distort, as data
58 Leave out
60 Type opinion
61 Type of ladder
64 Negative emotion

Dining Commons Menu

DC Contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Shepherds Pie
- Captain's Catch Sandwich
- Lentil Chili (vegan)

DINNER
- Flank Steak
- General Tso's Chicken
- Penne with Spinach & Tomato (vegan)

Daily Weather Forecast

For Amherst

THURSDAY
- High: 60
- Low: 37

FRIDAY
- High: 63
- Low: 42

SATURDAY
- High: 67
- Low: 42

Production Crew

On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Jennifer Eastwood
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Brendan O'Meara
COPY EDITOR
Sheryl Wolnik
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Scott Pihl
PRODUCTION STAFF
Oliver Chong/ Katie Dwan

Love the Comics? Hate the Comics? Want to Draw Comics? Let us know.
collegiancomics@yahoo.com

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Put a puzzle together.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Chapstick is key in cold weather.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Go shopping for your Halloween costume. You're running out of time.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Do your laundry. You're almost out of socks and underwear.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
People are sarcastic. Try to be like them.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Live life in full color. Black and white went out in the '60s.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Don't doubt people. They will come through for you.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Aim to be as smooth as jazz.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Go to Canada. Drink Labatt Blue while you're there.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Don't stress. That thing you lost is behind your monitor.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Don't be a know-it-all. They are really obnoxious.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Always write in pencil. Erasing is important.

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

ANNOUNCEMENTS

ETA SIGMA PHI Classics book and bake sale October 30-31st Thursday and Friday 9am-3pm Present this ad for 50¢ off, Herter Hall Lobby

Fraternities-Sororities- Clubs-Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with a proven CampusFundraiser 3 hour fundraising event. Our free programs make fundraising easy with no risks. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so get with the program! It works. Contact CampusFundraiser at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campus-fundraiser.com

AUTO FOR SALE

1992 Honda Prelude SI, Loaded, $3900 587-0242

AUTO FOR SALE

1999 Explorer XLT 4x4 Excellent Condition Sunroof 6cyl. Loaded $12,500 Call 546-3477

Suzuki Sidekick SUV, Manual, 1996, good condition, 3800/bo. 577-1532/ 549-9182, www.taylanyildiz.com/suzuki

1991 Toyota Camry Wagon, AC/Power 117,000 miles, reliable. $2500 549-4060

$500!!! Cars from $500!!! Police Impounds for listings. 1-800-319-3323 ext4554

93 Pontiac Bonneville SDN All Power Must Sell $1500 B/O 253-5537

EMPLOYMENT

$875.00 WEEKLY INCOME Mailing our Postcards from home. No experience necessary. FT/PT. FREE supplies. Call 1 (708)686-0300 (24 hours)

Landscaping Services: Part-time positions available for fall clean-up and snow work. Need to be ambitious, hardworking, own transportation, and flexible hours. Call Steve at 413-665-3493

Earn 10K+/month potential from home Training provided Free info. 800-896-9413

Internship: Motivated students seeking leadership outside the box. Gain experience in all aspects of running a small business. Average pay: $9300.00 Call 508-246-1230

EMPLOYMENT

Movie Extras/Models Needed For local Casting Calls No exp. or age required EARN up to $200 a day 1-888-820-0167

Telephone Interviewers NO SALES! Conduct interviews over the phone at our Hadley location Flexible Evening and Weekend Hours $7.50/hour to start 20+ hours/week PVTA accessible For more info: 1-888-423-5381 FMI

Bartender Positions Make up to $300/shift No experience required. Great College Job 800-806-0084 ext 1525

Visa/Mastercard approval agents earn $1,000/week potential. No experience necessary. Call 1-800-821-3416 ext.145

EMPLOYMENT

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

!Bartending!$ $250/day potential No experience Nesc Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext 162

INSTRUCTION

University Bartending Classes Start Soon 1-800-U-CAN-MIX Call now for information!!! Space is Limited www.universitybartending.com

LOST

Lost: Wallet Near Parking garage 10/14 If found please call with description 413-237-1015

SERVICES

All Digital Productions Pro Videography for Weddings, Bar Mitzvahs, Commercial (508)221-8223 sweep-picker@yahoo.com

SHEAR BLISS DAY SPA SERVICES Body Sugaring (waxing) for men and women *Safe *100% Natural *Effective 253-2322 https://shearbliss.image411.com

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

TRAVEL

Spring Break – Nassau/Paradise Island, Cancun, Jamaica and Acapulco from $489. Air, Hotel, Transfers, Parties and More! Organize small group-earn FREE TRIPS plus commissions! Call 1-800-GET-SUN-1

Spring Break-Sign up with Student Express and get Free roundtrip airline tickets to over 15 international destinations- including Aruba, Dominican Republic, Costa Rica, Caribbean hot spots and more. Why go with anyone else? Limited offer call now. Commission rep positions also available 1-800-787-3787 www.studentexpress.com

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Destinations, including Cruises! Foam Parties, Free Drinks and Club Admissions. Rep Positions and FREE trips Available. 1-800-231-4386 www.EpicureanTours.com

A "Reality" Spring Break 2004's Hottest Prices Book now .. Free Trips, Meals & Parties www.[illegible].com or 1800-426-7710

TUTOR

Math/Physics Tutor $30/Hr plus travel Call Dr. Kline 413-552-3805

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE: Visit the Campus Center Basement or call 413-545-3500

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 30, 2003 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Battle of the Bay State

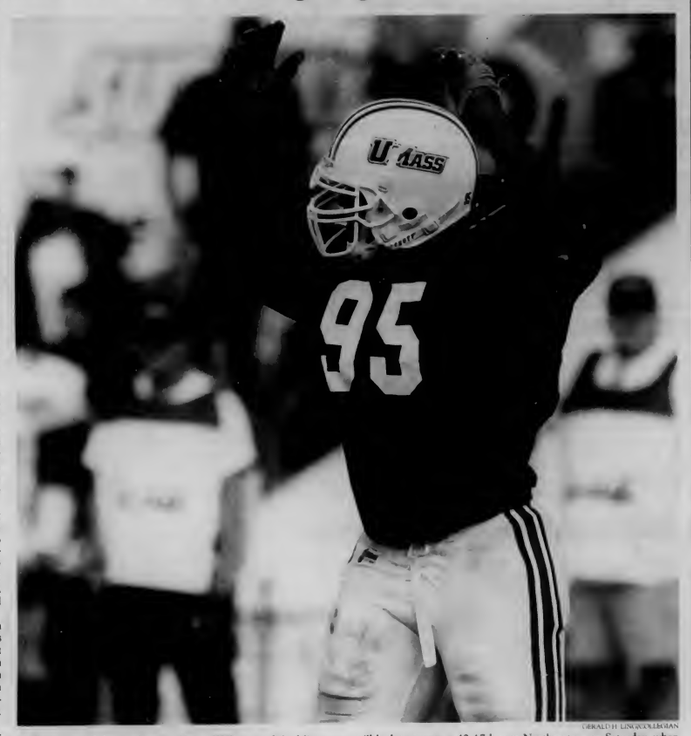
No. 4 UMass to seek revenge against Northeastern

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

Coming off of an emotional, last-second win over undefeated Villanova, and with a colossal showdown at second-ranked Delaware looming in two weeks, the Massachusetts football team could be poised for a letdown Saturday when it hosts intra-state rival Northeastern (5-3 3-2 Atlantic 10) at Warren P. McGuirk Alumni Stadium.

However as far as coach Mark Whipple is concerned, the 42-17 thumping NU handed the Minutemen (7-1 5-0 A-10) at Parsons Field, along with the fact that the Huskies were the preseason choice to win the A-10 as well as the top ranked team overall in Street & Smith's preseason poll, is enough to motivate his team.

"I'm concerned where we're at after the win at Villanova," Whipple said. "As physical and as high level a game as that was last week, [an emotional letdown] has to be a concern.



"But this is a really huge game, and they have a really good team and they proved that last year when they played us. All I have to say is 42-17 —it's embarrassing. We didn't play physical and they beat us in every phase, so the guys have circled this one on the calendar a long time ago."

In addition to snapping UMass' 16-game winning streak in the series between the two schools, last season's victory for Northeastern was also the only blemish on an otherwise perfect record in 15 games against I-AA teams for senior tri-captain and quarterback Jeff Krohn.

The game also marks a chance for UMass' senior class to graduate without having lost to the Huskies in Amherst. In fact, the Minutemen have won 11 consecutive contests with NU in the Pioneer Valley, including nine straight at McGuirk Alumni Stadium.

"I think its human nature for

Continued on page 9

GERALD H. LING/COLLEGIAN

Sophomore defensive lineman Keron Williams and the Minutemen will look to avenge a 42-17 loss to Northeastern on Saturday, when the Huskies invade McGuirk Alumni Stadium.

BCS needs to be fixed

By Robert Gehrke
Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) – The Bowl Championship Series shuts out too many schools in its goal of crowning a college football champion and needs to be repaired, senators told representatives of the bowl system Wednesday.

"I don't know if you guys know how it looks to fans of teams that aren't part of this system," said Sen. Joe Biden, D-Del. "It looks un-American. It really does. It looks unfair. It looks like a rigged deal."

Created in 1998 by the six most powerful college conferences, the BCS guarantees that the champions of those conferences will play in one of the four most lucrative postseason bowl games, leaving only two at-large berths.

Former BYU coach LaVell Edwards said the BCS system also makes it harder for teams outside the alliance to recruit, since there is little chance the players will ever be able to compete for a national championship.

Division I-A football is the only college sport not to have a playoff system.

BYU, which won the national championship in 1984, is the only team other than Notre Dame outside the six BCS conferences to have won a national championship since 1945.

In the 20 years before the BCS started, only one school other than Notre Dame that is not currently in the Big East, ACC, Big Ten, SEC, Big 12 or Pac-10 played in one of the series' four bowls.

Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, a BYU graduate, said the current system raises enough questions of fairness that it is in college football's best interest to fix it instead of forcing Congress to intervene.

NCAA President Myles Brand said he is open to a system that would be more inclusive, but does not believe that there is a need for radical changes or adoption of a playoff system.

Harvey Perlman, chancellor of the University of Nebraska, said the current system is the fairest way to determine a national champion and provides adequate opportunity for schools outside the BCS to play their way into contention.

A team that finishes in the top 12 of the BCS standings is eligible for consideration, and a team in the top six automatically gets a spot.

And Keith Tribble, chairman of the Football Bowl Association and chief executive officer of the Orange Bowl Committee, said the bowl games are attracting more fans, benefiting their host communities and generating more money than ever, paying out $800 million in the last five years.

"For the past 90 years, bowl games have been the heart and soul of college football. It has never been healthier," Tribble said.

Tulane President Scott Cowen disagrees. In 1998, the Green Wave went through the season undefeated, but were shut out of the top-tier games. A year later, the same thing happened to Marshall.

"There is no doubt in my mind that the current system is unjust and unjustifiable," said Cowen, who also heads a coalition of more than 50 schools that are not part of the BCS.

This year, TCU is 8-0 but was only 12th in the latest BCS standings and could be shut out of a lucrative bowl.

The projected revenue for the four 2004 BCS games is $118 million, but only about $6 million will go to the non-BCS schools unless one of them qualifies for a major bowl game.

Cowen's group is scheduled to meet with the presidents of the conferences in the BCS system on Nov. 16 to discuss potential changes to the BCS.

"If they are allowed to continue that kind of monopoly, they will suffer the same fate of any other monopoly in the country. They will become bloated, inefficient ... and eventually kill the golden goose," said Sen. Bob Bennett, R-Utah.

A Halloween showdown

Minutemen to host HE rival Providence

By Matt Stewart
Collegian Staff

The wait has finally come to an end.

Everything, including practices and the prior games to this point, have served to prepare the Massachusetts hockey team for the part of the schedule that matters.

This weekend marks the start of the heart of the Hockey East Conference schedule for #13 Massachusetts (4-0-0, 1-0-0 HE), as it butts heads with the #14 Providence Friars (4-1-1, 0-1-1 HE) in a home-and-home series starting in Amherst on Friday night and continuing to Providence on Saturday.

"I think this league is such that if you play well home or away, you give yourself a chance of winning, and if you don't, you have very little chance," University of Massachusetts head coach Don Cahoon said. "I think that it's more of a simple fact that we have to play well. It's exciting to get going in the league."

The Minutemen started the Hockey East schedule in their second game of the season against the University of Massachusetts Lowell. Peter Trovato potted a short handed game at the 17:40 make to break a deadlocked tie and give UMass the 3-2 win over the River Hawks, as well as giving the Maroon and White a perfect record in the league (1-0-0).

"We've got one game under our belt," Cahoon said. "But we're into it now. We're going to be up to our hips in it soon. It's exciting for the guys and they know the competition is going to be heightened. We're really looking forward to it."

The Maroon and White have streaked through their season unblemished to this point and have shown gradual improve as the season has progressed. Unfortunately, the Minutemen faced a bump in the road last weekend against Holy Cross, barely edging the Crusaders 2-1, thanks to another game winning goal from Chris Capraro.

"We were about as bad as we possibly could be," Cahoon said. "I think everyone in the locker room recognizes this and hopefully working really hard so that we don't suffer from that again."

Following the Holy Cross game, coach Cahoon said that poor practices were one of the biggest reasons for the performances on the ice. The Minutemen took that into the back of their minds heading into practice this week.

"Practice has been better this week than last week by a long shot." Cahoon said. "I can sense that they know that the games are going to be more significant. Having said that, we're just going to have to take it day by day and that we go into this game with a good set of mind and come ready to play.

"It was a group of people working hard," Cahoon said when asked who or what contributed to the change in practice. "But Tommy Pock, Nick Kuiper, and Mike Warner made it clear to everyone that we need to bare down and focus a little bit more. But it's not about raw, raw. It's about setting your mind to focusing on the time that we have you out there, and I think the kids respected that proposition pretty well."

The Friars are loaded with weapons. However, the biggest threat in the Providence arsenal may be its goalie, Bobby Geopfert.

Continued on page 10

GERALD H. LING/COLLEGIAN

Defenseman Jeff Lang has one goal on the season. UM opens the bulk of its conference schedule when Providence visits the Mullins Center.

The Daily Collegian

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 31, 2003 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 42

Fac Senate approves new graduate courses

By Dan O'Brien and S.J. Port
Collegian Staff

Chancellor John V. Lombardi summed up the briefness of the Faculty Senate's short meeting yesterday when his announcements for the week were, "No news is good news." Deputy Provost John J. Cunningham, who was the only other administrative officer to make an announcement, said only, "I endorse the Chancellor's statement."

The Faculty Senate met for 15 minutes yesterday to approve eight new graduate level courses and accept the annual report of the University Computer and Electronic Communications Committee.

The Annual Report of the University Computer and Electronic Communications Committee, chaired by Joseph G. Kunkel, highlighted the brief meeting. The report mentions the progress made by the Office of Information Technology's network security system.

The OIT's new security system is described in the report as taking a "reactive stance" to isolate security problems on machines on campus before it spreads throughout the entire system.

The OIT security system was mentioned at the meeting, however the focus of the presentation was the progress of SPIRE's new degree audit system for students, a question raised by Senate member Eric Einhorn, a Political Science professor.

Einhorn described the new system as "cumbersome," and said it is more confusing for students to figure out what the audit says. He was referring to the new online form of the degree audit, which is much lengthier than the previous forms of audits, which were printed.

The eight new graduate courses include the following Nutrition classes: 585 "Practical Skills in Nutrition Counseling," 640 "Public Health Nutrition" and 741 "Methods in Nutrition Research." The following Education classes have been added: 611 "Testing, Assessment and Evaluation in Bilingual and ESL Education," 622 "Theories of Educational Equity," 642 "Principles and Practices of Student Affairs Administration," 845 "Current Issues in Higher Education" and 846 "The Academic Profession."

In other announcements Brian O'Connor, the Senate's delegate to the Board of Trustees, stated that Governor Mitt Romney has added $12 million to the capital budget, which will assist the University with funding to complete the newest engineering building as well as deferred maintenance projects on campus. O'Connor also announced that Interim President Jack Wilson reported that the University now has a total of 45 endowed chairs, where as in 1995 the total was four.

The next meeting of the Faculty Senate will be Nov. 13 in Herter Room 227.

EMILIE LOUGHANO/COLLEGIAN

Chancellor John V. Lombardi's announcement at yesterday's Faculty Senate meeting was "no news is good news." The picture above is from a previous Senate meeting.

California fires continue to rage

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Chimneys are all that is still standing as residents and friends sort through a charred home in the Scripps Ranch area of San Diego, Calif. yesterday.

By Brian Skoloff
Associated Press

BIG BEAR LAKE, Calif. (AP) — Fog and drizzle yesterday came to the rescue of firefighters laboring to save resort towns in Southern California from the raging wildfires that have killed at least 20 people.

"It is helping, but it is a long way from putting any fires out," said Ray Snodgrass, chief deputy director of the California Forestry Department. "It's the respite we were hoping for."

The forecast, however, also called for gusting winds that could drive the flames into more homes.

Firefighters dug in to protect hundreds of homes still threatened in San Bernardino and San Diego counties. But only a few hundred acres of thick forest were burned overnight by one of the most devastating and erratic of the fires — a 50,000-acre blaze east of Lake Arrowhead in the San Bernardino Mountains.

"That's minimal for this fire, considering 20,000 burned the first day," said Battalion Chief Dan Odom of the San Bernardino County Fire Department.

The wildfires have blazed for more than a week across Southern California, destroying more than 2,600 homes and blackening around 730,000 acres. Yesterday, seven major fires were still burning in four counties.

On Wednesday, wind-driven flames burned about 350 homes in Cedar Glen in the San Bernardinos.

John Lucas, 38, said he was able to save three houses on his property, including the one where his wife and her brothers were born, by building a $30,000 fire system with two 5,500-gallon water tanks. The system consists of a network of hoses that keep the buildings and the grounds wet.

"It wasn't luck. My family and I expended a lot of preparation just for this scenario," said the former U.S. Forest Service firefighter.

Yesterday morning, the fire had advanced to within 12 miles of the mountain resort town of Big Bear as crews spread fire-resistant gel on houses and cleared debris around them. They were helped by a heavy fog that rolled in overnight. The forecast called for highs in the mid-50s, down from over 100 degrees over the weekend.

"So that's the good news, but there is a red-flag warning for high winds up to 40 mph," said Bonni Corcoran, a fire information officer.

In San Diego County, where the state's largest fire killed a firefighter on Wednesday, many of his comrades wore black bands on their badges. Steve Rucker, 38, died while battling a blaze that has burned more than 270,000 acres and some 1,500 homes. He was the first firefighter to die in this outbreak of fires.

"We have a somber mood and we need to be somber, but it's time to move ahead," incident commander John Hawkins told the firefighters. "Get your chin up and move out."

About 100 fire engines encircled the historic mining town of Julian in the mountains of eastern San Diego County. Saving the town of 3,500, a popular weekend getaway renowned for its vineyards and apple orchards, was the county's top priority.

Light rain, fog and drizzle were reported in Julian, but winds of 25 to 30 mph were expected throughout the day. As the winds picked up, floating embers sparked spot fires near town and forced some crews to retreat.

A blaze of more than 100,000 acres on the line between Ventura and Los Angeles counties was winding down, with cooler weather and high humidity helping firefighters knock down the flames that had come within a few feet of homes.

"I think we're going to nail this one today," said Los Angeles County fire Battalion Chief Scott Poster.

In all, nearly 12,000 firefighters and support personnel were fighting what Gov. Gray Davis said may be the worst and costliest disaster California has ever faced.

The state is spending an estimated $9 million a day fighting the wildfires, a near doubling of the estimate just two days ago. The total cost of fighting the fires could reach $200 million, and the toll on the California economy has been put at $2 billion.

EDITORIAL/OPINION
PAGE 3
GAY ADOPTION
HOMOSEXUALS ARE ABLE PARENTS

ARTS & LIVING
PAGE 4
SPOOKY CAMPUS
HISTORY DEPT. GIVES GHOST TOUR

SPORTS
PAGE 8
BLYLER'S STORY
SOPHOMORE HAS BREAKOUT SEASON

COMICS/CLASSIFIEDS
PAGE 7

N.J. parking garage collapses

Three dead, 19 injured

By John Curran
Associated Press

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — The top five stories of a parking garage under construction at a casino collapsed yesterday, sending concrete slabs and metal beams crashing down as workers ran for cover. Three people were killed and one was missing, officials said.

Officials previously believed four people were dead, but the count was revised yesterday evening, said Michael Schurman, deputy director of emergency management for Atlantic County. Nineteen others were injured.

Authorities, worried about the structure's stability, didn't send rescue crews in right away.

"There is the real potential for a secondary collapse," Gov. James E. McGreevey said.

Robert Levy, the city's director of emergency management, said search cameras and dogs were sent into the rubble of the 10-story garage to locate missing workers, and trucks carrying lumber were being brought in to try to shore up the building. He called it "one of the worst collapses Atlantic City has ever seen."

Construction workers had been pouring a concrete floor deck when a corner of the top floors collapsed, leaving five layers of concrete and steel sloping downward at a steep angle, said state police Capt. Ed O'Neill.

Harold Simmons, 42, a pipefitter was on the second floor of the garage when he heard rumbling around 10:40 a.m.

"It sounded like an earthquake," Simmons said. "The whole building was shaking.

"You didn't know where to run. I tried to run to a staircase, but the staircase was wiped out. I went to another staircase and that one was wiped out."

Simmons eventually made it out by following other workers. He said 300 to 400 workers were at the site when the garage floors collapsed.

The parking garage supports one side of an 18-story hotel tower also under construction as part of an expansion project for the Tropicana Casino and Resort.

"It's a tragedy. We're devastated," said Maureen Siman, a Tropicana spokeswoman.

The project's general contractor, Keating Construction, said in a statement: "This is a difficult time. Obviously, our first concern is the well being of the people that are injured or missing."

Last October, three workers were injured at the Tropicana site when a one-story panel of concrete they were standing on collapsed.

Bill Crilley, 42, an insulator, working at a project in another part of the city, said he rushed to the building after hearing yesterday's collapse and saw authorities carrying one body away.

"It's ugly. Horrific. The whole stairwell is crushed," he said.

The Occupational Safety and Health Administration was leading the investigation into the cause of the collapse.

At the site, construction workers gathered on the street nearby to gaze up at the collapsed floors. Family members began arriving at the scene looking for relatives.

"He was working up there last night, I know," said one distraught woman as she searched for co-workers of her husband.

The Tropicana expansion project is intended to diversify the casino's offerings with forms of entertainment other than gambling, including an IMAX theater, nightclub and restaurants. It had been scheduled for completion next spring.

AMBIKA PANGANAMALA/COLLEGIAN

Arts and Crafts

Srinivas Lamkala, a communications graduate student, makes a mask yesterday in the Student Union Craft Center.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Jennifer Eastwood
Managing Editor Dan Lamothe
Business Manager Peter Foundas
Production Manager Scott Pihl
Night Supervisor Nick Markantonatos
Advertising Manager Sean Costello
Editorial Production Shannon Farrington
Arts & Living Editor Glen Straub
Comics Editor Molly Eggleston
Editorial Editor Paige Cram
News Editor Ferron Salaiker
Photo Editor Gerald H. Ling
Sports Editor Andrew Merritt
Classified Advertising Marty Pappas
Distribution Manager Julie Beauchamp
Finance Manager Greg Stamm
Human Resource Sandra Marquez
Special Issues Betsy Feldman
Assistant Business Ben Ratner
Assistant Advertising David Bor
Assistant Distribution Mark Lagatic
Assistant Finance Richard Pacheco
Advertising Production Liza Lynch
Layout Manager Lindsay Clark
Graphics Advisor Charlie Higgins
Assistant Opinions Linda Wallack
Asst. Arts & Living Meghan Healy
Asst. Arts & Living Cameron J. Woods
Assistant Editorial Matt Reid
Assistant News Morris Singer
Assistant News Erika Lovley
Assistant Photo Emilie Duggan
Assistant Sports Mike Martelli
Assistant Sports Robert McGovern

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Campus Perspectives

By Amelia P. Lincoln

"What are you doing for Halloween?"

freshman
Philosophy major

"I'm going to The Slip in Boston dressed as a bumble bee."
Meg Bell

junior
Theater major

"I'm going to a party."
Adam Derozlers

junior
Nursing major

"I'm going to a house party dressed as Drew Barrymore in 'Charlie's Angels.'" Jennifer Stitzer

freshman
History major

"I'm going to Hampshire Halloween."
Matthew Feldman

sophomore
Mechanical Engineering major

"I'm going to Hampshire Halloween."
Geoff Moss

sophomore
SOM major

"I'm dressing up as a dog and telling people I'm hot."
Tamar Haleui

NEWS MEETING
Monday
6 p.m.

Free Rides!
Halloween Weekend
Around Amherst

You never know what might be lurking...
Call 413-253-5972
Halloween weekend
Friday and Saturday
Night
10pm-2am
www.knowmercy.org

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

Friday, October 31, 2003 Editorial@dailycollegian.com

Unemployment rates: A hopeful look at the future

The unemployment rate in the nation may finally decrease as the economy grows at the fastest rate since 1984. In Massachusetts, the jobless rate is even more appalling than the rest of the nation. One in nine Massachusetts workers is unemployed, underemployed, or no longer looking for work, according to a study by Northeast University's Center for Labor Market Studies.

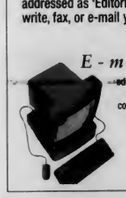
A record low 2.6 percent jobless rate in 2000 is now just a faded memory. In September, the jobless rate was 5.7 percent — and that's just the number of people who are actively looking for a job. A total of 11 percent of Massachusetts workers cannot find enough or any work.

The jobless rate is not expected to decrease rapidly. Unfortunately, the jobless rate increases faster than it decreases. An estimated 55,000 unemployed people in Massachusetts, however, shows that this is a problem that must be solved quickly. It's bad news that the war in Iraq also is showing no signs of subsiding and may be a problem that the nation will have to deal with for quite a while.

Promising, however, is that the economy perked from July to September at the fastest rate in nearly two decades. The gross domestic product grew at a 7.2 percent annual rate during those three months, more than double the 3.3 percent rate in the three percent quarter. Short-term interest rates and President Bush's tax cuts are being held responsible for the economy's upward climb. But those factors are also short-term factors for a complete economic recovery. It is now a challenge to see that the economy continues its surge.

We hope that the Bush administration truly believes and backs its current statements that the economic growth will lead into job creation, which is necessary to drive down the 6.1 percent national unemployment rate. Although huge growth numbers like these cannot always be expected, a continued rise in the economy and job growth should be a priority.

The tight job market has also made it difficult for students graduating from college that have little to no job experience. If there are skilled veteran workers who are being laid off and cannot find a job, the news is not very encouraging to seniors who will be entering the job market next spring. The economy in general has also done a number to the University of Massachusetts, which has experienced budget cut after budget cut due to the failing economy.

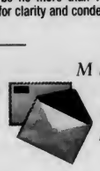


Ultimately, the economic resurgence cannot continue unless there are turnarounds in capital spending and in hiring. After years of a downward slope, the terrorist acts of Sept. 11, 2001 and the war in Iraq, it would be a holiday treat to see the economy and jobless rates recover. Many people who are unemployed are suffering without health insurance and have altered their lives. Those unemployed or underemployed who have families are also seeing their children suffer with them. It is time for a change, and we hope that it will come sooner rather than later.

Information from the Associated Press and the Boston Globe was used in this editorial.

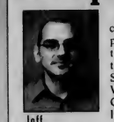
Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

Submit a letter or opinion



In order to be considered for publication, all submissions must include the writer's name, address, and telephone number or e-mail address. Letters should be no more than 450 words in length and addressed as 'Letters to the Editor.' Commentaries should be no more than 750 words and addressed as 'Editorial/Opinion.' Submissions may be edited for clarity and condensed. You may write, fax, or e-mail your submissions to:

E-mail
editorial@dailycollegian.com



Fax:
413-545-3699

Mail:
Letters to the Editor
113 Campus Center
Amherst, MA
01003

Iraqi resistance necessary

Jeff Napolitano

There are certain principles that we, the people of the United States and Western Civilization, like to pride ourselves on. Inherent in much of the talk lately about Iraq is the assumption that a democratic state in which every citizen participates is a desirable form of government. Indeed, the lack of democracy is often touted as one of the ills that plague many parts of the world. The right to vote, the right to freely assemble, and the right to due process, aside from being consecrated formally in the U.S. Constitution, are principles which are often proclaimed as superior qualities which set us apart from "lesser civilized" people in the world.

I happen to agree. I believe that many of the principles set forth in the Constitution, and the lesser-known U.N. Charter, are noble principles. I believe they are not merely arbitrary laws, but affirmations in the dignity of humanity, and an attempt to induce all governments to uphold a standard of human rights which should not be threatened by any authoritative entity. The fundamental basis of the United Nations is expressed in its charter, which calls for, among other things, "to reaffirm faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person". The U.N. Universal Declaration of Human Rights states, "Everyone has the right to take part in the government of his country, directly or through freely chosen representatives". This is, at the very least, the codified intent of all countries that belong to the United Nations.

The U.S. Constitution is the foundation of the moral high ground upon which every domestic politician stands, including the president and his administration. We know that our system of government guarantees, among other things, freedom of the press and speech, and disallows unreasonable searches and seizures, and cruel and unusual punishment. I doubt many will disagree that these are uncalled-for policies; in fact, I'm sure we all understand these to be crucial to a healthy democracy.

If we agree that these principles are indeed noble — that human rights and dignity should be preserved — then, we must support Iraqi resistance against the U.S. government to avoid being hypocrites.

I do not mean we should support the acts of terrorism, which immediately and ultimately harm the people of Iraq. Rather, we should do everything we can to expel foreign — U.S. and other — military and exploitative forces from the country, which are violating every principle I've listed. How can we at once praise democracy and freedom in our words, while at the same time encourage totalitarianism and privatization in our deeds?

If we agree that these principles are indeed noble — that human rights and dignity should be preserved — then, we must support Iraqi resistance against the U.S. government to avoid being hypocrites.

Even if you forgive the Anglo-American invasion and assault upon the country of Iraq, even if you dismiss the human, economic, and ecological destruction wreaked, and even if you forgive the blatant violation of international law and standards of human decency, one cannot forgive the actions of the occupation. They have included innumerable shootings and deaths by the hands of occupation forces (often unaccountable and likely more often unreported), unexplained disappearances of citizens who are put into either the concentration camp near the Baghdad airport or in prison (held indefinitely and inexplicably without due process), soldiers opening fire on unarmed citizens protesting injustices imposed by the occupation forces, and censorship policies imposed on the Iraqi press. The occupation authorities have even gone so far as to re-hire members of the Mukhabarat, Hussein's infamous secret police, whose crimes were supposedly part of the very reason the U.S. invaded Iraq!

To further demonstrate the U.S. occupation's utter disregard for democracy, the "governing council" which was supposed to be a step toward self-governance was not only handpicked by the occupation authorities, but was given no power to run its own country.

Even if an interim authority were to exist to truly aid the transition of power into the hands of the people, the worst possible choice would be the United States. Not only is the U.S. the most guilty of inflicting massive destruction during the invasion, it was the most guilty of the deaths of millions of Iraqi civilians during the decade of sanctions. A true interim authority cannot have such a clear conflict of interest, as demonstrated by the awarding of contracts worth billions of dollars to U.S. companies. Perhaps worst of all, the U.S.-picked finance minister, Kamel al-Kelan, declared last month that every Iraqi national corporation and Iraqi asset will be sold off (excluding the oil industry, of course). Not only has the country been invaded and torn apart, but now those who put themselves in charge have begun to auction off everything of value, all without any input from the people.

By far, the most effective way to support Iraqi resistance is for citizens of the U.S. to come together to demand the extrication of our government from Iraq. If we are not to become the tyrant our leaders claimed with such fervor to depose, we must allow for Iraqi self-determination and control over their own resources. If we are to truly believe that people should be free, and that free people should have such rights as to assemble without being shot, to actually be charged with a crime before being incarcerated to not be persecuted for free speech; in short, if we are not to be hypocrites, we will stop the occupation of the Iraqi people.

Jeffrey Napolitano is a Collegian columnist.

Dad and Dad: A new American family

Erika Lovley

Adoption is a unique and special business in our world, providing a way for people to create families and relationships that otherwise would be impossible.

The applicant pool of adults looking to love and welcome a child into their lives is huge. Unfortunately, the actual adoption screening process is endless and tiring. Paperwork can take up to three years to process. Interviews, background checks, and multiple examinations insure that each family is tailored to suit the needs of the individual child. The process is expensive as well, and can be taxing for the would-be parents. However, the application process is somewhat a test of endurance, determining how badly one truly wishes to have a child in his or her life. Currently, adoption is being tested by a new wave of would-be parents: homosexuals.

Reform is appearing on the horizon for the adoption world. A new study, released by the Evan B. Donaldson Adoption Institute, a non-profit organization that researches and promotes adoption, reports that 60 percent of all agencies now accept applications from homosexuals. Children have been placed with adoptive gay or lesbian parents by 40 percent of the organizations.

Not only is this a great stride for the adoption process, but it is a huge step for homosexuals. Past arguments barring gay and lesbian parents from adopting have been that the couples do not represent a "real family" setting. This jump of accepted applications proves that society is beginning to modify the traditional model of the American family.

How can one define what a true family is? I've witnessed families consisting of a single mother and her children, an uncle and his abandoned nephew, and a 25-year-old and his two baby sisters. I firmly believe that a family should not be judged by the race, gender, age, biological relations, or sexual orientation of its members. A family is not bound to uphold any standard, except to be a nurturing pact between fellow human beings. A family is not the people who physically or biologically compose it; a family consists of the emotional ties that bond the group.

How can the other 40 percent of these agencies reject gay and lesbian applications? They certainly will not turn down the application of a single man wanting to be a father; yet, they will reject a couple just because they are two men rather than a man and woman?

I view this practice not only as a form of outright discrimination, but also as flat out discouraging. The reason agencies should turn down applicants is due to either some sort of ineligibility, such as financial or emotional problems, or over a question of permanence concerning a couple's relationship. Homosexual couples are disadvantaged in this way because in many states, their partnership or marriage may not be recognized.

For instance, agencies do not want to send a child into a situation that may not remain stable, such as a boyfriend/girlfriend co-adoption relationship. Married couples are more likely to have the upper hand because they represent the permanence that a child needs in order to grow. How are homosexual couples expected to document this permanence for the agencies when they are unable to marry in almost every state?

Flexibility should be required of all agencies. No discrimination should be set against one's ability to be a guardian due to sexual orientation. Homosexuality is not infectious; it does not rub off like the common cold. Studies have proven over and over that gay couples can raise perfectly straight children. Perhaps it would make a difference to these tight-fisted adoption agencies if the child himself was gay.

If applicants all undergo the same grueling examination process, all that should matter is the ability and willingness to provide and care for a child, not who the applicant chooses as a partner. Agencies that do not recognize this are not holding the children's lives they care for in the highest regard. They are surpassing open offers of loving families for children who would do anything just to have a home.

Glenn Stanton, representative of the non-profit Christian ministry Focus on the Family, is an example of this narrow-minded train of thought.

"It baffles my mind that we can have this discussion when what our children need," has never been better documented, he said. "We are really fulfilling the desires of adults rather than the needs of children."

In a time when many children traipse through 20 foster homes in the course of their young lives, shouldn't the offers of home, support, and opportunity be accepted with open arms? Stability is what these kids need. Not heterosexual parental figures.

Agencies that have been receptive to gay applicants are truly on the ball. Not only do they recognize the changing ways of the world, but they also recognize that the model of the average 1950's American family was thrown by the wayside long ago.

This reform through adoption agencies is simply another great development for the homosexual community. Along with the recent abolishment of sodomy laws, these changes will hopefully lead lawmakers to the light at the end of the dark-age tunnel and cause the legalization of gay marriage.

Everyone deserves the right to marry, adopt, document, and create the family of their choice. It is the will of the modern world and the will of democracy.

Erika Lovley is a Collegian columnist.

Vandalism: Immaturity at its worst

Jen Hodson

These past few weeks have been a little hectic. Not only have I been preparing for the big and upcoming event, Halloween, which is only a few days away, but I've also been trying to fend off the people who have been vandalizing my car almost every other weekend for the past month.

A few weeks ago my car was egged on a Friday night. I said to myself, "Yes, this is very annoying indeed." I took my car to the car wash before the egg could dry or had any chance of ruining the paint. Luckily, while in the car wash, my antenna was ripped in half. Then I thought to myself, "this is becoming a little too coincidental." There was never a problem with my antenna before. I filled out a damage report form stating my claim, and spent the next couple weeks trying to schedule an appointment to get a new antenna put on my car.

The following weekend I went home because it was Columbus Day weekend. A few days later I returned to school, mostly forgetting about the occurrences. I figured it was probably a drunk person who had been passing by and my car was just one of the unlucky ones. I was wrong.

Damaging other people's property is a serious offense and why people think it's OK to act in this manner is beyond me. I hope one day you do get caught.

That following Friday night, my car was attacked much worse than before. The right side mirror was completely smashed off the side and kicked into the bushes. Okay, now this was getting a little fishy. Was there some weirdo out there who was stalking or perhaps trying to get back at me for some random act that may have pissed him off at one point or another? I wonder. Or maybe I'm taking things a little too far and jumping the gun — so to speak.

So I began to investigate a little bit myself by doing some detective work, and I found out that at least seven or eight more cars, all the same make as mine, were also vandalized. Not to mention that the other cars were also missing a right side mirror. This was definitely not a good sign.

You can never be too cautious, so I decided to eventually head over to the Amherst Police Station. It doesn't take a genius to figure out that the police really can't and most likely won't do anything to better the situation. "Yeah there's nothing we can do," the officer told me. "Well thanks for your time," I said. It's not like they are supposed to be doing any "policing" around here. Come on, what was I thinking? It would be nice if they could maybe patrol the area in which my car or any of the other cars have been attacked numerous times. I guess not though, better luck next time.

Still unsatisfied, I headed over to speak with the manager of the apartment complex in which I reside. I explained to him my current situation and before I could finish, a woman who also works in the office, said, "yeah that happened to my car too!" I looked over in surprise and thought that maybe if someone from the office complains, then something will come out of this. Again, I am wrong.

The manager told me that basically there was nothing he could do. So does that mean there's nothing he can do or nothing he is going to do? Is he really going to leave it at that? I asked him what he meant and he told me it was "legally complicated" and that he didn't feel like getting into it.

Of course, I didn't take no for an answer and inquired as to why there was nothing that could be done. I asked questions like, "Why cant cameras be put up in the parking lots?" "Why can't we monitor what's going on at night?" "What about more security in the area?" Basically it comes down to the manager of the apartment complex being lazy and not caring. It's not his problem so why should he make it his. Spoken like a true slumlord. I can't believe the way students are treated in today's day and age. Give me a break.

So now I'm left with very few options. Either I take my car home for the semester, which isn't going to happen, or find a better place to park and hope for the best. So it all comes down to this Friday night, which is potentially the next due date for my car to be a target. Coincidentally, it will be Halloween.

All I have to say is that whoever thinks they can get away with this kind of behavior is dead wrong. Damaging other people's property is a serious offense, and why people think it's OK to act in this manner is beyond me. I hope one day you do get caught. Until then, please grow up and get a life.

Jen Hodson is a Collegian columnist.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 31, 2003

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Loyalty treated as true royalty

Press Start to Play

Reid 'the Damned' Davenport

SEATTLE — Nintendo of America gave the opportunity of a lifetime to 23 of their college contacts from all over America by giving them an in-depth look at Nintendo's home base last Friday.

This event is the first of what is to be an annual event in which students in journalism and other majors will be flown to Nintendo to see the newest technology. The event included a stay at the Marqueen Hotel, breakfasts and dinners, and a grand tour of Nintendo. It gave college students a look inside the company and a chance to put their names in the hat for a career with Nintendo after graduation.

Twenty-three students arrived by plane from states as far away as Connecticut, California, Oklahoma, Nevada, and Mississippi to see the company firsthand after covering Nintendo games in their respective papers. The event began Thursday as students were hopping on planes to fly out to Seattle's Tacoma airport at Nintendo's expense. The group stayed at the Marqueen Hotel on 600 Queen Anne Ave N. The hotel, built in the early 1900s, was an experience in itself. Students were given the opportunity to rest in rooms that kept the apartment feel that they were originally intended for.

The first evening was spent getting to know each other over dinner at a fancy restaurant called 10 Mercer. The $15 voucher allowed the guys to try a few tasty meals that would normally require a college student to take out a second loan.

After a restful slumber that night, we gathered and met up with Katie Beck, the associate account-ant executive for Golin/Harris, Nintendo's human relations affiliate. She was a young lady who fell into the job by a random chance. Before her job she had never been a video gamer, but once she began working with Nintendo she could not stop playing. She admitted that "F-Zero GX" is her game of choice at the moment and she plays it every chance she gets. Even in her office in Los Angeles.

As the group gathered in the main lobby and began swapping names, stories, and e-mails we crammed into a few shuttle buses to head to Nintendo. After a short drive over the highway we reached Nintendo Headquarters, which was ironically 20 feet away from the Microsoft building. The building was not an over elaborate display outside, but the interior is a whole different story. When walking up to the second floor of Nintendo you get an overwhelming feeling of nostalgia as you see some of the titles you grew up with.

The front lobby was like any other office, with the exception of a Gamecube demo set-up in the waiting area. After getting a few introductions to staff members who were going to be spending the entire day with us, the group was introduced to the next level.

The next level was up a short flight of stairs and everyone's eyes bulged and jaws dropped at the sight. There was the classic "Donkey Kong," "Mario Bros.," and the new "F-Zero" arcade machines.

The "N64" room contained four televisions on each sidewall and one in the front and back. We were introduced to Tom Harlin, the personal relations spokesman for Nintendo. He gave us a run down of how the day would go and took a few quick questions, some serious and some that were humorous.

The video game industry is a $10 billion industry and is just as big, if not bigger, than the entertainment industry, he said. The best-selling video game can make the same amount of money that the biggest box office hits make.

While Nintendo are half a million console sales

Continued on page 5

UMASS ONE VERY POPULAR HAUNT

History Club hosts annual ghost tours

By Matthew 'Wolfman' Consolini
Collegian Correspondent

Looking to get into the Halloween spirit this year? You may not know it, but the University of Massachusetts has plenty of its own chilling and creepy ghost stories that just might keep you entertained this All Hallow's Eve.

The UMass History Club led about 80 students on its annual campus ghost tour Wednesday night, where they recounted the more famous ghost stories of UMass to the crowd of curious students.

According to Ilan Goodman, co-president of the Umass History Club, there has been a long-standing tradition in the club of passing down these ghost stories among members over the years.

It all started in the late 1980s when Patrick Browne, a history major, started doing research on the ghost stories that he had heard from students on campus. Browne, who is now director for the Duxbury Historical Society in Duxbury, passed down his research to the History Club. Though it's not for certain if spirits actually haunt the campus, each story is based on actual events. Browne's research came from Massachusetts Daily Collegian articles, which can be looked up on microfilm in the university library. The annual event draws a very large crowd each fall.

"It's the big event of the year," said Katie Flynn, co-president of the History Club.

Though some of the students didn't believe in ghosts, they were still eager to hear the stories about the campus.

"I like scary stuff, but I'm not usually scared by it," said Camille Torros, a junior history major.

"I don't know if I would say that I believed in the supernatural," said Dave Mussnack, a senior history major, "I try to amass evidence before making a conclusion."

Goodman and Flynn led the students in the dark to the Munson Annex, a former veterinary lab built in 1898. According to Browne's research, a horse had trampled a woman in the building. Later, a frightened secretary resigned because she could hear a horse screaming and running down the hall.

Next on the tour was the Old Chapel, which sat ominously despite the lampposts surrounding it. It is here that in 1920, a car hit a student who was on his way to ring the chapel bells. According to legend, the spirit of this student can be seen trying to make its way to the tower. Flynn said there is also a crypt under the chapel, from which eerie noises can also be heard.

Draper Hall was next on the list. "I hear weird things in my office in Draper," said Kate Boschert, a first year resource economics graduate student. "It's possible it could be haunted."

It is said that the spirit of a young co-ed peeks at visitors from the shadows in Draper Hall, and unlike the other UMass ghosts, she is desperate for human contact. There are also the spirits of two cooks who used to work in the kitchen. One day they got into a heated argument, and one grabbed a knife and stabbed the other. It's been said that screaming can sometimes still be heard from the kitchen. Boschert said she has never heard human voices, but still believes that the building could be haunted.

Students living in Mary Lyon may be sharing their dorm with a visitor from beyond. In the back stairwell a lonely freshman hung herself, only to be found days later. According to Flynn, some residents claim to smell a strange odor in the stairwell that has no visible source. Others claim the lights flicker when people use the back stairs.

Orchard Hill also has it's own ghost. John B. Howard, a student and editor of the Collegian in 1929, was with a friend picking apples in the orchard one day. Howard fell from one of the trees, landing on the ground. His concerned friend went to help him. Howard got up and said he was fine, except he could not open his eyes. This seemed strange to his friend because his eyes were in fact open. The two walked to the infirmary, then in Northeast, but on the way Howard died of his injuries. Legend has it that on certain nights, you can see the form of Howard walking down the path from Orchard Hill.

A spirit is also said to haunt Greenough. At the turn of the century, each dorm was headed by a house-mother. During this time, a widow and her boy lived in the dorm. One winter the child became very ill and died. Many years later, a resident assistant heard the sound of a ball being bounced in the hall. She went to investigate, thinking it was residents engaging in hall sports. She found nobody, but the sounds persisted on a regular basis. One day she saw a boy with a small ball in the hallway. When she approached the child, he immediately vanished. To this day, it is said you can hear the little boy bouncing his ball around the hallways. Shannon McPhee, a senior comparative literature and English major, said she knows students who claim they've heard it.

So if you think you can't find something creepy to do this Halloween, take a tour along the haunted paths of UMass. As Flynn said, "it's our job to keep these traditions alive, but it is up to you decide what you do and do not believe."

Information from the History Club was used in this article.

PHOTOS COURTESY LINDSAY GRAY

BNL reinvents but remains true to form

By Andrew Merritt
'The Impaler'
Collegian Staff

After 15 years, a band trying to reinvent itself runs into the threat of allenating their die-hard fans, the ones who bought the first cassette at a concert, who still sing back the lyrics to all the songs from the first compact disk at shows now. Barenaked Ladies have managed to avoid this malady simply by reinventing themselves with every song.

And it's certainly not easy to keep reinventing over that amount of time, especially with the disasters the band has gone through, from the classic lineup realignment that saw Andy Creegan get replaced by Kevin Hearn, to the near-tragic circumstances of the cancer that nearly killed Hearn just as the band was enjoying its greatest success.

It's a trend that began with 1998's "Stunt," an album that took them out of the obscurity of being a Canadian band with few songs American radio even paid attention to, and made them a brand name, a group relevant to pop music. Part of that came from the fact that they were willing to dull the sharp emotional and satirical edges on their songs, and make them more radio-ready.

The trend continued in 2000's "Maroon," which saw them find a litle pop success ("Pinch Me"), but also opened up their ability to craft songs that sound like simple pop, yet surge with darkness and emotion underneath.

It would appear, with the release of "Everything to Everyone," that they've found the happy medium. BNL finally has found the balance between inserting emotion under the surface, and making the actual sound so user-friendly that nearly every song is sing-able, with pieces that just about any listener can latch on to.

The first single, "Another Postcard," is a perfect example. The first, second, and maybe even third listen of the track will have most wondering how musicians who have been around since 1988, and had nearly three full years to work on a new studio album, wasting time on lines like, "some chimps in swimsuits/ some chimps in jackboots/ some chimps in hard hats/ some chimps who love cats." The reality is that there's a frustration woven underneath the silliness that can be interpreted, as is often the case with this quintet, many different ways.

"Another Postcard's" style is also noteworthy, because a synthesizer/vocoder beginning gives way to Ed Robertson's singing, which alternates between R&B-influenced soul, and an improbable turn into the rapid-fire vocals of an upbeat reggae tune.

Barenaked Ladies
'Everything to everyone'
Reprise

But it's not all departure from the norm on "Everything to Everyone." Fans who flocked to the rock 'n' roll sound of "It's All Been Done" from "Stunt" or "Too Little Too Late" from "Maroon" will be pleased with songs like "Second Best," a classic Barenaked Ladies-style tune. "Second Best" even starts out much like some of the other lesser-known but well-done songs in the BNL catalog, with guitar-driven melody that has just enough electric color to make it closer to the rock side of the pop spectrum.

There's also a very soft side to "Everything," one that was mostly absent from "Maroon." "For You" is Robertson at his best, addressing his object with the same sort of lonely questioning as "Stunt's" "Leave" or "When I Fall," from 1996's "Born on a Pirate Ship." According to the weblog the band put together — clearly a measure to appease fans waiting at long length for another recording — "For You" was a group favorite, but nearly didn't make the record. Listeners will certainly be glad that it did.

There's also a happy medium of the rock stuff and the softer intentions on "Maybe Katie," a song in defense of the date-worthiness of the single mother. BNL doesn't try to make political statements on "Everything to Everyone", which is good because it's never been their forte. They simply stick to social satire, like the somewhat-overdone snipes at Hollywood on "Celebrity," and other moderately poignant personal missives.

It's not a complete success in the venture to reinvent, though, because just as the main single off "Stunt", "One Week," was a bit of a throwaway by BNL's standards — meaningless, bubbly, and catchy to the point of irritation — the track "Shopping" is in the same vein. "Shopping" sounds like there was a base for some sort of silly-yet-smart satire of consumer culture, but it becomes a repetitive, pointless song that will have most fans — at least those of more than two years — skipping to track seven.

"Everything to Everyone" is blessedly unaffected by the incompleteness of "Shopping," and goes on to give BNL a completely new face. What will keep long-time and new fans coming, though, is that it's not an unrecognizable one. The band manages to make their music a new experience every time, without letting the material on "Gordon," "Maybe You Should Drive," and "Born on a Pirate Ship" — the music of their early career that was so important to their development — fade into history.

COURTESY REPRISE RECORDS

The Barenaked Ladies prove themselves on their new album, "Everything to Everyone."

Gamers given the chance of a lifetime

Continued from page 4

behind Microsoft's X-Box, they are ahead of them in software sales. Nintendo doesn't depend on third party publishers, like Capcom and Konami, as much as the others do, but the third parties help Nintendo reach some older gamers. Nintendo and Electronic Arts are the top two publishers in America and Sony almost never reaches the top five.

After his speech, the big topic he addressed was a rumor that Nintendo stopped production on Gamecube because they are planning to release a new console. The rumor was a miscommunication with the press and Nintendo, he said. Nintendo found that many stores had too many copies of the Gamecube and stopped having them shipped over because there was no room for them. However, after the price dropped to $99 a system, stores were demanding a large amount of the systems and the system tripled in sales.

Another question was asked about how healthy Nintendo's handheld systems market was. Tom explained that Nintendo controls about 98-99 percent of the handheld market, so the new release of "N-Gage" by Nokia doesn't bother them in the least because they already have a firm grip on the market.

The more humorous question was If there would be a "The Wizard 2" movie. The original film starred Fred Savage as a boy trying to prove that his little brother, Jimmy, didn't belong in a special needs home. Jimmy would go on to win a Nintendo gaming contest by beating "Super Mario Bros. 3" which was introduced to video gamers via the movie. Tom's reaction was that Nintendo had lost money on movies, the "Mario Bros." movie being the biggest example, and they wish to stick to video games since it's what they know best. This included shooting down any possibility of a "Legend of Zelda" movie any time soon.

The group was then split up. The first half of us started off taking the stroll down memory lane. We were shown the very first Nintendo games, such as the old black and white 3x4" handhelds and card games that were made when Nintendo was first created approximately 100 years ago. Next there was the original Japanese version of the NES called "Famicom" that was a small maroon and beige colored system. Next were the nostalgic cases containing "R.O.B.," a robot accessory for the NES, along with every Nintendo system ever made.

The next part of the tour was the wallet breaking employee store. They had Nintendo games that were much more affordable than in any regular store. The most popular buys were refurbished games that were around $15 each and mini remote control "Mario Kart" racers. Most of the items were not available to the public, so most of us ended up spending close to $100 in the store before moving on to the different offices at Nintendo.

PHOTOS COURTESY NINTENDO

Link squares off with Kiliek in a fight to the death in the Game Cube version of "Soul Calibur II."

The group warped their way over to the main office building, in which we got a chance to try out the latest titles on the available stations before moving on to see the development department. Each office is named after a game character or object. The main thinking and creating room was the "Mother Brain" and the next room was "1-Up." We got to see the door to the testing room, but that is a restricted area for visitors.

Following a short lunch break, the group took a short walk over to DigiPen, America's top video game school. We were given a quick tour by Professor Raymond Yan and got a chance to see how difficult the classes were. The only two options a student gets at DigiPen are to either program or do 3D models. Both require students to take classes six days a week and spend more than 10 hours a day doing projects and taking classes. Raymond also noted that their students do not go only to Nintendo, but many have gone to work for other gaming companies.

After the tour of DigiPen, the group got back together at Nintendo and was introduced to Bill Trinen, Nate Bihildorff, Rich Amtower, and Tim O'Leary. These guys are the ones who take a game sent over from Nintendo Japan and translate it for American audiences. They showed off their latest project "Mario & Luigi: Superstar Saga." It's a new role-playing game for the Game Boy-SP that involves some button mashing in fights and introduces a new kingdom to players.

The team of four explained how they had to clean up some of the language to make this suitable for U.S. audiences. They jumped from the Mario game over to "Animal Crossing," which took them nine months to complete. It was a longer game because they had to change characters and translate dialogue to fit an American audience. An example was a mythical character from the Japanese version would not make sense to an American audience, so they had to change the character completely. They did such a good job at renovating the game that Japan actually took the American version as a basis for a sequel.

The second new game they jumped into was "Fire Emblem" for GBA-SP. This is another role-playing game, but involves more thought than most other games. The game brings a new twist to RPGs, because if your character dies, they are gone for good. You have to build up your characters and keep them all healthy. It looks to be one of the bigger titles to be released for the GBA-SP this year.

The final two games we were shown were "1080° Avalanche" and the highly anticipated "Mario Kart Double Dash." "1080°," when it was released for the N64, was the first 3D snowboarding game ever. Nintendo has kicked it up a few notches for their Gamecube version with better graphics and realistic game play. They said not to expect to do arcade style tricks, but rather do things that are actually possible to pull off, with the exception of outracing an avalanche.

"Mario Kart Double Dash" was mind blowing. The developers had added new characters and features to the game to provide hours of game play. The new buddy system allows two players to control a single kart. There is also a setting that allows you to use LAN play, in which you can play on four separate TVs instead of split screen.

Next came the game testing. We were allowed to test any of the newest titles they had available. Games include the ones mentioned above along with "Viewtiful Joe," "Rouge Ops," "Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles," and out on the display floor there was an "F-Zero GX" arcade game that we could test run.

Most of the games proved to be as big as they were built up to be. "Mario & Luigi Superstar Saga" and "1080°" were said to be disappointments by most of the group. Mario simply didn't have the game play to keep most of us entertained and 1080°'s realism bored testers.

The group was brought to order one more time for a huge "Mario Kart Double Dash" tournament. After a few rounds, Nathan Alday from MSU, pulled off the first place victory and received a GBA-SP with "Mario Advanced 4: Super Mario Bros. 3." Second place winner, Kyle Orland from the University of Maryland, was also given the same prize package. It was an exciting battle that came down to last second item uses that lead to victory for some and sent others to go back to their game testing.

The following morning the group said their goodbyes and took the shuttles to the airport. It was hard to leave Seattle and Nintendo behind, but we all hoped we would be back again some day.

Gov't Mule put together their best for their 'Deepest' CD yet

By Bradley 'Fangs' Farberman
Collegian Correspondent

The impetus for Gov't Mule's new live record, "The Deepest End," can be traced back to August 2000. Founding bassist Allen Woody was found dead in a hotel room in Queens, NY on the 26th and the band's tremendous forward momentum was in jeopardy. The trio, featuring Warren Haynes on guitar and vocals and Matt Abts on drums, was formed in 1994 as a side project; Haynes and Woody, then touring with the Allman Brothers Band (Haynes remains their guitarist to this day), felt the need to branch out. In 1997, the project became a priority, with Woody leaving the Allmans to concentrate on the Mule. Four years into a no-nonsense regiment of touring and recording, the band was in trouble.

Gov't Mule
'The Deepest End'
Capricorn

But Haynes and Abts carried on. Nearly half a dozen records under their belt, the group began updating its repertoire with the likes of bassists Oteil Burbridge and Dave Schools, of the Allman Brothers Band and Widespread Panic respectively. In 2001, Abts and Haynes released "The Deep End Volume 1," a Mule album featuring a different bass player on each of its 13 tracks. Participants included Flea of the Red Hot Chili Peppers, John Entwistle of The Who, and Mike Gordon of Phish. "Sco-Mule," featuring Chris Wood on bass and John Scofield on guitar, was nominated for a Grammy.

"The Deep End Volume 2", released in 2002, followed suit, pairing a different bassist with the Mule on each song. Included this time around were heavyweights like, Jason Newsted, formerly of Metallica, Les Claypool of Primus, and George Porter, Jr. of The Meters.

Which brings us to the present. On May 3, the band staged a performance of epic proportions. At The Saenger Theatre in New Orleans, as part of The New Orleans Jazz & Heritage Festival, the Mule (now augmented by permanent keys-man Danny Louis) performed for six hours, documented here in its entirety on "The Deepest End", a set of two CDs and one DVD. Joining them throughout the evening were a vast array of musicians, many of whom had performed on either of "The Deep End" records, and many of whom had not.

Long time collaborators Dave Schools and Karl Denson lend bass and tenor saxophone, respectively, to a powerful rendition of the Mule original "Blindman In The Dark." Denson's playing is always articulate and pronounced, but especially interesting in this context in that he is not known to play with rock bands. His lines and phrasing retain a jazz feel, but are more aggressive here, and really add a lot to the tune.

Bass deity Victor Wooten joins in on the aforementioned "Sco-Mule," which also features Bernie Worrell, of Parliament Funkadelic and Talking Heads fame, on organ. Wooten, playing with restraint and delicacy, rides the groove until Haynes gives him the nod to let loose. His funk-strewn lead work is reminiscent of his work with Bela Fleck and The Flecktones, and does not disappoint. This version is incendiary.

"Patchwork Quilt" is up next, with Wooten still on bass and Bela Fleck on banjo. This vocal-driven Phil Lesh tune is punctuated by Fleck's short, tasteful solo. Always refined, his playing shines here on this Grateful Dead-ish gem.

Closing out the first disc is the traditional "John The Revelator," filled out by The Dirty Dozen Brass Band horn section, featuring tenor and baritone saxophones, trumpet, trombone and sousaphone. The horns give this tune a real New Orleans feel, appropriate for the setting. The interplay between Sammie Williams' trombone and Roger Lewis' baritone sax is great fun, and Haynes plays slide.

Sandwiched between verses of "Beautifully Broken" is an excellent cover of Prince's "When Doves Cry," all with George Porter, Jr. on bass and backing vocals. A mellow second disk opener, the medley merely hints at what's to come.

"Banks Of The Deep End," an enormously catchy tune, features Phish's bassist Mike Gordon, an old friend of Haynes' who filmed the recording process of "The Deep End" for his documentary "Rising Low." Gordon's playing is solid, and never showy. The Robert Johnson classic "32/20 Blues" follows, with the ubiquitous Will Lee on bass, Sonny Landreth on slide guitar, and Denson on flute. Landreth's playing is sublime, and reaches its greatest heights when dueling with Haynes, also on slide. Arguably, however, the coolest part of the song is the mid-tune flute breakdown, where Denson is accompanied only by Abts.

The Haynes-penned "Slow Happy Boys," a ballad, features Jack Casady of Jefferson Airplane on bass. When Haynes sings that he "tried anything to stop the pain," you can feel the pain and desperation in his voice. Oftentimes, the band's impressive playing overshadows his subtly affecting, emotionally charged vocals, but not here, where his voice takes center stage.

Disk two closes with "Soulshine," the Mule's most lyrically impressive song. "When you can't find the light/ To guide you through a cloudy day/ When the stars ain't shining bright/ it feels like you've lost your way/ when the candlelight of home burns so very far away/ you got to let your soul shine, just like my daddy used to say ... " Haynes' vocals send chills up your spine, as he brings his words to life.

The DVD also includes a number of highlights from the show. A take on Herbie Hancock's "Chameleon," featuring Paul Jackson, Jr., the original bass player on the track, comes off well, and the Dirty Dozen horns add a lot to the track. James Brown's "Down And Out In New York City" also receives a fine treatment, with famed Brown sideman Fred Wesley sitting in on trombone. And "Greasy Granny's Gopher Gravy (Part 1 & Part 2)," featuring Les Claypool on bass, is a fun romp through a psychedelic soundscape, as is anything showcasing the inimitable Claypool on bass.

This marathon exercise in musical ecstasy is a must-have. Three disks chock full of guests from all genres of music and all areas of expertise, not to mention the Mule in top-form (who recently named Andy Hess, formerly of the John Scofield Band, as their permanent bassist), is easy on the ears.

COURTESY ARTISTDIRECT.COM

Warren Hayes, formerly of the Allman Brothers band, shines in his band Gov't Mule.

Rent One of Ours
• Direct Billing to Insurance Companies
• Free Local Pick Up
• Locally Owned and Operated
549-RENT (7368)
No additional fee for 21-25 year old drivers
• Cars
• Passenger Vans
• Trucks
POTTERS
at North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
79 Sunderland Road, North Amherst, MA 01059
www.northamherstmotors.com
On Bus Route • One Mile North of UMass

PLAY QB1
Game Room - Delicious Menu - Live Bands
Rafters
SPORTS BAR & RESTAURANT
University Drive & Amity Street, Amherst
FRIDAYS
FREE PIZZA
3-5PM
Coors LIGHT
Pitcher Special
$6.50
All Month
Saturday Nights
KARAOKE
10-1am No Cover

BUCCI
HAIRCUTS always $10.
25 N. Pleasant St. Amherst 256.0733
145 Main St. Northampton 586.0155

GREENLEAVES
Greenleaves is a brand new adult 55 plus condo community. Enjoy home ownership without all the hassles; we will even clear your car of snow. Relax in our large community room of enjoy the cozy fireplace. FREE CONDO FEES for 2 years. Call for details. Many styles to choose from. (One 2-bedroom for rent.)
23 Greenleaves Drive (Off Rt. 9 across from Chili's)
Phone: (413) 253-1800

Panda East
Fine Chinese & Japanese Cuisine
We bring Chinatown to you!
"Voted best Chinese food by UMass students!"
*Sushi bar!
*OCEMP accepted
*Delivery available!
Location: 103 N. Pleasant St. Amherst, M.A. 01002
Open Hours:
Fri. & Sat.: 11:30 a.m.-11:00 p.m.
Sun. - Thurs.: 11:30 a.m. - 10:00 p.m.
Delivery: (413)549-0077
Telephone: (413)256-8923 (413)256-8924
Fax: (413)253-1173

Clip Curl 665-2629
Hair Skin & Nails
Massage Therapy
Route 116, Sunderland
(Located on bus route)
Accepted: Visa MC
Open Tuesday - Friday 9 to 6:30, and Saturday 9 to 4
Stress Relief Package
30 Minute Massage
30 Minute Aveda Facial
Hair Shampooed & Dried
Regularly $73, Now $60
(Add a Complimentary Lavender Paraffin hand dip!)
Expires 11/22/03
Aveda • ARUM • Paul Mitchell
Two full service rooms!

Gentle, effective, natural treatment for neck pain, back pain, headaches, sports injuries, auto injuries, work injuries.
"Results you can feel."
Dr. Lee Kane
Chiropractic Physician
Member:
• American Chiropractic Association
• Massachusetts Chiropractic Society
Participating provider with most insurance, including student insurance & GIC
Amherst Family Chiropractic Center for Natural Health
228 Triangle Street, Amherst (next to Bertucci's)
549-1500

Playoff implications at Rudd

Continued from page 8

good as Temples front runners ... they have two very dangerous players that can win games for you and the rest of their team is just not as good as Temple. The Temple game is probably going to be a one-goal game, where the St. Joe's game, a lot of goals can be scored, so you have to shut down their two frontrunners. You do that and I think you really stop St. Joe's.

"In Temple's case you stop their central midfielder, I think that is really the key player for them but they have like four or five other guys that can put the ball in the net, and they would do it by working together not by individual play, where the two front runners for St. Joes can do it individually. I don't think they play as well as a team as Temple does."

This is an important weekend in A-10 play overall, but even more so for these three teams. The Minutemen and the Hawks are looking to clinch tournament spots, while the Owls are trying to hold on to theirs.

"All three of the teams are in striking distance of the playoffs," Koch said, "it doesn't matter what you did, it matters what you do tomorrow, Sunday and next Friday.

"If we win on Friday then we can pretty much clinch a spot Sunday. If we don't get the result on Friday then its an absolute must game on Sunday because if we lose on Sunday we can actually almost be knocked out. It's one of those things where Friday's game is crucial as far as your mental focus going into the game."

A-10s on tap in Philly

By Leah Wyner
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's and women's cross country teams are raising the stakes Saturday at the Atlantic 10 Conference Championships. The teams compete on Philadelphia's Belmont Plateau course, home to both La Salle and St. Joseph's squads.

For the women's teams, Richmond looks untouchable, and the La Salle women should be a solid second place. It's going to be a dogfight for the next few places as Duquesne, Rhode Island, and St. Joseph's all vie for that third place spot. The meet is going to be closer than it has been in past years, as the conference is now stronger as a whole. Two years ago, the 4-8 spots were separated by four points, and the current depth of the teams makes them very closely matched. Another ripple will be added to an already high-pressure meet where one point can be the determiner.

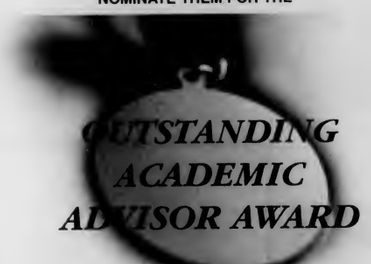
The course is well known by runners all over Philadelphia, home to high school and college teams, and host to a number of meets, invitationals, and championships. The Belmont Plateau is a landmark course for Pennsylvania, analogous to Massachusetts' Franklin Park course, and New York's Van Courtland Park course. With all that said, the course is tough. Competitors focus on the uphill portions, and most runners know the course for its massive "Parachute Hill," but UMass women's coach Julie LaFreniere instead emphasizes the downhill stretches.

"The importance of being able to run downhill strongly is often overlooked. The course is tough on athletes, and tough to recover from," LaFreniere said. "It really takes a toll on your body."

LaFreniere also stresses the importance of the first mile.

"The goal is to run it controlled, not steam out to the front with the excitement and adrenaline pulsing through their bodies and give up everything in the first mile," she said. The team has been doing a variety of training runs, including a three-mile trail that's all uphill, and much more difficult than any hill on the Belmont Plateau course.

"I just want to go in there and have them run to the best of their abilities. Tricia [Silva], Kate [Markopoulos], Amanda [Dahlberg] and Cuisle [Kierans] have been running very close together along training runs," LaFreniere said. "Lexi [Anzelone] has been out front where we need her, and the goal is to have the next four come in as close to her as possible."



Over the past few years, the meet has turned into a legitimate battle between the men's teams from La Salle and St. Joseph's. The Duquesne men should also place well because eight of their top nine returned, and four of their top five. Rounding out the competition are Massachusetts, Xavier, George Washington, and Richmond. Usually it's a four-team battle for places, but the teams are closer together now. Because the conference is deeper, the close team battles this year will be for places all the way down to No. 8.

Additionally, St. Joseph's and La Salle recruit heavily from around the state. This only perpetuates the teams' home course advantage, because not only do they run more college races at Belmont Plateau, the local recruits have been running the course all throughout high school. Incoming freshman with fifteen races worth of experience on the course go a long way to solidify the edge that sets St. Joseph's and La Salle apart from other teams.

UMass men's coach Ken O'Brien cites illness as the team's main obstacle. The men have been battling flu-like sicknesses for the past three weeks, with two or three runners out at a time. Luckily their health is starting to come back now, but O'Brien only hopes that the lost time was not too detrimental to them. O'Brien attributes any inconsistencies in performances to illness, because not only does missing practices set a runner back, it takes time to build back up to his previous level of fitness.

"The season wasn't an uninterrupted momentum where you start off easy and build to a crescendo. It's been a bit disjointed, but the kids have responded very well," O'Brien said. "The last couple of weeks we've been trying to patch it all together."

DO YOU HAVE A Favorite Academic Advisor?
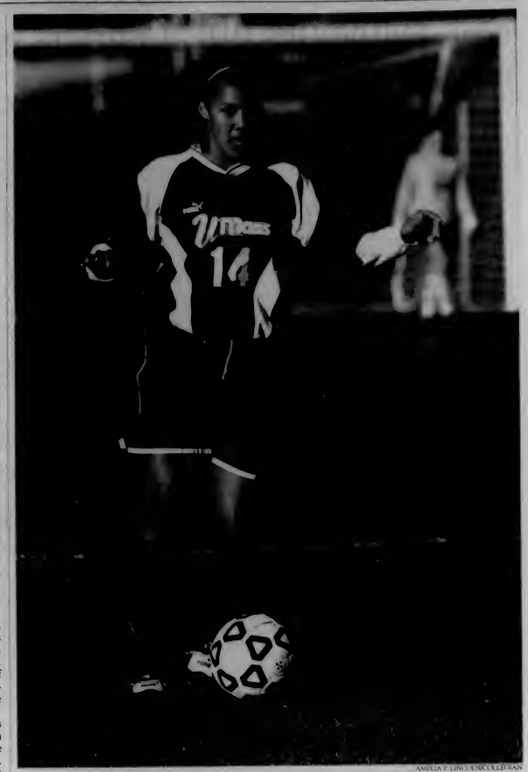
NOMINATE THEM FOR THE



The Nominating Committee for the 2003-2004 Outstanding Academic Advisor Award invites all students, faculty and staff to nominate academic advisors whose practices distinguish them from other advisors. The characteristics of an outstanding advisor include but are not limited to:

Building strong relationships with students
~
Monitoring students' progress toward academic and career goals
~
Making appropriate referrals
~
Knowing and understanding institutional regulations, policies and procedures

Nomionations of faculty and staff who advise undergraduate students should be submitted to:

OUTSTANDING ACADEMIC AQDVISOR AWARD COMMITTEE
OFFICE OF THE PROVOST
362 WHITMORE BUILDING

Nominations (in writing, by phone, or by e-mail to getinde@provost.umass.edu) should be recieved by Friday 11/14/03. For Further information, call the Provost's Office at 545-2554

Amelia P. Lincoln/Collegian

Adair Blyler's demeanor and on-field presence has been an aide to the younger members of the Massachusetts women's soccer team, including freshman Stephanie Barrett and sophomore Amy Maffucci.

Blyler's work ethic pays off

Continued from page 8

future. Blyler turned in a strong rookie campaign as a midfielder, tying for the team lead with six assists and collecting only two goals in the season. Her playmaking ability was highlighted with a four-assist game against Temple.

The following off-season started with a talk from Rudy about the confidence she has in herself as player. He wanted her to be more involved and expressive in her play. She gained confidence with intense training and moved to her more natural position, up front at forward. The result has been a breakout season with the team-best six goals and 15 points entering this weekend.

The 5-foot-5-inch forward put on the most dynamic performance of her young career in the season opener against Quinnipiac. The Minutewomen were down by one at halftime, until Blyler struck twice in the final 25 minutes, including the game-winning score in the 85th minute. Blyler has only three assists, but she still feels she is more of a playmaker than a scorer.

"I've never been a big scorer, that's why this season is so funny to me," said Blyler, with a beaming smile across her face. "Some of my goals haven't been that spectacular, but at least I was there to finish them. I want to set up more, be more of a playmaker, instead of someone who just happens to be there to finish it at the end. The scorer always gets the glory, but the assist is just as important."

That Blyler is a player who would rather set-up a teammate for a score, giving up the glory of scoring to another and making everyone around her better, is a testament to her character. She is a team player who isn't looking to be the best player. She just wants to do whatever it takes to help her team win and have fun doing it. The prime source of Blyler's attributes as a warm, generous person has been her mother.

Blyler always had the attention of her mother, raising her daughter by herself. As a single parent, her mother spend her week working to support her family and the weekend driving all over the state of Massachusetts to get her daughter to tournament games or an all-star team practice. When Adair needed some extra practice, she would shag balls and help work on her trapping. To make her life a little easier, she gave a kickback to her daughter for Christmas, so Adair could shag her own shots. This type of devotion has taught her daughter to never take anything for granted and to better herself as player and a person.

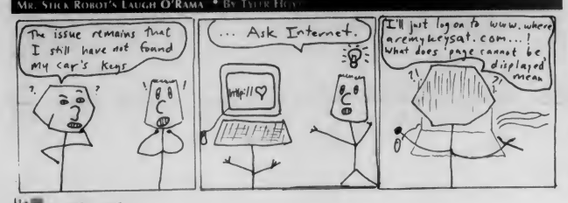
"She's been big part of [my success]," Blyler expressed. "She's always been a good fan, never was controlling, always told me that it was about me and having fun. Even going into college she said I didn't have to do this, it helps with scholarship money, but I don't have to, it was all about me. She's incredibly supportive and has been a big part of me continuing to play. I have some friends whose parents were pushy about practice and stuff. Those kids just ended up quitting."

This is only the beginning of the Adair Blyler saga. Only a sophomore, Blyler still has much more time to improve her game. She could one day be a member of the UMass Hall of Fame. She could be on the list of career leaders in goals or assists. The question, when her fours years of collegiate soccer is up and she has graduated from UMass, what does she want to be remembered as?

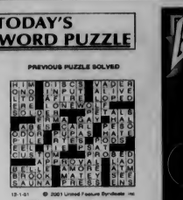
"Someone who gave it my all and gave it my best all the time," Blyler said. "I want everyone to remember me as a friendly person, an unselfish person. I don't need to be in the record books. I just want to make an impact and be remembered for things other than my skill as well. I don't need to be the best."

The glory of winning and graduating is enough for her. She appreciates that like everything else in her life.

■■■



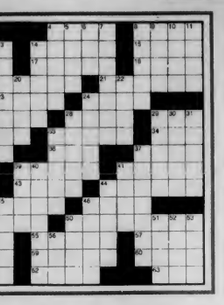
Blyler and her teammates will finish off the 2003 season this weekend with a road trip to Philadelphia. The Minutewomen (4-10-1, 3-6-0 A-10) square off with Temple today at 2:30 p.m. and then cap things off at St. Joseph's on Sunday.



QUOTE FOR THE DAY

"There is nothing funny about Halloween. This sarcastic festival reflects, rather, an infernal demand for revenge by children on the adult world."
-Jean Baudrillard

TODAY'S CROSSWORD PUZZLE



DINING COMMONS MENU

D.C. central: 413-545-3636

LUNCH
- Chicken Quesadilla
- Lemon Pepper Fish
- Vegan Cutlets (vegan)

DINNER
Halloween Special
- Whole Lobster
- Steak
- Ratatouille (vegan)

AMHERST BREWING COMPANY
UPSTAIRS at the ABC
NO COVER CHARGE
Evolved Funky R&B
Interplay Jazz Band
Amherst Jazz Orchestra

DAILY WEATHER FORECAST
For Amherst

- FRIDAY: High: 67, Low: 48
- SATURDAY: High: 69, Low: 40
- SUNDAY: High: 66, Low: 49

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Nikolas P. Markantonatos
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Amelia P. Lincoln
COPY EDITOR
Leah Wyner
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Irene Ros
PRODUCTION STAFF
Ryan Flaherty, Shannon Faulkner, Scott Pihl, Emilie Duggan

HOROSCOPES

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Get it done quickly.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
You finally got it right.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Careful of overgrown trick or treaters. They are looking for more than candy.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Go to a thrift store.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
Hire a personal assistant to keep you neat.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
That one you doubted is going to hit a home run.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
That one you doubted is going to hit a home run.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Forever is a long time.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Stop making excuses and get it done already.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Clean your room, or clean a pet's cage.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Work alone, you get more accomplished.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
This is it! Don't blow your chance.

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

ETA SIGMA PHI Classics book and bake sale October 30-31st Thursday and Friday 9am-3pm Present this ad for 50¢ off, Herter Hall Lobby

AUTO FOR SALE

1999 Explorer XLT 4x4 Excellent Condition Sunroof 6cyl. Loaded $12,500 Call 546-3477

1991 Toyota Camry Wagon, AC/Power 117,000 miles, reliable. $2500 549-4060

$500!!! Cars from $500!!! Police Impounds for listings. 1-800-319-3323 ext4554

AUTO FOR SALE

1992 Honda Prelude SI, Loaded, $3900 587-0242

93 Pontiac Bonneville SDN All Power Must Sell $1500 B/O 253-5537

EMPLOYMENT

Telephone Interviewers NO SALES! Conduct interviews over the phone at our Hadley location Flexible Evening and Weekend Hours $7.50/hour to start 20+ hours/week PVTA accessible For more info: 888-423-5381 FMI

!Bartending!$ $250/day potential No experience nesc training provided. 800-965-6520 ext162

EMPLOYMENT

Movie Extras/ Models Needed For local Casting Calls No exp. or age required EARN up to $200 a day 1-888-820-0167

Bartender Positions Make up to $300/shift No experience required. Great College Job 1-800-806-0084 ext. 1525

Visa/Mastercard approval agents earn $1,000/week potential. No experience necessary. Call 1-800-821-3416 ext.145

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

EMPLOYMENT

Landscaping Services: Part-time positions available for fall clean-up and snow work. Need to be ambitious, hard-working, own transportation, and flexible hours Call Steve at 413-665-3493

Internship Motivated students seeking leadership outside the box. Gain experience in all aspects of running a small business. Average pay: $9300.00 Call 508-246-1230

INSTRUCTION

University Bartending Classes Start Soon 1-800-U-CAN-MIX Call now for information!!! Space is Limited www.universitybartending.com

INSTRUCTION

Lost: Wallet Near Parking garage 10/14 If found please call with description 413-237-1015

SERVICES

All Digital Productions Pro Videography for Weddings, Bar Mitzvahs, Commercial (508) 221-8223 sweeppicker@yahoo.com

Stuck on a tough term paper? ThePaperExperts.com can help! Expert writers can help with editing, writing, graduate school applications. We'll help with any subject- visit us 24/7 at ThePaperExperts.com.

SERVICES

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

SHEAR BLISS DAY SPA SERVICES Body Sugaring (waxing) for men and women *Safe *100% Natural *Effective 253-2322 https://shearbliss.image411.com

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

Spring Break 2004. Travel with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator to Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas and Florida. Now hiring campus reps. Call for group discounts. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com For more information contact STA Travel at 413-256-1261

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Destinations, including Cruises! Foam Parties, Free Drinks and Club Admissions. Rep Positions and FREE trips Available. 1-800-231-4386 www.EpicureanTours.com

TRAVEL

A "Reality" Spring Break 2004's Hottest Prices Book now .. Free Trips, Meals & Parties www.sunsplashtours.com or 1800-426-7710

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEEKEND

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 31, 2003 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Truth about Adair

AMELIA F. LINCOLN/COLLEGIAN

After a freshman year that didn't raise any eyebrows, Adair Blyler's blue-collar work ethic has paid off big dividends this year. The sophomore from Lexington has been running away from opponents all season, and is the Minutewomen's leading scorer with six goals and three assists, good for 15 points.

Hard-working Blyler ascends scoring charts

By TODD FOSTER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Not every scorer has to be a superstar.

Adair Blyler does not have the flashy game you find in a bona fide scoring machine. She works hard for everything she gets. That's just the kind of person she is, appreciative of what she has and dedicated to keeping it.

Every team needs a player who gives 100 percent and encourages everyone around her to give just as much. At the beginning of the season, the sophomore sensation was small and needed to get stronger, so she absorbed herself in the team's strength and conditioning program, to have more of an impact.

"I think I'm an average player," Blyler humbly explains. "I think hard work is a very important part of [my game], but I won't characterize myself as a workhorse. I'm not a selfish player and don't do the flashy things, just small touches, pass-offs, flick-ons, combinations, just technical stuff."

UMass coach Jim Rudy got his first look at Blyler when she came with Lexington High School, where she was four-year letterman, to play against Amherst High. Blyler's high school coach was also a counselor at Rudy's UMass Advanced Girl's Soccer Camp. She was given an invitation to attend Rudy's camp, and took home the MVP award. Rudy was impressed with her potential, but her personality was impossible to escape.

"She's humble, loyal, respectful, mature, and prompt," Rudy says. "These are all things you would want someone to tell a future employer about you, especially in today's society where those things aren't viewed as important. I think this will benefit her well down the road."

It's difficult to find a time when Blyler isn't smiling, at least off the field. She hasn't just touched the heart of her coach, either — her teammates consider her a quality person and an important part to their success on the field.

"She such a sweetheart and so fun be around, that's why we hang out with her," say freshman Stephanie Barrett and sophomore Amy Maffucci, two of Blyler's best friends on the team. "We need her leadership up top, because she is the future of our scoring. Not to mention, she is already one of our leaders and a really hard worker, which the younger kids will look up to her for."

When Blyler entered her freshman season, the young UMass team was looking towards a bright

Continued on page 6

UMASS

WEEKEND SCHEDULE

Friday, Oct. 31

Sport	Opp./Event	Time
Men's Soccer	vs. Temple	2:30 p.m.
Women's Soccer	at Temple	2:30 p.m.
Hockey	vs. Providence	7:00 p.m.

Saturday, Nov. 1

Sport	Opp./Event	Time
Football	vs. Northeastern	12:30 p.m.
Cross Country	at A-10s	10:00 a.m.
Field Hockey	vs. Rhode Island	12:00 p.m.
Swimming	at Brown Invite	1:00 p.m.
Hockey	at Providence	7:00 p.m.

Sunday, Nov. 2

Sport	Opp./Event	Time
Men's Soccer	vs. St. Joseph's	1:00 p.m.
Women's Soccer	at St. Joseph's	1:00 p.m.

Crunch time

Crucial home set starts today

By BECKY HOROWITZ
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts men's soccer team has something to prove as a trip to the Atlantic 10 tournament is completely dependent on this weekend's outcome.

The top six teams in the conference earn trips to the tournament and UMass is currently tied for fifth with one of its two weekend guests.

The Minutemen (10-5-1, 4-3-1 Atlantic 10), will have their hands full as conference leader Temple (10-3-2, 6-1-1 A-10) and St. Joseph's (7-8-1, 4-3-1 A-10), travel to Rudd Field. The Hawks are even with the Maroon and White for the No. 5 spot in the conference standings.

UMass heads into today's game a little more confident as its win on Oct. 26 gave it a much-needed boost.

"The comeback win against St. Bonaventure definitely gives us some momentum," Massachusetts coach Sam Koch said. "With a minute to go we were in a bad, bad situation ... that was a much, much needed win, and now we're looking at Friday's game as the biggest game of the season no question."

The Owls, returning nine starters, are having a standout season. Their first A-10 loss came against Richmond — unbeaten in conference play — on Oct. 24.

With a tight-knit defense and some outstanding forwards, Temple is a huge threat to the Minutemen's season.

"They are very organized, they are better organized than they were last year," Koch said. "They don't give up much, I mean they haven't given up hardly any goals, and so defensively they're very solid. They're more defensive oriented this year than they were last year.

"Offensively I don't think they are that much better except that they're not giving up goals so they're in every game. They're a good counter attack team and they were able to surprise people, and now that they are 6-1-1 and 10-3 overall they're not surprising anybody. People are a little bit more prepared and I think that'll be the difference. And in our situation we have to come ready to play ... there's no question they're a good team.

"We just need to be patient."

Although Koch has never committed to one goalkeeper, due to an injury freshman Nick Billman has spent the second half of the season on the bench. Senior Colin Burns has been playing since he went down.

"Right now Billman is training well, but is he ready? I don't think he's ready," Koch said, "he's still feeling some of the effects of the injury so I'm pretty confident that Colin will be in goal."

Although St. Joe's is under .500 overall, for Koch their A-10 record is something to be concerned with.

"Their overall record doesn't matter. It's their record in the conference that matters, and they're even with us. The tough thing is, their overall record isn't as good, so are they as good?

"What you'll find is their two front runners are as

Continued on page 6

GERALD H. LINGA/COLLEGIAN

Senior Ptah Myers and the Minutemen host Temple and St. Joseph's this weekend.

NOVEMBER

The Daily Collegian

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 3, 2003 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 43

A brand new Southwest?

Gargano proposes new changes for UMass student community

By FERRON SALNIKER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Michael Gargano, vice chancellor of student affairs, is considering major changes for student life at the University of Massachusetts, with many specific to the Southwest Residential Area.

While spearheading a major evaluation of student life on campus, Gargano is requesting student input on a number of changes that will dramatically effect Southwest. Some of these include converting a number of double rooms to singles, increasing the number living and learning communities in the area and changing the name of the residential area. He said the point of the possible changes is to improve student life.

"When you're new at a university and going into what is it my fourth month with a fresh set of eyes, there's a tendency to look at it with a fresh perspective," said Gargano. "One of the things that we want to do in Student Life is to look at all of our student life."

Gargano has composed a plan made up of three main components. The first two components focus on communications and customer service between the administration and the student body.

"The first component is to have the ability to communicate with students in a very consistent and timely way," said Gargano. "The second component actually gets into student customer service — how do we make our services available to students and how do we become a friendly and hospitable community?"

Gargano said the third component, which coincides with the proposed changes to Southwest, is the constant reevaluation of student life and the student body's needs. Southwest is a major focus of reform in response to disturbances that took place during the end of the Major League Baseball season.

"All of these kinds of conversations got heightened as they relate to the riots that occurred, because then that forced everyone to say, okay, what is really going on in Southwest?" said Gargano. "What presented itself with Southwest was an opportunity to say, okay, keeping with the theme of students first, are we meeting the needs of students that live in Southwest? And, where we are not, let's take a good hard look at it."

Gargano is looking closely at the roots of student life, and has begun to visit dorms on campus, searching for suggestions on how to dissemble the tradition of riots on campus, specifically in Southwest.

"We have a hand-me-down kind of tradition, which is not the kind of behavior that we want on a college campus," he said. "Even how we perhaps describe Southwest in our brochures, we might decide to change the language of it because that will help start to change the perception and the type of living and learning environment that students can expect when they're in Southwest."

When posing the question of why there is a core group of students in Southwest acting out, Gargano said the general response has pointed to overcrowding in the residential halls.

"We are looking into converting some of the doubles into singles so that we can then reduce some of that crowdedness that creates anxiety," said Gargano.

However, with the recent difficulty of housing UMass students, Gargano is aware that reducing the number of returning students to Southwest would require extensive planning.

"We are managing in a much different way [with] enrollment. Strategically, we have a better sense of how we will be growing the university and what the size of the freshman class will be for 2004," he said. "But if we decide to move forward from triples into doubles and doubles into singles, it will just require us to manage the incoming class very, very carefully and we will not be able to take in more students than we can feasibly house."

Gargano also proposed hiring more resident assistants and resident directors, and establishing a bus route from Southwest to University Health Services.

"When we are rethinking Southwest, one of the things that we should think about is putting in a satellite Health Services," Gargano said.

Another proposed change is an increase of living and learning communities. Gargano said there is a possibility of having floors dedicated to promoting UMass school spirit and to student voting. He also said he would like to give students the opportunity to design their own living and learning communities.

The possible change of the name of the residential area stems from Gargano's efforts to create a different Southwest culture.

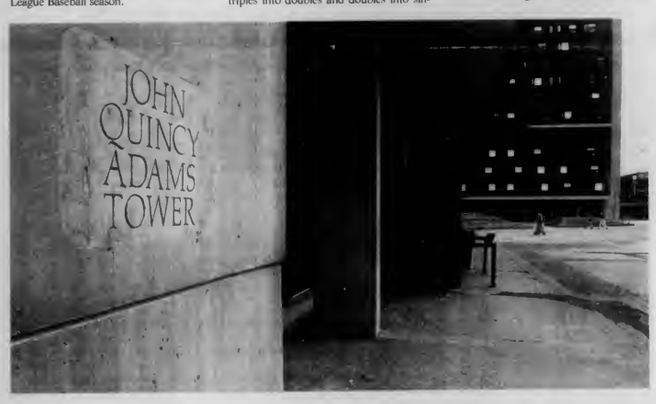
"The other thing that should get factored in is whether we should have a name change, and in that, I would look for student input," he said. "What I'm trying to get addressed is how we change the current culture and perception of what Southwest is all about and if we were to do it differently with student input, because I think it's important that you have student input whenever you think of student changes, what is that we would design?"

Gargano has also expanded this mission, examining what changes need to occur to campus life in general.

"Basically what we are trying to do here is take a step back, rethink everything we do, say okay, we are not tied to doing anything the exact same way," he said.

Gargano has proposed several initiatives to create a stronger connection to the university and a greater sense of community within the student body.

"As the new person here, I see a lot of isolation on campus, and isolation doesn't help anybody. It doesn't support student life, it really doesn't promote engagement, diversity, multiculturalism or communication skills," he said. "Students have had a very difficult time defining undergraduate life on campus, what I want to do with the University is get to a point in our early recruiting of students, that we can clearly define what undergraduate life is here."



Keeping that in mind, Gargano has proposed to create more student events and programs. "The one thing that students have said to me regardless of where I've been is that they all want increased RAP programs, they all want increased living and learning communities and they all want TAP programs," he said. "They all want programs that relate to their particular schools, that's been like a common thing, which is very encouraging."

Some of the proposed program ideas include a midnight breakfast served by administrators during finals, a campus-wide community service program and more concerts and comedic acts on campus.

"With the assistance of the new lights [in Southwest], we could have late night concerts," he said. "So now we've taken what was a negative of students gathering in the evening and we actually do late night concerts that can be done early fall to late fall and in the spring."

Gargano will continue to visit dorms on campus in an effort to answer student questions and gather more input.

"We create these barriers that don't have to exist," he said. "The truth is, if you really want to get your pulse and find out what's really going on, what is working what is not working, the only way to do it is with the students."

Area grocery stores pitch in to fight hunger

By MIKE TRAVIS
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

A number of grocery stores in the Berkshire Valley and throughout western Massachusetts are teaming up with The Food Bank and other local organizations to raise money to help combat local hunger.

Customers can choose to donate $1, $3, or $5 at local grocery stores when they check out at the register. The money is then automatically distributed to The Food Bank and other local programs. For every $1 donated to The Food Bank, $9 of food is given to someone in need.

"I think the food bank's efforts to fight hunger should be supported by the community for their positive actions," said Katie Quinn, a 21-year-old senior.

Local programs, such as Check Out Hunger, allow independent grocers and food co-ops throughout western Massachusetts to contribute to The Food Bank, giving their customers the opportunity to add a small donation to their purchase at checkout. Atkin's Farm County Market of Amherst, along with many other independent markets all over western Massachusetts, will be participating in the program.

Throughout November, Stop & Shop customers can contribute to Food For Friends, a program that will benefit The Food Bank and a number of local pantries and programs. Big Y customers can support The Food Bank through a similar program called Food For All. All funds raised through these programs stay in western Massachusetts to fight hunger.

"It's definitely important to help people become self-sufficient, and it's great that these programs make it easier for people to make ends meet," said Joe Gikis, a 19-year-old freshman.

The Food Bank of Western Massachusetts distributes more than six million pounds of food annually to a network of 420 local soup kitchens, food pantries, shelters and other social service agencies in the four counties of western Massachusetts.

It also administers a variety of community service programs, advocates for those in need and is one of more than 200 certified food banks that are affiliated with America's Second Harvest, a national network of food banks and food rescue programs. More than 100,000 people were served by Food Bank agencies last year. Forty-three percent of the people were children and nine percent were senior citizens.

"There's too many kids in this country that go to bed hungry, I'm glad local stores are aiding in the cause," said Dan Murphy, an 18-year-old freshman.

More information about The Food Bank and other local programs to fight hunger is available by calling 413 247-9738 or by logging on at www.foodbankwma.org

EDITORIAL/OPINION
PAGE 3
SOUTHWEST OVERHALL
STUDENT INPUT SOUGHT FOR CHANGES
ARTS & LIVING
PAGE 4
RUNAWAY HIT
NEW MOVIE IS RULED A SUCCESS BY CRITICS
SPORTS
PAGE 8
MINUTEMEN ROLL
FOOTBALL POSTS VICTORY AGAINST NORTHEASTERN
COMICS/CLASSIFIEDS
PAGE 7

$1800 of marijuana and cash seized from student's apartment

Police arrested a University of Massachusetts student Friday following a month-long investigation into the sale of marijuana coming from his Amherst apartment.

Kurt R. Fortin, 21, of 14 Lenox St. in Fitchburg, Mass., was arrested and charged with possession of a Class D substance with intent to distribute. Police seized $1800 in cash and marijuana packaged for individual sale from his second floor apartment at 159 Montague Rd.

The marijuana seized was valued at an additional $1800, according to Amherst Police Department sources. Members of APD and troopers from the Massachusetts State Police working with the Northwest District Attorney's Office all participated in the search, which took place at 7 a.m.

Fortin was arraigned Friday in Ware District Court, according to an APD release. APD did not return several calls on Friday and could not be reached for comment.

- Dan Lamothe

The Headless Horseman rides again

Animal Science senior Ashley Souza rides her horse Xena as The Headless Horseman for Halloween. Souza handed out candy to the general public last Friday around the Campus Center and the Student Union.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Jennifer Eastwood
MANAGING EDITOR Dan Lamothe
BUSINESS MANAGER Peter Foundas
PRODUCTION MANAGER Scott Pihl
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Nick Markantonatos
ADVERTISING MANAGER Sean Costello
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Shannon Farrington
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Glen Straub
COMICS EDITOR Molly Eggleston
EDITORIAL EDITOR Paige Cram
NEWS EDITOR Ferron Salniker
PHOTO EDITOR Gerald H. Ling
SPORTS EDITOR Andrew Merritt
CLASSIFIED ADVERTISING Marty Pappas
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Julie Beauchamp
FINANCE MANAGER Greg Stamm
HUMAN RESOURCE Sandra Marquez
SPECIAL ISSUES Betsy Feldman
ASSISTANT BUSINESS Jachyn Sorenson
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING David Bor
ASSISTANT DISTRIBUTION Mark Lagatic
ASSISTANT FINANCE Richard Pacheco
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Liza Lynch
LAYOUT MANAGER Lindsay Clark
GRAPHICS ADVISOR Charlie Higgins
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Meghan Healy
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Cameron J. Woods
ASSISTANT NEWS Erika Lovley
ASSISTANT NEWS Morris Singer
ASSISTANT PHOTO Emilie Duggan
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Martelli
ASSISTANT SPORTS Robert McGovern

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS WELCOMING MEMBERS THROUGHOUT FREEDOM DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1907, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1998. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com

15 U.S. soldiers dead, 21 wounded in U.S. helicopter crash

By Tini Tran
Associated Press

FALLUJAH, Iraq (AP) — Insurgents shot down a Chinook helicopter with dozens of American troops on board yesterday, killing 15 and wounding 21 in the deadliest strike against U.S. forces since the war began — a sign of the increasing sophistication of Iraq's elusive anti-U.S. fighters.

The giant helicopter was ferrying the soldiers on their way for leave outside Iraq when, witnesses told The Associated Press, two missiles streaked into the sky, fired from a date palm grove, and slammed into the rear of the aircraft. It crashed in flames in farmers' fields west of Baghdad.

It was the deadliest day for U.S. troops since March 23 — the first week of the invasion that ousted Saddam Hussein — and a major escalation in the campaign to drive the U.S.-led coalition out of the country.

Three other Americans were killed in separate attacks Sunday, including one 1st Armored Division soldier in Baghdad and two U.S. civilians working for the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers in Fallujah. All three were victims of roadside bombs, the military said.

"It's clearly a tragic day for America," Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld said in Washington. "In a long, hard war, we're going to have tragic days. But they're necessary. They're part of a war that's difficult and complicated."

Like past attacks on U.S. forces and a string of suicide bombings that killed dozens in Baghdad the past week, U.S. coalition officials blamed either Saddam loyalists or foreign fighters for the strike outside Fallujah, a center of Sunni Muslim resistance to the U.S. occupation.

L. Paul Bremer, the head of the occupation in Iraq, repeated demands that Syria and Iran prevent fighters from crossing their borders into Iraq. "They could do a much better job of helping us seal that border and keeping terrorist out of Iraq," he told CNN.

The "enemies of freedom" in Iraq "are using more sophisticated techniques to attack our forces," he said.

U.S. officials have been warning of the danger of shoulder-fired missiles, thousands of which are now scattered from Saddam's arsenals, and such missiles are believed to have downed two U.S. copters since May 1. Those two crashes — of smaller helicopters — left only one American wounded.

The loaded-down Chinook was a dramatic new target. The insurgents have been steadily advancing in their weaponry, first using homemade roadside bombs, then rocket-fired grenades in ambushes on American patrols, and vehicles stuffed with explosives and detonated by suicide attackers.

In the fields south of Fallujah, some villagers proudly showed off blackened pieces of the Chinook's wreckage to arriving reporters.

Though a few villagers tried to help, many celebrated word of the helicopter downing, as well as a fresh attack on U.S. soldiers in Fallujah itself. Two American civilians working under contract for the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers were killed and one was injured in the explosion of a roadside bomb, the military said.

ANJA NIEDRINGHAUS/ASSOCIATED PRESS

U.S. soldiers search through the rubble after a U.S. Chinook helicopter crashed west of Baghdad, near Fallujah yesterday, killing 13 soldiers and wounding more than 20 others.

"This was a new lesson from the resistance, a lesson to the greedy aggressors," one Fallujah resident, who wouldn't give his name, said of the helicopter downing. "They'll never be safe until they get out of our country," he said of the Americans.

The downed copter was one of two Chinooks flying out in formation from an air base in Habbaniyah, about 10 miles from the crash site, carrying troops to Baghdad on route for rest and recreation — R&R.

The missiles seemed to have been fired from a palm grove about 500 yards away, Thaer Ali, 21, said. At least one hit the Chinook, which came down in a field in the farming village of Hasai, a few miles south of Fallujah, witnesses said.

The missiles flashed toward the helicopter from the rear, as usual with heat-seeking ground-fired missiles. The most common model in the former Iraqi army inventory was the Russian-made SA-7, also known as Strelas.

Residents return to San Bernardino Mountains; firefighters sent home

By Ken Ritter
Associated Press

SAN BERNARDINO, Calif. (AP) — A second wave of residents displaced by Southern California's wildfires returned home yesterday as a weekend of cooler, calmer weather helped firefighters begin to get the upper hand.

As the threat began to diminish, authorities also sent home some of the thousands of firefighters who have been battling blazes scattered from San Diego County to the suburbs of Los Angeles.

Some evacuees got the go-ahead Saturday to check on their homes. Among them were JoDee Ewing and her husband, Steve, who found little standing of their 1920s-era house but the stone chimney, the foundation and — for some inexplicable reason — their rose bushes.

"I still have roses blooming," said Ewing, 40. "But there's no toilets. They disintegrated."

The fire that started Oct. 25 just up the road from the Ewings' place, in Upper Waterman Canyon on the edge of the San Bernardino National Forest, consumed 91,285 acres. In the last week, that blaze and a half-dozen others across Southern California have burned about 750,000 acres, destroyed nearly 3,400 homes and killed 20 people.

In San Bernardino County, some firefighters were beginning to head to home, said U.S. Forest Service spokesman Bob Narus, although he couldn't say exactly how many. In San Diego County, firefighters were expected to begin leaving after spending a few hours resting yesterday morning, said California Department of Forestry spokeswoman Barb Daskoski.

Though fog, lower temperatures and even snow slowed the spreading flames, more than 12,000 firefighters were still on the lines early yesterday.

The
BLUE WALL
PUB

THIS WEEK at
The BLUE WALL PUB

MONDAY — UMass/WRNX Basketball Show
Karaoke 8-11
Monday Night Football- 10 cent Wings

TUESDAY — Open Mic from 8-12

WEDNESDAY — DJ-Rhythm Systems

THURSDAY — 5-College Dance
Sponsored by
SGA/Auxiliary Services

FRIDAY — DJ-Aquarius

SATURDAY — Squash
Jazz Guys

LIVE MUSIC starts at 9:00PM.

OPEN MIC starts at 7:00PM. The Sign-Up sheet goes out at 6:00PM. Bring your talent and your friends and your instruments. We'll provide the stage and sound equipment and 20 minutes for you to knock'em dead!

ALL MUSICAL STYLES are encouraged to participate!

AS ALWAYS, 18+ to party, 21+ to drink.

Do you have a favorite academic advisor?
Nominate them for the

Outstanding Academic Advisor Award

The Nominating Committee for the 2003-2004 Outstanding Academic Advisor Award invites all students, faculty and staff to nominate academic advisors whose practices distinguish them from other advisors. The characteristics of an outstanding advisor include but are not limited to:

- Building strong relationships with students
- Monitoring students' progress toward academic and career goals
- Making appropriate referrals
- Knowing and understanding institutional regulations, policies and procedures

Nominations of faculty and staff who advise undergraduate students should be submitted to:

Outstanding Academic Advisor Award Committee
Office of the Provost
362 Whitmore Building

Nominations (in writing, by phone, or by e-mail to getinde@provost.umass.edu) should be received by Friday 11/14/03. For further information, call the Provost's Office at 545-2554.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 3, 2003 EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Student input needed to rethink Southwest

In the aftermath of the recent Southwest area riot and disturbances, murmurs within the administration and faculty communities on campus have begun to reach an audible level. They are talking amongst themselves about us. The administration and faculty speculate to one another what is causing the destructive energy on our campus, an energy that has repeatedly risen to violence in the Southwest living area.

And, while many of us also wonder what causes our peers to engage in such a tradition of destruction, we generally dismiss the recent riots as the work of idiots, morons, troglodytes and drunken buffoons. As students we blow off the actions of our peers as little more than college stupidity. Few of us wonder, and fewer discuss, what the University could possibly do to halt or hinder these events. However, this is exactly what the administration is doing. While we wait to create, read, or write the next headline concerning the next good old Zoomass wild night, the administration is talking specifics. They are talking change, and rethinking Southwest.

Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs Mike Gargano, new to campus, is talking about changing the way life is in Southwest. He is talking about changing the structure of living areas; of how many students per RA, how many students in Southwest, of what programs to involve in Southwest, even changing the area's name, and how to better manage incoming classes of freshman. He is talking to administration and students about how to harness and reverse the damaging potential swelling from those towers.

While these conversations may have been brewing before this semester, they are now fully on the table for University administrators to discuss.

These discussions should remind some of the discussions following the tragic events in Butterfield Hall in the Central area In 2000. After years of dangerous antics by students within the dorm and one student's life lost, it forced the University to completely overhaul the residence. Residents of Butterfield were placed apart from one another across campus living areas, and the dorm was reinvented as the only all freshman all honors dormitory on campus. Students had no say in how the dormitory was changed, or what to do. Due to the dramatic events, the University acted quickly, and in loco parentis, to fix the situation as best they could.

The situation with Southwest is different in this way — the administration is not yet in code-red mode. They want change, and will more than likely demand it, but Gargano and other officials want to move towards change only after discussing the campus' options first with students.

"I will continue to ask students, 'what do you think, how can we make it better?' And generally students, because they're in the trenches, come up with the best suggestions of how to make it better," said Gargano.

The administration must know that due to the sheer numbers and size of the area, as well as the chronicle of trouble that reinforces the reputation of Southwest, no change may be impressed without the student population's concurrence. Any attempt to do so would blow up in the administration's face.

Since Gargano is calling for student discussion and input, let's give it to him. Students must be involved in the rethinking of Southwest. For all students, that means taking an active role in the discussion and providing feedback on proposed ideas. It's the only way an overhaul of Southwest will work.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

Commercialization of Mother Theresa

Allison Edles

When it comes to religion, society has had tendencies to idolize certain people and make them central figures upon which to base its faith. The most famous was Jesus Christ in Catholicism.

However, there recently has been another religious figure added to the list: Mother Theresa. Two weeks ago, the city of Rome joined together in the beautification of Mother Theresa. Accompanying the festivities was the capitalization of modern society with trinkets being sold such as fiberglass statues of the devout nun. Along with the musical of Mother Theresa and the made-for-TV movie about her life, there is too much commercialism in respect to such an event. Mother Theresa was about helping the poverty-inflicted, not trying to capitalize on them. Society should honor those respects and view the entire picture, not how far their buck will take them.

Mother Theresa, whose full name was Agnes Gonxha Bojaxhiu, was born in Skopje, now in Macedonia, in 1910, and died in 1997. She devoted her life to her faith and helping those who were stricken with famine, disease, and eternal hardships in the wastelands of Calcutta.

When she died, the world developed a new appreciation for her, specifically through the Catholic Church. The Pope has done everything he can to speed up her beautification process and become a blessed icon of her religion. Typically, a candidate must wait five years after their death. However, thanks to the Pope, that requirement was waived only two years after her death.

For such an important process, the esteem of the situation should not be tainted by modern-day commercialism. During Mother Theresa's beautification celebration, merchants were selling everything that had to do with the late nun, including Mother Theresa memorabilia, such as rosaries starting at $1.10 and crucifixes for $3.50. This is a disgusting concept that shows how far people are willing to go and what they're willing to exploit for a profit.

In addition to selling trinkets, the media has also decided to capitalize on the event through a made-for-TV movie and a musical. The movie, which aired on Italian television, chronicled the life of Mother Theresa and starred Olivia Hussey in the title role. Hussey is most famously regarded for her role as Juliet in Franco Zeffirelli's "Romeo and Juliet" in 1968. She later went on to star as the Virgin Mary in Zeffirelli's "Jesus of Nazareth" in 1977.

In addition to selling trinkets, the media has also decided to capitalize on the event through a made-for-TV movie and a musical.

The musical, however, will be presenting Mother Theresa in a slightly different light. Just imagine an 87 year-old woman down on her knees on an empty stage hooked up to a microphone belting out a song about faith and miracles. Mother Theresa never tried to commercialize her efforts to help in any way other than verbally spreading the word. To have her exploited in a musical blinds people from seeing what she was really about and forces them to focus on her and not on what she was trying to accomplish.

Since Mother Theresa's beautification, all of her old items and belongings have become religious relics. There are many different levels of relics according to church law. A first-class relic is something like a body part or blood of a person that has been blessed. A second-class relic is something that was owned by the blessed person, like physical possessions. A third-class relic is something that houses a first-class relic, such as a tomb or grave.

The people of Rome are very anxious to quickly elevate Mother Theresa's status to one simulating that of Jesus Christ. Because we live in a world today that is so heavily based on the worth of objects, it is hard to take the beautification process for what it is originally worth. Oftentimes it blinds people from seeing and appreciating that which has been lost. Already there are school children in Rome that are so caught up in the beautification process that they carry with them a piece of cloth said to have touched the grave of Mother Theresa.

In this day and age, people are often on the lookout for something to believe in and have faith in. When Mother Theresa died, their faith was restored and she was treated as a second Jesus Christ, by both the public and by the Catholic Church. The process of beautification is not one that every good person goes through in the years following his or her death. Mother Theresa was truly a special and unique human being and is no doubt worthy and deserving of sainthood. However, the people of Rome should tone down the admiration being elicited toward her beautification process and realize that it is a religious occurrence that comes once in a lifetime and is one that should not be exploited through merchandise and cheap media productions.

Allison Edles is a Collegian columnist.

Petty news in Vermont

World Perspectives

Adrienne Bossi

Vermont sure is a crazy place. Those hippies really have nothing else to do with their time.

The Vermont Endangered Species Act protects rattlesnakes. Most people don't know that rattlesnakes can even be found in Vermont. I guess that's why they're working to protect against their endangerment.

Recently, a man picked up a dead rattler he found on the roadside and brought it home. He claims he did this simply out of curiosity. He had been storing the snake in his freezer for a few weeks. Now he is in court and faces penalties that could run him $600 and cost him his fishing and hunting privileges statewide for up to three years. Apparently it doesn't matter that the snake was already dead. The Endangered Species Act covers the rights of all snakes, dead and alive. Odd.

That's not the end of the obscurities of this tale. Why, may I ask, did this man keep the snake in his freezer? Okay, he was curious. Perhaps that's feasible. But since when did you keep things you were curious about in your freezer? And what can you do with a dead snake-cicle for three weeks?

Furthermore, how did the authorities find the dead rattlesnake? Are there routine freezer searches in Vermont? Seriously, I am baffled at how the authorities discovered this man's violation.

News stories like these are amusing. Yes, this made it into the news. I am abroad in Australia right now, and I regularly check out boston.com to keep up-to-date with the happenings in New England and the U.S. And this story made the news.

It makes me contemplate the multitude of better things we as a nation and even simply the authorities could be doing with their time.

The same day this report appeared online, there were much more pressing things happening to which the authorities should have been devoting more attention. It is nice to have a little color in our news. Yet, it's depressing to think that police are busy searching freezers for dead rattlesnakes and the courts are making drama over a harmless infringement of an endangered species nobody even knew was endangered in Vermont while much more important things could be taking place.

It's depressing to think that police are busy searching freezers for dead rattlesnakes ... while much more important things could be taking place.

That's right, they could be taking place. I was hoping I could make this point by citing something pressing and serious happening in Vermont that would require the courts and police attention. However, I was unable to find absolutely anything important happening in the state. No murders. No giant traffic accidents. No crime. Nothing. Really, here is what is happening in Vermont as I write this: A river is getting really full, someone complains, more about the river ... So, the way I wanted make my point kind of got defeated, but you get what I'm saying.

OK, bear with me here. A male from Kentucky was hitchhiking to Canada in 1984 when he was murdered. Eighteen years have passed without any remains being found. Yet, just now, the Vermont police decide that human remains they found in 1985 could just be the remains of the lost hitchhiker. After getting the bright idea that these remains may be those of the traveler, the officials took another few months to perform an official DNA test that irrefutably proved the remains were those of the Kentuckian.

The officials sat around with this unidentified body for 18 years. In that time, they never considered performing a DNA test. All the while, this man's family suffers with the question of where their loved one disappeared. Don't police stations nationally share their missing persons reports and descriptions? An identifying tattoo tipped the police off into further investigating if this man could be the lost hitchhiker. You know, I bet that tattoo had been sitting on his body for 18 years. Why did they just notice it now? I'll tell you why. They have been too damn busy looking in freezers for dead rattlesnakes and pursuing other trivial and ridiculous legal infringements.

The most ironic part of my cynical rant? The rattlesnake was confiscated from this man to be stored in an evidence freezer.

Adrienne Bossi is a Collegian columnist on exchange in Australia.

Globalization bad for Bolivia

Ian Trefethen

There was and is a revolution in Bolivia. La Paz, the capital, was completely blockaded by protesters. Highways were made impassable. People fought the police and military in the streets with slingshots and sticks of dynamite. One of the main demands was that President Sanchez resign, which he finally did just over a week ago when he escaped to the U.S., fearing for his life. But the reasons for the revolution extend far beyond Bolivia's borders.

The main issue was Sanchez's plan to export Bolivia's large reserve of natural gas through Chile (or Peru) to the United States. This is just another chapter in a long history of Bolivia having its natural resources exported, along with most of the profits. This has happened with the silver, guano, rubber, and tin industries. The recent upheaval in La Paz was a definitive "no" by the people of Bolivia to the continuation of this pattern.

In 1985, Bolivia was opened up for outside investment. Ultimately, it has lead to a 70 percent poverty rate for the people of Bolivia because at that time, the money from the tin industry began leaving the country. Through the process of globalization, corporations gain more and more control over services and resources throughout the world. Industries are privatized- where natural resource sales profits went to the government to fund social programs, now goes to companies, usually outside the country.

For example: the city of Cochabamba, Bolivia, needed money to increase its water supplies. They got a loan through the World Bank, on the condition that the city's water system be privatized. The Bechtel Corporation, headquartered in San Francisco, got the contract. Under Bechtel, the quality of water went down, and the price went up 200 percent, and people couldn't afford using their own water. In the protests that resulted, eight people were killed and former President Sanchez was forced to cancel the contract.

The International Monetary Fund also gave loans to Bolivia. These loans came with strings attached, which were called Structural Adjustment Programs. Lenders like the World Bank and IMF give badly needed loans, as long as countries agree to their economy being restructured to benefit foreign interests. In addition to helping to increase taxes for the lower and middle classes of Bolivia to pay off the loan, the IMF has been pushing for this new pipeline and exportation of gas reserves.

These SAP's, which are ways for big corporations to hold loans against poorer nations and then take advantage of that nation's people and resources, will be more formally locked in place if the Free Trade Area of the Americas is allowed to operate. Just as NAFTA allowed prosperous companies to exploit the workers of Mexico through sweatshops, FTAA will make it easier for rich countries and companies to take advantage of poorer ones in Central and South America. If the people of Bolivia hadn't risen up and fought, Bolivia's natural gas supply would have left the country, along with most of the profits. The FTAA will make it even harder for people to fight for their rights.

FTAA will make it easier for rich countries and companies to take advantage of poorer ones in Central and South America.

We in the "developed" world get the benefits of corporate globalization: we get cheap gas, cheap clothing, access to tin reserves and the logging of forests. We dump our hazardous waste just over the border with Mexico. We also lose out: jobs leave the country; people around the globe resent us when they figure out what is going on. Ultimately, our own environment is more at risk for destruction, our labor open for exploitation, and our government undermined by corporate interests. The real winners are the corporations who design all these programs. Everyone else loses, especially the Bolivias of the world.

We need to recognize the connections between our lifestyles and the struggle of the people in Bolivia, and many other places. We need to oppose the system of corporate globalization, as made concrete in the World Bank, the IMF, and the FTAA, that is increasing the inequality in the world. The FTAA is meeting Nov. 17 through Nov. 21 in Miami. We must not allow them to continue controlling our lives for their own profit. If not for Bolivia, then for ourselves.

Information for this editorial was taken from www. zmag.org/lam/boliviawatch.htm and www. globalexchange.org

Ian Trefethen is a UMass student.

Letter to the Editor

To the Editor:

I would like to clarify some of the errors that Sara Hakim mentioned in her editorial "Abortion: the last resort."

According to Hakim, 46 million abortions are performed in the United States every year, a severe exaggeration of the truth that mentioned no source. According to The Alan Guttmacher Institute, there were just over one million abortions performed in 2001. In fact, the number of abortions performed has decreased in the past 10 years.

Hakim believes that making abortion illegal would result in the decrease of abortions performed. I would have to disagree. According to Rachel Benson Gold's study on abortion and women's health, the 1973 nationwide legalization of abortion resulted in the decrease of abortions performed after the first trimester. Many advocates of legal abortion attribute this decrease to the increase in access and knowledge about safe, legal abortion services.

Hakim thinks that abortions are too readily available. In reality, 33 states have laws in effect that mandate the involvement of at least one parent in the abortion decision. Teenagers who cannot tell their parents (for example, incest victims) must either travel out of state or obtain approval from a judge to obtain an abortion. The result is a delay that can increase both the cost of the abortion and the health risk to the teenager since an earlier abortion is a safer one.

She also says that she would never put herself in a position that she would need to decide whether or not an abortion is a suitable option for her. This statement assumes that everyone seeking an abortion willingly puts himself or herself into that position. What about women who are raped?

I believe that a woman should have the right to choose to have an abortion. This right should not depend on the personal beliefs of anyone but herself. Instead of talking about misconceptions that abortion is viewed as a form of birth control, that people who get pregnant have willingly put themselves into that position, and that abortions are readily available, how about we talk about access? Equal access and informative education is what will benefit women and our society as a whole.

Various studies show that over a five-year period ending in 2002, approximately $500 million in federal and state funds will have been spent on abstinence-only education. Fewer than half of public schools in the U.S. now offer information on how to obtain birth control, and only a third include discussion of abortion and sexual orientation in their curricula. Meanwhile, students in comprehensive sexuality education classes do not engage in sexual activity more often or at an earlier age, but do use contraception and practice safer sex more consistently when they become sexually active.

Other ineffective government programs include an unconstitutional ban on Partial Birth Abortion, a procedure that is not recognized by the medical community and will not benefit anyone but those who use it for political gain.

In the words of Planned Parenthood Federation of America president Gloria Feldt, "This dangerous ban prevents women, in consultation with their families and trusted doctors, from making decisions about their own health." For more accurate information on women's health issues, check out VOX's sexiversity column or www.plannedparenthood.org.

Sincerely,
Cara Bedick
UMass Senior

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 3, 2003 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Just call

Love Potion

Deborah Geiger

Ok, I've successfully pinpointed it. The most annoying thing about guys — the most annoying thing that they can possibly do that will stifle and stagnate what could happen with you, a hot girl!

Everyone's got a guy. Come on, yes you do. Not a boyfriend, not a close guy friend, but a breed totally unparalleled by either — a guy you lust after.

There may be more than one. Your relationship is definitely not tangible in any way — it's just that you think about him, even if your friends think you're crazy, you still think he's cute.

You may have had a class last semester with him (he saved you a seat during the final), you met through someone, or on the mile-long bathroom line at that sketchy corner house near Hobart. Maybe you're both from the same neighborhood, or maybe you always had a little something going on.

He's asked you for your screen name, or your phone number, but he hasn't used it. Even the magic eight ball promises through that shady purple juice: 'all signs point to yes!' What is it saying yes to? Who cares! It's a positive sign. Something is going to happen!

You squeal into the cell "he's sooooo sexy. Oh my gosh, he invited me to Peking Garden! Did I tell you that? Well, he didn't, like, say that we were going to go together, but he said, 'you should go!'"

While your friends at home, your friends at school, your grandma, and especially your mom are all avid listeners, this dude's eye color becomes stale and you can bet they're watching 'Bachelorette' reruns on mute and/or chipping away at nail polish listening to you.

So we have this guy who won't take it to the next level. I'll bet you're thinking, "OK, already! What is the number one most annoying thing about guys?"

The answer is these guys don't take it to the next level — by this I mean they don't call!

Ok guys, before continue I have to admit something on your behalf. It is a little creepy if you call often and much — or too soon — especially in the beginning, when we're just getting to talking.

In all honestly, it's kind of sexy to be mysterious … It gets me thinking, 'hmm ... what is he up to that's so important?'

But in terms of making something happen, also known as picking up the phone, I'd like you to call me within five or seven days of meeting me and/or saying that you will. If you see me in class a few times a week, ask me when I'll be around my room or apartment.

Don't go more than 10 days without talking to me — especially if we don't have class together — because if we then ran into each other I would feel attracted to you on the one hand but standoffish on the other because on some level you let me down. Whether I'd admit that or if I even know that is a different story.

And girls — please be careful because guys are sometimes in the dark about where you stand. Don't waste time on fantasy relationships ('he smiled at me once') or expect guys to be total mind readers. They're not!

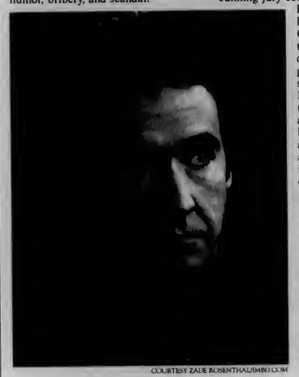
I'm talking about the kind of guy — you know who I mean — that asks for numbers and screen names, knows where we live, and still doesn't take it to that next level. Believe me — if I didn't want you to call me, I would politely make something up.

Most smart, attractive girls I know want the kind of guy that not only gets everything he needs to succeed, something tangible like a phone number, but makes use of these tools, by picking up the phone and using it!

So, if you want to hang out with me, be interested enough to call me. Don't say you will, or vaguely invite me places, or tell me that I "should go" with a twinkle in your eye. Everyone is familiar with People Finder so don't say, 'I wanted to call you but I lost your number.' If you don't want to see me, don't ask for my phone number. I can handle it and I have faith that all the wonderful women here can handle it, too.

Not all of us girls are looking for boyfriends. We just want to have fun, remember? So don't think that we're going to think that it's really formal and a huge deal that this guy wants to hang out with us.

Just call.



Deborah Geiger is a Collegian columnist.

'Runaway Jury:' Controlling the hand of justice

By Kristin Erekson
Collegian Correspondent

For all of those people who have yet to experience the thrill of jury duty, the movie "Runaway Jury" provides an unrealistic, yet thoroughly entertaining, account jam-packed with action, good humor, bribery, and scandal.

'Runaway Jury'
Directed by Gary Fleder
Starring John Cusack Gene Hackman
20th Century Fox
Rated PG-13
127 mins.
Grade B+

COURTESY ZADE ROSENTHAL/IMDB.COM

"Runaway Jury" features an all-star cast including John Cusack, pictured above, and Dustin Hoffman.

When a Louisiana businessman (Dylan McDermott) is killed during a shooting spree in his office, his widowed wife decides to seek solace and take revenge by suing the gun manufacturer who distributes the weapons used in the shooting. She hires down-to-earth lawyer, Wendell Rohr, played by Dustin Hoffman, who wants to win the case in the name of justice — so the husbandless wife and her young son can be one step closer to healing the wounds caused by this tragedy.

However, trouble stirs when the gun corporation hires the cunning jury consultant, Rankin Fitch, brought to life by actor Gene Hackman, to sway the verdict in favor of guns. But to the surprise of both Rohr and Fitch, they are not alone. A member of the jury, along with an accomplice, is also trying to alter the verdict of the adjudicators for their own purposes.

Directed by Gary Fleder, best known for his work with the film "Don't Say a Word," "Runaway Jury" is an intriguing, must-see adaptation of John Grisham's 1997 novel of the same title.

Though the film sticks closely to Grisham's blue print, there are some alterations made. The biggest change made to the storyline is the premise of the trial. In Grisham's novel, a woman from Biloxi, Miss., sues a major tobacco company for her husband's death from lung cancer. Yet the movie seems to work well with the hot-button topic of gun control due to the ambiance and cast.

A slight change of location works in favor of the movie as well. The setting seems to become a character in the film. It is almost exotic and wild to have this story take place in New Orleans, where thoughts of crime, partying and Mardi Gras comes to mind. The scenery feels downright dirty, much like what is going on behind the scenes of this trial.

The audience also gets a glimpse into the often unseen side of the legal process, the jury selection. It is captivating to learn the depths of how the jury is chosen — there are profiles, candid photographs, and all sorts of personal records on these people. It seems as though a jury of peers becomes a fine-tuned verdict-pumping machine at the hands of Fitch and others.

The cast of "Runaway Jury" functions well together and each actor fits into his/her role perfectly. Most notable is Gene Hackman's work in the film. The veteran actor gives an outstanding performance as an aggressive businessman whose life revolves around always winning. His character will do whatever it takes in this trial to make sure he comes out on top.

Overall, the principle goal of "Runaway Jury" is not to lecture the audience about how guns can kill, but instead it is a complex examination of the ever-present battle between good and evil. The story focuses on the strategies used by Rohr and Fitch, and how sometimes the most tactful, dishonest approaches are not the best way to sway people's decisions.

"Runway Jury" is about winning a trial, not about winning the issue of gun control. The plot of the movie helps the audience to keep Fitch's famous words of advice in mind, "Trials are much too important to be decided by juries."

COURTESY ZADE ROSENTHAL/IMDB.COM

Gene Hackman gives a performance of a lifetime in "Runaway Jury," an adaptation of the John Grisham novel.

Seekonk paint a musical picture with their debut, 'For Barbara Lee'

By Deborah Geiger
Collegian Correspondent

Even the most famous acts these days are relying more and more on clichés — drum machines or vocal enhancements — to separate themselves from the pack. Seekonk, the Portland, Maine-based indie-soul ensemble uses special effects too, but not the kind that replace talent that isn't there.

Their talent is apparent, all right, even if the most high-tech element on "For Barbara Lee," Seekonk's debut album due out Nov 18, is a 1980's electronic Casio toy keyboard.

"An SK1 piano. Goodwill, $3. There are a few … songs that feature crappy little keyboards, too," said Patrick Corrigan. Corrigan sings and plays both electric and acoustic guitars, the drums, vibraphone, and keyboard. "I love them all."

It may seem like fate threw Seekonk, the northeastern quintet who have been compared to the likes of Pink Floyd, Mazzy Star, Neil Young, and Low, together precariously, but their delicately crafted, dreamlike sound is anything but unbalanced.

Record label Kimchee, to which the band is signed, describes Seekonk as "Players from Portland … who like to try different instruments on for size … the band began as a result of two guys getting dumped hard by their sweethearts…songs happened."

The five members — Patrick Corrigan, Dave Noyes (classical guitar, piano, vocals, keyboard, cello, trombone), Jason Ingalls (drums, xylophone, percussion), Todd Hutchinson (electric/acoustic guitar, vocals, piano), and Shana Barry (vocals therein, keyboard) — may seem like a lot, but after listening to "For Barbara Lee," you'll hear why. More instruments are used on this album than in a junior high school marching band. Imagery and feeling are intertwined between lyric and melody through the myriad of sounds.

"We're happy that we were able to take heartache and transform it the way that we did," Corrigan said. "Shana [Barry] came in to Seekonk and brought her own spirit with her, which, I think, has a melancholy and warm quality to it. She wasn't just the singer. She understood what we were saying and feeling. She has a beautiful sort of soul."

"For Barbara Lee" is an eight-track disc, short enough to keep the audience listening and long enough to show listeners what Seekonk is made of.

Among the music that this quintet draws inspiration from are bands such as Low and Yo La Tengo. They even throw nods to Neil Young, old reggae, and Brazilian beats.

The result is a richly textured collection of songs that evoke a sort of visual plain. Some of the imagery someone may visualize listening this album may involve a beach, a forest, a lagoon, or maybe an ocean. "I was born in the sky above. And 2000 feet below, people go, people move. I was born in the sky above," imparts the lyrics from the first song on the album, "Move."

"'Move,' that's my favorite song to play," Corrigan said. "It starts off small and gets bigger and bigger until you forget it's a song. When it ends, though, I always say, 'What a great [explicative] song that is.'"

Also appearing on "For Barbara Lee," the track "The Delivery" is a whitewashed conglomeration of dreamlike violin, rain, waves, and surf.

"'The Delivery' was recorded one day in my living room … I had no preconception of what it was going to be before I actually began creating. I stuck a microphone outside our window and ended up getting a field recording of the first thunderstorm of the season in Portland." Corrigan said.

Like so many other elements in the nature of their work, "…that was purely chance. It became the base for everything else that was layered on top."

What other musicians may perceive as a mistake, or something that needs to be edited out, Seekonk seems to embrace with a crazed delight. "At one point if you listen closely, you can hear these three kids who live in our neighborhood walking by and harassing each other … little rascals … I'm pretty sure those same kids broke into my car," Corrigan said. This idea of working with what is there makes it possible for Seekonk to craft a seven-minute song that has no words. It's about feeling.

Seekonk
'For Barbara Lee'
Kimchee Records

"We like keeping things interesting for both ourselves and whomever may be listening," said Corrigan. "[Our music is] for people who like to chill out, but still feel like they are getting a piece of the rock."

The album seems to encourage kicking back and relaxing — it flows like chilled white wine, pungent and bitter at first but refreshing and beautiful looking back. "For Barbara Lee" may sound like one big song, but in some ways this was purposeful.

"After we wrote all of the music, we wanted to craft an album with what we had. Some records are a collection of songs. Some are fully realized albums. There was a thread that ran through everything already, so it was instinctual for us to order everything the way we did." Seekonk said. "Some of the blending was our way of pulling a listener through the album. If you want to, you can get on this ride. We'll take care of it from here."

"For Barbara Lee" is for anyone who is a thinker and a dreamer. The record embraces all the good aspects of being in a melancholy mood, or going through difficult changes and creative effects they may bring. It's not all peaches and cream for Seekonk but the listener need not be afraid that the album will weigh on the conscience like a cinderblock.

"We promise it won't bum you out!" Buy this album, sit back, close your eyes, and get on the "ride;" Seekonk will take care of it from here.

Just who is Barbara Lee?

"I can't tell you who Barbara Lee is," Corrigan said. "Sorry about that. Don't mean to sound mercurial or anything."

COURTESY KIMCHEERECORDS.COM

With their first album, Seekonk prove that less is more.

'Scary Movie 3' top draw

By David Germain
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Audiences were in a laughing mood for Halloween as the horror spoof "Scary Movie 3" took in $21.1 million to remain the top film for a second straight weekend.

In its wide-release debut, Disney's animated tale "Brother Bear" opened in second place with $18.5 million, according to studio estimates Sunday.

The haul for "Brother Bear" was only for Saturday and Sunday. After the movie premiered in two theaters the previous weekend, Disney chose to expand it into wide release on Saturday rather than the usual Friday, which was Halloween, typically a slow night at theaters.

"Halloween has grown and become such a family experience that we chose not to compete with that on Friday," said Disney head of distribution Chuck Viane.

Studios overall reported a big slump in ticket sales Friday because of Halloween, with only horror flicks such as "The Texas Chainsaw Massacre" holding up well that night.

"Halloween night has become like Christmas Eve," said Tom Sherak, a partner in Revolution Studios, whose feel-good drama "Radio" was No. 4 with $10.2 million.

The top 12 movies took in $91.9 million, down 9 percent from the same weekend last year.

The quiet weekend was the calm before the storm as theaters prepare for Wednesday's debut of "The Matrix Revolutions," the final installment of the Wachowski brothers' sci-fi saga.

The franchise's middle chapter, "The Matrix Reloaded," had an opening weekend of $91.8 million last May, the best debut ever for an R-rated movie.

"Scary Movie 3" pushed its 10-day total to $78.6 million, surpassing the $71.3 million gross of "Scary Movie 2" over its entire run. The original "Scary Movie" topped out at $157 million.

Playing in 3,505 theaters, "Scary Movie 3" averaged $6,020 from Friday to Sunday. For its two-day weekend in wide-release, "Brother Bear" averaged $6,119 in 3,030 theaters.

Meg Ryan's murder thriller "In the Cut," directed by Jane Campion, expanded to wider release after a limited debut the previous weekend. "In the Cut" came in at No. 10 with $2.3 million, averaging $2,788 in 825 theaters.

"The Human Stain," starring Anthony Hopkins and Nicole Kidman in an adaptation of Philip Roth's novel, opened in 160 theaters and took in a solid $1.1 million for an average of $7,025 a cinema.

"Alien: The Director's Cut," Ridley Scott's new version of his 1979 sci-fi horror flick, debuted with $1.04 million, averaging $2,997 in 347 theaters.

"Shattered Glass," starring Hayden Christensen as Stephen Glass, The New Republic journalist fired for fabricating stories, debuted well with $80,000 in eight theaters.

As it did last year with "The Santa Clause 2," Disney slipped "Brother Bear" into theaters to beat the rush of family films that arrive for the holidays. Next weekend brings the Christmas comedy "Elf," while "Dr. Seuss' the Cat in the Hat," "Looney Tunes: Back in Action" and "The Haunted Mansion" debut later in November.

"'Brother Bear' totally capitalized on a marketplace devoid of family films," said Paul Dergarabedian, president of box-office tracker Exhibitor Relations. "There's always an opportunity where there's a scarcity of product for a particular segment of the audience."

MondayNovember3

Books

The Odyssey Book Shop in South Hadley hosts Francis Bok tonight at 7 p.m. Bok will be discussing his autobiography "Escape from Slavery: The True Story of My Ten Years of Captivity – and My Journey to Freedom in America." The reading is free and open to the public.

Art

A collection of works by Angela Zammarelli opens today at the Student Union Art Gallery. "It's Hard For Me To Sleep With You Looking at Me," is BFA student Zammarelli's exploration of the dream-like world of childhood and features many different types of media. The Student Union Art Gallery is open Monday through Thursday 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Fridays 10 a.m. to 3 p.m.

TuesdayNovember4

Art

'Haitian Art Today,' an exhibit at the Cambridge Multicultural Arts Center, opens today. The collection of works will showcase the talents of artists working both in America and in Haiti as well. Admission to the gallery is free. For more information go to www.haitianarttoday.org

Books

UMass professor and civil rights activist Ekwueme Michael Theiweli will be reading from and signing his new book "Ready For Revolution: The Life and Struggles of Stokely Carmichael" at the Broadside Bookshop in Northampton. The book is not only a poignant account of the life of one of African-American rights' most invaluable leaders but also a personal tribute for Theiweli, who has often referred to Stokely Carmichael as one of his closest friends. The reading is free and starts at 7:30 p.m.

WednesdayNovember5

Music

Pilobolus, described by a Fine Arts Center press release as "provocative, weightless, mind-boggling acts of physical dexterity," hits the FAC Concert Hall tonight at 7:30 p.m. The group combines dance, gymnastics and performance art into a show, which "exploits [the body's] sculptural properties." Accompanied by the Saint Lawrence String Quartet, the performance costs $15, $10, and $7 for Five College Students

Lectures

Dr. Loren Mosher addresses Mount Holyoke College tonight at 7:30 p.m. Dr. Mosher, once head of the Center for Studies of Schizophrenia, will speak about the relationship of psychiatry and pharmaceuticals. The lecture will be held in the Willits-Hallowell Center and is free to the public.

ThursdayNovember6

Art

Catch the opening reception for "Juxtapositions," an collection of works from Marianne Thespina Connolly, Ellen Grobman, and Lynn Peterfreund, as part of the monthly gallery walk, starting at Gallery A3 on Amity Street in Amherst, at 5 p.m. Each artist brings something different to the exhibit — Connolly working with photo, Grobman with painting on silk, and Peterfreund with etchings.

Books

Jayne Ann Phillips comes to UMass tonight as part of the Visiting Writers Series. The author has received a slew of accolades throughout her career including The Sue Kaufman Prize and an Academy Award in Literature. The reading will take place in Memorial Hall at 8 p.m. and is free to the public.

SaturdayNovember8

Books

Joshua Beckman and Matt Rohrer, authors of the books "Nice Hat. Thanks." appear at Amherst Books on Main Street today at 1:30 p.m. The two poets, known for their unique form of collaborative poetry, will perform works from their latest work "Adventures While Preaching the Gospel of Beauty" as well as create original works during their appearance. The event is free and open to the public.

weekly pinup

LIGHTS, CAMERA, ACTION!

Now in it's ninth year, the Northampton Independent Film festival will take place between Nov. 5 and Nov. 9. Throughout the week, screenings and other events will take place around the city.

Boston set to welcome first new museum in a century

By Steve LeBlanc
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) — If all goes as planned, sometime next spring the city that nicknamed itself the "Hub" of all things cultural will break ground on its first new art museum in a century.

The Institute of Contemporary Art — long a funky outpost in Boston's small, staid constellation of art museums — is scheduled to throw open the doors of sparkling new, four-story museum on the city's waterfront in 2006, heralding what it hopes is a new era of support for cutting-edge arts.

The 62,000-square-foot building is designed to triple the space of the museum's current lodgings and will include a 300-seat theater, an open grandstand facing the water and a massive, cantilevered glass-skinned exhibition space.

A 165-square-foot glass elevator with views of the water will shuttle visitors from floor to floor. The building will also allow the museum to create a permanent collection for the first time, something it had been prevented from doing because of lack of space.

The last time Boston celebrated the opening of a new art museum was when the Museum of Fine Arts moved from Copley Square into its current location in the Fenway neighborhood of the city in 1909.

The new structure is also a kind of coming-out party for the ICA, which spent its first 40 years hopscotching around downtown Boston before landing a permanent home in the quirky confines of a former police station in the city's Back Bay neighborhood.

During its life, the museum, established in 1936, has welcomed artists from around Boston and the world dedicated to pushing the limits of arts, politics and culture. It was among the earliest to showcase artists such as Robert Rauschenberg, Andy Warhol, Cindy Sherman, Egon Schiele and Thomas Struth.

More recently, the ICA has offered the city itself as a landscape for artists working on site-specific exhibits. In 1998, the museum hosted a work that projected taped interviews of mothers of murdered children from the city's Charlestown neighborhood onto the 221-foot Bunker Hill monument.

"Our strength and proven track record is being able to expose artists before they really enter the canon," ICA Director Jill Medvedow said. "The ICA has earned its place in the city and needs a building as bold and beautiful as the work it has done for the past 70 years."

The building is the brainchild of husband-and-wife design team Elizabeth Diller and Ricardo Scofidio. Fittingly, the team has created a number of public art works and permanent installations intended to link architectural design with performance and electronic media.

"It's really a wonderful opportunity because for many years we've done installations in museums," Scofidio said in a video produced by the ICA to document the initial design process. "We've brought not only our skills as an architect, but we've brought another understanding of what a museum is."

One of the team's most ambitious projects was the Blur Building created for the Swiss Expo 2002. Built on a lake in Switzerland, the steel structure was enveloped in a mist created by filtered lake water shot through 31,000 fog nozzles. The team drafted about 100 models before offering the ICA four choices. Museum officials opted for the final cantilevered design, which takes advantage of the harbor's seascape and natural lighting filtered through the ceiling.

"We've been seeing it as a building that's built from the ground up and the sky down," Diller said.

The new museum is part of the city's ongoing redevelopment of its South Boston harborfront. The ICA won a competition intended to dedicate a portion of the development to a cultural institution.

In September, the ICA signed a 99-year lease for the .75-acre site with the Hyatt Development Corp., which is owned by the Chicago-based Pritzker family. The $1-per-year lease will allow the museum to focus its fundraising efforts on construction costs.

The ICA is hoping to raise about $60 million for the project, including $41 million for construction with the rest going to an endowment and moving costs. About $8 million will come from the sale or lease of the current building.

The museum will be the cultural linchpin of the 2.9 million-square-foot Fan Pier waterfront development project, which is also planned to include 675 residential units, a hotel and more than 100,000-square-feet of civic and cultural space and parks.

The building's location will help create a kind of oceanside "sapphire necklace" of cultural institutions — including the New England Aquarium, Children's Museum, and John F. Kennedy Library and Museum — to compliment the city's "emerald necklace" of interlocking parks created by Frederick Law Olmsted, the father of American landscape architecture, Medvedow said.

Vin Cipolla, chairman of the ICA's board of directors, likens the prominent location to Australia's Sydney Opera House. He said the new ICA could help change perceptions about Boston as an artistically stuffy locale.

"In Boston we are blessed with very important institutions that look at art history, that look at things from the perspective of where we have been rather than where we are going," he said. "The role of the ICA in the city is about the future ... the prominence of the site suggests this is a city about receiving these contemporary ideas."

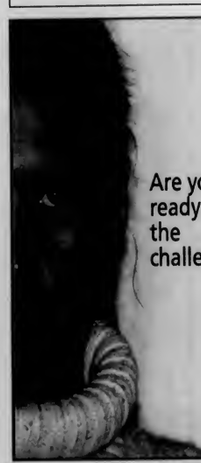
The design, location and ambition of the ICA's plan is winning accolades from the leaders of other cultural institutions in Boston.

"The city absolutely needs this. It's really critical to the ecology of the cultural life of the city," said Anne Hawley, director of the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum, celebrating its centennial this year.

Hawley said the new ICA will complement rather than compete with the city's older art museums.

"Not having the ICA in a strategic position has been a huge lack," she said. "Without a strong contemporary art center that is pivotally located and collecting you miss a whole part of the art world."

The opening of the new building will force fans of the old ICA, with its odd architectural angles and downtown location, to bid a fond farewell to the former police station turned art gallery.



"It served well a small audience as well as international artists," Medvedow said. "But it was a simple need. We've outgrown this space. Artists today need an incredible amount of flexibility."

Oasis Body Wraps and Tanning
243 Russell St.
Hadley, MA 01035
(413) 587-9742
NOW FEATURING SUN SPREE'ZER UV FREE TANNING
• The first UV FREE tanning machine in the area
• Get $5.00 off your first visit
• A rich golden tan in just a few seconds
• You'll look and feel great
1/2 Price tanning every Tuesday
Conveniently Located
OASIS Hampshire Mall University Drive UMASS Route 9

LAUNCH YOUR CAREER
Apply now for a Legal Assistant Internship at the Student Legal Services Office
*Serve the campus community while enhancing your resume
*Earn up to 15 credits working 36 hours a week or 6 to 9 credits working 26 hours a week
Student Legal Services Office
922 Campus Center
(413) 545-1995

MUSIC • SOFTWARE • MOVIES • BOOKS
MEDIA PLAY®
STUDENT TUESDAYS
1. BRING IN THIS AD
2. BUY ANY 3 CDs OR 2 DVDs
3. SHOW US YOUR STUDENT I.D.
4. GET A $5 GIFT CARD INSTANTLY
OFFER VALID AT HAMPSHIRE MALL LOCATION ONLY
CASHIERS MARKDOWN CODE 101

LIFE IN THE FUN LANE!
Work a flexible schedule in a fun environment!
PART-TIME POSITIONS AVAILABLE:
• Servers – Monday and Wednesday - 6 p.m. to 9 p.m. Friday and Saturday – 9 p.m. to 1 a.m.
• Marketing Assistant – Can you work a flexible schedule of about 20 hours per week that includes some days and evenings? This is a great entry level position promoting and coordinating parties and bowling events.
• Machine Mechanic - Do you enjoy working with machines and have the ability to troubleshoot? We will teach you how to monitor and maintain our pinsetter machines. Mechanical experience necessary. PT day, evening and weekend shifts available
Apply today @ Northampton Bowl, 525 Pleasant St., Northampton. Ask for Bill or Vinny.

Are you ready for the challenge?
Start here.
Each day of our intense Winter Session equals an entire week of course material, which means that you can earn three credits in just three weeks! And, best of all, Winter Session costs less. There are fewer fees now than at any other time of year. Save time and money.
You know you're ready. Start here. Registration begins November 12.
UMassAmherst
Continuing Education
www.umass.edu/start • (413) 545-2414

Rollercoaster weekend for UMass

Gerald H. Ling/Collegian

Senior captain Ptah Myers dished an assist in a 5-0 route against St. Joseph's on Sunday. The Minutemen look to gain postseason birth at URI this Saturday at 1p.m.

By Bob McGovern
Collegian Staff

It was a tale of two games for the Massachusetts men's soccer team.

A tale with a happy ending.

The Minutemen (11-6-1, 5-4-1 A-10) took on Atlantic 10 rivals Temple (11-3-2, 7-1-1 A-10) and St. Joseph's last weekend in the friendly confines of Rudd field. The Maroon and White dropped a 2-0 heartbreaker to the Owls on Friday, but rebounded with a 5-0 thumping of the Hawks.

UMass came firing out of the gates against St. Joseph's (7-10-1, 4-5-1 A-10), scoring all five of its goals in the first half. The Minutemen dominated every aspect of the game and out-shot the Hawks 22-3 before halftime.

Temple	2
UMass	0
St. Joseph's	0
UMass	5

St. Joseph's was coming off a dramatic 2-1 double overtime loss to Rhode Island on Friday and was showing signs of fatigue. UMass coach Sam Koch attributes the offensive explosion to the Hawks lack of energy.

"I think we went against a tired St. Joe's team, we just finished our chances," Koch said, "We had a lot of shots and we were able to put them in."

Ralph Pace broke the ice for the Maroon and White off assists from Oral Bullen and Rob Charest. Charest lobbed the ball to Bullen who controlled possession in the box and centered the ball to Pace. Pace took advantage of the one-on-one and sent the ball in the top right corner.

It only took UMass five minutes to net its second goal of the game coming off a Smith Utubor cross to Andrew Eicher at the 15:12 mark. The ball was placed perfectly in front of a wide-open Eicher who rocketed the ball past St. Joseph's keeper Kevin Dougher.

The Minutemen played a very team oriented game — each of the five goals came from a different player. Koch was pleased with his team's overall ball movement.

"We played a little more unselfish and passed the ball a little bit better and created some opportunities," Koch said.

Dan Colwell made the score 3-0 off assists from Ptah Myers and Pace, who opted for the assist rather than a one-on-one with the keeper.

Ernie Billittier and freshman Michael Donnelly scored the final two goals of the match within three minutes of each other. The Maroon and White went into the break with a 5-0 lead, shocking fans and players alike.

The Minutemen played the rest of the game conservatively, but the shots kept coming. UMass out-shot the Hawks 37-8 in the contest but couldn't get on the board in the second half.

"My feeling was the first fifteen minutes we had to keep them off the board and we played a lot of different people. We didn't have to score another goal," Koch said.

Temple was a totally different story. UMass found themselves stuck in a scoring rut facing a tenacious Owl defense. Temple shut out the Minutemen for the first time since a 0-0 tie against Richmond on October 5th.

The Maroon and White had several opportunities to get on the board, but were unable to finish.

"It would be a totally different game if we put those first couple of chances away but we didn't do it and we allowed them to stay in the game," Koch said, "Once they get a one goal lead they are very hard to score on."

The Owls were unable to solve the Minutemen's defense in the first half. The unit was missing two vital components in Craig Canavan and Chris Camerota who were on the bench.

Koch explained that Canavan is currently nursing a stress fracture in his left leg and didn't dress for the game. Camerota, a diabetic, had to wait until the second half due to low blood sugar.

Without defensive leader Canavan, the Maroon and White had to make personnel alterations in the backfield.

"We don't have enough depth," Koch said, "Could we have used him today? I definitely think we could have, but an injury is an injury."

Temple looked like a different team after halftime and only needed three minutes to get on the board. Joe Brocker was able to redirect a Ryan Heins direct kick past UMass keeper Colin Burns.

The Owls then settled into their defense and held off the Minutemen with help from keeper Patrick Hannigan, who posted the shutout with four saves.

The second goal was scored off of a UMass defensive lapse, which left Anthony Donatelli wide open on the left side of the box. Donatelli lobbed the ball over Burns and sealed the victory.

"I think we were too far back in our box which allowed them to be right on top of the goal keeper and you just can't do that," Koch said.

Minutemen stay on right track

Continued from page 8

Amherst. PC jumped out to a 2-0 lead in the first period and never looked back.

Providence moves to 5-1-1 (1-1-1 Hockey East), while the Minutemen drop to 4-1 (1-1).

Colin McDonald's power play tally at 12:33 of the third period gave Providence the 6-2 advantage, but it was over long before that. David Carpentier's goal at 3:40 of the second period was the game-winner, although PC rattled off three more goals to finish off the beating.

Jeff Mason took a deflection off a Minuteman shinpad and zipped a long wrister from the point that beat goaltender Gabe Winer to make it 4-0 at 7:17 of the second. Tony Zancanaro followed up with a beautiful deke in the crease on a breakaway and McDonald finished things off midway through the final period.

"It's a good feeling, everybody contributed," Providence coach Paul Pooley said. "Every line played, every defenseman played, [goaltender] Bobby [Goepfert] played well, so it was a good road win. I told them before we started the game 'we're not here to impress anybody, we're here to get two points and win a Hockey East game,' and they went out, were very methodical and did everything we asked them to do."

The Friars had much to be happy about with their third and fourth lines. The two trios combined for two goals and seven assists.

The Minutemen showed their first sign of life with less than a minute remaining in the second period. Kevin Jarman slipped around the net and when John Toffey's stuff attempt slipped to the right side of the crease where Jarman pounced to score his first collegiate goal cutting the Friars' lead to 4-1.

Gerald H. Ling/Collegian

Captain Thomas Pöck has two powerplay goals last weekend in a 4-2 win at Providence. The Minutemen split the weekend with the Friars.

Maroon and White win on road

Continued from page 8

around for us."

Gabe Winer had a difficult game in Amherst, yielding six goals in the losing effort. Winer was back to his normal form in Providence notching 22 saves and allowing two goals, but more importantly coming up clutch down the stretch, preserving the narrow one point lead late in the final period.

"Gabe's performance was solid earlier in the game," Cahoon said. "But in the third period we he really needed to come up big, when they stormed us late in the third period, he really responded and was up to the task."

Cahoon then touched upon how Winer reacted to the difficult loss the prior night.

"I'm sure [Winer] wasn't pleased," Cahoon said. "He knows when he plays well and when he doesn't. I was tickled to death for him [regarding the turnaround]. He's a bright kid and a very aware kid. We didn't talk a lot about negatives with him, since generally speaking he shows up to play."

UMass dominated the tempo from the drop of the puck. The Minutemen kept play in the Providence zone in the early goings, demonstrating crisp passing, and strong skating while generating great scoring opportunities.

The Maroon and White bombarded Providence goalie David Cacciola with an abundance of quality shots. With 8:37 remaining in the first period of play, the Minutemen were out shooting the Friars 15-1. When the final horn sounded, and after a late attack by the Friars, UMass outshot Providence 36-24.

"I was fairly pleased all around," Cahoon said. "I was just happy with our effort. You never know when you come off a poor performance how your kids are going to respond to what you have to say. And these kids obviously really worked hard for each other."

Thomas Pöck was one of the Minutemen players who really stepped up to the challenge in the second game of the series. The senior tri-captain, who earned an assist in the first game, netted the first two goals for UMass Saturday that fueled the Maroon and White attack.

"One thing that definitely changed was that we came out ready to play," Pöck said about the difference between the two games. "We knew exactly what we needed to do, and did it."

Nick's...for the morning after
63 Main Street, Amherst
Traditional & eclectic breakfast fare, featuring a Southwestern flare, Jewish favorites, & vegan items.
20% STUDENT DISCOUNT
Monday-Friday for the fall 2003 semester
Monday-Friday 6:30am-2pm
Satuday & Sunday 7am-2pm
256-4643
OCMP

Game Room - Delicious Menu - Free Popcorn
Rafters
SPORTS BAR & RESTAURANT
University Drive & Amity Street, Amherst
• Monday •
MONDAY NIGHT FOOTBALL
1/2 Price Appetizers, Wings & Nachos 'til Midnight
• Tuesday & Wednesday •
1/2 PRICE WINGS
Open to Close...eat in only!
Coors LIGHT PITCHER $6.50
October Special

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT
PRE-REGISTRATION FOR SPRING 2004
The Writing Program Placement Test
will be offered on:
MONDAY, NOVEMBER 3
@ 7 P.M.
IN TOBIN 304
This test is a pre-requisite for enrollment in Englwrit 112/113, College Writing.
(This is the last scheduled test before registration)
This test may be taken only once.
Students do not need to register for the test.

Come Get Your FREE WEEK!
Buy any Unlimited Tanning Package or Multi-Session package, and we'll tack on a whole FREE WEEK!
Buy any Bottle of California Tan and get a FREE bottle of Total Immersion or Total Submersion!
Expires 12/31/03. Limit 1 per customer.
BEACH CLUB TANNING STUDIOS
65 University Drive • ph 549-HOTT

Summer in Paris 2004
Two 5-week Summer Sessions & French Immersion for Academic Credit
Other Special Programs
Consult: www.aup.edu
Contact: summer@aup.fr
Paris Office: Tel. 33 1 40 62 06 14 Fax. 33 1 40 62 07 17
U.S. Office: Tel. 1 800 758 6444 Fax. 1 800 758 6444
The American University of Paris

STUDENT TRAVEL
student discounts
great student fares!
London.....$310
Paris.....$371
Rio de Janeiro.....$643
Los Angeles.....$262
Las Vegas.....$262
Fare is round trip from Boston. Subject to change and availability. Tax not included. Restrictions and blackouts apply.
44 Main St
(413) 256.1261
STA TRAVEL
WE'VE BEEN THERE.

Today's Crossword Puzzle

Previous puzzle solved

Across
1 Pony's gait
5 Pal
10 Cookbook section
14 Shrill
15 Not in a whisper
16 Ripped
17 Olden times
18 Wooden shoes
19 Bird's bill
20 Wire-haired pooch
22 Clues
23 Ballyhoo
24 Olive's suitor
28 Wooden outerwear
29 Stacey
32 Glass bottles
33 Take a rash —
34 Fortune-teller
35 Purposes
36 Kermit's command
37 Graceful wraparound
38 Golfer Woosnam
39 Squash
40 Sailor
41 Most of the air
43 Skirmish
44 Throw a party
45 Toupee cousins
46 Plunged
48 Bubble machine
52 Wading bird
53 Wisdom tooth
54 Hideaway
57 PC tot
58 Theater cheer
59 Fossil fuel
60 Ballot marks
61 Daisy Mae's friend
62 Goofs up

Down
1 Quaker word
2 Kind of squad
3 Man-eating giant
4 Long johns
5 Fuel source
6 Funny Steve
7 Oat
8 Carry wearily
9 Sullivan and Munroe
10 Run of luck
11 Fellow
12 Antelope
13 Kinship role
21 Pass the cabin
22 Dampen a stamp
24 Winning
25 Bogie role
26 Red Sea nations
27 Locked
28 Road feature
29 Go to the rink
30 Like a haunted house
31 Pre-weekend cheer
32 Hollywood
33 Vinegar jar
36 Machine teeth
37 Winter's start
39 Yummy
40 Part of Mntg
42 Lab monkey
43 Bathroom powder
45 Use a loom
46 Two nickels
47 Wild mountain goat
48 Honeysuckle, e.g.
49 Comedian King
50 Shed
51 Parent
53 CEO's degree
54 Planet, poetically
56 Pet and Dove

Dining Commons Menu

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Santa Fe Chicken
- Pizza Casserole
- Cuban Red Beans (vegan)

DINNER
- Fried Shrimp
- Szechuan Beef & Broccoli
- Szechuan Tofu & Broccoli (vegan)

Daily Weather Forecast

For Amherst

MONDAY
- High: 68
- Low: 45

TUESDAY
- High: 56
- Low: 44

WEDNESDAY
- High: 65
- Low: 48

Production Crew

On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Dan Lamothe
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Gerald H. Ling
COPY EDITOR
Leah Wyner
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Shannon Farrington
PRODUCTION STAFF
Sarah Lloyd/ Cory Rosenberg

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Listen to sound advice.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
It hit the fan and flew right in your face...

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Technicalities do count.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Try to remember what you did this weekend; you lost your wallet in the midst of it.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
Bandanas are fun accessories.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Red lip stick — not a good plan.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
You're going to class today. Yaaaaaay!

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Just because you appear to be doing work doesn't mean you are.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Public displays of affection are unnecessary and disrespectful.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
It's been one big party lately.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Argyle is making a comeback.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Your road trip will be a success.

Quote for the Day

"I would never do crack ... I would never do a drug named after a part of my own a, OK?"

-Denis Leary

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Student Director Wanted For Play on Lord Jeff Amherst. Shows the 'hero' as biologic warrior who deliberately slaughtered the Indians with Smallpox, 'winning' the war. STYLE: Brechtian. Loud, raucous. Simple sets. Musical. Goal: controversy, outrage. AUTHOR: AC graduate, many past productions VENUE/ACTORS: your choice CONTACT: 718-601-8089 nites Leave name/address please

Fraternities-Sororities- Clubs-Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with a proven CampusFundraiser 3 hour fundraising event. Our free programs make fundraising easy with no risks. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so get with the program! It works. Contact CampusFundraiser at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

AUTO FOR SALE

1999 Explorer XLT 4x4 Excellent Condition Sunroof 6cyl. Loaded $12,500 Call 546-3477

$500!!! Cars from $500!!! Police Impounds for listings. 1-800-319-3323 ext4554

93 Pontiac Bonneville SDN All Power Must Sell $1500 B/O 253-5537

Mountainview Auto Route 47 South in Hadley 585-0599 '89 Mercedes 300E Clean $3500 '94 Nissan Sentra Limited Edition $2850 '87 Honda Civic excellent transportation $950 '87 Saab 900 Automatic $950 '88 Dodge Caravan Very Clean 100,000 miles $1200

1992 Silver Ford Taurus Excellent condition $2400 118000K Call 549-3930 210-7393 All Power

1992 Honda Prelude SI, Loaded, $3900 587-0242

EMPLOYMENT

!Bartending!$ $250/day potential No experience Nesc Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext 162

Landscaping Services: Part-time positions available for fall clean-up and snow work. Need to be ambitious, hardworking, own transportation, and flexible hours. Call Steve at 413-665-3493

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

Telephone Interviewers NO SALES! Conduct interviews over the phone at our Hadley location Flexible Evening and Weekend Hours $7.50/hour to start 20+ hours/week PVTA accessible For more info: 1-888-423-5381 FMI

Movie Extras/Models Needed For local Casting Calls No exp. or age required EARN up to $200 a day 1-888-820-0167

Internship Motivated students seeking leadership outside the box. Gain experience in all aspects of running a small business. Average pay: $9300.00 Call 508-246-1230

FOR SALE

Concept II Indoor Rowing Machine for sale. Like New $500.00 or BO 546-5459

$Save$ Wholesale-Discount prices, video games, clothing, jewelry, more. www.tylers discounts.com

INSTRUCTION

University Bartending Classes Start Soon 1-800-U-CAN-MIX Call now for information!!! Space is Limited www.universitybartending.com

LOST

Lost: Wallet Near Parking garage 10/14 If found please call with description 413-237-1015

SERVICES

All Digital Productions Pro Videography for Weddings, Bar Mitzvahs, Commercial (508) 221-8223 sweetpickler@yahoo.com

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

SERVICES

SHEAR BLISS DAY SPA SERVICES Body Sugaring (waxing) for men and women *Safe *100% Natural *Effective 253-2322 https://shearbliss.image411.com

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

TRAVEL

A "Reality" Spring Break 2004's Hottest Prices Book now .. Free Trips, Meals & Parties www.sunsplashtours.com or 1800-426-7710

TRAVEL

Spring Break 2004 Travel with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator to Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas and Florida. Now hiring campus reps. Call for group discounts. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com For more information contact STA Travel at 413-256-1261

SPRING BREAK

Largest selection of Destinations, including Cruises! Room Parties, Free Drinks and Club Admissions. Rep Positions and FREE trips Available. 1-800-231-4386 www.EpicureanTours.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 3, 2003 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Minutemen tame Huskies

Maroon and White win, remain unbeaten in A-10

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

Mark Whipple knew it was coming.

The head coach of No. 4 Massachusetts knew that after a dramatic, last-second win over Villanova last weekend, the Minutemen were primed for a letdown in a textbook trap game against defending Atlantic 10 Champion Northeastern.

So when the Huskies ambushed UMass with two first-quarter touchdowns to build a 14-0 lead, the veteran coach was not surprised.

However, as they have all season long, the Maroon and White remained resilient. Behind three touchdown passes from A-10 Offensive Player of the Week Jeff Krohn (20-of-28, 227 yards, 1 INT) and a defense that held the Huskies (5-4 3-3 A-10) to just three second-half points, UMass (8-1 6-0 A-10) prevailed 28-24 before 7,106 people at Warren P. McGuirk Alumni Stadium.

Northeastern	24
UMass	28

"The game probably played out the way I thought it would," Whipple said. "On Thursday and Friday we were just in la-la land...There was not the intensity at all that we had last week in practice, and I just didn't feel like it was my place to keep my mouth shut, and I didn't and I let them have it.

"I probably have not ever...ripped a team as much as I did yesterday...but our guys found a way to win and that's the really good thing."

With the score tied 21-21 late in the third quarter, Krohn could not hook up with wide receiver Jimmie Howard on fourth down, giving the ball to the Huskies at their own 21 yard line.

However on the ensuing play following the change of possession, tailback Peter Harris was stripped by noseguard Colin Christopher, and UMass regained possession when freshman safety James Ihedigbo pounced on the loose ball.

After moving the sticks on fourth down with a completion to Dominique Stewart at the 16 yard line, tailback Steve Baylark did the rest, as the sophomore ripped off nine yards on first down before plunging into the end zone from seven yards out at the 4:39 mark, to give the Minutemen a 28-21 lead.

"In an even-steven football game, obviously the one turnover really hurt us in the second half," NU coach Don Brown said.

Following a Miro Kesic field goal that made the score 28-24, UMass was forced to punt on fourth-and-one from the NU 43 yard line, giving Northeastern one last chance, starting at their own 13 with 3:02 to play.

After a 46-yard completion from quarterback Shawn Brady (16 for 27, 174 yards, 1 TD, 2 INT) to receiver Quintin Mitchell on first down moved the Huskies into UMass territory, the drive and the comeback come to an end five plays later, as sophomore safety Shannon James intercepted a Brady pass intended for Pat Graham to seal the victory.

"You want to give yourself one last run down the field," Brown, a former Whipple defensive assistant, said. "Obviously we had that opportunity today, but I credit UMass, they made a big play on the sideline."

Northeastern drew first blood midway through the first quarter, when after Liam Ezekiel intercepted Krohn and returned the ball to the UMass three, Brady hit Bobby French for a three-yard scoring strike to make the score 7-0.

The Huskies doubled their advantage just over two minutes later, as tailback Anthony Riley scampered 59-yards up the gut on third-and-one, giving NU a 14-0 advantage.

The Maroon and White answered back when Krohn hit Rich Demers with a well thrown 15-yard fade down the sideline to cut the deficit in half to 14-7.

The Huskies pushed their lead to 21-7 following a half-back pass from Harris to Brady that pushed the ball down to the two-yard line. Tailback Tim Gale found the end zone two plays later from a yard out to make the score 21-7.

The Minutemen tied the score before the half on a pair of catch and runs by wide receivers Jason Peebler and Jimmie Howard. Both players took off on slant routes and found the end zone from 46 and 49 yards, respectively to even the score at 21 heading into the intermission.

GERALD H. LINCOLN/COLLEGIAN

Tailback Steve Baylark had a 7-yard game winning touchdown run in the third quarter against Northeastern. The Minutemen are currently undefeated in A-10 play and tied for first with Delaware. UMass returns to action this weekend at home against Richmond at 12p.m.

Maroon and White split with Friars

UMass bounces back after first loss of season

By Matt Stewart
Collegian Staff

PROVIDENCE, R.I. — The Massachusetts ice hockey team experienced its first test of the season this past weekend in a home-and-home series against the Providence Friars.

Game one was a slight disappointment, as the Minutemen found themselves in a rut that continuing from the Holy Cross game that they seemed unable to break out of. They fell to the Friars 6-2.

But game two was a different story. The Maroon and White pulled off a 180-degree turnaround in play, and it translated into a 4-2 victory.

"I'm really happy for the guys for responding to what took shape [Friday] night," UMass head coach Don Cahoon said. "Providence played terrific [Friday] night and really carried the play, our guys obviously didn't. I thought [Saturday] night we went on the ice with a purpose, so it was nice to see them respond like they did."

In game one of the series, coach Cahoon felt that his defense didn't offer a satisfactory enough effort and that it was lacking integrity. In game two the Maroon and White defense showed drastic improvement and regained its composure.

"I thought tonight they made a great effort of raising the puck and tried to do the right thing neutralizing people," Cahoon said. "Not just playing on the puck but playing with the puck. It was just a complete turn-

Continued on page 6

GERALD H. LINCOLN/COLLEGIAN

UMass forward Tim Vitek scored the game-clinching goal in UM's 4-2 victory over Providence College. The Maroon and White return to action at Merrimack this Friday at 7p.m.

Minutemen survive first real test of the season

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

PROVIDENCE, R.I. — The scoresheets from the home-and-home between the Massachusetts hockey team and Providence showed an even split. The numbers certainly didn't lie. After being outclassed by the Friars at the Mullins Center Friday night, the Minutemen bounced back and dominated Saturday's showdown at Schneider Arena, winning 4-2 and improving their record to 5-1 (1-1 Hockey East).

Providence	6
UMass	2
UMass	4
Providence	2

Providence, meanwhile, was flying high in Amherst on Friday, winning 6-2, but couldn't replicate the performance at Schneider, and came away from the weekend series at 5-2-1 (1-2-1 Hockey East).

Tim Vitek scored the game winner for UMass Saturday night, although it was the nifty stickwork of Greg Mauldin that quieted the Schneider crowd and earned the dropped jaws in the pressbox. Mauldin scaled the side boards with a Friar in tow, broke free at the corner to goaltender David Cacciola's left, skated along the goal line, and drew the puck away from a defender, getting a shot off in one crisp motion.

However, Mauldin's try was stopped, and Vitek scrambled in on the loose rebound. He banged it past Cacciola to make it 3-1 Minutemen.

The Friars struck back when Luke Irwin took a feed from Torry Gajda, and beat UMass' Gabe Winer high, but they would get no closer, and an empty net goal by Mike Warner cemented the victory in the waning seconds of the game.

In contrast to Friday night's events, the Minutemen were all over the ice early, leading the Friars 16-8 in shots at the end of the first period.

Thomas Pöck was a star on the power play, scoring twice on a pair of blazing shots. The first was a wrister at 15:55 of the first period, which zipped through a screen in front of Cacciola, and gave the Minutemen a 1-0 advantage. Pöck added another 3:37 into the second, when Chris Capraro fed him at the point, and he ripped a slap shot over Cacciola's glove to make it 2-1.

Friday night's story at the Mullins Center was very different, as an aggressive forecheck by the Friars and poor neutral zone play by the Minutemen led to a 6-2 drubbing of the hosts.

The Friars ran away with game one of a home-and-home series, winning 6-2 in front of 2,197 in

Continued on page 6

The Daily Collegian

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 4, 2003 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 44

Palestinians disagree in security talk

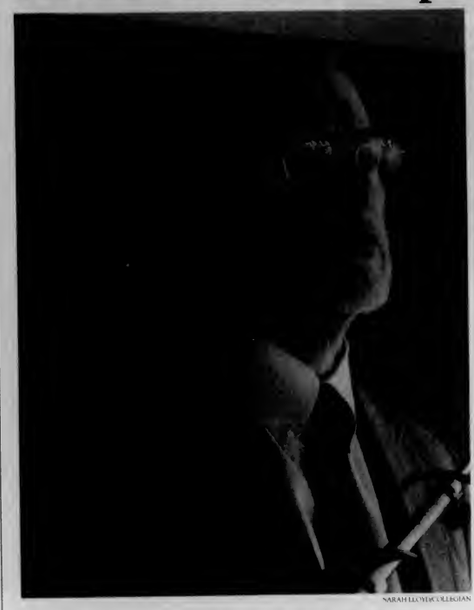
Deadline brings pressure from new prime minister

By Lara Sukhtian
Associated Press

RAMALLAH, West Bank (AP) — Talks between the Palestinian prime minister and Yasser Arafat failed yesterday to resolve a dispute over control of security forces, the last hurdle to forming a government that could restart peace talks.

But with today's approaching deadline, pressure mounted on Arafat to give in to Prime Minister Ahmed Qureia.

In violence yesterday, a 16-year-old Palestinian blew himself up near Israeli soldiers searching for him in the West Bank village of Azzoun, near Israel. The suicide bomber, Sabih Abu Saud from the city of Nablus, killed himself and slightly injured a soldier.



Abu Saud was the youngest of more than 100 suicide bombers over the past three years.

The Al Aqsa Martyrs' Brigades, an armed group with ties to Arafat's ruling Fatah movement, claimed responsibility. The teen's father, Kamal, said that "he was just a little boy and those who sent him should have left him alone."

The attack did not appear to affect a slow reestablishment of contacts between Israeli and Palestinian leaders. Israel's defense minister confirmed that he had met with a senior Palestinian official, the first high-level talks between the two sides in more

Continued on page 2

RNA research explored in lecture

SARAH LLOYD/COLLEGIAN

Philip A. Sharp discusses technical details of his research with short RNA yesterday. Sharp's work could facilitate control of infectious diseases caused by viruses.

Discoveries may help in fight against HIV

By Evan Goldfried
Collegian Correspondent

In a lecture titled "The Revolution of Short RNAs," Professor Philip A. Sharp discussed the varying principles of RNA interference, saying that recent developments could lead to breakthroughs in HIV research.

Sharp, an expert in RNA splicing, discussed the discovery of short RNAs and their implications for wide-ranged biology. He spoke to a mixed crowd of young students, professors and other scholars.

In his lecture, Sharp described the current knowledge and research of short RNAs. He combined his own personal research with that of his students and fellow peers, providing a detailed overview of the complicated science.

"I contend that it will be an emerging [study] over the next few years. You have to be prepared for an enormous amount of change," he said.

During the lecture, Sharp discussed the potential applications of RNA interference in today's society. RNA interference may lead to further analysis of cell biology, "leading to a whole renaissance in mammalian gene biology," according to Sharp.

He also said the research for RNA interference could lead to a greater control of virus infections. Most importantly, Sharp highlighted the potential for inhibition of the HIV virus. Other potential targets for prevention include Alzheimer's disease and Huntington's disease.

RNA interference still has a variety of challenges to be surmounted, Sharp said. The ability for RNA to consistently target specific sites within viral infections is still under heavy research. Sharp remained optimistic for the future and plans to continue his own research at MIT.

This is the first of a series of lectures in honor of Mindaugas Kaulenas, known as Steve amongst his friends. Kaulenas, who passed away in 2003, was a venerated member of the biology community at the University of Massachusetts Amherst.

"Steve was a wonderfully warm person with moving insights into the human being," said Gordon Wyse, chairman of the UMass biology department.

Kaulenas held a number of positions at UMass, including chairman of the zoology and biology department. Wyse said that during Kaulenas' tenure, he was instrumental in maintaining and strengthening the biology department. The former chairman hired many of the current professors.

Shortly after Kaulenas died, Wyse, along with a group of colleagues, created the lecture series to honor the former chairman and professor. Sharp's discussion of RNA was the inaugural discussion.

Sharp received the Nobel Prize in physiology or medicine in 1993 for his co-discovery of split genes. Sharp is currently a professor in the Center for Cancer Research at MIT.

Jailed Russian tycoon resigns as head of oil company

Some claim personal politics involved in case

By Mara D. Bellaby
Associated Press

MOSCOW (AP) — Russia's richest man, who was jailed on charges of fraud and tax evasion, resigned yesterday as head of the giant Yukos oil company, saying he wanted to spare it from an escalating criminal probe that has seen top shareholders imprisoned and a large chunk of its stock frozen.

Mikhail Khodorkovsky's resignation came nine days after he was jailed amid a 4-month-old investigation that has dragged down Yukos shares, caused the Russian stock market to plunge and raised questions about Russia's economic and political course.

"As the leader, I must do all I can to free our work collective from the blow aimed against me and my partners," the tycoon said in a statement released by Yukos. "I am leaving the company."

Russian media reported that American Steven Theede, in charge of Yukos' day-to-day operations, is the most likely successor.

The price of Yukos shares shot up by 3.9 percent in trading immediately after Khodorkovsky's announcement, ending the day up 12 percent at $12.65. They are more than 20 percent below their all-time high posted shortly before Khodorkovsky's Oct. 25 arrest.

Critics say Khodorkovsky was targeted by President Vladimir Putin's Kremlin circle of fellow ex-KGB officers to curb his financial and political clout and as retaliation for funding of opposition parties.

His jailing and last week's court decision to freeze 44 percent of Yukos' shares stoked fears that prosecutors are laying the groundwork for a redistribution of state assets that were privatized after the 1991 collapse of the Soviet Union.

The often-dubious privatization deals created tycoons, such as Khodorkovsky, who bought up state assets at rock-bottom prices, earning the contempt of impoverished compatriots.

Putin and his ministers have denied that privatization — considered at the time as a key way of preventing communists from returning to power — will be revisited. But Washington has warned that the investigation raises "serious questions about the rule of law in Russia."

In the statement, Khodorkovsky said "the situation that has taken shape today forces me to drop my plans to continue personal involvement in the development of the company," which is finalizing a merger with its smaller rival, Sibneft, to create the world's fourth-largest oil company.

Oil analysts praised Khodorkovsky's move, saying it should help take pressure off Yukos.

"He is in jail. He can't really be an effective chairman," said Vitaly Yermakov, an oil analyst with the Cambridge Energy Research Associates in Moscow. "For all practical purposes, it is a normal move of a person that cares about his company."

Khodorkovsky can be held until Dec. 30, but prosecutors can easily seek extensions, as they have with a top Yukos shareholder, Platon Lebedev, who has been jailed since July.

While Yukos may get some breathing space, the same is unlikely for Khodorkovsky, analysts said.

"It doesn't change the view (of those who consider) that Khodorkovsky is a man with a lot of money who has to be brought down to size," said Stephen O'Sullivan, head of research at United Financial Group in Moscow.

Yermakov agreed, saying that for prosecutors, "the real issue is his ownership of a large stake of shares of Yukos. His position as chairman of the board by itself is not a key issue in appeasement."

Finance Minister Alexei Kudrin, in an interview published Monday before Khodorkovsky's resignation, said the freeze of Yukos shares was part of an effort to restore law and order. He predicted the economy will benefit in the long run.

U.S. warned of Iraq attack

By Charles J. Hanley
Associated Press

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — A blast near a holy Shiite Muslim shrine in the city of Karbala yesterday killed three people and injured 12, witnesses said. Meanwhile, in Baghdad, a string of mortar blasts struck near downtown after sunset.

The violence came a day after insurgents shot down a U.S. transport helicopter west of Baghdad, killing 16 Americans and wounding 21 in a dramatic show of increasing sophistication in their attacks.

Only two days before that strike, leaflets seen in mosques in the Fallujah area warned of new attacks using "modern and advanced methods."

In Baghdad, five strong explosions were heard in quick succession at about

Continued on page 2

ASSOCIATED PRESS/KHALID MOHAMMED

Iraqi children throw stones toward a U.S. armored personal carrier (APC) patroling the center of Fallujah, 65 km west of Baghdad, yesterday. Gunners brought down a U.S. Army Chinook helicopter near Fallujah on Sunday, killing 16 and wounding 20 others.

EDITORIAL/OPINION
PAGE 3
REVAMPING SOUTHWEST
CHANGES TO RESIDENTIAL AREA LIKELY TO FACE STUDENT OPPOSITION
ARTS & LIVING
PAGE 4
INDIE FILMS
NORTHAMPTON FILM FESTIVAL GETS UNDERWAY TOMORROW
SPORTS
PAGE 8
UMASS BLANKS URI
HOPWOOD SCORES LONE GOAL IN LAST GAME OF CAREER
COMICS/CLASSIFIEDS
PAGE 7

Congress approves $87.5b in aid

Latest attack on U.S. forces connected to decision

By Alan Fram
Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congress voted its final approval yesterday for $87.5 billion for U.S. military operations and aid in Iraq and Afghanistan, a day after Americans in Iraq endured their worst casualties since March.

In an anticlimactic moment for which only a handful of senators appeared, the Senate approved the bill by voice and handed a legislative victory to President Bush, who had requested a similar package two months ago. The voice vote — in which Sen. Robert Byrd, D-W.Va., was the only one to shout "Nay" — let lawmakers sidestep the roll call that usually accompanies major legislation.

That underscored the complicated political calculus presented by the measure, which was dominated by popular funds for U.S. forces but also sparked questions about Bush's postwar Iraq policies and record budget deficits at home.

"As the president said time and time again, we will not walk away from Iraq," said Senate Appropriations Committee Chairman Ted Stevens, R-Alaska, a leading author of the bill. "We will not leave the Iraqi people in chaos, and we will not create a vacuum for terrorist groups to fill."

In the latest blow to Iraq's U.S. occupiers, 19 Americans were killed there on Sunday. That included 16 soldiers who died when a missile brought down a U.S. Army transport helicopter west of Baghdad, a crash in which 20 other Americans were wounded.

Senators lash out at SEC over scandal

By Marcy Gordon
Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal and state law enforcers drew a portrait yesterday of widespread trading abuses within the mutual fund industry and among brokers that siphon money from ordinary investors. Senators expressed outrage at the abuses and dissatisfaction with the response of the Securities and Exchange Commission.

The scandal claimed its first government victim.

Juan Marcelino, the head of the SEC's Boston office announced he was leaving "to minimize any further distractions for his staff." According to recent news reports, an employee of big mutual fund company Putnam Investments seeking to expose abuses at the firm was brushed off by attorneys in the SEC office and later got a more receptive hearing from Massachusetts securities regulators.

There also were industry casualties.

Putnam's chief executive, Lawrence J. Lasser, is stepping down following the filing of civil fraud charges against the firm and a slate of new top officials is being appointed at the nation's fifth-largest mutual fund company, the firm's parent company announced yesterday.

And Richard Strong, chairman of Strong Mutual Funds, resigned amid multiple inquiries into his personal trading of the company's funds. But Strong stays as a board member and as chairman and CEO of Strong Capital Management, the investment adviser to Strong Mutual Funds.

Regulators told a Senate hearing that fundamental changes are needed in the way the $7 trillion mutual fund industry operates and governs itself. That's in addition to stiff punishment of wrongdoers, they said.

The SEC found, for example, that a quarter of the nation's largest brokerage houses helped favored clients illegally trade mutual funds after hours. That finding moved Sen. Peter Fitzgerald, R-Ill., to ask, "We're talking about serious, wholesale criminal violations coming to light, aren't we?"

Fitzgerald is chairman of the Senate Governmental Affairs subcommittee examining the burgeoning mutual fund scandal and the regulators' response. A House panel also is holding hearings this week on the debacle, which has tarnished the reputation of mutual funds, traditionally viewed as a safe, conservative investment. Some 90 million people have money in U.S. stock mutual funds; half of all American households invest in them.

Massachusetts Secretary of State William Galvin submitted testimony telling the committee self-policing had failed.

"We are here today because in too many instances the mutual fund industry has failed to live up to its duty," Galvin said.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Jennifer Eastwood
Managing Editor Dan Lamothe
Business Manager Peter Foundas
Production Manager Scott Pihl
Night Supervisor Nick Markantonatos
Advertising Manager Sean Costello
Editorial Production Shannon Farrington
Arts & Living Editor Glen Straub
Comics Editor Molly Eggleston
Editorial Editor Paige Cram
News Editor Ferron Salniker
Photo Editor Gerald H. Ling
Sports Editor Andrew Merritt
Classified Advertising Marty Pappas
Distribution Manager Julie Benschump
Finance Manager Greg Stamm
Human Resources Sandra Marquez
Special Issues Betsy Feldman
Assistant Business Ben Ratner
Assistant Advertising David Bor
Assistant Distribution Mark Lagatic
Assistant Finance Richard Pacheco
Advertising Production Liza Lynch
Layout Manager Lindsay Clark
Graphics Advisor Charlie Higgins
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Asst. Arts & Living Meghan Healy
Asst. Arts & Living Cameron J. Woods
Assistant Editorial Matthew Reid
Assistant News Erika Lovley
Assistant News Morris Singer
Assistant Photo Emilie Duggan
Assistant Sports Mike Marzelli
Assistant Sports Robert McGovern

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts academic semester. The Collegian is independently owned, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1907, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. Published daily since 1967, the Collegian has been headquartered since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call 545-3500 between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

For the Record

Correction: In yesterday's Collegian, Massachusetts soccer player Oral Bullen was misidentified as Ptah Myers in a photo cutline. We regret any confusion this may have caused.

Write for the Collegian. Write for the Collegian. Write for the Collegian. Write for the Collegian. Write for the Collegian. Write for the Collegian. Write for the Collegian. Write for the Collegian. Write for the Collegian. Write for the Collegian.

13 arrests result from separate incidents
Several items reported stolen, including a motorcycle

police log

compiled by Thomas Coyle

Saturday, Oct. 25

12:25 a.m. Following a vehicle accident in Lot 22 on University Drive, Matthew Venezia, 19, of 9 Pine Glen Rd., North Reading, Mass., Was arrested for operating a vehicle under the influence of alcohol and failing to yield at an intersection.

1 a.m. A resident assistant in Moore Hall reported extinguishing a fire set in the trash room of the third floor. The Amherst Fire Department reported to the scene to investigate.

12:24 a.m. An officer reported that individuals in Pierpont Hall were warned about harassing a resident assistant. The resident assistant was advised to contact UMass police if any further harassment occurred during the night.

3:57 a.m. An officer reported checking on a vehicle in Lot 32 on Massachusetts Ave. One individual was placed in protective custody.

Sunday, Oct. 26

12 a.m. Officers reported dispersing a fight at the dance at the Campus Center. After the event was shut down officers reported a fight in the crowd and there was a report of shots fired. Arrested were:

— Kevin Holmes Jr., 21, of 133 Belchertown Rd, #29, Amherst, Mass., for disorderly conduct.

— Stefanie Sykes-Allen, 18, of 5313 Baynton St., Philadelphia, Pa., for disorderly conduct.

— Jamaal Jackson, 18, of 20 Elm St., 2H, Elizabeth, N.J., for disorderly conduct.

— Thomas Pomare, 20, of 148 South Ave, Attleboro, Mass., for disorderly conduct and resisting an officer making a lawful arrest.

3:51 a.m. An officer reported a verbal altercation in the police parking lot. The officer reported sending the subjects on their way.

1:43 p.m. A 1980 red CR-250 motorcycle was reported taken from the back of a vehicle parked in Lot 63 near the Metal Crafts building. The rear fender of the vehicle was damaged and the vehicle glove box appeared to have been rifled through. A wallet might have been taken as well.

6:28 p.m. A subject was pulled over in front of Totman Gymnasium for driving an expired vehicle. The officer subsequently arrested Jeffrey Fernandes, 35, of 475 Park St., Stoughton, Mass., for possession of a Class D substance.

9:33 p.m. A report was received of a car on fire on the north side of Coolidge Hall. Amherst Fire Department and Environmental Health and Safety were advised. EHS was reported on scene.

10:44 p.m. Two laptops were reported taken from a room in Mackimmie Hall. A report was filed.

11:32 p.m. An officer reported stopping three subjects in Lot 22 on University Drive. Six vehicles were broken into. Three suspects were arrested for breaking and entering in the nighttime to commit a felony, receiving stolen property, possession of a burglarious instrument and malicious damage to a motor vehicle:

— Aaron Michael Harrison, 17, of 50 Stevens St., 2R, Springfield, Mass.

— Jose Rosa, 19, of 281 Wilbraham Rd., Springfield, Mass.

In addition, Aaron Michael Harrison was charged with unlicensed operation of a motor vehicle and failing to stop for police.

Monday, Oct. 27

3:47 p.m. A report was received of subjects having a fight in the second floor hallway of Dwight Hall. The situation was reported to be only verbal and no physical altercation had occurred. The subjects were sent on their way and the matter will be resolved with housing.

10:43 p.m. A resident assistant reported that an individual had locked her keys in her car with her 9-year-old son sleeping inside in Lot 50 near John Quincy Adams Hall. An officer reported that they were able to wake the child who unlocked the door.

Tuesday, Oct. 28

1:20 p.m. A UPS truck was reported stuck in the grassy area of the Metawampe Lawn. Grounds requested an officer so they could get the information necessary to obtain restitution for damages.

3:55 p.m. A saxophone was reported stolen from McGuirk Alumni Stadium sometime between Oct. 1 and 2. A report was filed.

Wednesday, Oct. 29

4:11 p.m. A party reported his vehicle missing from Lot 11 on Stadium Drive. The vehicle was entered by police into the teletype as stolen.

5:06 p.m. A party reported an attempted vehicle theft from Lot 27 on Sylvan Drive.

7:27 p.m. A party reported a bicycle theft from Chadbourne Hall. A red Mongoose 18-speed bike with a black seat and metal cargo rack was apparently taken.

Thursday, Oct. 30

5:22 p.m. Police took a report of a breaking and entering on a vehicle in Lot 22 on University Drive. The passenger-side window was broken and compact disks, a CD player, an amplifier and a subwoofer box were taken.

8:42 p.m. An officer who checked two subjects with alcohol in Lot 50 reported arresting Paul Carr, 19, of 75 Redlands St., Springfield, Mass., for being a minor in possession of alcohol and having a false ID and Joseph Kenney, 19, of 109 Edandale St., Springfield, Mass., for being a minor is possession of alcohol.

11:07 p.m. A round robin was reported on the third floor of Chadbourne Hall. The responding officer reported that the party was dispersed and a small amount of alcohol was dumped.

11:37 p.m. A caller again reported a round robin on the third floor of Chadbourne Hall. Upon arrival of the police the party scattered and the floor was quiet.

Friday, Oct. 31

2:47 a.m. A traffic stop on Commonwealth Ave. resulted in the arrest of Ryan Arsenault, 26, of 11 Gunn St., Erving, Mass., for operating a motor vehicle under the influence, leaving the scene of an accident with property damage, possession of a Class D substance and a marked lanes violation.

5:56 a.m. A report of a noise complaint in Grayson Hall led to the arrest of Kira Choate, 19, of 67 Ceder St., Rehoboth, Mass., for assault and battery.

apply now for the expanded

CRIMINAL JUSTICE PROGRAM

Criminal Justice Concentration
Department of Sociology

Earn a Certificate in Criminal Justice

For students who plan a career in some aspect of the criminal justice system: police officers, probation and parole officers, paralegals, public and private criminal attorneys, district attorneys, judges, etc.

Applications are now being taken for the program.

A wide variety of courses are scheduled for 2004, including new classroom and online courses in domestic violence, crime and forensics, criminal violence in America, Corporate Deviance and Official Corruption, organized crime, and serial murder.

Courses offered Winter Session 2004:

SOCIOL 241 Criminology (online)
SOCIOL 347 Corporate Deviance and Official Corruption (online)
SOCIOL 392G Alternative Sanctions in the Criminal Justice System (online)
SOCIOL 395K Domestic Violence (online)
SOCIOL 397D Delinquency and the Juvenile Justice System (online)

Watch for the exciting line-up of Spring courses!

For more information, and to apply to the program, contact Prof. Anthony Harris, Sociology Department, Thompson 524, 545-0475.

To register for winter and spring courses, go to www.umass.edu/contined or the Division of Continuing Education Registration Office, 358 N. Pleasant St.

UMassAmherst Continuing Education

Priority will be given to registered Criminal Justice Program students.

Palestinian deadline hits today than two months, and both sides predicted further discussions.

Continued from page 1

In other developments yesterday, the Palestinian parliament approved hard-liner Rafik Natche, a former Cabinet minister and ambassador to Saudi Arabia, as parliament speaker. The post is important because the speaker would become acting leader of the Palestinian Authority if Arafat steps aside or dies. Qureia left the speaker's post when he was made prime minister.

Despite a meeting yesterday, Qureia and Arafat remain at odds over the choice of interior minister, who will play a key role in any possible action against armed groups. At the core of the dispute is Arafat's refusal to relinquish control over some of the security forces.

After the two-hour talk, Qureia said the issue is "still under study."

For the past month, Qureia has presided over a small Arafat-appointed emergency Cabinet that operated without parliamentary backing. Its mandate expires today, though an Arafat aide said he could ask for more time.

Qureia's task of forming a Cabinet did not appear any easier yesterday than a month ago when, at the last minute, he backed away from presenting his proposed team to parliament for approval because of intense political wrangling.

Despite the difficulties, Saeb Erekat, the chief Palestinian negotiator, said yesterday he believes a new government can be formed within two days.

"It's very realistic," Erekat said, but acknowledged that "there are still some problems concerning the interior minister."

A senior Palestinian official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said that pressure was mounting on Arafat to accept Qureia's choice for interior minister, Nasser Yousef.

That is the key appointment in the new Cabinet. The interior minister would control Palestinian security forces, but Arafat has been unwilling to relinquish authority. Israel and the United States insist that Arafat must be sidelined, with an empowered Palestinian Cabinet taking over security.

Without a new Cabinet, resumption of talks on the stalled, U.S.-backed "road map" plan for an end to violence and creation of a Palestinian state seems unlikely.

Once he has a government, Qureia said he plans to hold separate talks with Sharon and leaders of militant groups like Hamas to negotiate an end to three years of violence.

Warnings in Iraq appeared before attack

Continued from page 1

9:10 p.m., and it appeared the blasts were coming from the western side of the Tigris River.

Soon after, the U.S military command reported three or four mortar impacts in central Baghdad. It did not report any casualties or give details on damage.

The Karbala blast occurred on a busy street less than 100 yards from the gold-domed Imam Hussein shrine in the city, 65 miles south of the Iraqi capital, said Mohammed Abu Jaffar al-Assadi, a Shiite cleric.

All the dead apparently were passers-by. He said the bomb had apparently been planted in a parked car. It was not immediately possible to get confirmation of the report from Iraqi police or the U.S.-led coalition.

Karbala was rocked by deadly clashes last month between supporters of rival Shiite factions. Also in October, supporters of a little-known Shiite cleric based in Karbala killed three U.S. soldiers in a rare clash between residents of the holy city and the U.S. military.

On Aug. 29, a car bomb exploded outside a mosque in the nearby city of Najaf, killing more than 85 people including Shiite leader Ayatollah Mohammed Baqir al-Hakim. It was the bloodiest incident since the end of the U.S.-led invasion that overthrew Saddam Hussein.

Sunday's downing of a U.S. Chinook helicopter outside Fallujah was the deadliest since strike against American forces since the U.S.-led invasion of Iraq in March.

Three other Americans were also killed Sunday in separate attacks, making it the bloodiest day for U.S. forces since March.

NEED HELP FINDING A MAJOR?

Come to the MAJORS FAIR!

Wednesday, November 5, 2003
6:00 - 8:00 p.m.
Student Union Ballroom

Don't miss this unique opportunity to explore the impressive range of majors & resources available at UMASS: representatives from more than 70 departments & programs in one location.

Sponsored by Commonwealth College, Pre-Major Advising Services, & Career Services.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

Tuesday, November 4, 2003 Editorial@dailycollegian.com

Pioneering bishop takes important first steps

On Sunday, Nov. 2, the Rev. Canon V. Gene Robinson became the first openly gay bishop in the history of Christendom. The consecration ceremony, which took place at the Whittemore Center at the University of New Hampshire, was a monumental event for the Episcopal priest, who now must prepare to become the first homosexual to be deemed as a successor to Jesus' apostles.

Perhaps the priest's last name is fitting, given that another Robinson found himself in a similar situation over 50 years ago. When asked about his place in history, Jackie Robinson simply said, "I'm just a baseball player, so I'll let the history books write themselves."

However, Robinson did realize the importance of what he was doing, despite the fact that he tried to underplay it as much as possible.

Over the years, Thurgood Marshall, Sidney Poitier and Ralph Bunche continued to break down barriers for the African-American people. Now, seeing an African-American in politics, in professional sports or in Hollywood is commonplace. But Gene Robinson is treading through uncharted territory. While many issues involving race and gender are exponentially better now than they once were, homosexuality in the Church is not.

Many expected Robinson to tiptoe around the topic of his sexuality at his consecration speech. There are 70 million members in the Anglican Communion, and underplaying his sexuality would have allowed Robinson to focus on larger issues that face the Church. However, while some feel that Robinson's sexuality should not be an issue, the large number of Episcopalians who protest Robinson's elevation cannot be ignored.

With that said, it is clear that Robinson needed to choose his words carefully. In his speech, he acknowledged the fact that some people, including non-Episcopalians, oppose him and his lifestyle. But never did he make it personal; his words were always centered on the bigger issues of the Church.

"This day is not about me," Robinson said, "but about so many people who find themselves on the margin … and bringing those people into the center." He proclaimed those who oppose his sexuality as "faithful, wonderful Christians," and stated that people on both sides of the issue will be able to come together if they are hospitable and loving towards each other, saying that God will do the same to each of them.

The current bishop of New Hampshire, the Rev. Douglas E. Turner, echoed Robinson's words of unity: "Because of who you are, Gene, you will stand as a symbol of the unity of the church in a way in which none of the rest of us can. Just your very presence in the episcopate will bring into our fellowship the presence of an entire group of Christians hitherto unacknowledged in these councils of the church."

It is foolish to think that all of Robinson's opposition will be swayed to the other side after his consecration speech. But by taking a topic that has the potential to create a major schism in the Episcopalian community, Robinson and his supporters have taken a very commendable and daring first step. They are turning this controversy into an opportunity for unprecedented togetherness in a religious community, but only time will tell if this unity will be achieved.

Information from The Boston Globe was used for this editorial.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

Changes to Southwest a tough sell

Dan Lamothe

Don't let it ever be said that Michael Gargano is afraid to shake things up.

Over the last few days, our vice chancellor of student affairs has let it be known that he's considering widespread changes for much of the campus, especially the Southwest residential living area. The proposed changes include converting some double dormitory rooms in Southwest into singles, introducing more learning communities to the area, and increasing the amount of residential assistants and residential directors per student.

All are done with a common goal in mind: to change the wild, "big city" approach and culture that the area tends to have.

Gargano, perhaps sensing that criticism may follow, said recent riots and disturbances in Southwest are not the only cause for considering the overhaul.

"What happened with these riots actually expedited a conversation we were already having," Gargano said.

Administration, in general, is being very careful to communicate that any changes will not be made in a knee-jerk reaction, a rap it has received in the past when dealing with problematic issues — especially those involving student life.

At this point in the game, Gargano wants to make it clear that nothing is set in stone, and that all possible changes are up for discussion. He's visited numerous dorms recently, including Butterfield, Patterson, Grayson and Cance, and said he plans to make many more trips to others to get input from students before any concrete plans are made.

This is good, and Gargano should consider it as a campaign trail. There's a never-ending list of questions to answer here.

For one: There's still a housing crunch, and it's not going away anytime soon. Chancellor John V. Lombardi, Gargano and anyone else in administration involved with the process of redeveloping the University of Massachusetts know this.

"If we decide to move forward from triples into doubles and doubles into singles, it will just require us to manage the incoming class very, very carefully," Gargano said. "We will not be able to take in more students than we can feasibly house."

That's obvious. What isn't so obvious, however, is how the UMass campus is going to simultaneously "grow," while decreasing the size of its largest residential area and promising to give students back their lounges in the next year or two. There are no concrete plans yet to add additional dormitories, so where does the space relief come in? Students are going to need something more solid than a promise of a new freshman class being carefully managed before they buy into his plan.

Gargano wants to change the riot culture in Southwest, and after this fall semester, it has become obvious that doing so is something that needs to be addressed.

The second nagging question Gargano will need to answer for students: Why? Why is changing the name of Southwest going to lead to a change in the culture there? Why is overcrowding in Southwest being blamed as a main reason for riots now, when so many others blamed it on stupidity, alcohol or just being the thing to do?

Gargano wants to change the riot culture in Southwest, and after this fall semester, it has become obvious that doing so is something that needs to be addressed.

But there are numerous ways to do that, and reinventing the campus is probably the most difficult of them all. Gargano wants to change the "big city" image in Southwest as a part of a grander plan to resurrect UMass. He's cushioned the shock of the ideas with some smaller, more trivial suggestions — introducing late night concerts to Southwest, and adding a shuttle to Health Services and a midnight breakfast served by administrators during finals week — but the heart of his proposal lies in changing the way life is here, and the way its been ingrained into UMass culture for years.

Like Lombardi before him, Gargano was hired because he looked like he could be the kind of innovative, high-energy type of guy our campus needs to help lead UMass back into prosperous times. Lombardi has proven to be an overall success: a sage man with finances who has earned respect and praise even from many of the same University organizations that he had to cut or reduce finances for.

Gargano is still an unknown, which leaves this as his biggest test yet. He's made all of the right moves thus far as he pitches some pretty controversial ideas, and his willingness to meet with students is an excellent start.

But he needs to be careful. As it hit the papers yesterday, Gargano has begun walking a fine line between progressive administrator and publicly scorned idealist.

Only time will tell which is closer to the truth. If Gargano wants his new and improved UMass to be a reality, he's going to have to sell it, and sell it hard.

Dan Lamothe is a Collegian columnist.

Gargano, pick your targets

On Oct. 17, Michael Gargano, vice chancellor of student affairs, sent a letter home to University of Massachusetts students addressed, "Dear UMass Amherst Parents." He reiterated what he had said the week before to the student body: The riotous behavior of the past few weeks was unconscionable, there will be no tolerance for such activity, and no one should participate, "even as a spectator."

Russ Juskalian

Something rotten in Denmark?

I was impressed by the stance Gargano had taken. Indeed, the "riots" were a disgrace to UMass in a broad sense; those responsible should be dealt with according to Massachusetts General Law and should be subject to dismissal from the University.

However, the call for students to refrain from being spectators is a dangerous position to take. I think I understand why Gargano made such a statement. Most likely he thinks that having a crowd present allowed the small percentage of students who would eventually become violent and cause damage, to act out. But it is irresponsible for Gargano to ask the common person to cover his eyes from the proceedings in his own town.

I am not trying to insinuate that local papers or The Massachusetts Daily Collegian might consider coloring the facts, but it is a safeguard to have multiple sources of information regarding events that affect us all — especially if those events are controversial, and if someone or some entity could possibly gain something by only releasing half-truths.

What if the police had acted out of order and a student had been seriously injured as a result? What if no one was there to see it happen, and the local press was all corralled to one place where their cameras' focuses were limited? The fewer people who observe a situation, the easier it is for that situation to be misrepresented.

I want to be clear: The police have done an amazing job at quieting the riots. These men and women have sustained injuries on behalf of the rest of the community in order to keep us safe, and I am grateful for their continued support. But my argument looks forward to the future and backwards to the rocky past of censorship.

When the dissemination of information is endangered, so is the very heart of democracy endangered — and this is an issue to which we should be paying particular attention. Remember what happened when spectators (weapons inspectors) were recalled from Iraq? Remember the atrocities carried out by a man named Adolf? How about Pinochet?

Who am I kidding? Henry Ford was right: History is bunk. Those with the power to enforce the importance of the ideals that history has taught us don't seem to think much of history — and that is all that matters.

It might be easy to conclude that in the case of the UMass riots, disallowing spectators couldn't cause any harm. However, we must be constantly vigilant of the allowance of rules that seem safe at the moment but might be misused in the future, or in a different situation.

It might be easy to conclude that in the case of the UMass riots, disallowing spectators couldn't cause any harm. But we must be constantly vigilant of the allowance of rules that seem safe at the moment — because the issue is clear — but might be misused in the future, or in a different situation.

The media serves the purpose of investigating the news and telling the masses what has been found. The idea here is for a small group of well-trained professionals to procure information that would be difficult for the average citizen to acquire with his or her busy work schedule. The media in no way serves as a substitute for non-media related citizenry to ignore the world around them. This issue becomes much more important when the media is controlled by a handful of omnipotent conglomerates with additional holdings creating a conflict of interests, and further compounded by censorship in the name of national security — a favorite trump card of every powerful administration.

I don't mean to undermine Gargano's statements; he is absolutely right to call upon students to take responsibility for the riots and for our campus. I only ask that in the future Gargano be more specific and more careful when he makes blanket statements such as those asking students to refrain from being observers. What does "spectator" mean anyway? Should the students in the towers of Southwest not look out of their windows at the violence below? He clearly didn't mean this. Where is the line drawn between spectator and participant?

Russ Juskalian is a Collegian columnist.

Defining true nationalism

Zach Oelschlegel

I am more than a week late, but the baseball playoffs are over. No more having to watch those damned Yankees take the field, no more watching those stupid Yankees cry, no more rioting, and finally, no more having to hear that stupid New York Irish tenor Ronan Tynan sing "God Bless America."

You pause after reading that last comment. Did I really say that I was tired of hearing "God Bless America?"

I'm going to blame my apathy on Sept. 11. After that day, we had car dealers telling us to buy a Chevy to "keep America rolling," we kept seeing people on TV telling us that they were "doing their part" by wearing a tie with an American flag on it, every single Mom and Pop store had the phrase "God Bless America" emblazoned on their doors, and of course, you couldn't walk five feet without seeing 19 different flags in every direction.

Next thing you knew, it was fashionable to wear a hat or shirt that said "FDNY" on it, even if you had no affiliation with any fire department and Iowa was where you made your home. It was all in the spirit of showing off our pride, because that's what real Americans did, right?

Sadly, we all bought into the lie, as national holidays have returned to being days off from school, and that day we supposedly would never forget was completely forgotten, evidenced by the paltry 40 or so who showed up to this years Sept. 11 memorial at the Student Union. All those chic flags people hung on their doors became really tacky and they were taken down by January of 2002. But at least we can show our spirit by singing along to the national anthem, right?

Sadly, we all bought into the lie, as national holidays have returned to being days off from school, and that day we supposedly would never forget was completely forgotten, evidenced by the paltry 40 or so who showed up to this years Sept. 11 memorial at the Student Union.

Unfortunately, time and again, the anthem is meaningless to the ears that hear it. Everything from "Oh say can you see?" to "the home of the brave" is really just wasted time before the start of the game, instead of a moment of reverence for a nation of heroes as it should be. (Home of the brave? Like the ones from Atlanta? Would Boston be home of the Red Sox?)

"The Simpsons" lampoons this when Homer becomes a boxer. The announcer tells the crowd who is fighting, and then says, "Now, due to popular demand, we will skip the singing of the national anthem. Leeeeeeeet's get ready to Ruuuumbllllle!" The anthem is now something that just gets in the way.

Nationalism is like profanity. The first time you heard your dad curse, your ears exploded. If you heard him mouth off again, it got to be less and less of a big deal, until it meant absolutely nothing to you, taking away the entire meaning of those words your mother told you not to say.

The same goes for the constant bleating of American pride. I hear these songs at every sporting event I attend, I watch it on TV, and I've heard atheists tell me that God blesses America. And every time I see it, it means less and less, and soon enough, it might take another Sept. 11 for me and the rest of America to know that these words carry power, and aren't just a sporting tradition.

Oddly enough, when Americans do something that actually shows that they love their country — like as enlisting in the Army or Navy — they are belittled for becoming stupid grunts that will do anything for the fascist leader of our country. My brother will be graduating college this December and will be in basic training by February. I couldn't be more proud of him, and I wouldn't love for anything more than to spit on those who call him a brainwashed idiot of a man. Those are the same cowards who run away from the draft, and the same people who ignore the present and historical importance of our men and women in uniform.

True nationalism gets blasted while primitive cheering is almost revered. We aren't showing what a strong country we are by how many flags we can wave. We don't tell terrorists what America is made of when we smile and tell each other "God Bless America." If we wanted to do any of these things, we could enlist in the armed forces, or volunteer down the street to help the homeless. We could show our fellow man some of our love instead of some of our attire. We could actually appreciate the freedoms we have right now, and strive to make them better. God forbid, we could go out and vote.

Just don't try and tell me that you love America because it says so on your shirt.

Zach Oelschlegel is a Collegian columnist.

Submit a letter or opinion

In order to be considered for publication, all submissions must include the writer's name, address, and telephone number or e-mail address. Letters should be between 200-400 words in length and addressed as 'Letters to the Editor.' Commentaries should be no more than 750 words and addressed as 'Editorial/Opinion.' Submissions may be edited for clarity and condensed. You may write, fax, or e-mail your submissions to:

E-mail: editorial@dailycollegian.com

Fax: 413-545-3699

Mail: Letters to the Editor, 113 Campus Center Way, Amherst, MA 01003

Letter to the Editor

To the Editor:

I would like to clarify an error that Cara Bedick mentioned in her letter to the editor yesterday.

But first, I would like to applaud her knowledge of legislation and statistics regarding the very controversial subject of abortion. I respect her opinion, as it is well founded, and I even agree with her argument for comprehensive sexuality classes.

However, I would like to point out something she may have overlooked. There are too many circumstances that can lead to an unwanted pregnancy; some may be the fault of the mother, others (such as rape) may not be. But there has never been, and there never will be, a circumstance where the pregnancy is the fault of the child. Why then, should he or she be denied the right to live? Take a look at the same child in nine months time. Would you then be so eager to say that the mother reserved the right to take that child's life?

The child deserves to live, regardless of the conditions under which he or she was conceived. Whether in his or her own birth family, or in an adopted family, every child is a blessing. It's a shame that so many people think otherwise.

Lynn Sievinski
UMass freshman

Indie movies find home at NIFF this week

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

Toronto. Venice. Sundance. Cannes. Movie lovers from the far reaches have trekked to countless film festivals across the globe in search of undiscovered gems and the ability to brag about being the first ones to see some hot new independent films. Many well-known art house movies have passed through the marquees that make up festivals like Sundance and Cannes.

And for years, the very town of Northampton has played host to its own film festival. For nine years, the Northampton Independent Film Festival has played host to a slew of indie and underground films; comedies, dramas, short films and documentaries have graced the screens at the Academy of Music and the Pleasant Street Theater. This year will be no different.

Begun in 1994 by Dee DeGeiso and Howard Polonsky, the film festival — often referred to as NIFF — has specialized in showcasing a wide array of great, but largely unseen feats of cinema. Last year, new festival director Charlie Burke and his staff brought local audiences the first — and only — area showings of movies like the Oscar-winning Japanimation classic, "Spirited Away."

This year, Burke, in association with the Sundance Film Institute and Paramount Classics, will bring us the area premieres of big-ticket indie features such as "The Singing Detective," "In This World" and "Dopamine."

"The Singing Detective," starring Robert Downey Jr., Katie Holmes and Mel Gibson, is a quirky adaptation of a popular, well-received British musical miniseries from the mid-'80s. Keith Gordon ("Waking the Dead") directs from a script by the late Dennis Potter, scripter on the original. The film screens Thursday at 9:15 p.m. at the Academy.

The festivities kick off tomorrow night, with a screening of "Nosey Parker," the final installment in director John O'Brien's Vermont trilogy, at 7:30 p.m. at the Academy of Music Theater. The movie — about a couple renovating a dream home in the rustic countryside — will be shown with the short "The Winter People."

"In this World," the latest from Brit director Michael Winterbottom ("Welcome to Sarajevo," "Jude," "24 Hour Party People") screens on Friday at 9:30 p.m. at the Academy.

Sundance will also sponsor a special Q&A with the Sundance Channel senior vice president of film programming, Paola Freccero, at 1 p.m. on Saturday at Amherst College's Stoddard Hall. "Dopamine" is a romantic drama coming courtesy of the Sundance Film Series and shows Sunday at the Academy at 7 p.m.

In addition to the above, several other films will end up premiering on our local screens. "The Sopranos" stars Vincent Pastore and Frank Vincent will be on hand when their comedy, "A Tale of Two Pizzas," premiers Friday at 7 p.m. at the Academy. Best-selling author Sebastian Junger will attend a Q&A for the film "A Peaceful Warrior" at Smith College's Wright Hall on Friday at 7:45 p.m. Classic movies like "Tom Jones," "Kiss Me, Stupid" and "The General" will all screen, and there will be a raft of films made by local filmmakers or made with local ties.

Steve Alves' documentary, "Talking to the Wall," targets the corrupt consumerism of the Wal-Mart chain store; Cynthia Wade's "Shelter Dogs" takes a look at the struggles of a small animal shelter in upstate New York.

"The Best of the Five College Student Programs" will feature short films from students from the University of Massachusetts and Smith, Hampshire, Mt. Holyoke and Amherst colleges. Local high school students get in on the act too, with a short program on Sunday afternoon.

Festival passes are on sale for $125 ($95 for WGBY members); they allow access to all events including the Saturday night party. It's $8 for general admission, or $7 for students with valid IDs and WGBY members with membership cards. Tickets are available on a first come, first serve basis. Programs are now available around town.

IMAGES COURTESY NIFF

Hip-hop's transformation from the 'Golden Age' to underground

All music evolves and builds upon the changes in society and the people who listen to it and create it. All genres owe their existence to the styles created before them.

Hip-hop, more that any other genre, pays homage to all of its pre-existing styles. Hip-hop has gone through many changes within itself since it began to bless our ears so many years ago. What started as a medium of funk and soul has transformed into an outlet for empowerment of the people. The result is a very diverse art form. Hip-hop is also a music that was once called dead by some of its past innovators. Exploring hip-hop today clearly shows that those words are wrong, as hip-hop has emerged like a phoenix from the flames into a new entity.

The Red Line
Peter Dale
Justin Chellman

As with all styles of music, people designate a time in which the genre reached its high point. In hip-hop it is referred to as the golden years, or the "golden age." Depending on whom you're talking to, the exact years will vary, but to many, the period is between 1988 and 1994.

This time period gave us albums such as Slick Rick's "The Great Adventures of Slick Rick," The Wu-Tang Clan's "Enter the Wu-Tang: 36 Chambers," A Tribe Called Quest's "Low End Theory," Public Enemy's "It Takes a Nation of Millions to Hold us Back," Notorious B.I.G.'s "Ready to Die" and Nas' "Illmatic." These records defined what hip-hop was and what it has become today.

But what happened after 1994, according to many hip-hop connoisseurs, was that the genre began to separate from what had defined it. Some claim "gangsta rap" was to blame, but if that were the case then hip-hop would have felt the effects way before 1994, due to the work of groups that date back to the '80s (like NWA and The Ghetto Boys).

COURTESY MTV.COM

Tupac Shakur's death in 1994 marked the end of the "Golden Age" of hip-hop.

However, most tend to blame two things. First and foremost: White America and its youth. The embrace of hip-hop culture by young, white suburban teenagers brought a much larger audience to the table, leading to more money surrounding it. This process had been occurring for quite some time. It can be traced back to the early heyday of hip-hop, with groups like Run-DMC and Onyx, the two of which collaborated with popular rock 'n' roll groups.

Another entity of our country, Corporate America, discovered the financial opportunities in popularity amongst White America in hip-hop music. The money was there to be made, and Corporate America had a strong influence over many artists. The labels began to see that certain types of hip-hop made more money for them, such as pop, which outsells everything. The labels began to demand that type of product from its artists and they were refusing to put out albums by respected artists in the genre that wouldn't conform. Basically, all hip-hop had to sound the same and it had to refer to the same subjects: love songs (the quasi formation of hip-hop as R&B), sex and/or violence.

Welcome to 1997, which we like to call the "Age of Puffy." The funny thing about this is that Puffy really isn't to blame; he was just the leader of the pack and the best at creating music that Corporate America wanted — and that the public ate up.

Between 1996 and 1997, we lost two of hip-hop's greatest contributors: Biggie and Tupac. In the wake of their deaths, people began to have a bad taste in their mouths for the violent hip-hop that carried a large part in the responsibility of the deaths of those two young men.

Sean "Puffy" Combs, now known as P. Diddy, provided an alternative to that style with softer and more pop-appealing acts, such as Mase and 112. This was the age of the crossover acts, just as old-school group EPMD predicted. Well-respected emcees such as Jay-Z and Nas began to make music that was more appealing to the masses and less appealing to their original core audience.

The charts were topped with this form of hip-hop and the music began to lose its identity while entering the mainstream. This left a large audience of fans and listeners of hip-hop when it was in its "golden age" feeling alienated and searching for more than what they were hearing.

Enter the underground. Just as there were people wanting to hear what they were missing, there were artists who were sick of what was out

Continued on page 5

Don't get yourself down about what you can't get up

Sex-iversity is a question and answer column designed to provide important information and answers to questions regarding sex, sexuality, sexual orientation, sexually transmitted infections and reproductive rights. Voiced by Julia Kristan, a member of the Voices for Planned Parenthood (VOX) group here at the University of Massachusetts and an active volunteer for the Everywoman's Center on campus, the column is intended to help educate the university community about reproductive health, rights, legislation and responsibilities. Much of the statistical information provided in this column derives from research done through and obtained by Planned Parenthood and its national affiliates.

Sex-iversity
Julia Kristan

Q. I was a virgin until recently. However, the first time I tried to have sex, I couldn't get an erection. My girlfriend said it was probably nerves, but I'm still worried it might be erectile dysfunction or something serious. What should I do?

A. Before you start worrying too much, I have a question for you. Have you had difficulty getting or maintaining an erection in the past, under relaxed and stress-free conditions? If you answer yes, then I would recommend seeing a doctor — you could have something more than a bit of nerves. Keep in mind erectile dysfunction is the repeated inability to achieve and/or sustain an erection firm enough for sexual intercourse.

Being that this occurred the first time you tried to have sex, the odds seem to be saying that your "sub-par" experi-

Continued on page 5

Chappelle humors NoHo crowd

Rising comedic genius brings stellar stage presence to the Calvin Theater

By Glen Straub
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON — Comedian Dave Chappelle is well aware that he may offend a few people with his usual ranting and raving over sexual and racial issues during his standup routines.

"I'm sorry, guys. I know I sound ignorant," he told the audience during his standup routine at Northampton's Calvin Theater Sunday night. "It's because I am ignorant."

Dave Chappelle
Calvin Theater
Northampton
Nov. 2

In Northampton, though — a city where sexuality is lucid, diversity comes at a premium and political correctness dominates — the Calvin Theater crowd did more than forgive Chappelle. It requested his blunt comments.

In anticipation of the second season of his variety show on Comedy Central, "Chappelle's Show," which premiers Jan. 21, Chappelle is touring the country making audiences of all ages and races laugh out of their seats. In NoHo it was no different, as the rising comedian performed two shows at the cavernous, yet intimate Calvin Theater Sunday night.

Chappelle, who got his big break starring in the dorm room/cult classic "Half Baked," has come a long way since performing in small clubs in his hometown of Washington, D.C. His name is household and he is now being compared to some of the great black comedians of the past, like Eddie Murphy and Richard Pryor. There is overflowing respect for the man who makes a living on marijuana jokes and it was clear at the Calvin — before Chappelle said even one word on the stage, he received a standing ovation.

As with Pryor, it is not just the jokes that get the laughs; it is the way Chappelle tells them. His scratchy, high-pitched voice combined with his wide eyes and extremely skinny body frame give him a very distinct stage presence. So although his jokes can be raunchy at times and most of them lack punch lines, it is hard to stifle the smiles when you see the man on stage.

Due to the material Chappelle discusses, he likes to test his boundaries with the audience. So Sunday night right off the bat, he began his set by telling everyone, "So I just met all eight black people in Northampton. They all just came in a little minivan." The diverse crowd responded with roaring laughter and it was set that the audience was ready for Chappelle's frank humor.

COURTESY COMEDYCENTRAL.COM

Dave Chappelle performed twice at the Calvin Theater Sunday night.

He covered a wide range of topics during his 93-minute act, including Roy Horn's (of Siegfried & Roy) tiger bite, protesting the war in Iraq, Kobe Bryant and — a particular favorite of the Massachusetts crowd — the Don Zimmer-Pedro Martinez confrontation in Game 3 of the American League Championship Series between the New York Yankees and the hometown Boston Red Sox.

A highlight of his routine was when he compared the Kobe Bryant rape situation to music superstar R. Kelly's ordeal concerning an alleged sex act between him and some of his 15-year-old fans being caught on tape, in which he urinated on the teenage girls. It is one of Chappelle's favorite topics as he ridiculed Kelly on his show last season in the original song, "I just wanna piss on you."

Sunday night he said: "Who am I to say Kobe raped that girl? Only Kobe, God and the girl knows. But R. Kelly on the other hand, we have a video of him peeing on young girls. C'mon, who gives the golden shower? That's some fked up sh*t!"

The 31-year-old comedian covers current events in a very distinct way, giving them a different spin than the average comedian might have. In discussing the Elizabeth Smart story (the 15-year-old white girl who was found in March after missing for six months) he asked why didn't this girl try to escape. He reminded (and probably informed) the audience of Acel Moore, the seven-year-old Philadelphia black girl who chewed through ropes placed around her from a kidnapper and called the police.

Chappelle, of course like most black entertainers, creates an intimate atmosphere with himself and the audience. There are constant occurrences of call and response in his show and it seems that his best stuff is the reactions he gives to the audience's questions.

He began a routine talking about the best oral sex he had ever received. An audience member in one of the first couple of rows yelled out "Was it by a monkey?" Chappelle using his improvisational mind, responded with "No, and it wasn't your mother either." A loud "ohhh" in unison from the crowd followed.

However, Chappelle's drawn-out stories, such as when he went to a

Continued on page 5

Coldplay releases new DVD/CD, includes mix of live shows

By Nick Romanow
Collegian Staff

In 2001, Coldplay busted into the pop music conscious with their debut, "Parachutes," and the massive hit singles "Yellow" and "Trouble." While they gained recognition and some praise with that album, it wasn't until last year's bonafide smash and wildly impressive "A Rush Of Blood To The Head" that the band truly exploded into international superstars.

So it's only natural for the band and their record label to try to exploit the huge success they are enjoying right now. Luckily for their fans, "Live 2003," a double-disc DVD and CD package, is not a cheap cash-in but a well put-together set that any fan of the band will enjoy. The DVD is a 90-minute live compilation of two shows the band performed this past July in Sydney, Australia. The CD contains an abridged, 60-minute version of the performances on the DVD.

Coldplay
'Live 2003'
Capitol

The CD is definitely something a Coldplay fan would enjoy, but you can't help but to feel like you'd rather just listen to "A Rush Of Blood ..." instead. While many songs suffer from this problem, "Clocks" specifically sounds so similar to the version found on "A Rush Of Blood ..." that it seems almost redundant to listen to it on this disc.

The pure, raw excitement of the opening song, "Politik," makes it a standout. The shortened disc sadly leaves out "Trouble" and "The Scientist," which are the apexes of Coldplay's catalogue and sound beautiful on the DVD. Of course that's not to say the CD is bad by any means; anyone who feels passionately about Coldplay's incredible Brit-pop exquisiteness will be thrilled with the album.

The disc includes performances of three unreleased songs, one of which is brand new and should increase the appeal of the package to fans. "One I Love" is, to be clear, not a cover of the similarly-titled R.E.M. song, but it does see the band venture further toward R.E.M.'s jangly indie-pop than they ever have before.

"See You Soon" is a good — not great — song that features mostly vocalist Chris Martin singing and finger-picking an acoustic guitar. "Moses" is an entirely new song and if it's any indication of where the band is headed, it's thrilling. The sound is much closer to the superior, more original style of "A Rush Of Blood ..." rather than the good, but not very impressive sounds of "Parachutes."

The DVD is the meat of the package. Clocking in at nearly three hours of content, it has quite a lot for Coldplay fans to see. The disc contains the entire 90-minute compilation of two shows and it offers a lot more to the fan than the CD does. The show is, for the most part, shot beautifully by director Russell Thomas. While some songs — most noticeably, "Yellow" — feature annoying edits and shots, the majority of them are just stunning to look at. It is actually hard to pick a standout visual moment, as there are many. Thomas even puts in a couple massive swooping crane shots of the outdoor venue that puts many film directors to shame.

The 40-minute tour diary/documentary is, sadly, mediocre at best. However, it is shot beautifully. It seems that it was shot in color, and then had the color drained except for select items in certain shots (i.e., in one long-shot of the band in soundcheck, the only color in the shot is Martin's red shirt).

Aside from the aesthetic values of the film, there are a few entertaining moments here and there, but it mostly just feels like a promo for the band. Additionally, it has some live footage, but uses audio that seems to be straight off the camera mics, which makes for a noisy and messy sound.

These complaints, however, are fairly petty. While this live DVD/CD combo doesn't nearly compare to truly excellent live compilations such as Nirvana's "From The Muddy Banks Of The Wishkah," or Nine Inch Nails' recent DVD/CD package "And All That Could Have Been," it is certainly more than enough to satisfy even the mild Coldplay fan.

Hopefully Coldplay will make more ventures into the live DVD/CD venue in the near future because, despite some faults, this compilation is a great picture of one of the few current bands that are both massively popular and massively talented at their best.

COURTESY ROLLINGSTONE.COM

Coldplay lead singer Chris Martin and the rest of the band give their fans a chance to bring the live performances home with the new DVD/CD "Live 2003."

The Red Line: how hip-hop has changed its listeners and its style

Continued from page 4

there and began to create music away from the major labels, on independent labels and by doing shows in small local venues. These small labels, such as Rawkus Records, began to acquire a rather large and loyal following from hip-hop fans that were sick of commercial hip-hop.

Rawkus Records brought us a very refreshing brand of hip-hop in the late '90s. Sporting acts such as Pharoahe Monch (formally of Organized Konfusion), Mos Def, Talib Kweli and Company Flow (who ended up leaving Rawkus and disbanding; and one the main members, EL-P, then created his own well respected hip-hop label Def Jux). They also put out popular underground acts showcase albums in the "Soundbombing" series, which is the label's true claim to fame. These albums featured many up-and-coming and rather unheard artists at the time as well as proven acts like Common, Eminem, Brand Nubian, Boot Camp Clik and Q Tip.

This created a lot of buzz for underground hip-hop music. Labels started to notice that the people who bought underground hip-hop albums didn't just buy a few albums once in a while (which was the trend of people who bought the pop albums) — they bought a lot of albums, every week. These fans were like drug addicts and underground hip-hop was their fix. Underground hip-hop was a refreshing alternative to the mainstream commercial hip-hop that was being pumped out of every corporately owned radio station, and labels weren't the only people who noticed this change. Other artists who were more associated with the mainstream began to notice this.

This brings us to contemporary times, which is like a "second coming" for hip-hop. The lines between underground and mainstream are becoming more and more burry. Mainstream acts that lost listeners of the underground scene are starting to gain them back with solid albums that appeal to the mainstream as well as the underground fans, such as Jay-Z's "The Blueprint" and Nas' "Stillmatic." Hip-Hop is also seeing the rebirth of former greats like Scarface, with his album "The Fix," as well as new albums by members of Wu-Tang and also from former Death Row record label members such as Dr. Dre and Snoop Dogg.

Today artists have gained more creative control over what music they put out. With Dr. Dre and Eminem giving free reign to their acts, their labels, Aftermath and Shady records, respectively, are practically controlling what's hot and what's not in hip-hop right now. We also are seeing a lot of collaborations between artists, once thought of as underground, with many mainstream acts. Two great examples are the Rawkus and Rocafella collaborations, with Jay-Z on a Talib Kweli record, and Mos Def on a record by Kanye West (one of the Roc's celebrated producers responsible for a large part of Jay Z's "The Blueprint").

There is also a new trend: Hip-hop music is becoming darker, but in a good way. Hip-hop is getting back to its grittier and most raw form of presentation. This should be no surprise, considering that hip-hop's most popular act, Eminem, is from the underground hip-hop circuit, and his form of music, although very mainstream, is very dark at times. His star act, 50 Cent, is also the first straight-up rapper to be on top of the game in a while. Whereas Jay-Z and Nas both opted for a mix of R&B and rap during the late '90s, 50 Cent opts for a style more likely to be associated with the style of Tupac and Biggie (although his lyricism is not up to par with the late greats). In other words, he may make a song that appeals to the mainstream, but his presentation is still very raw. This has influenced acts like Jay-Z and Nas to make music similar to the music with which they debuted rather than what they had been putting out during the late '90s.

So what's next? Well that can't be answered, but the albums that have been coming out in the mainstream lately have become more and more true to the art form as we knew it in the "golden years," while still unique in its progression. There are also much celebrated acts from that age back in the studio after years apart, such as A Tribe Called Quest and Pete Rock and CL Smooth. Will they live up to the past success? Only time will tell, but we assure you that there is a lot more to look forward to these days.

Keep your ear to the street. If hip-hop is going to be reborn, the street is where it starts — not in a major record label office, contrary to popular belief.

Justin Chellman and Peter Dale are Collegian columnists. You can listen to their hip-hop radio show called "The Red Line" on WMUA 91.1 FM every Friday from 9 to 11:30 p.m. E-mail them at theredline@yahoo.com.

Comic Chappelle entertains

Continued from page 4

"Hollywood orgy," made his performance a bit winded. During these long rants, there were the constant giggles but very few moments of the loud and boisterous laughing that makes the performer stop and pause mid-sentence. These detailed anecdotes were toward the end of his performance, which made the tired and possibly hungry crowd a bit antsy.

Overall though, Chappelle was impressive. It is hard to find a comedian with the same kind of stage presence he has. And the audience at the Calvin Sunday night got a first hand glance one of the best in the business.

***

Opening for Chappelle was Grier "Chocolate" Barnes. Echoing similar themes in his jokes as Chappelle, such as racial and homosexual issues, Barnes received much praise from the crowd after opening for the comedic genius. His realistic bong-water sound effects were strikingly on par with the work of Michael Winslow, best known for his role in the "Police Academy" movies and arguably the best sound impressionist of all time.

Sex-iversity: calming your nerves may help maintain a strong libido

Continued from page 4

ence was caused by some stage fright. The mind is the number one erogenous zone, and it can also be your worst enemy. If a male is nervous, tense or "trying too hard" to get an erection, his body will work against himself. Mother nature has provided humans with a fantastic fight or flight response, one that will make an erection impossible in times of danger or tension. Losing one's virginity is, for many people, an exciting and slightly nerve-wracking experience. It is common for males to be unable to perform under such circumstances, and typically not a sign of any dysfunction or future impotence.

The key to dealing with the lack of an erection is seeing it for what it is: a minor, very temporary experience. For any readers who might find themselves in this situation (even men who have had sex a hundred times — it can happen to you, too), there are some simple things you can try.

Relax, take a breath or two, and I know it's difficult, but try not to think about getting an erection. Remember, your body is in fight or flight mode and you're probably not going to need Viagra to solve the problem.

Communicate with your partner about what you think might be happening. They will hopefully understand and not mind one bit if you cool things off for a while and try again later. Another good rule of thumb is allowing yourself and your partner adequate time and privacy to relax and take things slowly. Hooking up with someone at a party with people audibly outside the door, for example, won't bode well for sexual success.

Human bodies are not perfect machines set to perform on command. We are incredible works of art and nature that sometimes bumble and fumble in the course of our lives. There are plenty of things that can temporarily "go wrong" in a given situation, most of which do not point to a larger health concern.

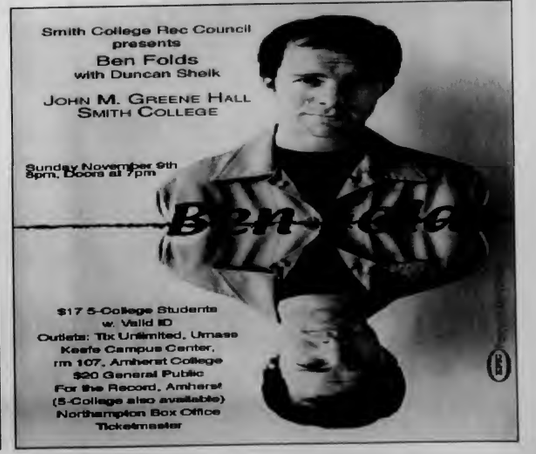
Questions? Comments? E-mail sexiversity@hotmail.com with subject "Sex-iversity." Confidentiality is always respected.

Bartenders Have More Spirit!
Why not be a bartender?

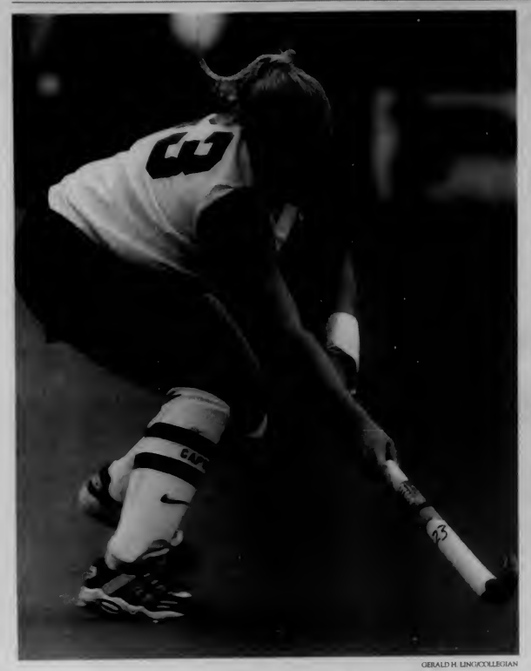
BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL of AMERICA

- Only professional school in Western MA
- Hands on training in a real bar club setting
- National certification in alcohol awareness
- Lifetime refresher
- ID Card
- Resume
- Special UMass student discount
- Conveniently located in West Springfield

Call TODAY! (413)747-9888
www.bostonbartender.com



LIFE IN THE FUN LANE!
Work a flexible schedule in a fun environment!



PART-TIME POSITIONS AVAILABLE:

- Servers – Monday and Wednesday - 6 p.m. to 9 p.m. Friday and Saturday – 9 p.m. to 1 a.m.
- Marketing Assistant – Can you work a flexible schedule of about 20 hours per week that includes some days and evenings? This is a great entry level position promoting and coordinating parties and bowling events.
- Machine Mechanic - Do you enjoy working with machines and have the ability to troubleshoot? We will teach you how to monitor and maintain our pinsetter machines. Mechanical experience necessary. PT day, evening and weekend shifts available.

Apply today @ Northampton Bowl, 525 Pleasant St., Northampton. Ask for Bill or Vinny.

Smith College Rec Council presents
Ben Folds
with Duncan Sheik
John M. Greene Hall
Smith College
Sunday November 9th
8pm. Doors at 7pm
$17 5-College Students w. Valid ID
Outlets: Tix Unlimited, Umass Keefe Campus Center, rm 107, Amherst College
$20 General Public
For the Record, Amherst
(5-College also available)
Northampton Box Office
Ticketmaster

Gerald H. Lingo/Collegian

Senior Kristin Hopwood played her final game for UMass, netting the lone goal in a 1-0 win.

UM blanks URI on Senior Day

Continued from page 8

there 100 percent the whole game ... it was fun; I enjoyed it."

Tocco made three saves on the day for her first shutout of the season. She finishes the 2003 season with a 4-14 record, 65 goals against for an average of 3.55, and 149 saves for a percentage of .696.

Shea was pleased with the Minutewomen's performance.

"Today was a huge stepping stone to our level of excellence that we have to get to [in the future]," Shea said. "These last few games have said a lot about this group, because it would have been real easy to quit, real easy to come out here and just go through the motions to finish out the season, and they didn't."

The Minutewomen 2003 campaign is the lowest win total in the history of the program, and only their third losing season in their 27 years of existence. As it stands, they will be returning 10 starters, including sophomore Jaime Bawden, who led the team with three goals and one assist for seven points.

Men finish seventh, women eighth at A-10 Championships

By Matt Barstow
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts cross country teams effectively ended their seasons below expectations Saturday, with a seventh-place men's finish, and eighth place for the women at the Atlantic 10 Championships.

La Salle became the third squad in Atlantic 10 history to win three consecutive titles, as the Explorers finished with eight runners in the top 13, six of whom were named to the All-Conference team. La Salle was heavily favored going into the A-10s, ranked No. 28 among Division I teams, and setting a team record for highest national ranking.

St. Joseph's sophomore Andre Laboy won his first collegiate race, becoming the first runner to ever finish a playoff race in less than 25 minutes at the Belmont Plateau in the course's six-year history as host site of the A-10 Championships. Laboy led the Hawks to a second place finish (68 points), with a time of 24:46.7.

Duquesne tied a team record third-place finish with 109 points. Junior Ryan Bender, who finished second overall with a time of 25:12.6, led the Dukes. Bender was awarded All-Conference honors for his second consecutive season.

The University of Richmond came in fourth, led by senior captain Tim Caramore who finished seventh overall with a time of 25:36.1. Caramore's performance earned him a spot on the All-Conference team in his fastest race of the year.

Dayton rounded off the top five with 117 points, followed by George Washington (184 points) and UMass (191 points).

"Duquesne, Richmond and Dayton all finished within eight points of each other, so if we had finished one spot higher per person, we would have been right in the mix," coach Ken O'Brien said.

Sophomore transfer Ryan Corbett, who finished 29th out of 109 total competitors, led the Minutemen with a time of 26:46. Junior captain Andrew McCarron came in second among UMass scorers, with a time of 26:54.

Freshmen Aaron Strellner and Michael Dulong finished third and fourth for the Maroon and White respectively, with times of 27:10 and 27:16. Sophomore Rich Harris brought up the rear for the Maroon and White, completing the five-mile race in 27:18.

The top five UM scorers finished with a 32-second differential.

"The guys finished as a pack, which was good in terms of the spread, but I was hoping to see them run 20 seconds faster per man," O'Brien said. "As a whole, it wasn't a day to call a championship performance. In a race like this everyone needs to run 85 to 95 percent of their potential, and we fell a little short."

O'Brien credits recurring injuries and illnesses, such as the team's ongoing battle with the flu, as possible causes for inconsistencies throughout the year.

"When you're faced with a variety of problems beyond those that you face on the course, it causes a prolonged period of adjustment which hurts the team's ability to gain momentum going into big races," O'Brien said.

In the women's race, Sheila Klick defended her title, as the La Salle senior won the women's race for the second straight year, completing the three-mile race in 18:00.2. Klick's time was the 18th fastest in A-10 history. Klick was named to her third All-Conference team, and was honored by the A-10 as the "Most Outstanding Runner of the Meet" for the second consecutive year. Klick led the Explorers to a third-place, 97-point finish.

The University of Richmond claimed its first-ever Atlantic 10 title, as conference Coach of the Year Lori Taylor watched his Richmond Spiders take five out of the top 10 spots, and three of the top four. Freshman Caitlin Smyth was named the A-10 Outstanding Rookie, after placing fifth overall and third among Richmond scorers, with a time of 18:31.4.

Richmond bested Rhode Island by 35 points, despite a second-place effort by Rams sophomore Kristen Coon, who finished seven seconds behind Klick, in 18:07.2.

Duquesne came in fourth with 108 points, followed by Saint Joseph's with 122 points, and George Washington with 184 points. Dayton finished seventh and Fordham finished eighth, with 189 and 204 points, respectively. The Minutemen placed ninth with 204 points, ahead of Xavier and St. Bonaventure.

Senior Kate Markopoulos, whose time of 19:32.1 placed her 11th out of 115 total competitors, led the Minutewomen. Despite a personal best first-place finish among UMass scorers, Markopoulos missed making the All-Conference team by one spot.

Freshman Cuisle Kierans finished second among UMass scorers with a time of 19:56.2.

Alexis Anzelone, perennial favorite among Minutewomen runners, finished a season low, third place among UMass scorers with a time of 20:08.8. Anzelone, the team's MVP, finished 44th overall.

The Massachusetts cross country teams will have one more chance to race, as they attempt to qualify for the NCAA's District Championships this Saturday. Out of the 40 participating Division I schools from New England and New York, three will be selected to compete for the national title.

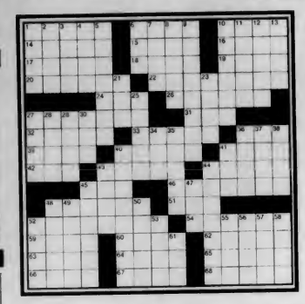
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com

Quote for the Day

"Don't worry about the world coming to an end today. It is already tomorrow in Australia."

-Charles Schultz

Today's Crossword Puzzle



Previous puzzle solved

Across
1 Yellow jackets
6 On the horizon
10 Blueprint
14 Bullpen item
15 Point at sea
16 Melodrama VIP
17 Kayak's kin
18 Culprit
19 Higher than 20 Half shell item
22 Ray of lunar light
24 Chop off
25 Thrashes
27 Grinder or cager
31 By means of 32 Tier
33 Wooden rod
36 Performers again
39 Funny Bombeck
40 Hurried
41 Big Island port
42 "Ain't misbehavin'" lead
44 Writer Sterling
45 Evergreen
46 Honcho
48 Stockpiles
51 Worthless coin
52 Hammering
54 Kampala's country
59 Zeroback toast
60 Scrugge or Hines
62 Spanish
63 — mardidem
64 Omit
65 Chardonnay lover
66 Consumer gds.
67 Mo. neighbor
68 Skin wasters

Down
1 Texas town
2 "Let's call it —"
3 Blades
4 Author's need
5 Pittsburgh NFLer
6 Carnaus wkp
7 Rasp com
8 Cool in
9 Discarded
10 Deep-rooted fear
11 Flat
12 Regrets
13 Average
21 Campbell
23 Fuming
26 Boards
25 Ride a bike
27 Knighted Guinness
28 Cheap staple
29 Loose living
30 Pasture
34 Fall mo.
35 Calendar units
36 Not speak clearly
37 Jai —
38 Rhone port
40 Most obsolete
41 Wrestling surface
43 Baseball
44 Tighter
45 Lifeon soldier
47 One
48 Keep after
49 Sergeant
50 Sergeant
52 Wheels for baby
53 Toothy smile
55 Glob of gunk
56 Rent's refusal
57 "Tuna Fishing" painter
58 Iowa city
61 RN assistant

THE HARP
Irish Pub
413-548-6900 www.theharp.net
163 Sunderland Rd.- N. Amherst
Just north of the apartments
Great new deck!
TUES. Team Pub Trivia! Win Money and Prizes
WED. Harp Reggae Night
November Special!
Labatt Blue:
$1.75 A pint / $6.25 A pitcher

Dining Commons Menu

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

Lunch
- Chicken Nuggets
- BBQ Beef Sandwich
- Curried Vegetables (vegan)

Dinner
- Grilled Pork Chops
- Turkey Divan
- Grilled Portabella Mushroom Steaks (vegan)

Daily Weather Forecast

For Amherst

Tuesday
- High: 51
- Low: 40

Wednesday
- High: 69
- Low: 52

Thursday
- High: 61
- Low: 34

Production Crew

On staff today

Night Editor
Barbara Lotto
Photo Technician
Sarah Lloyd
Copy Editor
Andrew Merritt
Production Supervisor
Dan Simmons
Production Staff
Nikolas P. Markantonatos/ Dave Pessah

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Say you're bored around people that are very busy working. It pisses them off.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
You're a bigger dork than Bill Gates ... and you're poor, too.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Yummy, smoooooooothies!

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
You just aced that test. Okay, not really, but it's nice to think so.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
What's new in this town?

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Rocking chairs are entertaining.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Watch out for mooners from the windows of Southwest.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
It's a SUB! NOT a grinder!

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
It's far too warm for it to be November.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Take it easy today and eat a taco.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
You're a fun person ... fun like a kick in the crotch.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Be careful: Kittens can be quite persuasive.

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Announcements

Student Director Wanted For Play on Lord Jeff Amherst. Shows the 'hero' as biologic warrior who deliberately slaughtered the Indians with Smallpox, 'winning' the war. STYLE: Brechtian. Loud, raucous. Simple sets. Musical. Goal: controversy, outrage. AUTHOR: AC' graduate, many past productions VENUE/ACTORS: your choice CONTACT: 718-601-8089 nites Leave name/address please

Auto for Sale

1992 Silver Ford Taurus Excellent condition $2400 118000K Call 549-3930 210-7393 All Power

1999 Explorer XLT 4x4 Excellent Condition Sunroof 6cyl. Loaded $12,500 Call 546-3477

Auto for Sale

Honda 1995 Civic Ex Coupe, red, 91K, moonroof, LoJack, well maintained, $4,250, 413-665-0487

Mountainview Auto Route 47 South in Hadley 585-0599 '89 Mercedes 300E Clean $3500 '94 Nissan Sentra Limited Edition $2850 '87 Honda Civic excellent transportation $950 '87 Saab 900 Automatic $950 '88 Dodge Caravan Very Clean 100,000 miles $1200

$500!!! Cars from $500!!! Police Impounds for listings. 1-800-319-3323 ext4554

93 Pontiac Bonneville SDN All Power Must Sell $1500 B/O 253-5537

Auto for Sale

96 Dodge Intrepid White runs good Power everything Brand new Pioneer CD/Stereo Must sell Asking $2400 Amy 413-222-5754

Employment

Spring 2003 Internships with The Student Legal Services Office: Get hands-on experience in the legal field; work directly with attorneys and clients; earn up to 15 undergraduate credits. No experience necessary. Training provided. Contact the Student Legal Services Office Today! 545-1995, 922 Campus Center

Landscaping Services: Part-time positions available for fall clean-up and snow work. Need to be ambitious, hardworking, own transportation, and flexible hours. Call Steve at 413-665-3493

Employment

Movie Extras/Models Needed For local Casting Calls No exp. or age required EARN up to $200 a day 1-888-820-0167

Telephone Interviewers NO SALES! Conduct interviews over the phone at our Hadley location Flexible Evening and Weekend Hours $7.50/hour to start 20+ hours/week PVTA accessible For more info: 1-888-423-5381 FMI

Internship Motivated students seeking leadership outside the box. Gain experience in all aspects of running a small business. Average pay $9300 Call 508-246-1230

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

Employment

!Bartending!$ $250/day potential No experience Nesc Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext 162

For Sale

Concept II Indoor Rowing Machine for sale. Like New $500.00 or BO 546-5459

$Save$ Wholesale-Discount prices, video games, clothing, jewelry, more. www.tylersdiscounts.com

Instruction

University Bartending Classes Start Soon 1-800-U-CAN-MIX Call now for information!!! Space is Limited www.universitybartending.com

Lost

Lost: Wallet Near Parking garage 10/14 If found please call with description 413-237-1015

Services

Stuck on a tough term paper? ThePaperExperts.com can help! Expert writers can help with editing, writing, graduate school applications. We'll help with any subject- visit us 24/7 at ThePaperExperts.com.

All Digital Productions Pro Videography for Weddings, Bar Mitzvahs, Commercial (508) 221-8223 sweeppicker@yahoo.com

SHEAR BLISS DAY SPA SERVICES Body Sugaring (waxing) for men and women *Safe *100% Natural *Effective 253-2322 https://shearbliss.image411.com

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

Services

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

Travel

#1 Spring Break Vacations! 110% Best Prices! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, Florida, Acapulco. Book Now & Receive Free Parties & Meals Campus Reps Wanted! 1-800-234-7007 endlesssummertours.com

SPRING BREAK 2004! Beach Life Vacations! Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas, Florida. Sell Trips, Earn Cash, Travel Free!! Call 1-800-733-6347 www.beachlifevacations.com

Travel

Spring Break 2004. Travel with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator to Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas and Florida. Now hiring campus reps. Call for group discounts. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com For more information contact STA Travel at 413-256-1261

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Destinations, including Cruises! Foam Parties, Free Drinks and Club Admissions. Rep Positions and FREE trips Available. 1-800-231-4386 www.EpicureanTours.com

A "Reality" Spring Break 2004's Hottest Prices Book now .. Free Trips, Meals & Parties www.sunsplashtours.com or 1800-426-7710

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTSTUESDAY

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 4, 2003

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Going out on top

UM finishes with a win

By Brendan Hall
Collegian Staff

For Kristin Hopwood, Saturday couldn't have been any better.

In the last game of her career, the senior captain knocked in the lone goal of the game to lead the Massachusetts field hockey team (4-15, 2-4 Atlantic 10) to a 1-0 victory over the URI Rams (7-13, 1-5 A-10).

"It felt really good to end it like this," Hopwood said. "It really stinks that we couldn't make it to the [A-10] tournament, but at the same time it's nice to end on a win."

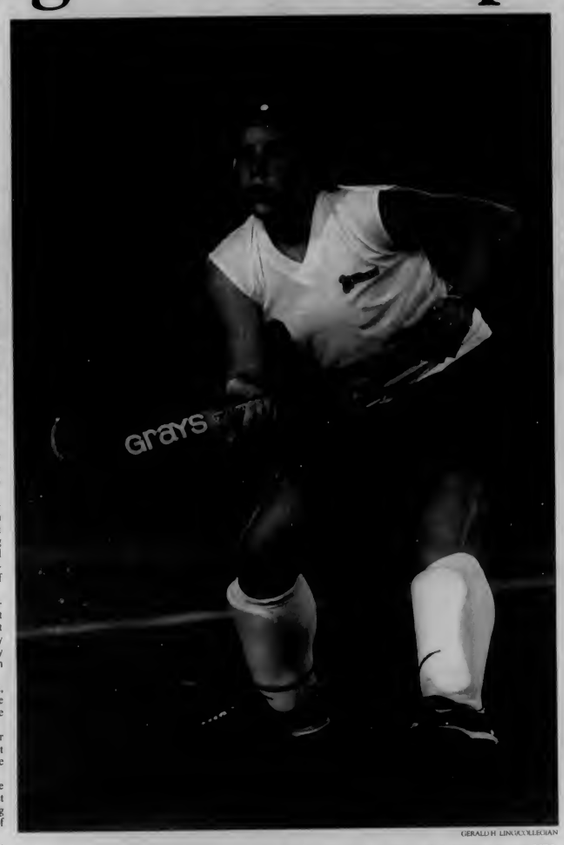
UMass	1
URI	0

Hopwood was given honors before the game for her performance throughout her four-year tenure with the Minutewomen. Over the span of her career, she has played in 74 games, starting 54 of them, scored one goal and one assist for three points, and was part of a defensive unit that ranked first in the nation in 2000.

"Kristin Hopwood has represented everything that's right about college athletics, about UMass athletics," coach Patty Shea said. "She's taken a lot of self-sacrifice for the good of the team and she's done a tremendous job."

The first half featured plenty of back-and-forth action. The Minutewomen began to take control as the game progressed, but it was the Rams who had the first scoring chance. The Minutewomen defense stopped the Rams on four consecutive penalty corners in the final two minutes of the first half to keep it scoreless.

The Maroon and White gave Rams goaltender Jennifer Perry plenty to worry about in the second, as the Minutewomen outshot the Rams 16-1 and dominated the penalty corners 4-1. But it wasn't until halfway through the half that the Minutewomen finally broke away from the Rams.



After being awarded a penalty shot, Hopwood knocked in the lone goal of the game at 50:46 to seal the win for the Minutewomen.

"We practiced penalty strokes [the other day], and I was the only one who didn't get to do one," Hopwood said. "I can't believe it hit the backboard."

The Minutewomen defense put the clamp down on the Rams, allowing just four shots in the entire game, making goalie Christine Tocco's job in net a piece of cake.

"It was easy," Tocco said. "The team was

Continued on page 6

GERALD H. LIN/COLLEGIAN

Jaime Bawden saw the UMass field hockey team break a five-game losing streak with a shutout win over URI.

Wagner traded to Philadelphia

By Rob Maaddi
Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Billy Wagner questioned Houston ownership's commitment to winning. He won't have those problems with the Philadelphia Phillies.

The All-Star closer was traded yesterday from the cost-cutting Astros to the Phillies for right-hander Brandon Duckworth, and minor league right-handers Taylor Buchholz and Ezequiel Astacio.

Wagner, a three-time All-Star, goes from one of baseball's best bullpens to among its worst. The Phillies converted just 33 saves in 51 opportunities as Jose Mesa and Mike Williams both faltered.

"I'm excited about coming to Philadelphia because they obviously have made a commitment to winning a championship," Wagner said.

Wagner had criticized Astros owner Drayton McLane for not making a move to get another quality starting pitcher for the 2003 season and expected more of the same for next season.

"It's going to be a tape job," Wagner said after the season finale. "It's not like we're going out there and getting any marquee pitchers."

Wagner didn't back off his comments after the trade.

"My comments to Drayton were truthful. They were about winning, not about him being a bad owner," Wagner said.

Whatever the case, the Phillies are thrilled to have him. General manager Ed Wade said getting a closer was the team's top priority in the offseason.

"Billy Wagner was at the top of our list," Wade said.

Phillies manager Larry Bowa compared Wagner to Atlanta's John Smoltz and Los Angeles' Eric Gagne.

"He's a dominant closer," Bowa said. "There's a big void we filled real quick."

Wagner was 1-4 with a 1.78 ERA last season and had 44 saves in 47 chances, making a career-high 78 appearances. Mesa converted 24 of 28 saves for the Phillies, and had seven losses and a 6.52 ERA. Williams, an All-Star with Pittsburgh, was 0-4 with a 6.38 ERA and three saves in five chances after being acquired by the Phillies in July.

Wagner is due to make $8 million next season, the third in a $27 million, three-year contract he agreed to in January 2002. The deal contains a $9 million team option for 2005 with a $3 million buyout.

For the Astros, this was money move. McLane has said the team lost money this season.

"This is somewhat of a sad experience," the owner said. "He's one of our own and has developed into one of the premier players in baseball. But you move forward, and you have to constantly renew the team, and this is a step forward. We hate very much to make this decision, but it certainly helps us in giving us flexibility."

Duckworth, 27, was 4-7 with a 4.94 ERA in 18 starts and six relief appearances. Buchholz, 22, went 9-11 with a 3.55 ERA in 25 games for Double-A Reading of the Eastern League.

GERALD H. LIN/COLLEGIAN

Stephanie Barrett and the Minutewomen concluded their season with a pair of losses in Philadelphia.

Bitter ending

Minutewomen drop final two

By Matt Stewart
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's soccer team experienced a somber end to their final weekend of play.

Temple	2
UMass	1
St. Joseph's	5
UMass	0

The Maroon and White went into the weekend with a slight glimmer of hope, and were mathematically still in contention for the tournament.

Hope soon turned to despair as UMass (4-12-1, 3-8 A-10) dropped a double-overtime heartbreaker to rival Temple 2-1 on Friday, and was blanked in its season finale by St. Joseph's 5-0. When asked about his thoughts on this past weekend, UMass coach Jim Rudy replied: "In many ways the same familiar feeling. It's definitely frustrating."

Temple (4-13-1, 2-8 A-10) struck first in the marquee match up. With less than two minutes remaining in the first half, Katie Louth beat Kristin Rutland to put the Owls up 1-0. Elena Hekimian was credited with an assist.

Both teams battled to a stalemate through the majority of the second half. Michelle Luttati hit a header past Temple goalkeeper Jackie Mauro to tie the game up with less than a minute remaining in regulation.

"Michelle Luttati is a class act," Rudy said of his departing senior. "From end to end on both sides of the field she had a spectacular season."

Both teams battled back and forth through the first overtime, but neither team was able to score, forcing a second overtime. That's when disaster struck for the Maroon and White.

With 3:33 remaining in the second extra frame, twin sisters Samantha and Stephanie Vietry broke into the UMass zone, and Samantha fed Stephanie, who drilled the game winner home.

"We played well but missed our lay-ups and hit the post three times," Rudy said. "We dominated overtime but they ended up beating us."

The final game on the slate was against St. Joseph's, who had clinched a tournament berth in their game against Rhode Island, and had nothing to lose against the Maroon and White.

St. Joseph's (9-7-1, 7-4 A-10) blasted out of the gates, netting three early goals. Senior Michelle Ford got things started, netting her first goal of the game in the 10th minute to put the Hawks up 1-0. Freshmen Nancy Cook and Megan Schutt netted back-to-back goals 10 minutes later to put St. Joseph's up 3-0.

Ford later added a pair of goals in the second half, both of which were assisted by Marisa Barriere (three assists). It marked her first career hat trick, to give the Hawks the 5-0 win.

"[St. Joseph's] just got into the A-10 tournament and they took it to us," Rudy said.

One of the most positive aspects of this weekend, Rudy said, was that everyone got the chance to play.

"We even got an injured Kelly Nigh to stand in front of the net for the last five minutes," he said.

The loss brings to an end the careers of seniors Kelly Nigh, Erin Lilly, Rayney Meisel, Maggie LaBrode, Erin Muir and Michelle Luttati.

"It's always tough," Rudy said. "It was a large group this year. They trained very hard and were respectful and polite. They played through pain and injuries. These seniors are solid citizens and will do well in life. They will become great UMass alumni."

The Maroon and White were plagued by injuries all season long, and never got the opportunity to fully recover. At one point in the season, there were as many as six starters with ailments, unable to participate in the active lineup.

Lindsey Fairweather was sidelined with an injury for the beginning of the season, which hurt the Minutewoman offense. Down the stretch, things didn't improve, as the Maroon and White were slapped with some additional injuries to Nigh and one of the biggest standouts of the season, Lindsey Bellini.

"It's disappointing," Rudy said. "Had this team stayed healthy we could've been damn good. It was very frustrating losing nine games by one goal."

The Daily Collegian

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 5, 2003 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 45

EMILIE DOGGANA/COLLEGIAN

Rack 'em

Serena Tran, a senior nursing major, takes a break from mid-semester stress by playing a game of pool at Union Billiards.

Democrats dispute over confederate flag at debate

By Ron Fournier
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) — Howard Dean, under fire from his Democratic rivals, stubbornly refused to apologize last night for saying the party must court Southerners with Confederate flags in their pickup trucks.

"Were you wrong, Howard? Were you wrong to say that?" Sen. John Edwards challenged the former Vermont governor in a hot, hip campaign debate.

"No, I wasn't, John Edwards," Dean shot back, adding that to win, Democrats must appeal to working-class white voters in the South who consistently support Republicans "against their own economic interests."

The exchange was the sharpest of the night in a debate that generally veered away from campaign issues such as Iraq and the economy, and into areas of interest to younger voters.

Retired Gen. Wesley Clark, asked about gay and lesbian rights, said he would give homosexuals "the opportunity to serve in the U.S. armed forces." Under a policy in effect since the Clinton administration, gays are permitted to serve in the military if they do not disclose their sexual orientation.

Asked whether they had ever used marijuana, Edwards, Dean and Sen. John Kerry said they have. Rep. Dennis Kucinich, Clark and Al Sharpton said they had not. Sen. Joe Lieberman answered the same, although he apologized as he did so. Former Sen. Carol Moseley Braun declined to answer.

Rep. Dick Gephardt was the only absentee as the Democrats vying to challenge President Bush gathered for their sixth debate in two months. The Missouri lawmaker chose to campaign in Iowa, site of the leadoff caucuses on Jan. 19.

The eight other Democrats met in Faneuil Hall, a building steeped in history— and an unlikely venue for a debate unlike any other.

That was clear from the outset, when moderator Anderson Cooper of CNN appeared on stage wearing an open-necked dress shirt— and invited the nationwide television audience to submit questions by text message. In addition to CNN, Rock the Vote sponsored the debate.

The candidates, too, dressed down for the event. Lieberman wore a shirt and tie but no jacket; Edwards favored an open-necked, blue-and-white checked shirt, and Clark and Kucinich opted for turtlenecks.

Sekou Diyday, 25, a supermarket buyer, confronted Dean with the question about the Confederate flag and comments the former governor had made over the weekend in an interview with the Des Moines Register.

"I was extremely offended," Diyday said. "Could you please explain to me how you plan on being sensitive to needs and issues regarding slavery and African-Americans after making a comment of that nature," he said to applause from the audience.

Dean responded by quoting the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., as saying it was his dream that "the sons of slaveholders and the sons of slaves" could some day sit down together.

Sharpton interjected that Dean had failed to answer the question, then said the former governor had misquoted King. "You can't bring a Confederate flag to the table of brotherhood," he said.

He added, "You are not a bigot, but you appear to be too arrogant to say 'I'm wrong' and go on."

Dean defended himself and his remarks, telling Sharpton, "We're not going to win this country … if we don't have a big tent. And I'm going to tell you reverend, you're right. I'm not a bigot."

"We need to bring folks together in this race, just like Martin Luther King tried to do … And I make no apologies for reaching out to poor white people," Dean said.

Edwards jumped in moments later, challenging Dean to say whether he was wrong to have made his comments about the flag.

Again, Dean said he was not. He added that people were wrong to fly the flag, which he called a racist symbol. But he added, "I think there are a lot of poor people who fly that flag because the Republicans have been dividing us by race since 1968 with their Southern race strategy."

But Edwards, who represents North Carolina, was unwilling to let the subject go.

"Let me tell you, the last thing we need in the South is somebody like you coming down and telling us what we need to do," he said.

U.S. soldier killed in Baghdad roadside blast

By Slobodan Lekic
Associated Press

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — Insurgents killed an American soldier in a roadside bombing in Baghdad yesterday and lobbed mortars into the U.S. headquarters area of the capital, wounding four people and raising huge explosions downtown for the second night in a row.

Spain announced the withdrawal of much of its diplomatic staff from Iraq for security reasons.

The mortar attack yesterday evening targeted a major symbol: the so-called "Green Zone," the heavily guarded square-mile part of downtown Baghdad where the U.S.-led occupation headquarters is housed in a former Saddam Hussein palace.

Smoke could be seen rising from the northern end of the zone, near the al-Jamhuriya Bridge over the Tigris River. Iraqi police said two mortar rounds hit in the zone. At the Pentagon, spokesman Lt. Col. Jim Cassella said four people were injured in the attacks, but he was not sure if they were Americans, civilians or military.

The mortars caused no casualties or damage, the U.S. military said. The night before, three mortars exploded downtown, one hitting a U.S. Army base but caused no damage or casualties.

Also located in the Green Zone is the Al Rasheed hotel, in which most U.S. officials have been residing and which insurgents battered with rockets on Oct. 26, killing an American soldier.

Earlier in Baghdad, the roadside bombing killed one soldier and wounded two others, all from the 1st Armored Division, the U.S. command said. Another soldier was killed Monday and one other wounded when their vehicle struck a land mine in Tikrit.

The deaths brought the number of American soldiers killed in Iraq in November to 22, most in the weekend crash of a Chinook transport helicopter shot down Sunday west of Baghdad.

In other developments yesterday:

-An Iraqi judge was shot and killed outside his home in the northern city of Mosul, the second judge killed in as many days. Ismail Youssef, a Christian, was a deputy to the head of the appeal courts in Nineveh province.

Continued on page 2

ANJA NIEDRINGHAUS/ASSOCIATED PRESS

U.S. Army soldiers secure the "Green Zone" in central Baghdad, Iraq after mortars were fired into the area late yesterday.

UMass launching $100,000 push to market its research

SHREWSBURY (AP) — Administrators at the University of Massachusetts announced a new push yesterday to market the university's research.

"With competition from other states and nations threatening the Massachusetts economy this is no time to be timid," Jack Wilson, the university's interim president, told trustees. The trustees met in Shrewsbury to hear reports from campus officials on the university's science and technology research.

Wilson said he was launching the development fund with $100,000 from the licensing revenues the university receives from its research. Eventually, Wilson said, he hoped to increase the spending to $1 million.

He said the money could be used to manufacture prototypes of products that could be licensed and made by Massachusetts companies, in turn helping create private sector jobs.

Over the past seven years, the university system's revenues from licensing technology has grown from $400,000 to more than $20 million annually. Still, the money is a fraction of that generated by the state's private research universities, including MIT and Harvard.

"UMass, which accounts for over 90 percent of the university research conducted outside of greater Boston, has a unique ability and responsibility to spread innovation-based prosperity to every corner of the state," he said.

Wilson, a former professor and administrator at Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute who created UMass' online course program, also said he planned to name a panel of high technology executives to advise the university on its moves in that field.

He also said economic development officials from the five campuses would meet next week in Fall River to discuss techniques used to create technology incubators at the university's Lowell and Dartmouth campuses.

-Associated Press

EDITORIAL/OPINION
PAGE 3
EROS AND PHILIA
A LOOK AT ROMANCE AND FRIENDSHIP
ARTS & LIVING
PAGE 4
BARELY VIEWABLE
NEW RYAN MOVIE FALLS SHORT
SPORTS
PAGE 8
LORD JEFF
KROHN NAMED A-10 PLAYER OF THE WEEK
COMICS/CLASSIFIEDS
PAGE 7

Annual Majors Fair to be held tonight

By Sean Benson
Collegian Correspondent

Tonight the annual Majors Fair will be held from 6 p.m. to 8 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom.

Over 90 different department representatives will be available to answer questions. In addition, representatives from the Army ROTC and Air Force ROTC, the libraries program, Residential Academic Program, ALANA, Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black and other Minority Students, Alternative Spring Break and the International Relations certificate program will be present. Students will be able to gather information about the programs in a no-commitment environment.

Representatives from interdisciplinary programs will be present as well, including the information technologies minor, the cultural health science certificate, the public policy and administration minor, the biostatistics and epidemiology minors, the international relations certificate, and the criminal justice program. The Isenberg School of Management and the School of Engineering will be present as well.

The variety of representatives will include faculty members, graduate students, undergraduate students, chief undergraduate advisors and honors coordinators.

Undeclared freshmen and sophomores are invited to attend, as well as undergraduates who may be looking to change or add a major, or add a minor or certificate program. Coordinators expect a turnout of over 1,000 students.

"One of the goals of the Majors Fair is to help prepare students for registration," said Susan Machala, an organizer from Pre-Major Advising Services. "The latest information will be available for the spring semester."

The online registration period will begin on Nov. 13 and run continuously through Feb. 10. However, students are advised to register for classes at the beginning of their enrollment appointment.

Career Services will be on hand to answer questions and help guide students as to what they plan to do with their major.

"It's never too soon to start exploring options," said Kim Holloway, a Career Services representative. "Students may want to keep in mind the possible internships in connection with their major or minor."

Career Services will provide light refreshments at the event.

The fair is sponsored by the Pre-Major Advising Services, Commonwealth College and Career Services.

Marxism conference hits UMass

By Kochnov Jean-Noel
Collegian Correspondent

Beginning tomorrow, the University of Massachusetts will host "Marxism and the World Stage," the fifth in a series of international gala celebrations presented by the editors of Rethinking Marxism, a journal of economics, culture and society.

Over the course of the three-day conference, the theoretical and political concerns of contemporary Marxist thought will be addressed in panel discussions, paper presentations, an art exhibit and a play.

The theme of the conference focuses on the implications, applications and shortcomings of Marxist and related thought in the contemporary world context.

"Marxism and the World Stage" will feature a theatrical production on Thursday at 7:30 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom. "Graves," a play inspired by John Steinbeck's "The Grapes of Wrath," which tells the tale of a family's struggles in dealing with the effects of corporate globalization in Hartford, Conn., will be preformed by the HartBeat Ensemble theater company of Hartford. An art exhibit entitled "Global Priority," showcasing artists' responses to globalization through architecture, photography, sculpture, video and websites will run at the Herter Art Gallery until Nov. 23.

Brought to campus with the aid of Richard Wolff, UMass economics professor and the editor of Rethinking Marxism, the event is expected to attract up to 1,000 attendees.

Participants in the conference include, Gayatri Chakravorty Spivak, best known for her essay "Can the Subaltern Speak," a critique of the post-colonial critic as an unwitting participant in imperialism; Richard Lichtman, author of "The Production of Desire: The Integration of Psychoanalysis into Marxist Theory," an analysis of the connections of Freudian and Marxian theory; and Okwui Enwezor, the founding editor of the Nka: Journal of Contemporary African Art.

Prior gala celebrations were held in 1989, 1992, 1996 and 2000. The last two conferences have been held at UMass.

Registration will be held in the Campus Center Auditorium tomorrow from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. The cost of attending the conference is $35 for students and other low-income attendees, and $90 dollars at regular price.

Funding for the conference was received in part from the UMass department of economics, the Political Economy Research Institute at UMass and the Amherst College department of English.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Jennifer Eastwood
MANAGING EDITOR Dan Lamothe
BUSINESS MANAGER Peter Foundos
PRODUCTION MANAGER Scott Pihl
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Nick Markantonatos
ADVERTISING MANAGER Sean Costello
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Shannon Farrington
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Glen Straub
COMICS EDITOR Molly Eggleston
EDITORIAL EDITOR Paige Cram
NEWS EDITOR Forrest Saltaker
PHOTO EDITOR Gerald H. Ling
SPORTS EDITOR Andrew Merritt
CLASSIFIED ADVERTISING Marty Pappas
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Julie Benschamp
FINANCE MANAGER Greg Stamm
HUMAN RESOURCE Sandra Marquez
SPECIAL ISSUES Betsy Feldman
ASSISTANT BUSINESS Ben Ratner
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING David Bor
ASSISTANT DISTRIBUTION Mark Lagatic
ASSISTANT FINANCE Richard Pacheco
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Liza Lynch
LAYOUT MANAGER Lindsay Clark
GRAPHICS ADVISOR Charlie Higgins
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Meghan Healy
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Cameron J. Woods
ASSISTANT NEWS Erika Lovley
ASSISTANT NEWS Morris Singer
ASSISTANT PHOTO Emilie Duggan
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Martelli
ASSISTANT SPORTS Robert McGovern

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE. BY 1892 THE COLLEGIAN WAS BORN. IN 1903, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1936. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN INDEPENDENT SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 5:30 P.M.

Weekly Calendar of events

November 5 - November 11 2003

Compiled by Sara-Megan Walsh

Today

Smith College — "Spoken, But Not Heard: Democracy, Feminism, and the Challenge of Gender-Based Censorship," a panel presentation, will begin at 7:30 p.m. in the Campus Center, room 208. Panelists include Dr. Gertrude Fester of the Commission on Gender Equality and Dr. Patricia MacFadden of the Five College Women's Studies Research Center.

UMass — The dramatic dance troupe Pilobolus will perform in conjunction with the St. Lawrence String Quartet in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall at 7:30 p.m. Ticket costs start at $7 for students, $15 for adults.

Tomorrow

Smith College — Daniel Ellsberg, author of "Secrets: a Memoir of Vietnam" and "The Pentagon Papers," will hold a lecture entitled "Secrets and Lies About Nuclear Threats, the War on Terror, and Iraq." The lecture will be held in the Leo Weinstein Auditorium at 7 p.m. A reception will follow in the Neilson Library browsing room.

Amherst College — Former Real World cast member and gay rights activist Danny Roberts will speak on "Real World, Real Life, Real Issues" at 8 p.m. in the Johnson Chapel.

UMass — The Student Government Association will host a Five-College Dance Party featuring DJ Menace in the Bluewall from 10 p.m. to 2 a.m. DJ Menace will be spinning reggae, hip-hop and top 40. Admission is free. Participants must be 18 years old to attend and 21 years old to drink alcohol.

Friday 7

Amherst College — David Sutphen, a legislative counsel member at the Recording Industry Association of America, will give a lecture entitled "KaZaa vs. I-Tunes: A Free-For-All Battle Over the Future of Digital Music." The lecture will run from 1 to 2:30 p.m. in Fayerweather 115. This lecture is the first in a series of lectures entitled "The Constitution Beyond Our Borders: Human Rights and the Imagining of America."

Mount Holyoke College — At 7:30 p.m. in Abbey Chapel, Mount Holyoke's Glee Club, Concert Choir, Chamber Singers and Vocal Jazz Ensemble will perform in the annual holiday concert, "Christmas Vespers."

Saturday 8

Mount Holyoke College — A Medieval and Renaissance Fair will be held in Chapin Auditorium from 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. Admission is free and events include fencing, dancing and various crafts.

UMass — The Talich String Quartet will perform Beethoven's Quartet Cycle in Bowker Auditorium at 8 p.m. The Talich String Quartet is known for being one of the world's finest string quartets. Tickets start at $7 for five-college students and $15 for adults.

Mount Holyoke College — The "Good To Go: Bashment party 2003" dance party featuring hip-hop, reggae, R&B and dance hall music will be held at the Betty Shabazz Cultural Center. The party will begin at 9 p.m. Admission is $3 before midnight, $4 after.

Sunday 9

Amherst College — At 1 p.m., Rev. Elizabeth M. Clement, Dean of Spiritual and Ethical Life at Deerfield Academy will lead The Hermenia T. Gardner Bi-Semester Worship Service in Chapin Chapel. The service is in African American tradition and will be followed by a fellowship dinner.

Smith College — Ben Folds will perform in concert at 8 p.m. in John M. Greene Hall. Duncan Sheik is the opening act. Tickets cost $17 for five-college students, $20 for adults and are available at: Ticketmaster, the Northampton Box Office, For the Record and various college locations.

Monday 10

Smith College — Chaim Cohen from the Ben-Gurion University in Beer-Sheva, Israel will present a lecture entitled "Organ Transplants and the Jewish Tradition: From the Prohibition of 'Double Murder' until the Commandment for 'Preservation of Life.' The lecture is at 4:30 p.m. in Seelye 106.

Smith College — At 7:30 p.m., Dr. Jane Mansbridge, Adams Professor of Political Leadership and Democratic Value at Harvard University, will give a lecture entitled "Everyday Feminism." She will discuss feminism's effects on policy issues. The lecture will be held in Seelye 106. Refreshments will be provided afterwards.

Tuesday 11

Amherst College — The Brentano String Quartet will premiere the String Quartet #4 by Eric Sawyer, an assistant professor in the music department. Professor Sawyer will introduce his composition. The performance will be held in Buckley Recital Hall at 4 p.m.

UMass — At 7 p.m., the Fine Arts Center's University Gallery will present a lecture entitled, "In Conversation: Joel Meyerowitz and James Young" based on the current exhibit "Aftermath: Images from Ground Zero." Meyerowitz was the only photographer who documented Sept. 11 with unlimited media access.

4 Iraqis injured

Continued from page 1

-Also in Mosul, insurgents using small arms fire and rocket-propelled grenades attacked a hotel housing American troops but caused no casualties, the military said. Three of the grenades hit the building and two others landed in the compound. Another RPG hit a Mosul police station overnight but caused no casualties.

-Insurgents ambushed a U.S. patrol yesterday with RPGs in the city of Khaldiyah, located west of Baghdad in the volatile "Sunni Triangle," witnesses said. There were no reports of casualties.

-Britain announced that a British Marine was killed by hostile fire on Friday in Iraq. It was the first fatality in more than a month among the 10,500 British service personnel in Iraq, most of them based in the south.

Illegal logging blamed in Indonesian flood disaster

By Chris Brummitt
Associated Press

BUKIT LAWANG, Indonesia (AP) — A devastating flood in Indonesia that left more than 200 people dead or missing has driven home a stark warning: rampant logging in Sumatra's forests is harming not only endangered animals but humans too.

Felled trees may have blocked a waterway high in the mountains, causing a huge flash flood when they collapsed Sunday night, a government spokesman said.

The wall of logs, boulders and mud crashed through the village of Bukit Lawang, leveling dozens of cheap inns and restaurants that served visitors to a nearby reserve for endangered orangutans. The hillsides that collapsed may have been weakened by the lack of trees, environmentalists said.

By late Tuesday, rescuers with chain saws and bulldozers had pulled out 85 corpses from debris piled two stories high. Five of the dead were foreigners — two Germans, two Austrians and a Singaporean. Officials said up to 123 people were missing and feared dead.

"They are either buried under the logs or swept down the river," provincial government spokesman Eddy Sofiyan told reporters.

On Wednesday, aid workers began distributing five tons of rice and hundreds of packets of instant noodles to survivors. Cabinet ministers including Senior Welfare Minister Yusuf Kalla arrived to survey the damage.

Americans Tyson Murphy, 27, and Tommy Connelly, 26, said they climbed trees to get away from the deluge and clung to the branches for 1 1/2 hours.

When the waters subsided, "we each kissed our respective trees and took a branch with us," said Connelly, of Ladera Ranch, Calif.

Rescuers pulled them and seven other foreigners across the river to safety using a climbing harness and a rope.

"It's one of those things you think will never happen to you," said Murphy, of Laguna Beach, Calif., sporting dreadlocks and a Bob Marley T-shirt. "I just said a couple of prayers."

The village mosque became a makeshift morgue. Volunteers washed the corpses and said prayers according to Muslim tradition.

As rescue teams worked, villagers tried to salvage their belongings from wrecked houses.

Holding a white T-shirt belonging to his 3-year-old daughter, who drowned, Muhammad Yusuf, a tourist guide, sobbed: "She used to wear this when she rode her bicycle. I've lost everything."

The flood follows a spate of disasters that environmentalists blame on the illegal cutting of trees in Indonesia, a sprawling archipelago with 210 million inhabitants.

Unchecked logging disrupts the natural absorption and flow of rainwater from the highlands, triggering floods and landslides that sweep into the valleys.

Committee cleans up local rivers

By Gabriel Leiner
Collegian Correspondent

The Connecticut River Clean-Up Committee and Pioneer Valley Planning Commission have brought to completion the Ames Avenue and Grape Street sewer separation project in Chicopee, the first of many projects that will cut down on sewage overflow to the Connecticut and Chicopee Rivers.

According to the PVPC the separation will eliminate 100,000 gallons of combined sewer overflows per year.

"Substantial progress has been made in improving water quality in the Connecticut River," said Stanley Kulig, a CRCC Chairman. "The CRCC has received significant federal appropriations for five consecutive years and we hope this pattern continues."

In towns with old sewer systems such as Chicopee, when rainfall is heavy enough, catch-basins overflow and excess water is diverted through pipes to larger bodies of water. Some pipes that channel rainwater outward are adjacent to normal sewage pipes. Because of this, rainfall can flood pipes and in the process draw sewage along as it is sent to other bodies of water. This type of pollution is CSO.

The Massachusetts Department of Environmental Protection reported that about 1.8 billion gallons of CSO are discharged annually into the Connecticut River from 78 different discharge pipes. According to the PVPC, CSO currently severely limits recreational activities like fishing and swimming, has led to development of skin rashes, respiratory, eye and ear infections, and has killed wildlife around the river.

A CSO fact sheet released by the PVPC in 1997 warned the public to stay out of some areas of the Connecticut River for 48 hours after a heavy rain, for fear of sewage overflow.

Along with the clean up of the Connecticut and Chicopee Rivers, the city of Chicopee also has plans to extend the Connecticut Riverwalk, the existing bike and walking path along the Connecticut River, to Nash Field in Chicopee near the Chicopee Street Bridge. The Pioneer Valley Transportation Improvement Program has slated the Riverwalk extension as part of fiscal year costs from 2004 to 2007 with the total funds as slightly less than $2 million.

The long-term recreational gains and improvement in living conditions from the investment of cleaning up CSO and extending the Riverwalk to Chicopee may warrant the price and the wait.

Chicopee resident Allen Patterson said he is not happy having a sewage reconstruction hole in a residential part of Chicopee, but realizes that it is only a temporary inconvenience.

"Although it is a little frightening to have an open hole with sewer pipes near children, it's a small price to pay to have a cleaner environment for our children's children," he said.

"If all goes well, the historic, picturesque two-and-a-half-mile Chicopee Spur will become a Riverwalk and bikeway bringing people back to the river," said Stephen R. Jendrysik, a Chicopee historian and a history teacher at Chicopee Comprehensive High School. "The trail will increase the understanding of the role of the river in the city's history while providing healthy exercise and recreation."

The project is also aimed to help community growth in Chicopee. "More people will be able to boat, fish, and picnic in more areas along the river," said Christopher Curtis, a PVPC planner.

While the Ames Street project only fractionally improves CSO overflow, the CRCC is currently working to better these conditions with a series of CSO elimination projects costing $4.3 million, funded by a State Revolving Fund secured by the City of Chicopee and through CRCC funds.

The CRCC was established in 1993 by an intergovernmental compact among Chicopee, Holyoke, Ludlow, South Hadley and Springfield and in conjunction with the PVPC.

Start here.
Are you ready for the challenge?
UMassAmherst
Continued Education
www.umass.edu/start • (413) 545-2414

Smith College Rec Council presents
Ben Folds
with Duncan Sheik
John M. Greene Hall
Smith College
Sunday November 9th
8pm, Doors at 7pm
$17 5-College Students w. Valid ID
Outlets: Tix Unlimited, Umass Keefe Campus Center, rm 107, Amherst College
$20 General Public
For the Record, Amherst
(5-College also available)
Northampton Box Office
Ticketmaster

NEED HELP FINDING A MAJOR?
Come to the MAJORS FAIR!
Wednesday, November 5, 2003
6:00 - 8:00 p.m.
Student Union Ballroom
Don't miss this unique opportunity to explore the impressive range of majors & resources available at UMASS; representatives from more than 70 departments & programs in one location.
Sponsored by Commonwealth College, Pre-Major Advising Services, & Career Services.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 5, 2003 EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Tuition increases: UMass is not alone

By now, tuition increases at the University of Massachusetts are old news. Everyone who attends UMass can feel recent increases tugging at their empty pockets, and it's easy to point the finger at the Massachusetts state government and say that they are to blame for our troubles. Although this is partly true, it's not the whole story. We, at UMass, are not the only ones becoming broke. The raising of tuition and fees at higher education facilities is an epidemic that is sweeping the country, and most severely, the Northeast.

Last month, the College Board revealed that this past year there was a 9.8 percent increase in the cost of attending public schools, with private schools trailing at a mere 6.7 percent. The higher education community has not seen increases this big in 30 years. Even if the majority of UMass' financial difficulty comes from budget cuts year after year, numbers such as those seem to say that we would be in the same situation even if we had some help from the state.

How can it be that the cost of higher education is rising so drastically? Perhaps it is because there are more students attending college now than ever before, and admission spots are in high demand. That should be regarded as a positive statement about our education system. Instead, it is being looked at as an opportunity for schools to milk students for all they are worth. More competition for spots makes colleges and universities, both public and private, think they have the right to charge an arm and a leg for an education. In some cases, it is less expensive to buy a house than to attend four years of college.

The College Board also recently compiled a list of the top ten most expensive colleges and universities in the country, and of course, they are all in the Northeast. That is no surprise, considering the Northeast is the most densely populated part of the country, as well as the most popular area to attend college. Students from all over the country come to school in the Northeast, and the majority of students from this part of the country seem to stay here. This presents even tougher competition, so naturally our schools are among the most expensive.

But what is there to be done about this? Discouraging more people from attending college is certainly not a solution to the problem of rising costs. Our country prides itself on the level of education of its public, which seems only to be increasing. However, if something isn't done soon, cost of higher education may reach a point where that alone will discourage people from attending. Do we, as a nation, really want to go back to a time when only people who really "need" to go to college are able to? It should be the duty of our government to provide a full education to anyone who wants it, and it's time for someone to step in, because enough it enough.

The cost of higher education is already staggering and it will only continue to rise until someone does something about it. If these schools need more support from the government in order to keep costs down, then it should be the number one priority of our politicians. Nothing is more important than educating the people who will control the future of our country.

Information from CNN.com was used in this article.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

Critical decision time

Yousef Munayyer

The past 10 days in Iraq have proved to be the bloodiest we have seen in recent months. After a day filled with bombings and an attack on a Chinook helicopter, several are dead and more are injured. It has come to a point where the news stories about the deaths of one or two American soldiers are not even making the front page anymore. That has become too commonplace.

No one has been spared in these attacks. Iraqis have been killed, particularly newly established Iraqi police who are cooperating with American efforts. The United Nations building was bombed as well. Within days of announcing that they would send support to Iraq, Turkey's embassy was bombed as well. These attacks are directed at one thing, the presences of any non-Iraqi established government.

As things look more and more bleak, the rhetoric from the Defense Department hasn't changed. Donald Rumsfeld still answers "no comment" to the tough questions, and Paul Wolfowitz continues to make the case that this was humanitarian intervention. He himself was the target of an attack earlier last week when rockets were fired into the hotel where he was staying.

We have come to a point where a vital decision must be made. The American public can no longer be lied to. I do not expect the Defense Department ideologues to tell us what the real intentions behind this war are. There a million dead in Rwanda who turn in their graves when this war is justified as humanitarian intervention. If you really want to believe that this was about terrorism, or weapons of mass destruction, I can't help you. There has been no evidence of either. There has been evidence, however, of about $5 trillion worth of oil to be won.

As I was saying, I don't expect the administration to tell the public the motive behind this war. There is now another important issue that the administration must be candid about. How long will we be in Iraq, especially if things get continually worse? President Bush likes to say that we will be there for however long it takes. How long is that? Forever? If Vietnam has taught us anything, it's that forever is a long time.

The recent Madrid Conference to raise funds for finishing the job in Iraq was a failure. Most of the European powers pledged no new dollars to the effort. Though many may place the blame for this squarely on "selfish" old Europe, much of the blame should be placed on the complete lack of diplomacy after the end of "major combat."

There is one very clear truth. The United States is doing this almost completely alone. We need to acknowledge this and be prepared for what it means because with the way things are going so far we could be there alone for a long time.

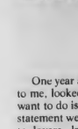
That's why we are at a critical junction in this situation. Now more than ever is the crucial point when the United States has to reach out to the international community and be prepared to put Iraq under the control of a more broad coalition.

We have to ask ourselves how long we are prepared to read the headlines about dead soldiers thousands of miles away.

We have to ask ourselves how long we are prepared to read the headlines about dead soldiers thousands of miles away. Another month? A year? Five years?

We need candid leadership from today forward, and this is something that has been lacking for a long time. The President of the United States has to address the nation and say that this is going to be a long fight and many more will die before we see real progress. The president and his administration have to be held accountable for the decisions they have made. The least they can do is tell the public the truth about how they see the future. I'm sure they don't see a pretty picture. Recently, the most popular film in the Pentagon his been "The Battle of Algiers." For those who are not familiar with this film, it is a portrayal of the Algerian resistance movement against French colonialism in the 1950s and '60s.

General Tommy Franks commented last March saying, "We don't do body counts." This now infamous comment, originating in the inaccurate and deceptive body counts that came out during the Vietnam era, has become the policy with Iraq. However, we are not told about the Iraqi death toll, which is surely horrendous, and little is being done about the American death toll which rises almost every day.



Leadership has been truly lacking. Former Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott this past week said, "If we have to, we just mow the whole place down, see what happens." Aren't you glad you can always count on Senator Lott for words of wisdom?

As it gets worse, the public pressure for answers will grow. And 100 years from now history teachers around the world will be asking students to write essays explaining why it took the U.S. so long to realize they could not go it alone. We have to act now so that the question on the tongues of America's youth in the future will not be: Why did we wait so long?

The longer this goes on, the more it will become apparent that the administration doesn't have an answer. With every resistance attack and soldier death, the situation seems exceedingly harder to get out of. Sure, no one wants to relate this to Vietnam. That's understandable because Vietnam may be the biggest mistake this nation has ever made. Maybe it isn't Vietnam yet, but should we wait for that? We are supposed to look at history to learn from our mistakes, not repeat them again.

Yousef Munayyer is a Collegian columnist.

Philia, meet Eros

S.J. Port

One year ago, a friend sat next to me, looked up and said, "All I want to do is kiss you." With that statement we moved from friends to lovers. In the year that has transpired, I've lost my friend, my lover, and the deep satisfying human connection found in both.

The vulnerability of that union is such that when the relationship becomes too painful, the liability too great, we grow defenses or we grow numb — either way, the risk remains that returning to the friendship, and leaving the romance behind will not be possible.

The ancient Greeks believed in two types of love: Philia, the love between friends, or non-erotic love, and Eros, romantic or erotic love. This is far too simple: in love, the best unions are fueled by both Philia and Eros. Uma Thurman was once quoted as saying that you should marry "your best friend — who you want to f— all the time." How would she explain that to the Greeks?

Lord Byron wrote, "Friendship is Love without his wings." This is perhaps more applicable.

I have been told that, "true friends grow older, but if you once possessed true friendship, they will always remain your friends no matter what happens in your life or theirs." The question remains, however, can you return to Philia after knowing Eros? Although Philia alone carries that human bond we all require, how can it be satisfying enough for two who have shared the complete intercourse of love that included Philia and Eros?

Kahlil Gibran writes this of love in his book "The Prophet." "Love gives naught but itself and takes naught but from itself. Love possesses not, nor would it be possessed, for love is sufficient unto love. Love has no other desire but to fulfill itself."

One must then ask, when does love begin to possess those in love? How, in such a vortex of aching vulnerability can the individual lover maintain his identity beyond that of the union? Love may not possess, but it does force the relinquishment of control to a certain point, a point that may make some uncomfortable and leave others individuality feeling swallowed.

Love is intrinsic to human nature. Although happiness is what Aristotle aptly determined as the end-all greatest good of man, love is what drives us to happiness. Love of community, of a subject, an instrument, a profession, or most often, a person.

We want, as humans, to be wanted, loved, cared for, connected. E.M. Forster's moral dictum "Only connect," gives sustenance, validating our innate need for relation. It is connection and communication that unite us in the comparison of experiences that educate, enlighten, enrage and engage mankind. Our language and our society are built upon the premise, the verity, that man needs other men, that there is value in unity — and therefore in love.

Developing a friendship into romance is almost like having one of your favorite novels turned into a film.

That said, each member of a community, or of a pair, must be an individual in her own right to compliment the unity, to give back to that which she is supported by. Two individuals have much more to say and give to one another than a pair of lovers so entwined that they cannot see themselves without seeing the other. Two solid partners with defined individualities will have a much more edifying relationship. There is truth to be found in the idea that proximity can kill.

It is not, really, about absence or presence, but about a person's identity and the strength of that identity when merged through love with another's identity.

It is a balance, between finding oneself and realizing one's self in relation to the other. Of course — life is a balancing act.

The opposite of love, of any kind, is loneliness.

Professor Nick Bromell writes, "Human connection without transcendence (if there has ever been such a thing) does not satisfy. Loneliness is also cosmic loneliness. It is not just from ourselves and our culture that we feel alienated, but from Being." In his book "Tomorrow Never Knows," Bromell credits the Beatles with instructing his education on love and its importance in life. "The simple message that love is the answer to loneliness, that connection is the antidote to unreality. I heard again [in the Beatles' lyrics] the only truth I have ever believed, the only gospel that has ever broken through my shell of cynicism and my distrust of hope."

Developing a friendship into romance is almost like having one or your favorite novels turned into a film — you're just not sure it will be the same, or as good, and you don't want to ruin what you already have — and most importantly, you're not sure you'll enjoy your novel again after having seen the film.

Then again, love you find with a friend could resonate through you as James Joyce's words have the power to do. "My body was like a harp and her words and gestures were like fingers running upon the wires." And, think of Saul Williams' poem, "My Love," as it concludes, appropriately, "How do I love thee? Imagine."

S.J. Port is a Collegian Columnist.

Dermatology nightmare

Thomas Naughton

I am rather fair-skinned, and I have one or two birthmarks that are coffee colored — one on my hand that my mom says is "the map of Ireland" and another one on my foot that I think is the map of some piece of feces. When I was young, a pediatrician said that when I turned 20 I should have my café-au-lait birthmarks checked out, so I figured I should do that this summer, being of age.

I had made an appointment with the dermatologist in my area for the next available time slot, which was five months from the time I was calling in late winter.

"Perfect," I thought, "I can get my birthmarks checked in July, and if I die of skin cancer before then, the dog can have my guitar and I have nothing to worry about."

I felt very adult, making my own dermatology appointment. My adult feeling slipped away later on however, thanks to the Discovery Health Channel and a program on Neurocysticfibro-matosis, which featured a sufferer who had a 200-pound tumor removed from her mid-section.

I had made an appointment ... for the next available time slot, which was five months from the time I was calling.

Neurocysticfibromatosis is a genetic ailment that causes tumors to grow on the body. Many are small and benign, but the aforementioned woman's 200-pound tumor was eating away at her body and nearly killed her. Some signs of the disease are multiple café-au-lait birthmarks and tumors under the skin.

Coming from a long line of hypochondriacs, I immediately assumed that I, because of my one or two marks, was now growing a 200-pound tumor. I was very anxious to see the dermatologist. I didn't seriously think I was growing a tumor, but the thought remained in the back of my mind and tugged on my nerves every now and then. Then July rolled around and with it, my appointment. I was cool, calm and collected.

That all changed when I met Donna (name changed). Donna is a breed of secretary that I like to call "M.D. Secretaries" — secretaries who think they should dole out medical advice to patients although they possess no doctorate of any kind. I do not hate these people; they are only trying to help. But do I want them to give me medical advice? No. I usually just smile while they advise me before or after my appointment, silently thinking "shut up." However, I hated Donna at first sight. She was very condescending and had a terrible Massachusetts accent. Donna looked at me superciliously and said, "Can I help you?" I told her I was there for an appointment.

"Do you have your insurance card?" Donna asked with a fake smile, revealing her horribly decayed and broken front teeth. When Donna mentioned my insurance card, I shuddered remembering that my wallet was stolen from my dressing room and with it, my insurance card.

"Well, the doctor can't see you if you don't have your insurance card," Donna said with a slight tinge of glee.

I laughed at her. She didn't laugh. After a pause of awkwardness I asked Donna if there was a way I could give her the information when I got home. She said no, with her jagged grin showing, and motioned for the person behind me to step up to the window.

"No, I'm not done," I said ferociously to the person behind me, and I glared at Donna. The war had begun. "Donna, its not like I'm stealing soda. I can get you the information later. I have waited five months for this appointment."

She told me I'd have to reschedule. I wanted to grab her through the window by her teddy-bear-print scrubs and throttle her, but I didn't.

"I am an adult," I thought, "Adults don't throttle." I asked Donna to call my mom at work to get her insurance information. She looked at me again in that cock-eyed supercilious way. "JUST DO IT, DONNA," I snarled. She sighed over-vigorously and dialed, while in my mind, I screamed the F-word at her over and over again.

My mother was, of course, out of the office, which delighted Donna who told me that she "couldn't be calling around all day for my card." I was livid. I wanted to scream at her. Didn't she understand?! This appointment was important. What if I had neurocysticfibromatosis? I could grow a 200-pound tumor that would surely kill me, and the warning signs wouldn't be caught in time because I didn't have my insurance card at precisely 1:15 p.m. for Donna to examine closely.

I looked at her with daggers protruding from my eyes and said, "Donna, you need to change one of two things within the next 30 seconds. Your attitude or your teeth, and given the time constraint, I hope its your attitude."

She asked if I wanted to see her supervisor, which enraged me, because I'm supposed to demand to see her supervisor. She is not supposed to offer; stupid Donna took away my right to "demand heroically." I screamed at her supervisor who hurriedly gave my file to the doctor. The doctor walked into the examining room, looked for five seconds at my birthmarks, said, "These are nothing" and was gone. After a pregnant pause of disbelief, I bolted from the office, wishing that I had grown a 200-pound tumor that I could cut off to leave on their stoop to even the score.

Thomas Naughton is a Collegian columnist

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 5, 2003 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Cox causes stir with new WE show

By Beth Harris
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Courteney Cox likes her living space lean and clean. David Arquette revels in collecting everything from miniature pigs to large shoes to nesting dolls, which makes for a lot of clutter.

No wonder Arquette felt more comfortable at Cox's house when they began dating. She had food in the refrigerator. He had old pizza boxes and people hanging out watching TV.

"It was unbelievable," Cox said, describing Arquette's bachelor pad. "There were people on the couch that I don't even know if he knew. It was just stickers and posters and things."

Moving in together provided Cox with a challenge: how to blend her refined sensibilities with Arquette's outrageous taste and vast collection of tchotchkes.

"You've got to get creative when you're married to David," Cox said. "I incorporated some things that my mother couldn't believe, like a woman in bondage with a glass table on her back. It made my house a lot more fun and happy and colorful."

And their real-life decorating dilemma inspired the home design series "Mix It Up," airing Wednesdays at 8 p.m. EST on WE: Women's Entertainment cable channel.

Design and decorating are longtime passions for Cox, who's in her 10th and final season on NBC's "Friends."

Cox, 39, and Arquette, 32, met when they co-starred in the "Scream" movies. They've been married four years.

The couple are executive producers of the 30-minute show that follows two roommates who are at odds stylistically. In each episode, an interior designer is given $2,500 and three days to transform one room into a living space that is compatible for both individuals.

Along for the upheaval are hosts Milos Milicevic and Thea Mann, movers, a painter and a carpenter. Friends and family of the roommates help decide which items get thrown in the "Gotta Go" bucket.

Cox and Arquette work behind the scenes. She is the design consultant and he oversees the music, including helping create the show's funky theme song.

"Hopefully, this show speaks for itself without me or David being on camera," Cox said.

That doesn't mean Cox is opposed to getting dirty.

"Courteney is on her hands and knees and she's rewiring people's stereos and she's wiping down walls and she's touching up with paint," Arquette said.

"That's the most fun," said Cox, who would like to work as the designer on an episode.

Cox describes "Mix It Up" as a cross between the Osbournes meet Martha Stewart with a dash of Dr. Phil thrown in.

"We really focus on the conflict in the show," Arquette said. "People come to us because they have a problem with their home and they don't feel comfortable in it, and they don't feel represented. We try to fix it, and we come in and try to sort of find the fun in it."

"Mix It Up" enters a cluttered landscape of home design shows, where rooms, backyards and gardens are being redone across America.

"The appeal of this show is it's going to make you laugh, the music's great, we teach you how to accomplish the goal," Cox said. "I cry when the people come in. It's the most exciting thing to see their reactions."

The actress has indulged her passions through buying and selling seven houses in 10 years. She's known to haunt flea markets at 6 a.m. in search of a particular furniture style.

"Every time I move, I always say, 'This is it. This is so hard. I'm exhausted,'" Cox said. "Then one week later, when everything's put away and I'm living there, I want to do it again. I love change."

COURTESY MUCHATV.COM

Courteney Cox

Ryan 'In The Cut' and the buff

Thriller shows plenty of skin, but is thin on content

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

Meg Ryan gets naked in Jane Campion's new thriller "In The Cut" — I mean she really gets stark raving nude. She is far from the perky, button-nosed romantic comedy princess that so many viewers are accustomed to seeing her as; there will be no Tom Hanks sweeping her off her feet with a dozen roses. Ryan's new reinvention as a brazen sex queen as earned many a notice amongst the press — hardly an article goes by without mentioning that Ryan is nude and having a lot of sex in the movie — yet no one bothers to mention the other major component of her performance.

'In The Cut'
Directed by Jane Campion
Starring Meg Ryan, Mark Ruffalo
Screen Gems
Rated R
119 mins.
Grade: F

That is the fact the Ryan seems to spend the entirety of the movie in a mopey, drugged-out daze. Ryan drifts through as if she's in a foggy haze, never even registering that she's stuck in an inert and ludicrous thriller. Her face is benumbed, her emotions are stunted — even her body language seems oddly languorous and methodical. She's acting in a vacuum, as a vacuum — sucking every bit of life out of the film.

If Ryan seems to be on Quaaludes, so does the movie. This languid, torpid movie is slow, dull and unbearably boring. A long, plodding slog through heavy-handed symbolism that all but beats itself over the head of the viewer, the movie is an endless loop of torture that seems to just get longer with every second that ticks away from the clock.

"In The Cut" is an erotic thriller that is noticeably devoid of eroticism and thrills. Since it is neither sexy nor scary, it has no reason to be and so exists as a monument to the mighty of self-importance of those behind this conceited crock. Campion seems to want to make a highly sexualized suspense story and a movie that transcends the limitations of her chosen genre. But she has no respect for the genre and her disdain and pompous narcissism leads to a movie that is nothing more than a high-toned arthouse version of the softcore schlock that often plays on late-night Cinemax.

This is "The Hulk" of soft-core porn — a movie that takes a limited genre and tries, through literary and cinematic pretension, to make it mean something ...only to fail utterly and miserably. This isn't art, but gassy and affected crap, and "In The Cut" is even more morose and dreadful than Ang Lee's lugubrious "Hulk." The movie plays like it is torn between down and dirty lurid thrills — there are dismembered corpses and naked entwined limbs — and being a doctoral thesis on feminist sexual theory. "In The Cut" ends up entombed in its airless "gravity."

Ryan plays Frannie Avery, a New York English teacher who falls into a passionate affair with Malloy (Mark Ruffalo), a police detective investigating the brutal murder of a young woman whose head was found beneath Frannie's apartment window. Frannie is a lover of slang and a collector of words, and her interest is piqued when Malloy uses the term "de-articulated" to describe the state of the victim.

Further intriguing Frannie is the fact that Malloy is the kind of man who can use a crude and vulgar line on a girl and still be able to sweep her off her feet; he knows how to walk the line between lewdness and charm.

Frannie and Malloy fall into bed and soon Frannie begins to suspect that Malloy is the killer prowling the city streets. (He has the same tattoo as the faceless man whom Frannie saw getting fellatio in the shadowy corners of a bar; the victim has the same blue fingernails as the woman performing her, uh, art.) But is Malloy the killer? Or is it his obnoxious partner (Nick Damici), Frannie's hot-tempered black student (Sharrieff Pugh) or her creepy, obsessive ex-boyfriend (Kevin Bacon, strangely — and wisely — going unbilled.)

"In The Cut," which was adapted from the novel by Susannah Moore, offers a startlingly shallow pool of potential victims, allowing for an easier (too easy) chance at guessing the identity of the killer. In fact, "In the Cut" offers up a city that is empty of people; the bustling metropolis of New York City has been turned alien and lifeless. It's the perfect hollow setting for a movie that is deadened from the opening credits onward.

Dion Beebe's cinematography goes for a dreamy, wavering feel, but the jostling, restless camerawork is in desperate need of Dramamine. The camera never ceases to stop moving, drunkenly hobbling around without a steady gaze, and the edges blur and fuzz and grow indistinct. It's like watching the movie through a lens smeared in jelly. Obviously, Campion and Beebe were going for an effect reminiscent of the heroine's tremulous, unsteady nature, but they just create the atmosphere of an upset stomach.

Frannie likes to spend her time on the subway reading little snippets of poetry-painted posters decorating the walls. It's the kind of two-ton symbolism that helps to crush the air out of the movie. Campion suffocates the viewer with her so-called "meaningfulness," the way that her variation on the sex thriller is meant to say something deep and significant. But there's no center to her movie and "In the Cut" comes across as a dour, misguided and portentous bore. Ryan is far too glum and maddeningly passive to make for a sympathetic heroine — face it, this limp noodle is an annoying doormat — and Ruffalo fails to give his character any shading or interest; Malloy comes off as creepy even when he's meant to be charming. This pathetic attempt at an erotic thriller is as erotic as a cold shower.

Album brings down the 'Day'

New CD brings frown to a happy genre

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

Howie Day is the rain cloud to John Mayer's clear blue skies. Even when he's singing about being troubled, Mayer sounds just a shade too smooth and upbeat – it's as if he doesn't want himself to become too ruffled by his music.

Mayer's songs tend to drift toward the sunnier side of things, all bubbly pop and little real angst. Day, on the other hand, sounds as if he's perpetually ruing over something in his mind. Mayer's the guy at the bar strumming a guitar and poaching the whole sensitive act to pick up girls. Day is the wounded soul in the corner, scribbling down lyrics in a beat up notebook while the girls swoon over the cocky guy singing at the bar.

Howie Day
'Stop All The World Now' Epic

Day's debut, "Australia" never met with much commercial success, but it did garner much popularity among the college crowd, with audiences lined up at performance to watch Day play live, often backed only with a looping system he devised for himself.

"Stop All the World Now" is Day's second bid to one-up the John Mayers of the world, replacing the happy-go-lucky singer/songwriter-isms with slightly more earnest and austere material. At times the material is very good, far more promising and forceful than the relatively weak pabulum that makes up Mayer's "Heavier Things." At other times, the songs sound generic and indistinct — rote, by-the-numbers demonstrations of guy-with-a-guitar sensitivity.

Like on "Australia," the songs up front are stronger than the ones at the end of an album. Day can create decent songs, but he can't sustain the energy for an entire album. The albums end up sputtering and flaming out the closer to the end they get. "Stop" begins to drift at about the halfway point and only spike during "She Says" a revamped version of a song off "Australia."

"She Says" is a tender acoustic number on "Australia," but placed here — just before the album grows soupier and more forgettable — the song becomes punchier, buoyed by electronic effects and drum beats. In fact, much of the album is advanced by the addition of organs, Wurlitzers, Mellotron and the like.

The best songs kick off the album — songs like the chugging "Perfect Time of Day" and the tender, gorgeous ballad "Collide." The aptly titled "Sunday Morning Song" has a jaunty weekend bounce — it's the kind of mellow, even-tempoed song that would suit a lazy Sunday morning lolling about doing nothing. It blithely, breezily lopes along on a light-footed beat.

It's when the daytime-soap jingle opens "I'll Take You On" that "Stop" stumbles. Except for the gently muscular jangle of "She Says," the songs aren't as memorable as the opening numbers. They're filler, placed one in a row and kill the momentum of "Stop." They come off as templates for the folky singer genre. Still what's good is so good that the flaws can be forgiven. Now, if only Day can make an album that can steer the entire course rather than drift into the ether halfway through.

COURTESY WTFSFM.COM

Howie Day brings a lamenting sound to the otherwise upbeat branch of the rock genre.

All the Crow you could ask for

By Cameron J. Woods
Collegian Staff

Finally, every single radio smash and all around great song from everyone's favorite 40-something, svelte siren are on one compact disc.

The tracks on "The Very Best of Sheryl Crow" are not arranged by their chronology in so much as they are ordered by, more or less a descending array – from all around feel good happy works like, "All I Wanna Do" to the deep and soulful tracks including, "I Shall Believe" and "The First Cut Is The Deepest."

Sheryl Crow
'The Very Best of Sheryl Crow'
A&M

Even though the majority of the tracks on this CD are nearly a decade old they have lost none of their original luster. Crow's soft yet strong country tinged vocals and skillful guitar work power this compilation above and beyond what could be expected of a mix disc.

For those who are tired of shuffling between five or six different CDs to hear all your favorite Crow songs, or those who can't afford a portable MP3 player to take that "legal" playlist off of your computer, this album is perfect.

It is a great mix of her extremely country sounding work as well as her more pop/rock and American Rock pieces. If you're one of the masses that says that you only like a few of Crow's songs, then this disc is right up your alley. The only possible flaw to the album maybe the targeting of part-time fans. Though they are all great songs, long-time Crow followers may feel a bit let down by the many songs that did not make the heavy rotation lists.

As a solo artist Crow has the power to move listeners to tears or out of their seats, depending on her intention. Though predominantly a soloist, Crow is no stranger to collaboration — she has performed with the likes of Sting, Rod Stewart, Stevie Wonder, Foreigner, Joe Cocker, Sinead O'Connor, Michael Jackson and Don Henley.

Her productions in the mid '90s and through to today not only have kept up with the happening music, but sometimes she has managed to strike a vein of pure originality that triggers a shift in the contemporary scene. She has time and time again changed what could be heard on a typical classicist rock album. Her influence has spread even to bands beyond the classic rock and country genres. All of this influence makes Crow one of the most dependable stars of our time, and she is showing no signs of relinquishing her hard-earned success in the new millennium.

Sheryl Suzanna Crow was born Feb. 11, 1962, in Kennett, Mont. Her parents were swing orchestra performers, her father played trumpet and her mother was a singer; her mother also was a piano teacher, and made all of her daughters learn the instrument starting in grade school. Crow wrote her first song at age the age of 13, and attended the University of Missouri with a major in music, where she also played keyboard in a band called Cashmere. After graduating, she spent her time being a music teacher, playing and singing in a number of bands and she made her money by making advertising jingles.

In 1986, Crow was ready to test her wings, so she moved to Los Angeles to see what the music business had for her. She was able to land some more jingle-singing assignments, and got her first big break when she successfully auditioned to be a backup singer on Michael Jackson's international "Bad Tour."

From a child of a musical family in Montana to jingle writing, to a college graduate with a dream and ultimately to the musical force that she is today; Sheryl Crow has walked a long road to bring listeners her music. And we are all the better for it.

Information from Sheryl Crow's IMG Biography written by Steve Huey was used in this article.

COURTESY A&M

For over a decade, Sheryl Crow has been pumping out great music.

Pop-punk band fails to explode with originality

COURTESY ELEKTRA

Lucky Boys Confusion try to make a name for themselves in a crowded genre, but lack the needed originality to connect.

By Mike Travis
Collegian Staff

With their sophomore effort "Commitment," Lucky Boys Confusion, a very commercial pop-punk band from Chicago, Ill. delivers a paint-by-numbers pop-punk sound.

In the two and a half years since their Elektra debut "Throwing the Game," the toils of life on the road have seasoned the band — Stubby Pandav (frontman/singer/songwriter), Adam Krier (guitar/vocals/co-songwriter), Joe Sell (guitar), Jason Schultejann (bass), and Ryan Fergus (drums).

Lucky Boys Confusion
'Commitment'
Elektra

A run of 250 shows in 2001 and hundreds more in the subsequent years seems to have made the band grow up a lot since their debut album. The songs on 2001's album were inspiring enough to catch the ear of Sublime's Michael "Miguel" Happoldt, who signed on earlier this year to produce "Commitment."

"Sure, the songs are catchy and well-produced, but 'Commitment' isn't anything new — even for people like me who are really into the genre," said Bill Knaus, a 20-year-old sophomore at UMass.

While there is some evidence of songwriting growth in "Commitment," overall the band's sound is nothing noticeably different than other radio bands like New Found Glory or Good Charlotte. But there is definitely some potential for growth for the band. "The songs get stuck in your head. "I like [the songs] "Broken" and "Closer to Our Graves," said Knaus.

Sadly, the message of the band just isn't there. The lyrics, and songs, are easily forgotten ("I don't want to stay here and say I'm sorry, I just want to drink beer and play Atari"). The band sings themes of well-trodden trails: suburban boredom ("Hey Driver," "Atari."), growing up ("Closer to Our Graves," "You Weren't There"), and relationships ("Beware," "Sunday Afternoon").

Overall, the band follows the safe path of most pop-punk bands. The title track, "Commitment," deals with the pressures and scrutiny of being a major label band. One of the band's most powerful messages deals with lead singer Stubby's question of religion in "Something to Believe."

Throughout the album, Stubby's vocals are pretty solid, but just can't muster the excitement and honesty of other singers delivering similar sounds. The variety songs on the album are unconvincing. "Mr. Wilmington's" classic rock feel reminds one of a weak Simon and Garfunkel's "Mrs. Robinson," said Knaus. "Sunday Afternoon" attempts the whole reggae/ska feel of bands like Sublime and No Doubt, but again, doesn't stand out.

All in all, Lucky Boys Confusion's "Commitment" is a mediocre disc for fans of the pop-punk genre. It delivers the catchy choruses, pulsing guitars and booming drums to quench the thirst of pop-punkers. However, the album is easily forgettable and no better than other banzds in the genre. "Lucky Boys Confusion is a band with little reputation amongst more mature punk fans," said Knaus. The band delivers the by-the-books pop-punk sound. But if you're not into that sound, this CD will not get your attention. Oh well, better luck next album.

www.dailycollegian.com

New home for contemporary artists

A different art gallery in the works for those with new tastes

By Steve LeBlanc
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) — If all goes as planned, sometime next spring this city which nicknamed itself the "Hub" of all things cultural will break ground on its first new art museum in a century.

The Institute of Contemporary Art — long a funky outpost in Boston's small, staid constellation of art museums — is scheduled to throw open the doors of sparkling new, four-story museum on the city's waterfront in 2006, heralding what it hopes is a new era of support for cutting-edge arts.

The 62,000-square-foot building is designed to triple the space of the museum's current lodgings and will include a 300-seat theater, an open grandstand facing the water and a massive, cantilevered glass-skinned exhibition space.

A 165-square-foot glass elevator with views of the water will shuttle visitors from floor to floor. The building will also allow the museum for the first time to create a permanent collection, something it had been prevented from doing because of lack of space.

The last time Boston celebrated the opening of a new art museum was when the Museum of Fine Arts moved from Copley Square into its current location in the Fenway neighborhood of the city in 1909.

The new structure is also a kind of coming-out party for the ICA, which spent its first 40 years hopscotching around downtown Boston before landing a permanent home in the quirky confines of a former police station in the city's Back Bay neighborhood.

During its life, the museum, established in 1936, has welcomed artists from around Boston and the world dedicated to pushing the limits of arts, politics and culture. It was among the earliest to showcase artists such as Robert Rauschenberg, Andy Warhol, Cindy Sherman, Egon Schiele and Thomas Struth.

More recently, the ICA has offered the city itself as a landscape for artists working on site-specific exhibits. In 1998, the museum hosted a work that projected taped interviews of mothers of murdered children from the city's Charlestown neighborhood onto the 221-foot Bunker Hill monument.

"Our strength and proven track record is being able to expose artists before they really enter the canon," ICA Director Jill Medvedow said. "The ICA has earned its place in the city and needs a building as bold and beautiful as the work it has done for the past 70 years."

The building is the brainchild of the husband-and-wife design team of Elizabeth Diller and Ricardo Scofidio. Fittingly, the team has created a number of public art works and permanent installations intended to link architectural design with performance and electronic media.

"It's really a wonderful opoturnity because for many years we've done installations in museums," Scofidio said in a video produced by the ICA to document the initial design process. "We've brought not only our skills as an architect, but we've brought another understanding of what a museum is."

One of the team's most ambitious projects was the Blur Building created for the Swiss Expo 2002. Built on a lake in Switzerland, the steel structure was enveloped in a mist created by filtered lake water shot through 31,000 fog nozzles.

The team drafted about 100 models before offering the ICA four choices. Museum officials opted for the final cantilevered design, which takes advantage of the harbor's seascape and natural lighting filtered through the ceiling.

"We've been seeing it as a building that's built from the ground up and the sky down," Diller said.

The new museum is part of the city's ongoing redevelopment of its South Boston harborfront. The ICA won a competition intended to dedicate a portion of the development to a cultural institution.

In September, the ICA signed a 99-year lease for the .75-acre site with the Hyatt Development Corp., which is owned by the Chicago-based Pritzker family. The $1-per-year lease will allow the museum to focus its fundraising efforts on construction costs.

The ICA is hoping to raise about $60 million for the project, including $41 million for construction with the rest going to an endowment and moving costs. About $8 million will come from the sale or lease of the current building.

The museum will be the cultural linchpin of the 2.9 million-square-foot Fan Pier waterfront development project, which is also planned to include 675 residential units, a hotel and more than 100,000-square-feet of civic and cultural space and parks.

The building's location will help create a kind of oceanside "sapphire necklace" of cultural institutions — including the New England Aquarium, Children's Museum, and John F. Kennedy Library and Museum — to compliment the city's "emerald necklace" of interlocking parks created by Frederick Law Olmsted, the father of American landscape architecture, Medvedow said.

Vin Cipolla, chairman of the ICA's board of directors, likens the prominent location to Australia's Sydney Opera House. He said the new ICA could help change perceptions about Boston as an artistically stuffy locale.

"In Boston we are blessed with very important institutions that look at art history, that look at things from the perspective of where we have been rather than where we are going," he said. "The role of the ICA in the city is about the future ... the prominence of the site suggests this is a city about receiving these contemporary ideas."

The design, location and ambition of the ICA's plan is winning accolades from the leaders of other cultural institutions in Boston.

"The city absolutely needs this. It's really critical to the ecology of the cultural life of the city," said Anne Hawley, director of the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum, celebrating its centennial this year.

Hawley said the new ICA will complement rather than compete with the city's older art museums.

"Not having the ICA in a strategic position has been a huge lack," she said. "Without a strong contemporary art center that is pivotally located and collecting you miss a whole part of the art world."

The opening of the new building will force fans of the old ICA, with its odd architectural angles and downtown location, to bid a fond farewell to the former police station turned art gallery.

"It served well a small audience as well as international artists," Medvedow said. "But it was a simple need. We've outgrown this space. Artists today need an incredible amount of flexibility."

Golden news for cancer patients

By Randolph E. Schmid
Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) — Tiny gold shells that absorb certain types of radiation may become a new weapon in the ongoing battle against cancer.

Called nanoshells, the golden balls have a bit of mica in their center and can be designed to absorb radiation at various frequencies.

A group of Texas researchers injected the nanoshells into tumors in mice. They then exposed the tumors to near infrared radiation, heating them enough to kill the cancer but without injuring nearby normal tissue.

Their results are reported in this week's online issue of Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences.

Nanoshells should work in most soft tissue tumors but would be most effective on cancers that can't be removed surgically because they're in an awkward location, such as in the brain, the researchers said.

"Nanoshells can be directly injected," said Jennifer L. West of Rice University. "or, our most recent study shows that you can inject nanoshells intravenously and they will accumulate in tumor sites because the blood vessels in tumors are leakier than elsewhere in the body."

West said patients could be treated in two ways.

"Near infrared light can be applied from outside of the body for most applications, but if necessary, fiber optics can be run through catheters," said West, who led the team from Rice and the University of Texas M.D. Anderson Cancer Center.

Near infrared light is a type of low-energy radiation not absorbed by living tissues. However, the nanoshells can be designed to absorb this light, which heats them up.

Andrei Laszlo of the Washington University School of Medicine in St. Louis said that although the method is a novel approach for removing tumors, it "will require a considerable amount of further work" to overcome the problem of directing the nanoshells to the specific tumor sites.

The Texas researchers first experimented with cultured human breast cancer cells in a solution containing nanoshells and then turned to tumors in mice.

Temperatures inside the tumors reached levels high enough to damage cells within 4 to 6 minutes, killing the tumors but leaving surrounding tissue unharmed.

The researchers will monitor the long-term health of the treated mice.

West said a company called Nanospectra Biosciences has licensed the technology and plans to do studies in people, which could occur within 12 to 18 months.

Clip Curl
665-2629
Hair Skin & Nails
Massage Therapy
Route 116, Sunderland
(Located on bus route)
Accepted: Visa MC
Open Tuesday - Friday 9 to 6:30, and Saturday 9 to 4
Stress Relief Package
30 Minute Massage
30 Minute Aveda Facial
Hair Shampooed & Dried
Regularly $73, Now $60
(Add a Complimentary Lavender Paraffin hand dip!)
Expires 11/22/03
Aveda • ARUM • Paul Mitchell
Two full service rooms!

$2.49 22oz Boomer mug of beer
The Ground Round
12 Beers on Tap
Golden Ale, Texas Shiner, Chicken Fingers, Mozzarella Sticks, 30 Wings
LATE NIGHT APPETIZER SPECIAL
$5.00 8PM-CLOSE 7 DAYS A WEEK!
Thursday 9pm-midnight KARAOKE!
Positive ID Required 21 and older
Smoke, Eat, Drink, and Sing at THE GROUND ROUND!
Hampshire Mall - 582-0017

TRUST
"Before locking into a long term contract for a fitness facility with no machinery in place, why not give the veteran professionals a visit."
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB
"Big enough to own the best equipment, but small enough to know your name."
* In business 22 years
* Locally owned & operated 0243809
www.amherstathletic.com
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB 256-0090 90 Gatehouse Rd. AMHERST

LIFE IN THE FUN LANE!
Work a flexible schedule in a fun environment!
PART-TIME POSITIONS AVAILABLE:
• Servers – Monday and Wednesday - 6 p.m. to 9 p.m. Friday and Saturday – 9 p.m. to 1 a.m.
• Marketing Assistant – Can you work a flexible schedule of about 20 hours per week that includes some days and evenings? This is a great entry level position promoting and coordinating parties and bowling events.
• Machine Mechanic - Do you enjoy working with machines and have the ability to troubleshoot? We will teach you how to monitor and maintain our pinsetter machines. Mechanical experience necessary. PT day, evening and weekend shifts available.
Apply today @ Northampton Bowl, 525 Pleasant St., Northampton. Ask for Bill or Vinny.

HAMPSHIRE FITNESS club
90 Gatehouse Road, Off Rt. 9 Two miles East of Amherst Center • On the Bus Route
www.hampfit.com
Click On:
• Class Schedule
• Pool
• Courts
And More!
Hampshire Fitness Club has it all for you
•Full Sized Indoor Pool
•Aqua Aerobics
•Cybex Nautilus Circuit
• Boxing Studio
•Cybex Free Weights
•Full Court Basketball
•Volleyball
•Indoor Tennis
•Yoga / Pilates
•Aerobics / Step / Bosu
•Jacuzzi / Saunas
•Cardio-Vascular Equipment
OPEN 6am to 10pm Mon-Fri 8am to 9pm Sat-Sun
TEL 256-6446

The NBA 'LEast' once again?

Continued from page 8

ever play for this team?

Prediction: Gooden will become a star and McGrady will continue to make his case for the class of the NBA as the Magic grab the fourth spot in the ever-so-weak East.

New York Knicks: The team finally traded Latrell Sprewell and got Keith Van Horn, and recently signed Dikembe Mutombo for three years. It drafted Mike Sweetney in the first round of the draft and stole Maciej Lampe with the 30th pick.

Questions: How will Van Horn react to the media pressure of New York? How long will it take for Antonio McDyess to re-injure his knee?

Prediction: The team will again be stuck in no man's land, with the talent to make the playoffs but the cancer (Van Horn) to get knocked out. Watch for Van Horn to flop when things aren't going so well.

Boston Celtics: Just two weeks ago the Celtics made a blockbuster deal with the Mavericks, dealing Antoine Walker and Tony Delk for Raef LaFrentz, Jiri Welsch and a draft pick. This was a head-scratcher of a deal for the Celtics, as they are now stuck with the bloated contract of LaFrentz (6 years left at $63 million); however, Danny Ainge seemed very intent on moving Walker.

Questions: How will Walker's absence affect the team early on, and how much will it miss his point forward skills? Is Vin Baker really as good as he has been in these first few games?

Prediction: This trade weakens the team significantly, but in the East that eighth seed is always up for grabs.

CENTRAL DIVISION

Toronto Raptors: The Raptors had a quiet summer, with the only major changes coming from the draft (Chris Bosh) and from a new coach in Kevin O'Neill. The team is very excited about Bosh.

Questions: Is Vince Carter the player he was three years ago, when he almost carried the Raptors past the Sixers in the semifinals? Or will he be the Vince of last year, not scoring enough points and being constantly injured?

Prediction: The playoff picture for this team rests solely on how good and how often Vince Carter plays. I'm betting they'll miss the playoffs, despite Carter's recent efforts.

New Orleans Hornets: The team let go of Paul Silas and hired Tim Floyd to be their new head coach. Point guard Darrell Armstrong was brought in to back up star Baron Davis, and defensive stopper George Lynch was re-signed.

Questions: How many games will Davis, the MVP of this team, play after missing 32 games last season?

Prediction: The Hornets will make the playoffs, taking the third seed.

Milwaukee Bucks: The team has a very different look than the one that was once favored to win the East, as Glenn Robinson, Sam Cassell and Ray Allen are all with different teams. George Karl was fired in July, and Terry Porter was named coach. Anthony Mason's contract was bought out.

Questions: Who will score all the points for this team now that all the stars are gone?

Prediction: This will be one of the worst teams in the East.

Chicago Bulls: Tragedy struck this summer when Jay Williams shattered his hip in an awful motorcycle accident. Scottie Pippen was signed and the Bulls look to make the playoffs this year as the team matures.

Questions: Will Eddy Curry become the one of the best centers in the East this season? How badly will the team miss Jay Williams?

Prediction: The Bulls make the playoffs this year, and challenge for the conference title in two years.

Cleveland Cavaliers: The team hired Paul Silas as their new head coach, and traded for J.R. Bremer. Who cares? Let LeBron-o-mania begin!

Questions: Is LeBron the second coming of Michael Jordan? Will he be able to handle the expectations? Will Darius Miles become the star he was supposed to be with the Clippers?

Prediction: This is a very young team absolutely loaded with talent (Carlos Boozer, Dajuan Wagner, Miles, LeBron). Its youth will be its shortcoming, but LeBron will continue to please as he has thus far.

Indiana Pacers: Jermaine O'Neal was shocked when Larry Bird gave Isaiah Thomas the axe in favor of Rick Carlisle. Kenny Anderson was signed and will likely supplant Jamaal Tinsley as the starting point guard. O'Neal and Reggie Miller were both re-signed.

Questions: How much trouble will Ron Artest cause this year? Will Carlisle be able to take this team past the first round?

Prediction: This team is very talented, but I have doubts about it going past the first round.

Detroit Pistons: The Pistons finally cashed in on the 1997 deal that sent Otis Thorpe to Vancouver. The result? Darko Milicic. Rick Carlisle was surprisingly fired and Larry Brown took his place.

Questions: Does Larry Brown care more about winning championships or more about teaching young players?

Prediction: Look for this team to come out near the top in the conference, but watch out in a couple years when Tayshaun Prince and Milicic hit their potential.

Atlanta Hawks: The team traded Glenn Robinson for the oft-injured Terrell Brandon, which is essentially like trading cancer for cap space, since Brandon's contract comes off the books after this year. Jason Terry was re-signed.

Questions: How foolish did the team look last year after guaranteeing the playoffs to their season-ticket holders?

Prediction: The Hawks will remain one of the truly awful teams in the NBA.

Zach Oelschlegel is a Collegian columnist.

Inaugural I-AA all-stars selected

Continued from page 8

since added six more this week.

Defensive end Jerame Southern of James Madison, free safety Mike Adams and quarterback Andy Hall of Delaware, Massachusetts linebacker Jeremy Cain, running back Tim Gale of Northeastern and Villanova cornerback Clarence Curry were the players most recently added.

They will join Massachusetts defensive lineman Valdamar Brower, tight end Matt Chilla of Villanova, Maine defensive lineman Dennis Dottin-Carter, Musinski, Delaware offensive lineman Jason Nerys, Hofstra linebacker Renauld Williams and offensive lineman Joe Wilson of Richmond.

The participants are chosen by a committee of coaches, administrators and selective members of the media from the conferences that make up Division I-AA.

Turnabout is fair play

A week after his fumble cost No. 7 Villanova a crucial win over UMass, redshirt freshman quarterback Marvin Burroughs may have made up for it with his stellar performance against Richmond on Saturday.

Making his first collegiate start in place of injured starter Joe Casamento, Burroughs completed 15-of-19 for 245 yards and five touchdowns in 'Nova's 42-13 win over the Spiders, including a perfect 8-for-8 for 145 yards and four scores in the second half.

The Wildcats, who sit just one game behind UMass and Delaware in the race for the league title, travel to Hempstead, N.Y. this weekend to face Hofstra, and will host the Blue Hens on the final weekend of the season.

Sitting still

For the first time in weeks, there was no movement among A-10 squads in The Sports Network weekly I-AA poll.

Delaware, which came back from 21-0 down to slip past Maine 24-21 in overtime, remains second, garnering 15 first-place votes. Massachusetts stands pat at No. 4 on the heels of its own comeback win over Northeastern. The two squads, which are both currently undefeated in league play, will meet in Newark, Del. on November 15.

Villanova, which had risen as high as second before losing to Massachusetts, remains at No. 7 after its dismantling of Richmond.

Maine and James Madison, meanwhile, join the Huskies on the cusp of the Top 25, as all three teams are currently receiving votes.

GERALD H. LINGO/COLLEGIAN

Thanks to a 4-2 win at Providence's Schneider Arena, James Solon (No. 4) and the Massachusetts hockey team put some distance between them and the Friars in the latest national poll.

Maine tandem leads conference

Continued from page 8

and ranks second against Hockey East opponents in GAA. Providence's David Cacciola has garnered attention as well, despite battling Bobby Goepfert for playing time.

Mass hysteria

In an unlikely turn of events, both UMass squads are sitting pretty in the Hockey East standings, just behind the undefeated Black Bears. Massachusetts and Lowell are both 2-1 in conference play, and the River Hawks (3-2-2 overall) have a chance to take sole possession of first place tonight when they travel to Chestnut Hill to face Boston College.

For means of comparison, Lowell was winless in the first eight conference games last season, before finally breaking the ice with a 6-5 win over Merrimack at home on Jan. 7. The Minutemen went 1-3 against Hockey East foes before sweeping a two-game set against Lowell last season.

The punch line

For the source of Lowell's early season prominence, look no further than the talented line of Ben Walter, Andrew Martin and Danny O'Brien. The sophomore trio has accounted for 13 goals and 14 assists thus far, with Walter (10 g, 2 a) leading the way. Martin has been particularly prolific against Hockey East teams, and leads the league with two goals and four assists in conference play. Walter is just behind him with four goals and one assist.

The River Hawks aren't all offense, though. Junior Chris Davidson has come out of nowhere to place fifth among Hockey East netminders, with a 2.35 goals against average and an impressive .914 save percentage in conference play. Davidson earned Hockey East Defensive Player of the Week honors for his work in the River Hawks weekend sweep of Northeastern (0-5-1, 0-3-0 HE). The junior turned aside all but four of the 54 shots he faced against the Huskies.

Psycho killers

Maine's penalty kill unit can also be cited for the team's early-season perfection. The Black Bears have stifled all 10 penalties they've faced in two games against Hockey East teams. Boston College leads the overall list, however, having killed 29 of 31 penalties in six games this season. The Eagles will finally get to test out their penalty killers against league opponents tonight when they host Lowell in BC's conference opener.

Power plants

On the power play, New Hampshire is king. The Wildcats have converted on 12 of 36 power plays this season, and have scored three times in 10 chances against league opponents. Those looking for a battle of the best in special teams will have to wait until Nov. 12, when UNH and BC will lock up in Durham, N.H.

Western front is a strong one

Continued from page 8

in charge, but it will lose to the better teams in the West in the first round.

Memphis Grizzlies: After starting out last year 0-8, the club hired old-school coach Hubie Brown to take control of a young team. Brown looks to improve on the club's 28-win season with the additions of James Posey and Jake Tsakalidis and his team's maturation.

Questions: After seemingly turning the corner last year, will Jason Williams become one of the elite point guards this year? How bad is Mike Miller's back?

Prediction: The team will have to work extremely hard to make the playoffs, which are doubtful but doable.

Denver Nuggets: The Nuggets were snubbed by many big time free agents this summer, but all wasn't lost as they still signed Andre Miller and drafted Carmelo Anthony, who figures to push for Rookie of the Year. Hard-working Earl Boykins was signed.

Questions: Will youngsters Nene, Anthony and Nikoloz Tskitishvili give the Nuggets something to hope for two years down the road?

Prediction: A team on the rise, just wait a couple years.

Utah Jazz: Nothing went right for the Jazz this summer, as John Stockton and his assist record retired, and Karl Malone left the team to get a ring with the Lakers. The team signed Corey Maggette to an offer sheet that was matched by the Clippers, and added Keon Clark.

Questions: Can't most college players start for this team?

Prediction: This team will be fighting the Bucks to the wire for worst team in the league.

PACIFIC DIVISION

Los Angeles Lakers: Before the whole Kobe Bryant mess broke out, the team had signed all-time greats Karl Malone and Gary Payton to form one of the most intimidating lineups in the history of the game. Now, coach Phil Jackson must rally the team in order to prevent it from becoming overly distracted by Bryant's legal troubles. Payton has been excellent so far this season.

Questions: How much time will Shaq miss this year due to his toe? Will Jackson find a way to keep all of the four superstars happy?

Prediction: All distractions aside, there is really no reason why this team shouldn't win the championship.

Sacramento Kings: After watching the other contenders in the West beef up their rosters, the Kings went and acquired all-star Brad Miller away from the Pacers. The window for this team to win is closing quickly.

Questions: Will Chris Webber finally shed that "loser" status he has kept since college and become the winner we all thought he would be? Is it too late to win a championship?

Prediction: This is still an elite team, and with the addition of Miller, they can still win that elusive championship.

Phoenix Suns: The Suns gave the Spurs a decent run for their money last year before losing the in the first round of the playoffs. Amare Stoudemire shocked the league last year with his stellar play coming straight from high school.

Questions: Does this team really believe that Jake Voshkul will be adequate on defense against the bigger lions of the West? How many games will Penny Hardaway miss this year?

Prediction: This team has two of the best players in the NBA in Stephon Marbury and Shawn Marion, and Stoudemire will be there soon. Still, they aren't good enough to challenge for the title, but a first round upset isn't out of the question.

Portland Trailblazers: This team is still relatively in tact from last year, although Arvydas Sabonis retired again after last season. The team is still filled with the same troublemakers from last year. Many scouts see Zach Randolph having a huge season.

Questions: How many technical fouls will Rasheed Wallace pick up this year? How many times will Damon Stoudemire and Ruben Patterson run into the police?

Prediction: This was once upon a time considered to be one of the best teams in the West. Now, after so much inner turmoil, team strife, and stupidity off the court, the most one can ask out of this team is to simply make the playoffs, which they will do.

Seattle Supersonics: The biggest transaction this team made was last year, when they unloaded Gary Payton for Ray Allen, and finished up the season going 18-12. The team has a fairly solid nucleus and is looking to make the playoffs this year.

Questions: The team can shoot with the best of them, but who is going to score all the points inside? And how badly is the team regretting signing major underachiever Calvin Booth in 2001?

Prediction: A decent team, but making the playoffs in the West is no easy gig like it is out East.

Golden State Warriors: The team lost top guard Gilbert Arenas to free agency, and traded away its other best player (Antawn Jamison, along with Danny Fortson) for Nick Van Exel. Van Exel and Jason Richardson will combine for one of the better backcourts in the league.

Questions: Will Mike Dunleavy show a reason for the team's drafting of him with the third pick last year? Will Van Exel play team ball or whine and force a trade?

Prediction: Another decent team that will lose out on the playoffs because of its conference.

Los Angeles Clippers: The NBA world turned upside down this summer when the Clips matched contracts for restricted free agents Elton Brand and Corey Maggette. But the team lost starters Andre Miller, Michael Olowokandi and Lamar Odom to free agency. Mike Dunleavy, Sr. was brought in to coach.

Questions: The Clippers did retain two free agents, but had the cap space to keep two more. Will Donald Sterling ever allow a Clippers GM to have a salary even slightly above the league minimum?

Prediction: Yes, this team did make some moves in the market, but ownership's commitment to losing will keep what could have been a great team a poor one.

Zach Oelschlegel is a Collegian columnist.

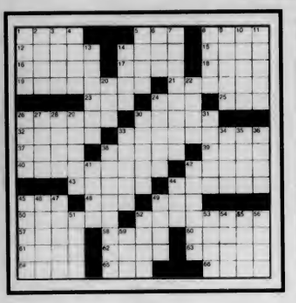
TOTAL FITNESS
WITHOUT WAITING IN LINE
$139
★ Student Special ★
4 months
Best Aerobics~Best Machines
KEISER • NAUTILUS • FREE WEIGHTS • CYBEX • STAIRMASTERS • LIFECYCLES • TREADMILLS • ELLIPTICALS • LIFEROWER
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB 256-0000
ON BUS ROUTE • OPEN 7 DAYS

The 18+ College Night
$4.00 over 21
$10.00 under 21
$2.00 off cover with this ad

HIPPODROME
1700 MAIN STREET
DOWNTOWN SPRINGFIELD
(413) 781-0630
WWW.HPDROME.COM
Featuring The World Famous Hot Body Contest $100.00 Weekly Prizes Male and Female
Must Have Valid ID Dress to Impress

BUCCI
HAIRCUTS always $10.
25 N. Pleasant St. Amherst 256.0733
145 Main St. Northampton 586.0155

TODAY'S CROSSWORD PUZZLE



ACROSS

1 Bell
5 Flower adornment
8 Flatter
12 Wide swathe
14 In a while
15 Steel
16 Stymied
17 Flag a coin
18 Plus
19 Excused
21 Farm baby
23 Enthusiasm
24 Wheel part
26 Pseudo
29 Then
30 Deserts
32 Clay target sport
33 Jury-rigged
37 Tourist possessor
38 Chopped fine
39 Stymied
40 Wildlife attracting cascade
42 Magic formula
43 Turbo lung
44 Fracas
45 Pizzeria appeara
48 Prefix for "nectar"
49 Montreal's prov
50 Tie
52 Obsolete
53 Zip
54 Wind instrument
60 Please greatly
61 Portent
62 Oklahoma town
63 Tall peak
64 Grassy area
65 Look ill
66 Toboggan

DOWN

1 Fishing spear
2 Mishmash
3 Misdeed st.
4 Golfer Norman
5 Raucous diver
6 Dawn goddess
7 Motivates
8 Pouring in drops
9 Fuming Bundens
10 Disembodiment
11 Scrapbook item
13 Hot dish holder
14 Stash
20 Bonaparte's wife
22 Unchains
24 Does a fall chore
26 Sonic boom producers
27 Cereal ingredient
28 Touch
29 Motors
30 Zany
31 Boutiques
33 Smaller than mini
34 Islands to Cousteau
35 Pointed brewers
38 Places to eat
41 Home of jazz
42 Glove leathers
44 Farmed pharaoh
46 "Star Trek" empire
48 Shy animal
49 Hit the ozone-on
47 Auto safety advocate
48 Campus area
51 Peddle
52 Decker's cousin
53 Rocky mountains
54 Shadow
55 French I verb
56 Hero's act
59 One, for Pierre

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

THE HARP Irish Pub

413-548-6900 www.theharp.net
163 Sunderland Rd. - N. Amherst
Just north of the apartments
Great new deck!

WED. • Reggae Night Dance Party
THU. • Fear Nuttin' Band
FRI. • Open Irish Seisiun
SAT. • Hi 8 Us (funk, groove)

November Special!
Labatt Blue:
$1.75 A pint / $6.25 A pitcher
"Start your own tradition."

DINING COMMONS MENU

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Chicken Burrito
- Tuna Noodle Casserole
- Garden Vegetable Chili (vegan)

DINNER
- Extra Crispy Fried Chicken
- Italian Meatloaf
- Native American Stew (vegan)

DAILY WEATHER FORECAST

For Amherst

WEDNESDAY
- High: 64
- Low: 48

THURSDAY
- High: 59
- Low: 34

FRIDAY
- High: 54
- Low: 30

PRODUCTION CREW

On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Matt Brady
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Emilie Duggan
COPY EDITOR
Morris Singer
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Scott Pihl
PRODUCTION STAFF
Katie Dwan/ Gerry Auger

QUOTE FOR THE DAY

"Up, up, down, down, left, right, left, right, B, A, start. Everybody knows that."

-Greg Mauldin

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • JAN. 20-FEB. 18
People act like they care, but they are secretly trying to screw you.

pisces • FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Beware of slimeballs.

aries • MAR. 21-APR. 19
Don't put up with it anymore.

taurus • APR. 20-MAY 20
Still looking for an escape???

gemini • MAY 21-JUN. 21
Your point of view is faulty.

cancer • JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Go skateboarding. I hope you fall.

leo • JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Just do it already.

virgo • AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
You were missed last night.

libra • SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
You're not the problem. Everyone else is.

scorpio • OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Good effort. Too bad it won't work.

sagittarius • NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Spend some time away from the drama called your life.

capricorn • DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Be supportive, your friends need it right now.

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Student Director Wanted For Play on Lord Jeff Amherst. Shows the 'hero' as biologic warrior who deliberately slaughtered the Indians with Smallpox, 'winning' the war. STYLE: Brechtian. Loud, raucous. Simple sets. Musical. Goal: controversy, outrage. AUTHOR: AC graduate, many past productions VENUE/ACTORS: your choice CONTACT: 718-601-8089 nites Leave name/address please

APARTMENT FOR RENT

3 Bedroom Apartment for January 665-9254

AUTO FOR SALE

96 Dodge Intrepid White runs good Power everything Brand new Pioneer CD/Stereo Must sell Asking $2400 Amy 413-222-5754

AUTO FOR SALE

1992 Honda Prelude SI, Loaded, $3900 587-0242

Honda 1995 Civic Ex Coupe, red, 91K, moonroof, LoJack, well maintained, $4,250, 413-695-5527

Mountainview Auto Route 47 South in Hadley 585-0599 '89 Mercedes 300E Clean $3500 '94 Nissan Sentra Limited Edition $2850 '87 Honda Civic excellent transportation $950 '87 Saab 900 Automatic $950 '88 Dodge Caravan Very Clean 100,000 miles $1200

1992 Silver Ford Taurus Excellent condition $2400 118000K Call 549-3930 210-7393 All Power

1999 Explorer XLT 4x4 Excellent Condition Sunroof 6cyl. Loaded $12,500 Call 546-3477

AUTO FOR SALE

$500!!! Cars from $500!!! Police Impounds for listings. 1-800-319-3323 ext4554

93 Pontiac Bonneville SDN All Power Must Sell $1500 BO 253-5537

EMPLOYMENT

MAD SCIENTISTS WANTED! PT to conduct fun science after-school programs, parties, etc. Requirements: Experience with groups of children, enthusiasm, car. Performance experience a plus. 413-584-7243

Telephone Interviewers NO SALES! Conduct interviews over the phone at our Hadley location Flexible Evening and Weekend Hours $7.50/hour to start 20+ hours/week PVTA accessible For more info: 1-888-423-5381 FMI

EMPLOYMENT

PART-TIME POSITIONS 20+ hrs/wk; set your own schedule. Conduct surveys over the phone at our Hadley location—NO SALES! Evngs/wknds; hlth/dent/401(k); PVTA accessible. Email myjvan@fieldmarketing.com or apply in person, First Floor 100 Venture Way, Hadley, MA (888) 423-5381

Spring 2004 Internships with The Student Legal Services Office: Get hands-on experience in the legal field; work directly with attorneys and clients; earn up to 15 undergraduate credits. No experience necessary. Training provided. Contact the Student Legal Services Office Today! 545-1995, 922 Campus Center

!Bartending!$ $250/day potential No experience Nesc Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext 162

EMPLOYMENT

Landscaping Services: Part-time positions available for fall clean-up and snow work. Need to be ambitious, hardworking, own transportation, and flexible hours. Call Steve at 413-665-3493

Movie Extras/Models Needed For local Casting Calls No exp. or age required EARN up to $200 a day 1-888-820-0167

Internship Motivated students seeking leadership outside the box. Gain experience in all aspects of running a small business. Average pay: $9300.00 Call 508-246-1230

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

FOR RENT

Ski House for Rent. So. Londonberry, Vt 15 mins to Stratton, 7 mi. to Bromley 3 mi. to Magic Mtn. 7 bdrms, 3 baths, sleeps 30- $1,000/week. Katy.browne@verizon.net or 410-404-6326

FOR SALE

Concept II Indoor Rowing Machine for sale. Like New $500.00 or BO 546-5459

$Save$ Wholesale-Discount prices, video games, clothing, jewelry, more. www.tylersdiscounts.com

INSTRUCTION

University Bartending Classes Start Soon 1-800-U-CAN-MIX Call now for information!!! Space is Limited www.universitybartending.com

LOST

Lost: Wallet Near Parking garage 10/14 If found please call with description 413-237-1015

SERVICES

SHEAR BLISS DAY SPA SERVICES Body Sugaring (waxing) for men and women *Safe *100% Natural *Effective 253-2322 https//shearbliss.image411.com

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

TRAVEL

Spring Break 2004. Travel with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator to Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas and Florida. Now hiring campus reps. Call for group discounts. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com For more information contact STA Travel at 413-256-1261

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Destinations, including Cruises! Foam Parties, Free Drinks and Club Admissions. Rep Positions and FREE trips Available. 1-800-231-4386 www.EpicureanTours.com

A "Reality" Spring Break 2004's Hottest Prices Book now ... Free Trips, Meals & Parties www.sunsplashtours.com or 1800-426-7710

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 5, 2003 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Krohn receives honor

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

For his performance in Massachusetts' come-from-behind 28-24 win over in-state rival Northeastern, senior tri-captain and quarterback Jeff Krohn was named Atlantic 10 Offensive Player of the Week for the first time this season.

A-10 Notebook

Krohn, a former Pac-10 passing champion who transferred from Division I-A Arizona State prior to last season, was 20-of-28 for 227 yards, three touchdowns and one interception against the Huskies.

It was the second time he has thrown for three touchdowns in a game this season, as No. 7 hooked up with fullback Rich Demers from 15 yards out and found wide receivers Jason Peebler and Jimmie Howard for 46- and 49-yard scoring strikes, respectively.

On the season, five of Krohn's 17 touchdown passes have gone for 45 yards or more. UMass returns to action this Saturday when it hosts Richmond at Warren P. McGuirk Alumni Stadium.

Bittersweet hardware

Krohn wasn't alone in being recognized for his efforts in Amherst Saturday.

Northeastern junior linebacker Liam Ezekiel was named A-10 Defensive Player of the Week on Monday, and followed that up by being tabbed National Defensive Player of the Week, as named by ESPN/USA Today.

Ezekiel, a first-team All-A-10 selection and a preseason All-American, recorded a season-high 17 tackles and intercepted his second pass of the season, setting up the Huskies' first touchdown of the afternoon.

It was the eighth consecutive game in which the Arlington native has recorded double-digit tackles. Ezekiel enters Saturday's contest with No. 2 Delaware fourth in the A-10 in total tackles with 104, and fourth in sacks with 5.5.

Record-setting receiver

With five catches for 44 yards against Hofstra, William and Mary wide receiver Rich Musinski became the A-10's all-time leader in career receiving yardage, surpassing the old mark of 3,944 yards, set by former Rhode Island standout Brian Forster (1983-87).

Musinski, a senior, now has 3,975 yards for his career. W&M has two games remaining on its schedule, following a bye this weekend. It will host New Hampshire in two weeks and conclude its slate at Richmond.

The Tribe has played one less game then the other members of the A-10, after its Sept. 27 game against Maine was cancelled due to the effects of Hurricane Isabel.

A-10 all-stars

For the first time in history, there will be a Division I-AA All-Star Classic, and the A-10 will be well represented in Fort Lauderdale, Fla. on Dec. 30.

At this time, 89 senior standouts representing 13 I-AA conferences have been selected, with an additional 11 student athletes still to be picked in late November.

The A-10 boasts seven standouts selected among the original group, which was chosen on Aug. 29, and have

Continued on page 6

GERALD H. LINGA/COLLEGIAN

UMass QB Jeff Krohn was named A-10 Offensive Player of the Week after leading the Minutemen to a 28-24 win over Northeastern. Krohn passed for 227 yards and three touchdowns in the victory.

Undefeated Maine tops the HE charts

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

Maine (7-0-0, 2-0-0 Hockey East) is the only remaining undefeated team in Hockey East, and it didn't get there on charm alone. After a runaway 6-2 win over Merrimack (2-4-1, 1-2-1 HE) on Friday, the Black Bears followed up by bouncing Boston University (2-1-1, 1-1-0 HE) out of Alfond Arena Saturday night.

Adding a twist to the mix was the fact that the Terriers wore their white jerseys at Alfond, as the hosts debuted their brand new third jerseys, which emphasize the light blue elements of the Maine color scheme. The Alfond atmosphere, hostile as can be on a normal night, was even more charged, as many of the 5,641 in attendance were given light blue T-shirts to create an ocean theme in Orono.

Hockey East Notebook

BU certainly didn't play like it was enjoying the comforts of home, though, as the Black Bears scored two goals in the first period, and despite being called for two penalties in the final 10 minutes, hung on to the one-goal advantage to remain perfect.

It won't get much easier for Maine to retain its unblemished record, however, with games at Boston College (3-2-1) and New Hampshire (4-1-0, 1-0-0 HE) this weekend.

National six pack

Hockey East saw no less than six of its nine members make the top 15 of the USA Today/Inside College Hockey poll, as announced on Monday. Maine retained the top spot, with UNH (No. 3), BC (No. 5), and BU (No. 8) close behind. Massachusetts (No. 12) and Providence (No. 15) round out the Hockey East pollsters. The Minutemen (5-1-0, 2-1-0 HE) and Friars (5-2-1, 1-2-1 HE) battled to a split of their home-and-home series last weekend, and the voters apparently thought the Minutemen did more for themselves than the Friars. UMass, which lost ugly at home 6-2, but bounced back the next night in Providence to down the hosts 4-2, jumped up one place after the split, while PC dropped one spot.

A pair of aces

Maine goaltender Frank Doyle's 1.25 overall goals against average puts him atop the Hockey East goalie charts. The netminder in second place? Doyle's teammate, Jim Howard, who's just .08 goals behind Doyle for the lead. The two-headed net monster has been a prime source of the Black Bears' success this season, and the pair have split the work thus far, with Doyle in net for four games, and Howard manning the posts for the other three. While a goalie controversy may erupt out of the situation, Maine coach Tim Whitehead can be nothing but happy with the splendid pair of choices he has.

UNH's Mike Ayers is also in the mix at the top,

Continued on page 6

Tipoff 2003: scouting the NBA season

Powerful West a horse race from start to thrilling finish

The West's domination of the East will continue and be even more apparent this year. Many would argue that the top five teams in the NBA reside in the West and some might even go as far as saying the Phoenix Suns are the sixth best team. There is almost no question that the winner of the West will become the NBA champion, so let's get down to the candidates.

Midwest Division

San Antonio Spurs: Perennial great David Robinson truly went out on top, as the Spurs won the title last year, beating the Nets in six games. Rasho Nesterovic was signed away from the Timberwolves, Hedo Turkoglu was acquired, and defensive-minded role player Robert Horry was signed.

Question: Will this team still be able to win the West as other contenders solidified their teams and more?

Prediction: Nobody plays team ball as well as the Spurs, and with Tim Duncan as their centerpiece, they will be in the middle of the title hunt.

Dallas Mavericks: The team again made many deals this summer, trading away Nick Van Exel and Raef LaFrentz and acquiring Antawn Jamison, Danny Fortson and Antoine Walker. The trade of LaFrentz for Walker is questionable, because the Mavericks gave up one of their better defenders for something they didn't need: more offense.

Question: How many minutes will Eduardo Najera and Fortson, two players who don't always think offense, play under offense-first Don Nelson?

Prediction: Defense wins championships. Don Nelson is a fool if he thinks he can win a championship simply by outscoring his opponents (as evidenced by the team's loss to the Lakers this season), so look for the Mavs to grab a high playoff seeding and lose in the second round to a team that plays defense.

Minnesota Timberwolves: The team went and proved to Kevin Garnett that ownership was concerned about winning championships, as Latrell Sprewell, Michael Olowokandi and Sam Cassell were added to what was already a good team. Garnett was subsequently signed to a huge contract extension.

Questions: How will the team react to the mouths of Cassell, Sprewell and Wally Szczerbiak? Will Flip Saunders be able to dole out the minutes so everybody's happy?

Prediction: The T-Wolves are one of the dark-horse candidates to win the title, as they have players who defend (Olowokandi), players who score (Cassell) and players who do both (Sprewell and Garnett).

Houston Rockets: Jeff Van Gundy was brought in to replace Rudy Tomjanovich as coach. Eric Piatkowski, Jim Jackson and Adrian Griffin are all new to the team. Van Gundy plans on running the offense through Yao Ming.

Questions: After playing almost constantly the last couple years without sabbatical, how tired is Yao Ming? Will Eddie Griffin continue to be the problem child he has been since his career's inception?

Prediction: This is a good team with Yao and Steve Francis

Continued on page 6

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Tim Duncan and the reigning NBA Champion Spurs will look to hold off Kobe Bryant and the Laker juggernaut for another year.

Can the East finally put a worthy contender in the mix?

The NBA season started last week, and yet again, the East finds itself in the same situation as last year: utterly weak and completely inept in comparison to its Western counterparts. The Nets went down against the Spurs last year in six to give the East zero NBA champions since the Bulls won in 1998. Still, a few teams are holding out hope for a weary West opponent for the Finals, as the road to the Western Conference title will be no small task.

Atlantic Division

New Jersey Nets: Despite losing in the Finals for two years running, this is the East's best hope of an NBA champion. The Nets retained Jason Kidd and signed Alonzo Mourning, while letting Dikembe Mutombo, a misfit in the Princeton offense, go free.

Questions: Will Kenyon Martin finally become a player deserving of a No. 1 pick? Will the Nets ever win in the Finals?

Prediction: The East's best chance for a Finals champ will again come up short, losing in five games to its Western opponent.

Miami Heat: The Heat drafted Dwayne Wade with the fifth pick and overpaid Lamar Odom with a $67 million contract. The Heat were shocked when the Clippers matched an $82 million dollar contract for the services of Elton Brand.

Questions: How will the Heat's awkward guard-filled lineup affect their play? Will Lamar Odom continue to have off-court troubles, and will his injuries (such as the one he sustained against the Sixers last week) ever subside?

Prediction: A mediocre team at best, but playoffs are very possible, especially in the East.

Philadelphia 76ers: The team had a very interesting summer, starting with Larry Brown ditching the team for one that didn't have troublemaker Allen Iverson as its centerpiece. Keith Van Horn was traded in a four-team deal and Glenn Robinson was acquired.

Questions: How will Robinson and Iverson, two notorious ball hogs, coexist together?

Prediction: The team will have its ups and downs, and finish in the middle of the playoff pack, although it is capable of more.

Washington Wizards: The Wizards surprised the NBA this summer as they signed Gilbert Arenas to a monster, albeit excessive, contract worth $64 million. Eddie Jordan, the respected assistant coach from the Nets was brought in to replace Doug Collins.

Questions: Juan Dixon, Larry Hughes, Jerry Stackhouse and Gilbert Arenas are all guards. Who will play? Will Kwame Brown recover from all the screaming Michael Jordan did in his direction and become the stud Jordan thought he would be when he took him with the number one pick in the draft?

Prediction: Kwame will grow up a little this year, and the Wizards will teeter on the playoff edge.

Orlando Magic: The team got Juwan Howard and Tyronn Lue in free agency, but other than that, the team is still pretty much in tact from last season. Drew Gooden has continued to excel this year as he did after he was acquired last year for Mike Miller.

Questions: Will Tracy McGrady be able to carry the team with his chronic back trouble? Will he need to, with the potential maturation of Gooden and Gordan Giricek? Will Grant Hill

Continued on page 6

The Daily Collegian

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 6, 2003 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 46

Admissions policies under evaluation

Affirmative action in question

By Erika Lovley
Collegian Staff

The fear and uncertainty is hard to forget. The day will always be remembered. It was early April, and high school graduation was less than two months away.

The fear of the unknown was weighing down on the shoulders of many high school students. It was the fork in the road, asking who they would become and how they would get there. A simple piece of stationary held the fate of future education in its printed words. It was the day of the college acceptance letter.

Since freshman year, many high school students are constantly reminded of the looming prospect of college. College counselors hammer excellence in grades, SATs, extracurriculars, leadership skills and athletics like nails of success into student's heads. But to whose ears were the politics of the application process, like affirmative action, explained?

The U.S. Supreme Court ruled this past June that the University of Michigan undergraduate school's use of a point system for the admissions policy was unconstitutional. The school had been admitting students by using a point system where applicants were awarded a certain number of points based on race and other non-academic factors.

Previously, University Admissions offices used non-academic categories, such as race, when processing student applications. This process of affirmative action was created to provide underrepresented groups, who are often discriminated against, with an equal opportunity to get into universities and colleges. And while the Court this summer upheld that non-academic factors, including race, might be considered when reviewing an applicant, it ruled that no admissions policy can be based predominately on the factor of race.

This Supreme Court ruling hit hard, giving the face of affirmative action a much different look and leaving college and university administrators across the country scrambling to recreate new admissions policies — including the University of Massachusetts.

The Supreme Court vs. UMass

"After the Supreme Court ruling, the University was required to review its admissions criteria," said Michael Gargano, Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs. "The Supreme Court states that one admission criteria can't have more weight than another. Admissions needs to become more comprehensive — a holistic approach."

Gargano's approach examines factors other than race, grade point average and SAT results. The new system allows for a broader view of the applicant by means of things such as special talents, family lifestyle, learning disabilities and hardships.

Like the University of Michigan, the past UMass admissions policy was based on a point system. A certain number of points were awarded for qualities such as class rank, ethnicity, leadership, native language, country of origin, veterans and hardships. A total of 10 possible points could be earned in categories ranging from SATs to class rank. GPA status could be awarded with as much as 7.5 points. A minority applicant could be awarded a half a point.

"It may not seem like much," said Joe Marshall of the committee for the Collegiate Education of Black and other Minority Students (CCEBMS), "But it really was a lot."

Chuck DiMare, Director of Legal Services, said in Massachusetts alone, there are at least 35 categories under which applicants can be considered.

"[Now] one sole criterion to award won't pass consistently," he said.

Racial Diversity and the National Demographics

At UMass in particular, acknowledgment of race seems to be falling by the wayside in recent waves of student applications. This makes it somewhat harder for admissions to insure racial diversity.

"Less and less, students are filling out the section on race and ethnicity. They just don't see themselves in any of those categories," Gargano said.

One proposed admissions change at UMass is to create a student body that reflects the national demographic. The 2000 census estimated in the United States, 75.1 percent of the population was white, 12.5 percent was Hispanic or Latino, 12.3 percent was Black or African American and 3.6 percent was Asian.

Gargano also pointed out that race is not the only means by which to create diversity on campus.

"We are trying to accomplish this in the admissions process," he said. "We also want diversity based on gender, the number of state representatives, religion, sexual orientation, socio-economic status and special talents."

The SAT and GPA

While the new admissions policies sound positive from the administrative point of view, there are still some concerns. The most recent has been the use of the SATs and what the test results actually determine about the applicant.

According to Gargano, UMass will continue to hold steady weight on SAT scores. Many competitive schools rely heavily on SATs in order to reduce overwhelming applicant pools. The test can often bring disappointment for those who are well qualified for a seat in a prestigious freshman class, yet perform poorly on standardized tests.

Arguments against the test refer to studies that have shown that racial minorities and people of low-income areas tend to score worse than other groups. Those who oppose the use of the SATs argue that the test is written with a bias, and that there is a strong correlation between high test scores and wealth.

According to Gargano, UMass will continue to use the SATs and GPA heavily in the admissions process, but will still consider other factors as well.

Russell Plato, Student Government Association Secretary of Diversity, said the practice wouldn't

Continued on page 2

Senators may face expulsion

By Ed Hudson
Collegian Staff

Four senators serving in the Student Government Association face charges with grounds for expulsion, as was announced at the weekly SGA meeting last night.

According to Anthony Pascoe, chair of Rules and Ethics Committee, an investigation will be conducted regarding possible infractions committed by each senator within the next 30 days. The charges were first brought to his attention this past Tuesday.

Speaker of the Senate Jared Nokes said the charges were based on the senators' failure to act in accordance with an enactment of the SGA. According to Nokes, the enactment in question was signed by SGA President David Carr and approved by both the Coordinating Council and University of Massachusetts Vice Chancellor Michael Gargano.

Although both Nokes and Pascoe would neither specify what the charges entailed nor confirm the identities of the four senators, Senator Eduardo Bustamante said he believes that he is among the accused. According to Bustamante, he and Senators Temitayo Aiyeku, Aiysha Cooper and Gladys Franco are those who will be facing charges.

Bustamante believes the charges were filed by Nokes because of a list of grievances recently highlighted by himself and the others regarding Nokes' potentially dishonest activities throughout his tenure. He said Nokes is out to "harass" them and added that the charges were filed as retaliation after the list of grievances against him was presented. However, Nokes said the charges were brought at the very first opportunity available to him. "It would have been impossible to bring them sooner," Nokes said.

Pascoe said the Rules and Ethics committee meetings, which are open to the public, begin at 9 p.m. on Tuesdays at the SGA office in the Student Union, though an alternate meeting time would be posted for next week because the regular meeting time conflicts with the observance of Veterans Day. He said the situation would be further examined throughout the committee meetings.

Student Trustee Hannah Fatemi also announced her recent addition to the University's Presidential Search Committee at the meeting, which took place at 7 p.m. in room 163C of the Campus Center. According to Fatemi, she recently spoke to Dennis Austin, co-chair of the search committee, and she decided to join. "We decided there definitely has to be an undergraduate on the board," she said.

Fatemi said there are currently two undergraduates, in addition to one medical student from the UMass-Worcester campus, representing about 60,000 students on the committee.

The seat previously held by Rosalyn Lankowski, the former lone undergraduate representative from the UMass-Lowell campus was recently replaced by medical student Sean Reed after Lankowski resigned from the committee, leaving the board with no undergraduate representation. "We might as well replace [Lankowski] with an undergraduate," Fatemi said.

Brian Long, Secretary of University Policy, addressed the Senate regarding recent recommendations given to Chancellor John Lombardi by the University's Alcohol Task Force for the Prevention of Alcohol Abuse. Long said he believed that many of the Task Force's recommendations are inappropriate for the student body.

"There are many people here who believe this should be a dry campus," he said. But, he said, that

Continued on page 2

UMass researchers receive large grant

By Keyana Brown
Collegian Correspondent

With the hopes to uncover new facts about William Shakespeare's works and life, researchers at the University of Massachusetts and the University of New Castle in Australia received a joint, two-year grant of $110,000.

The grant, which was received in September, is funded by the National Endowment for the Humanities and the Australian Research Council. The project is aimed to develop software and to produce a book on the use of computerized analysis of the writings of William Shakespeare and other authors.

Arthur F. Kinney, director of the Massachusetts Center for Renaissance Studies at Umass, and Hugh Craig, director of the School of Language and Media at the U. of New Castle are the two lead researchers of the project.

Kinney and Craig have been friends for years. Both researchers expect to expand the knowledge of Shakespeare and perhaps gain a refined knowledge of works where authorship is in dispute.

And now, the Massachusetts Center for Renaissance Studies and the Center for Literary and Linguistic Computing at the U. of New Castle have collaborated for the Shakespeare International Project for the first time.

According to a recent press release, the two teams of researchers will use a method called computational stylistics to count the frequency of words, to detect writing styles, and to determine if and when there have been collaborations.

It took far more than overnight success to receive the competitive grant. Kinney and Craig spent the entire summer of 2002 completing the 70-page application. After completing the application, the application was then sent out to international senior scholars. Kinney and Craig were not notified that they had won the grant until May and did not receive the money until September.

Six UMass graduate students, Anne-Maria Strohman, Edward Cutrill, Graham Christian, K.C. Elliott-Squires, Kevin Peterson and Young-Jin Chung, along with a few graduate students from the U. of New Castle were hired to work with the two lead researchers.

"The grant money will, in short, be used to pay the graduate students — including full benefits, trips to Australia, new equipment,

Continued on page 2

EDITORIAL/OPINION
PAGE 4
NAMES IN THE NEWS
A LOOK AT TODAY'S ROLE MODELS
ARTS & LIVING
PAGE 6
'REVOLUTIONS'
FINAL INSTALLMENT DOES NOT DISAPPOINT
SPORTS
PAGE 12
SPIDERS INVADE
NO.4 UMASS TO FACE RICHMOND
COMICS/CLASSIFIEDS
PAGE 11

Majors fair helps students explore options

NICHOLAS NEWCOMB/COLLEGIAN

Raquel Sevilla, biology major, and Tia Hutson, Commonwealth College, listened to major representatives last night in the Student Union Ballroom.

By Sean Benson
Collegian Correspondent

Over 1,000 students participated in the annual Majors Fair last night, held in the Student Union Ballroom at the University of Massachusetts.

At the event, which was sponsored by Pre-Major Advising Services, Commonwealth College and Career Services, over 90 different majors and programs were represented.

"It's the best turnout we've ever had in terms of programs being represented," said Susan Machala, an academic advisor from Pre-Major Advising Services.

The fair was designed for undeclared students, students looking to change a major and those interested in adding a major or minor or certificate program. The event was organized in order to provide a setting for discussion between students and advisors about major and minor choices and possible career paths.

"This is a fabulous opportunity for students — they don't have to run all over campus to get information," said Norm Sims, the chair of the journalism department.

Kim Holloway, publicity coordinator for Career Services added, "I'm pleased with some of the in-depth questions students are asking about their career paths."

Representatives from the Residential Academic Program, the Libraries program, the Office of ALANA Affairs, the Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black and other Minority Students, the Alternative Spring Break program, and the International Relations certificate program in addition to the Army ROTC and Air Force ROTC were present to answer questions. All levels of academics, from professors to sophomore students, were there to offer help in the ballroom.

"This event is helpful for students looking to acquire multiple complimentary credentials," said Machala.

The School of Management and the School of Education were some of the more frequently visited tables during the two-hour event.

Commonwealth College provided pizza, while Career Services provided other refreshments.

Representatives used displays to attract students to their particular table, such as a power-point presentation at the building materials and wood technology major table.

The table for the plant and soil sciences major displayed large potted plants. In addition, the College of Engineering table and the social

Continued on page 3

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Jennifer Eastwood
MANAGING EDITOR Dan Lamothe
BUSINESS MANAGER Peter Foundas
PRODUCTION MANAGER Scott Pihl
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Nick Markamonaco
ADVERTISING MANAGER Sean Costello
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Shannon Farrington
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Glen Stroub
COPY EDITOR Molly Eggleston
EDITORIAL EDITOR Paige Crum
NEWS EDITOR Ferron Salniker
PHOTO EDITOR Gerald H. Ling
SPORTS EDITOR Andrew Merritt
CIRCULATION MANAGER Kristen Weise
CLASSIFIED ADVERTISING Marty Pappas
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Julie Beauchamp
FINANCE MANAGER Greg Stumm
HUMAN RESOURCE Sandra Marquez
SPECIAL ISSUES Betsy Feldman
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING David Bor
ASSISTANT BUSINESS Jaclynn Sorenson
ASSISTANT DISTRIBUTION Mark Lagatic
ASSISTANT FINANCE Richard Pacheco
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Liza Lynch
GRAPHICS ADVISOR Charlie Higgins
LAYOUT MANAGER Lindsay Clark
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Meghan Healy
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Cameron J. Woods
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Matthew Reid
ASSISTANT NEWS Erika Lovley
ASSISTANT NEWS Morris Singer
ASSISTANT PHOTO Emilie Duggan
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Marzelli
ASSISTANT SPORTS Robert McGovern

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1903, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914, AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1920. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 5:30 P.M.

SGA addresses accused senators

Continued from page 1

is not what the Task Force should be trying to set as its goal. He believes the Task Force should be examining alcohol abuse and prevention strategies.

"I do not agree with a dry campus," Long said, referring to some of the recommendations by the Task Force. "I think the problem will get worse."

Long admitted that there remains an alcohol abuse problem on campus and proposed the possibility of faculty members somehow addressing alcohol issues in the classroom. However, according to Long, of the 25 members serving on the committee, about 10 to 15 of those members regularly attended meetings. Long said of those members only three were students.

While Long stressed that the Task Force's report was still merely advisory to Chancellor Lombardi, he said he hoped that senators would review many the issues it causes for students.

"Go talk to the administrators," he urged the Senate. "Senators can do a lot."

President Carr announced that he has been working on a proposal that he plans to present to Vice Chancellor Gargano, which would give members of the SGA University credit opportunities.

"Maybe one credit for senators, two credits for chairs," he said.

Mina Safain, secretary of public policy and relations, supported the idea. Credits should be awarded, he said.

"This is academic, because you're working for students," he added. Carr hopes to have the proposal implemented as soon as next semester. Thirty-eight of the 66 senators serving in the SGA Senate attended last night's meeting.

BRENDAN O'BARA/COLLEGIAN

Speaker of the Senate, Jared Nokes, spoke at the SGA meeting last night in the Campus Center.

University admissions responds to court ruling

Continued from page 1

keep minorities from being accepted.

"I am aware that a combination of the SAT and GPA is one of the best indictors of success in college. We are school kids; we have GPAs. If someone can't do well in an academic environment, they should consider [presenting] other factors to get themselves in," he said.

GPA weight has received mixed opinions on the UMass campus. Kregg Strehorn, Director of Learning Disabilities Support Services, said that different high school systems can sometimes present drastically different grades for many different levels of difficulty.

Therefore, a paper that earns a B+ in a system may only be worth a C in another, and admissions may need to consider other information in lieu of low scores due to the grade inflation.

Marshall fully supports the use of SATs and GPAs, which allows UMass to raise its standards of applicants, increasing the selectiveness of the University. Depending on the applicant pool, the admissions office needs to do nothing to admit students with higher scores.

"Our applicant pool changes every year. The students we have been getting have on average higher SATs every year," he said. "Better students bring better GPAs. We always felt that these were the best indicators."

'The Myth of Acceptance'

While the admissions policies continue to change, another area of concern on the UMass campus is supplying the needs of a more diverse campus. The brunt of this burden falls on the shoulders of the many minority and special interest groups on campus.

In Learning Disability Support Services, Strehorn has noticed similar deficits.

"No matter what the admissions policies are, students are going to want to come to a school for its programs. People [with learning disabilities] are being accepted and think they will be provided [with programs] when they're not. I call this 'the myth of acceptance.'"

Strehorn believes that while admitting students to create a mixed population, accommodations must be made for the many different types of student needs. This may not be an easy task as the UMass community continues to suffer from the effects of the budget cuts, which have reduced and eliminated many student service programs.

Strehorn said that often, a student with a special need or advantage will be admitted to the University, only to find he or she cannot be accommodated for because of budget cuts or overall lack of program. This leaves many students disillusioned and discouraged.

Manuela Littlefield, Associate Director of Advising Services of the Bilingual Collegiate Program is skeptical about how the UMass environment will continue to provide learning services and programs for the new minorities.

"The numbers of the incoming populations have declined, especially the Latino population," she said. "The students complain a lot; they come here for help and can't find a basis."

Littlefield said this dissent is mainly because of lack of funding, which has drained the system of advising programs.

"While other parts of the University are being established, ours is being demolished," she said. "The administration is not really consulting minorities. You have to be in a position of color to understand our situation. If more students of color are coming here, the objective should be to help them excel and graduate."

The Power of the Essay

Considering the multitude of angles the admissions policy must cover, how will the administration see every applicant as an individual? Many schools across the nation are resorting to an old standby: the essay. Some schools, such as Ohio State University, now require applicants to complete four different essays.

"I love the idea. I think that's especially great. It's another way [applicants] can disclose personal information," said Strehorn. "If we are asking more people to come to this school, we might want to invest more money on who is coming here. We'd get a much better idea of who they are."

The sentiment runs popular among certain student perspectives as well.

"If I were Gargano, I'd add essays that explain backgrounds, interests and talents," said Plato. "I'd also increase the size of the administration office. The more people we have thinking and reading each application, the better."

When asked, the vice chancellor agreed that essays were necessary, but not in high multitudes. He said one well-written essay could help identify a student well.

"What's really happening out there is students aren't actually writing their essays," Gargano said. "They get help from parents and teachers. It's not really their own work."

He said the UMass admissions policy is a work in progress. Although the revised admissions policy won't be fully revamped for a few more semesters, the saga unfolding at UMass reflects developments taking place on campuses across the country. It will all be a process of experimentation.

UMass grant

Continued from page 1

database rental and online materials," said Kinney, adding he "should have requested more money."

Kinney said he is passionate about Shakespeare because of his language and because his sense of human character is very profound.

Kinney, Craig and the graduate students anticipate with hope the completion of materials, or possibly the draft for their proposed book, "Shakespeare: The Early Modern Theater and Computational Stylistics," within two years.

Prior to coming to UMass, Kinney received his Bachelor's degree from Syracuse University, Master's degree from Columbia University and his PhD from the University of Michigan.

GET PAID TO GO TO SCHOOL.
TALK ABOUT
ROLE REVERSAL.

The U.S. Air Force will pay for you to continue your education while you serve your country as a nurse. Through selection into the Air Force Institute of Technology program, you could earn your advanced degree in as little as two years and get paid to do it. You'll be part of an elite team of medical professionals who have chosen to serve their country in this proud institution. To learn more about Air Force Nursing, please visit airforce.com or call 1.800.423.USAF to request more information.

U.S. AIR FORCE
CROSS INTO THE BLUE

Need help with your Resume?

Come to a
Resume Writing Workshop!

TODAY! Thursday, October 16
1 pm * 201 Machmer

Friday, October 17
2 pm * 114 Stockbridge Hall

For more information about internships, co-ops and full time opportunities go to www-ccn.acad.umass.edu
or call us at 545-2224

CareerServices

Bush signs abortion restriction

ASSOCIATED PRESS/PABLO MARTINEZ MONSIVAIS

As members of congress look on, President Bush signs the Partial Birth Abortion Act of 2003 at the Ronald Reagan Building and International Trade Center yesterday, in Washington.

By Terence Hunt
Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP)— President Bush signed into law the most far-reaching abortion restrictions in three decades yesterday, an emotionally charged measure already challenged in three federal courts. A federal judge in Nebraska called the law "highly suspect" and issued a temporary order blocking it from applying to four abortion-rights doctors who filed suit.

After years of frustration, legal setbacks and two presidential vetoes, hundreds of anti-abortion leaders rose in applause when Bush promised to vigorously defend the constitutionality of the law, known by its supporters as a "partial birth abortion" ban.

"For years a terrible form of violence has been directed against children who are inches from birth while the law looked the other way," Bush told religious leaders, members of Congress and other abortion foes at a signing ceremony at the Ronald Reagan Building. "Today at last the American people and our government have confronted the violence and come to the defense of the innocent child."

Abortion-rights groups said the law was overly broad, lacked any exemption for the health of a woman seeking an abortion and could outlaw several safe and common procedures. They also contended it was the first step in a larger campaign to ban all abortions for the first time since the Supreme Court's 1973 landmark decision legalizing the procedure.

"This bill marks a concerted effort to set back decades of progress in achieving reproductive freedom," said Gloria Feldt, president of the Planned Parenthood Federation of America, which filed suit against the measure in San Francisco.

The bill gave Bush a major victory to show religious conservatives on the eve of a re-election year. But it also revived debate on a polarizing issue that could undercut his hopes of winning support from swing voters.

The bill outlaws a procedure generally performed in the second or third trimester in which a fetus is partially delivered before being killed, usually by having its skull punctured. Former President Clinton twice vetoed similar bills.

While anti-abortion forces cheered their victory, arguments against the law were raised in courtrooms in Lincoln, Neb.; San Francisco and New York.

In Lincoln, U.S. District Judge Richard Kopf issued a temporary restraining order, citing concerns that the law lacked any health exception. "It seems to me the law is highly suspect, if not a per se violation of the Constitution," Kopf said. He said his order would apply only to the four doctors who filed the lawsuit, but the ruling could extend beyond Nebraska because they are licensed in Alabama, Georgia, Iowa, New York, South Carolina and Virginia.

In Manhattan, U.S. District Judge Richard Casey appeared skeptical about arguments by Talcott Camp, a lawyer for the American Civil Liberties Union, which sought an order blocking enforcement. Casey did not issue an immediate order.

Gunman kills one in Roxbury

By Bipasha Ray
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP)— A shooting that started outside a city bus station and ended inside the terminal yesterday left one person dead, four others wounded — and bystanders scrambling for cover. Police said a gunman was in custody.

Boston Police Superintendent James Hussey said the shooting, which appeared to be random, started outside a nations shop near the Dudley Square bus station in the city's Roxbury neighborhood, then ended up inside the station.

The gunman "continued into the station and our officers wrestled him to the ground," he said.

He said one "older" man had died, while another victim was in critical condition and the other three received non-life threatening injuries. No identities were immediately released.

The gunman's identity also was not immediately disclosed. Hussey said he was in custody and that the man would be charged with murder. A firearm was recovered, but police did not immediately disclose the type of weapon.

Hussey described the shooter as a man in his late 20s or early 30s, and said that police were familiar with him. He said police were trying to determine a motive but that it appeared to be a random act.

Police spokesman David Estrada said the dead victim was a man in his fifties. He said one of the remaining victims was in critical condition at Boston Medical Center, while the others — one at Beth Israel-Deaconess Medical Center and two at Brigham and Women's — were being treated. He did not know their conditions.

BRENDAN O'BARA/COLLEGIAN

Fund the Contracts!

Facilitator Dale Melcher of SEIU Local 888 brought to order the All Union Membership Meeting yesterday afternoon.

Majors fair attracts students

Continued from page 1

thought and political economy major table set up large, three-fold display boards.

"The displays make all of the programs much more tangible," said Holkway.

Many tables provided pamphlets as well as free candy or gifts such as bumper stickers and water bottles for interested students.

"It's a great turnout, despite the weather," said Mark Leckie, a geosciences professor. "We've been talking to freshmen, undeclared sophomores and people looking to change majors."

Students were pleased with the information provided at the fair.

"I think it's great to have all the majors in one place," said Chris Murray, an undeclared sophomore.

Other students were disappointed with the fair.

"It seems very basic and not as informative as I would like it to be," said Owen O'Reilly, also an undeclared sophomore.

Still others found areas of interest.

"I just want to see what else the school offers," said Bill Phelan, a freshman history major.

Organizers were pleased with the event.

"It's a nice chemistry between faculty and students," said Elaine Parmett, an academic advisor at Pre-Major Services. "We're seeing more and more students every year."

Internship sponsors include but are not limited to the following:

Blue Cross BlueShield of Massachusetts
Liberty Mutual.
PricewaterhouseCoopers
Fidelity
Procter&Gamble
Fleet
State Street.

In business, sometimes it's who you know, not what you know. At INROADS, we've got both bases covered. For more than 33 years INROADS has been placing ambitious minority college students, like you, into summer internship opportunities with the best companies. Why? So you can learn valuable industry skills. Develop your self-confidence. Put away some hard-earned cash. And make those all-important connections! In fact, in the past three years, more than 67% of INROADS graduates have accepted full-time offers from our corporate sponsors.

INROADS

Take Charge of Your Future Today!
If you're a minority and interested in gaining a competitive edge, call 1-800-441-7411, ext. 19
or visit www.INROADS.org

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 6, 2003

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Dean mistake raises valid political issue

Democratic presidential front-runner Howard Dean took a great deal of heat during a candidates' debate in Boston Tuesday night for comments he had made previously to the Des Moines Register.

Dean promised to be the candidate "for guys with Confederate flags in their pickup trucks," a remark that at least two candidates criticized.

The Rev. Al Sharpton and North Carolina Senator John Edwards both demanded an apology from Dean. Sharpton said he didn't think Dean was a bigot, but compared the Confederate flag to the Nazi swastika. He also said Dean was "too arrogant to say 'I'm wrong,'" according to the Boston Globe.

We, at The Massachusetts Daily Collegian, believe Dean's remarks in the Register were in horrible bad taste. With that said, however, we believe the statements were in large part taken out of context, and that Dean's point on the whole regarding the issue of Democratic support in the South was valid.

Dean made the cardinal mistake that many shoot-from-the-hip types will: He did not think of the possible ramifications of what he was saying before he said it.

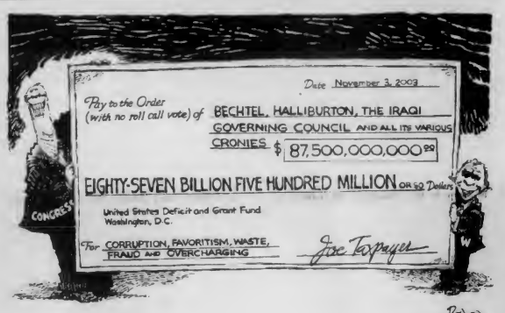
In this case, that means infuriating people in the South who despise the inherent racism the Confederate flag represents to many.

"I grew up with the very people you are talking about," Edwards told Dean, according to The Globe. "And what Al Sharpton just said is exactly right. The people that I grew up with, the vast majority of them, they don't drive around with Confederate flags on pickup trucks."

Edwards' fury represents the anger of many in the South who heard Dean's remarks, without a doubt. Within the argument Dean was making when he made the statements, however, lie a solid argument: If the Democratic Party believes it has any chance at all of winning some of the southern swing states, that went George W. Bush's way in 2000, they must tap into the core of poor white voters who have been voting Republican for years.

For decades, much of the country has voted in predictable ways. With a few notable exceptions, the United States frequently votes in regions. New England nearly always vote Democratic. Large chunks of the Midwest and South nearly always vote Republican. Those things are almost a given.

In an off-the-cuff, tasteless way, Dean drew attention to the Democratic Party's needs to address that issue.



"I think there are a lot of poor people who fly that flag because the Republicans have been dividing us by race since 1968 with their Southern-race strategy," Dean said during the debate, according to The Globe.

While that issue is entirely debatable, the states that then-Vice President Al Gore lost to Bush in 2000 by a close margin are not. Tennessee, Arkansas, Florida — are all states where Gore was within striking distance, had a few things gone different ways. Tennessee and Arkansas in particular had to sting for the Democratic Party, considering they are the homes of Gore and then-President Bill Clinton.

If the Democratic Party believes they have any chance of winning the 2004 Presidential Election, they need to keep that in mind. Dean should apologize, the Party should move on and the candidate best suited to beat Bush should be selected. It's that simple.

Information from The Boston Globe was used to write this editorial.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

Talk radio, resurrected

Mark Ostroff

Whether it's listening to Sean Hannity banter about fringe liberals trying to ban ice cream, or the out-of-the-loop Michael Savage trying to recapture his McCarthyist youth, one thing is certain — the trend of talk radio is as fresh-minded as Joe Lieberman.

With the explosion of the Internet, television, and Maxim magazine, America's X and Y generations have all but abandoned this archaic medium. But if there is one show in America that can change talk radio's downward spiral, that show is "The Phil Hendrie Show."

The New York Times describes "The Phil Hendrie Show" as "The longest-running phone prank in history." The show broadcasts out of California and, only as recently as 1999, has become nationally syndicated. Simply put, the Phil Hendrie Show is dynamic, fresh and funny.

Hendrie's main shtick is the mock "interviews" that he conducts with more than 40 characters of his own creation. To the surprise of the listener, the interviews escalate into politically incorrect absurdity, while angry callers try and set the character straight. Things get out of hand, as Hendrie's characters (played by himself) taunt the unknowing callers and continually outdo their own ludicrous remarks.

During one "interview," a lawyer named Dean Wheeler talked about his class action lawsuit against Walt Disney, claiming that the theme parks need to have "Spanish-speaking-only days." Later, it comes out that all his clients are, in fact, illegal aliens.

"If they got a Disney character walking up to them and saying 'Welcome,' they don't know what the thing is saying. It could be saying 'Welcome,' or it could be saying 'You can go straight to Hell.'"

One of his clients, he claims, panicked after thinking Peter Pan was an immigration officer, while another thought that Donald Duck was threatening to sexually assault his mother.

Angry listeners lined up to attack Wheeler, as Wheeler lired back, "The next time a man with a plastic head comes up to you and asks 'How much for your mama?' I hope you got my number."

In another "interview," Bobby Dooley, a confused housewife and founder of Mothers Against Peer Pressure, adamantly defends her son who is accused of date rape and driving an SUV into a picnic table full of mentally retarded children.

Along with the irate callers, Hendrie fights with Mrs. Dooley after she claims that it's normal for young teenage boys to ask themselves, "Should I give it to this bitch or shouldn't I?"

Phil Hendrie got his start in 1991 in a gig as a typical radio talking head. Desperate for calls, he pretended to interview an Iraqi named Raj Feneen, who started out talking about the hope for peace between Iraq and the U.S. listeners went crazy after hearing Feneen insist that all the fault lay with President Bush, who dishonored the Iraqi people by not washing Saddam's feet. The lines lit up like a Christmas tree, full of angry callers who all wanted a piece of "Feneen."

Since then, Hendrie has used this format, which has even been loosely adapted by Comedy Central as the basis for the show "Crank Yankers."

The show, however, isn't entirely based on phone pranks. Hendrie talks about his take on politics, current events and even sports. The overly American "Joe Dickhead," and his serious sidekick "The Professor," give sports analyses and NFL picks — sometimes to the odd background of farm animal noises, while Bud Dickman announces his favorite NASCAR accidents of the week.

During "News that Professional Football Players Can Understand," the news of the day is dumbed down to the level of absurdity and, at times, the news anchor is an impersonation of Warren Sapp.

"The Phil Hendrie Show" currently has a small hold on New England markets, but hopefully will grow with time. The show can be heard from 10 p.m. to 1 a.m., Monday through Friday on AM 810 out of Schenectady, NY and AM 1310 out of Worcester from 11 p.m. to 1 a.m.

The show comes as a breath of fresh air to those who are tired of the ongoing and tiring drab of typical talk radio. For once, new generations of Americans can switch their dials to AM radio, without having to hear rants about the moral collapse of American youth or the coming liberal insurgency. And for those tired of the consistent "shock-jock" routine, "The Phil Hendrie Show" is yet another reason to shut off the TV and turn on the radio.

For once, new generations of Americans can switch their dials to AM radio, without having to hear rants about the moral collapse of American youth or the coming liberal insurgency.

Information for this editorial was taken from Nytimes.com and Philhendrieshow.com was used in this column.

Mark Ostroff is a Collegian columnist.

Today's role models disappoint

Peter Trovato

Charles Barkley, retired NBA star, may have been right when he said, "I am not a role model." Certainly, he made a good point, implying that professional athletes are not in charge of raising the youth of America. His statement was controversial: Don't public figures have some obligation to be upstanding citizens? They are on TV and radio, in the newspapers and plastered all over the Internet. It almost seems inevitable for young minds to not look up to these people. After all, they look up to everybody.

But everywhere you turn, public figures, leaders in their respective field, are constantly letting us down.

Professional athletics is usually the 'go-to' on this issue. And lately, unfortunately, the stars of the field, court and ice haven't countered the stereotype.

I'm pretty sure Don Zimmer is still picking grass out of his teeth from when Pedro Martinez tossed the 72 year-old Yankee coach to the ground, but then again maybe Zimmer shouldn't have charged like a Pamplonian bull. Hockey player, Danny Heatley, last season's Rookie of the Year in the NHL, will face vehicular homicide charges after killing a fellow teammate when he lost control of his Ferrari that he was driving recklessly. Then, of course, there is Kobe. Whether he is guilty or not, over the next year, more fans will see Kobe Bryant entering a courtroom than entering the Staples Center.

But it is not just athletics. It is hard to find a good leader anywhere. Even a form of our culture supposedly rooted in peace and charity, is struggling: organized religion. The Roman Catholic Church has just started on the long road of recovery from a scandal strong enough to crack stained glass. In Boston alone, 500 people claimed to have been sexually abused by priests; entire families were taken advantage of by men they put their utmost faith into. It cost the Archdiocese of Boston $85 million to stitch up that wound.

Speaking of putting faith in men, politics has produced some swell role models in recent years. President Bush Jr. is sure doing a fine job of proving politicians are honest, hard working men who are always looking out for their constituents. Yet, there are no weapons of mass destruction found in Iraq, thousands of American jobs lost each month and a national deficit's growing at an exponential rate.

But hey, if you ask Bush (or watch Fox News), everything is fine. And maybe George W. is getting a bad rap. Certainly, Bill Clinton wasn't the picture of morality, but at least when Clinton lied, it didn't cost the lives of hundreds of U.S. soldiers.

Athletics. Religion. Politics. All producers of public figures and potential role models ... and all with major issues.

How about the business world? There has to be some honest business leaders, true representatives of what it means to make it in this country.

Athletes aren't role models. Neither are political or business leaders, or at least they shouldn't be.

Wishful thinking.

Enron started off the marathon of high profile corporate crimes. Martha Stewart decided to run a stretch. And on Tuesday, Putnam Investments got into the thick of things. Putnam, the fifth largest mutual fund company in the nation, faces fraud charges for engaging in market timing, an investing method all but made illegal in the trading business. Account managers, put in charge of millions of dollars in state-worker pension money and family college tuition funds, skimming off the top to make themselves some extra cash. It is sad. Hard-working families being burned by trusted business officials.

It may be a harsh generalization to say all popular leaders are failing at setting a good example. Surely, there are some using their status to make a positive influence; Paul Pierce of the Boston Celtics is one example. Also, just recently, entertainer Puff Daddy raised over two million dollars for children's charities. Actor, Paul Newman, is constantly using his money to help those less fortunate. And despite the staggering statistics in Boston, more priests are honest people than sex offenders.

However, there are a select few that ruin it for the bunch, and they happen to be extremely popular. Barkley was right: Athletes aren't role models. Neither are political or business leaders, or at least, they shouldn't be.

There are millions of other people who represent success in this country; they work as teachers, nurses, firefighters and engineers — the true American Dream. But they don't have sneaker contracts, insider trading information or a vested interest in Middle-Eastern oil reserves. They don't have their own Internet sites; they aren't featured on page six, and they aren't campaigning for re-election.

Newspapers don't run full page spreads on them. Television stations don't drool over them. They are unmarketable castaways of society. True role models, but forgotten because they don't sell, or should I say lie, cheat and steal.

Information from the Boston Globe was used in this column.

Peter Trovato is a Collegian columnist.

This isn't a protest against reading

Andrew Merritt

It happens at the beginning of every semester. Students make the journey to a small, little-used corner of campus to buy their textbooks. They walk in full of vigor, ready to begin the new semester with high hopes and new (or used) textbooks. They walk out feeling like they've gotten the fleecing of a lifetime from the very place that's supposed to help them earn money later in life.

We all rant and rave about our textbooks, even more so at the end of the semester, when the nice gal or guy at the return desk hands us a small enough fraction on our books that the economics professor who wrote it is quietly cackling from within. And it's not fair, not at all, that anyone should pay so much money for what we all know will be a three-month rental. But it's a fact of life, and railing against the system for something that hasn't changed in years, and won't change anytime soon, well, it's one of the few causes on campus that just ain't worth it. But there is an alternative, an unpopular, seldom heard option.

Blame your professor.

Not in every class mind you. There are plenty of courses here at the University where students either don't buy books at all, or get more than their money's worth out of what they do have to buy. I personally keep many of the politics and literature books that I buy because they interest me.

But having walked out of an astronomy exam recently, and realizing that the two-hour study bender I enjoyed at 6 a.m. the morning of the exam, where I rifled through the old, thick textbook that cost me enough money to consider it an investment was a complete mistake, it's hard to ignore the fact that there's a target for this racket we don't often pay attention to.

Certainly, professors should ask that students buy some books that will be used in class. Drama professors teaching a course in Shakespeare shouldn't feel that asking their students to purchase a copy of "Hamlet" is an outright dictatorial insult. What I propose is merely that professors take a little more care in selecting which books students will have to read. We all know that the CD-ROMs that come with the textbooks are useful roughly 0.5 percent of the time, so maybe professors can throw a simple note in the syllabus: "Hey, buying a brand new copy of the book complete with the CD-ROM will let you play fun biology games and see pretty pictures, but it certainly won't affect whether or not you can explain a myocardial infarction."

Or simply categorize the books. Sure, there's going to be a main textbook every student needs to read in order to get a complete understanding of the concepts. But is that colorful biography of Louis Pasteur really going to help out the ol' GPA? If not, instructors would do their young followers well just to provide an indication of how vital the book will be. Most of the folks here at the ol' State U. are smart enough to realize that passing a class will, in fact, require some reading. Those who don't get it, well, they're not long for this place anyway. But rather than send all 300 doe-eyed freshmen scampering to the dire straits of the week after the textbook bonanza, why not plan out your course so that it's real clear a. how much students will need each overpriced textbook, and b. exactly when they'll need it. Sure, including a class schedule helps, but some of the students who walk through the hallowed halls of this fine institution don't have time to breathe in that first week of class, let alone notice that the $65 3-D pop-up human anatomy diagram book won't be necessary until the second month of class.

And of course, professors, include your own work in the syllabus. You busted your hump to write it, and if it pertains to the class, have your students go out and buy it. You deserve the extra money — without floating into an entirely different kind of opinion column, you certainly don't make enough for what you do — but you're not getting royalties from the century-old physics book that's still debating that whole "round world" theory. Don't require it if it's only going to lighten students' wallets and wear down on their bookbags' shoulder straps.

This isn't a protest against reading. We all need to do more of it here, and coming from someone who also busts his hump to produce some kind of contribution to the daily reading milieu — feel free to flip to the back page after you're done here — it's not lost on me that our society is growing illiterate. But plenty of professors are discovering the joys of online reading material, and maybe that's the perfect place to make available the 15-page chapter on earthworms and why they'll rise up and rule the world.

I'm not asking professors to stop requiring reading material, and I'm not going to even try to recommend reducing prices to the wonderful folks over at Follett. I'd just like to request, on behalf of all the other people I see walking out of the Textbook Annex every September and February looking like someone just kicked their dog, that the required reading list on syllabi focus not so much on getting every book available, but getting the right one, the one that will help that poor student tomorrow morning in the middle of another all-nighter.

Andrew Merritt is a Collegian columnist.

www.dailycollegian.com

Employment at the North Pole

Rachel Smith

The holiday season is almost upon us, and in celebration of this most festive time, I'm writing a letter to Santa. Since I'm Jewish, Santa Claus didn't come to my house very often, so now that the economy is in a recession, I've decided to cash my Yuletide chips in and make up lost time with the gift-bearer himself, Mr. Claus.

There are a truckload of things I'd like under my tree this year, so I had some trouble narrowing down my wish list. Joe Lieberman elected president, a new car, and world peace rank as just a few of the wishes topping my list. However, bearing in mind that I'm a senior, and considering the tight job market I'll be diving into next year, I decided to write a different letter to Santa than I'd originally intended: I'm writing a cover letter to Old St. Nick to which I'll attach my resume.

I'm still working on it, but here's what I have so far:

Santa Claus, Inc.
123 Yuletide Lane
North Pole, Arctic Circle

Dear Mr. Claus:

After carefully researching the North Pole, I believe that I am a perfect fit with your firm. I look fantastic in green, I am only five feet tall, and I love to tinker. Furthermore, as a Jewish American woman, I can bring much-needed diversity to your team of wood-working professionals.

Although my work experience is largely in the public relations and journalism fields, I can bring a variety of skills that will enhance the toy-making environment. First of all, although I am vertically challenged by human standards, I am taller than the average elf and can reach important toy-making materials stored on the top shelves. Secondly, as a current resident of New England, I can easily adapt to cold winters and months of snow.

Concerning my degree, I am a legal studies and political science double major at the University of Massachusetts, and my extracurricular activities include the University Democrats, The Massachusetts Daily Collegian and making merry. I also have a minor in Japanese and a certificate in international relations. Additionally, my high school class voted me "Most Likely to be Jolly." My educational background and personal interests will be a perfect match with your corporation.

Bearing in mind that I'm a senior, and considering the tight job market I'll be diving into next year ... I'm writing a cover letter to Old St. Nick to which I'll attach my resume.

As a young professional with a background in international politics, I can assist and advise reindeer transportation technicians in matters relating to cross-continental travel, foreign customs and so forth. Furthermore, I can use legal research and writing experience to prevent lawsuits over defective toys and cases of non-merriment.

Regarding my experience as a public relations professional: if you consider the large number of American children who do not believe in Santa Claus, and those abroad who do not yet know that you exist, clearly a solid PR campaign is long overdue. Furthermore, the North Pole needs a Children Outreach center to ensure that Buddhist, Jewish and Muslim children are not left out of the loop.

I have put a proposal together that I am attaching to my resume. It includes a Web site, where children can electronically transmit wish lists and can check their status (naughty or nice) in real time. I also propose that the North Pole embark on a major ad campaign, targeting the 18-24 year old demographic called, "Got Merry?" We could hold photo shoots with swimsuit models and sports celebrities donning long white beards and rosy cheeks. I believe this is an excellent way to secure control of the tinkering and joy distribution markets.

In conclusion, I bring a wide breadth of professional and educational knowledge to the North Pole, coupled with a keen personal interest in holiday cheer and plywood. I look forward to becoming a part of your team of elves and flying deer in the land of enchantment.

You can reach me any time at home or on my mobile telephone. I am looking forward to discussing my resume with you further.

Sincerely,
Rachel E. Smith

There it is, my one wish this year: a job. I hope this job pans out, because according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, jobs are not only hard to come by, but they pay less for longer hours. The average American is earning $.01 less per hour than 10 years ago, and working more hours per week. I hope Santa offers vacation time in his benefits package.

Like many college students, my search does not end here, with my first cover letter. I'll send out many more before I graduate, and hopefully I'll find something. In the mean time, I'll be waiting to hear back from Santa.

Rachel Smith is a Collegian columnist.

Gay and Episcopalian debate

Emily O'Brien

Surprisingly, it was the sports arena of the University of New Hampshire that provided the setting in which a historic event, the consecration of a homosexual bishop, took place this past Sunday.

Bishop V. Gene Robinson, of the New Hampshire Diocese, is the first openly gay member of the Anglican community to reach such a high level within the church. This controversial issue could very well lead to a schism between the Church of England and the United States Episcopal Church. The fracturing within the church could inevitably result in the breakdown of the overall unification of the Anglican Church and all its respected branches.

In order to fully understand the controversy behind the consecration of Bishop Robinson, one must first comprehend the fundamentals of Anglicanism. The most important element of Anglicanism is that it is a very diverse and welcoming religion, in which a variety of walks of life are accepted. Although a faction of Christianity, unlike many other Christian religions, the Anglican religion does not focus on one centralized power, as for example Catholicism does on the Vatican. Thus, although Anglicanism is in fact one religion, it is broken down into 37 independent churches that together make up the Anglican Communion, which consists in totality of approximately 70 million members. The Episcopal Church of the United States is just one of the 37 churches that exist internationally. According to U.S. Episcopalian Church law, it is up to clergy in individual dioceses to elect their church leaders, such as their bishop. After this election, it is at the national convention, in which this election is confirmed and the individual is eventually consecrated.

It was at the national convention this past August in Minneapolis where the Episcopal Church of the United States confirmed the election of then Reverend V. Gene Robinson. Although Robinson was elected based on the qualities he possessed while being an effective leader in the ministry for close to three decades, it was his personal life, and the 14 years he had been committed to his partner, that overshadowed those achievements in the eyes of many conservative Anglicans.

The relationship Anglicanism has with the existence of homosexuality is perplexing, to say the least. According to the Anglican Church, homosexuality is fundamentally wrong, as is stated in a 1998 resolution on human sexuality: "the only type of appropriate sexual relationship is a life-long marriage between a man and a woman, with abstinence the only option for those not called to marriage." However, after examining this statement, it is evident that there are a variety of contradictions if we apply this to the reality of the Anglicanism today. First of all, the clause "a lifelong marriage" essentially goes against what Anglicanism was built on, because Henry VIII created the Church of England in order to get an annulment from one of his wives. Thus, the idea of divorce is not vehemently opposed in the Anglican Church. Secondly, the statement in this resolution is basically acknowledging that homosexuality can exist; however, those who are not 'called' to marriage cannot partake in sexual acts.

The relationship that Anglicanism has with the existence of homosexuality is perplexing, to say the least.

The difficult task in trying to comprehend the view of the Anglican Church on the issue of homosexuality is trying to discover a consensus within the religion. The disparity between the beliefs of various churches and even dioceses fractures the power behind the concept of unity.

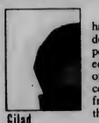
On one hand, there are many people who support the rights of homosexuals within the Anglican religion. A variety of gay and lesbian advocacy groups exist, and many dioceses authorize same-sex blessings. However, on the other hand, many people within the Anglican community condemn the existence of homosexuality, claiming it is clearly a sin according to the Bible ... and many Anglicans threaten to cut ties with the American Church over the consecration of Robinson. There is even a division between the leaders of the various churches over the issue of Robinson. Although Bishop Frank Griswold, the leader of the U.S. Episcopal Church supports the consecration of Robinson, reports say Rowan Williams, the Archbishop of Canterbury believe it is putting the existence of the Anglican Communion in jeopardy.

Williams may be correct that the community is being put in jeopardy; Bishop V. Gene Robinson is simply a scapegoat in that unfortunate reality. If it is the sexual orientation of one man, who has devoted the greater part of his life to his religion, is credited with the split of the Anglican Communion, then it is evident that we have not even scratched the surface of the issues facing Anglicanism today.

Information from CNN.com was used in this column.

Emily O'Brien is a Collegian columnist.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR



MOTHER EXPRESSES GRATITUDE FOR ALTRUISM OF STUDENTS

There are events and moments in one's life that truly point out what a great place the University of Massachusetts is and what wonderful students we have in this community. One of those events recently occurred for me, not, as university administrator, but rather as a parent. My son and his girlfriend were attending a UMass hockey game the evening of Oct. 24, when James had a significant insulin reaction. In a matter of moments James went from being involved in a lively conversation to collapsing on the floor of the Mullins Center convulsing and trying to make his way to the concession window for food. While there was medical assistance, (Dr. Abel who was there watching the game) the true heroes were the students working in the concession stand who marshaled an abundance of food and soda for James, without question of payment. The other heroes were the EMTs, also students, who staff many events at Mullins and across campus. They were at the ready and demonstrated professionalism in their assessment while assisting James.

As a mother, I am grateful to the students of UMass, both the concessionaires for their quick response that was vital and to the EMTs for the assistance they rendered. As the director of University Health Service, I have many occasions to be proud of our students and honored to be part of the UMass community. Now even more, our entire family and I want to publicly thank all who assisted James. You are true heroes and demonstrate in a visible way what it means to be part of UMass.

Bernette A. Melby
Director
University Health Services

In defense of Zionist movement

Gilad Skolnick

Such a feat had never been done before. A people separated thousands of years ago come together from all over the world and create a thriving democracy. Holocaust survivors from Auschwitz, together with Jews escaping oppression in Yemen, came together to rebuild a nation.

Oppressed Jews have been escaping persecution and returning to their homeland from the 1800s to today in a movement known as Zionism. From those escaping the Nazi's to the 900,000 Jews expelled from North African and Arab countries in the 1950s, Jews from every country and every continent returned. Since the beginning, peace has been a main goal ... and still is to this day. This has been quite the challenging task.

A Hamas spokesman recently said, "We will not hesitate to spill Jewish blood on the streets of Tel Aviv, Jerusalem, Beersheba and Haifa."

I may not be a history major, but this seems a bit on the racist side.

As Mark Twain personally observed, what is now Israel in the 19th century was "a desolate country whose soil is rich enough, but is given over wholly to weeds ... a silent mournful expanse ... a desolation."

The Jewish immigrants built factories and farms that caused the economy to bustle. The sudden availability of jobs employed the small local Arab population and encouraged the Arab migrant workers from other areas to move into modern day Israel for work.

The Romans named this land Palestine in their effort to erase the Jewish connection to the land. After crushing the Jewish attempt to gain independence in 70 A.D., the Romans destroyed their Temple in Jerusalem, massacred thousands upon thousands of Jews and expelled the rest. The land of Judea, Samaria and the Galilee were renamed Palestine after Israel's ancient foe, a Phoenician tribe called the Phillistiens. Jewish cities such as Shechem were renamed Roman names, such as Nablus, and all Jews were banned from entering Jerusalem. Despite this, Jews have had a continuous presence in this land for almost four millennia.

The first time Arabs living in "Palestine" identified with the term was in 1964 when the Palestinian Liberation Organization was founded by Yasser Arafat and aimed at committing terrorism to destroy the state of Israel. The PLO's express purpose, in the words of its own leaders, was to "push the Jews into the sea."

There was no aim to have the West Bank or Gaza become a Palestinian state; they simply wanted to turn Israel into a Palestinian state. In the following years, Israel acquired the West Bank and the Gaza strip in a war with Jordan and Egypt. The fact remains that there has never ever been any attempt to have an independent country named "Palestine" until a few decades ago, and not one Palestinian official has ever even made a declaration of statehood. In fact, the term "Palestine" is incorrect — unless one is referring to what Israel was called before 1948 by the British — as over the past million years of human existence there has never been an independent nation of "Palestine."

Negotiations for an eventual peace began in 1993. Despite decades of Palestinian terrorism and countless suicide bombings, Israel offered over 95 percent of the West Bank and the Gaza Strip for peace to Arafat, who not only rejected it in 2000, but also didn't even offer a counteroffer.

Now the question arises, what should Israel do? While the Palestinian Authority refuses to even negotiate for peace and works together with terrorist organizations aiming to "spill Jewish blood," it cannot be a partner for peace. In the meantime, a fence is being erected in an attempt to stop the infiltration of terrorists seeking to cause more death and destruction.

The Palestinian Authority has even admitted they started the current wave of violence known as the "Intifada."

"Whoever thinks the Intifada broke out because of the despised Sharon's visit to the Al-Aqsa Mosque is wrong ... This intifada was planned in advance, ever since President Arafat's return from the Camp David negotiations," admitted Palestinian Communications Minister 'Imad Al-Faluji ("Al-Safir," Mar. 3, 2001, trans. MEMRI).

Nazi Germany had a term for an area cleaned of Jews known as "Judenrein." Thus, it's a bit on the ironic side that one of the Palestinian's main complaints against Israel is the existence of Jewish villages in Judea and Samaria or West Bank, which are often referred to as "settlements." They demand that these Jewish villages be uprooted, or in other words, that this territory be emptied of Jews. Fifty years after the Third Reich is defeated, there is another people whose goal is to make a certain piece of land Jew-free. Ethnic cleansing?

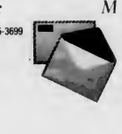
Today, Israel is surrounded by terrorists who aim to eliminate it, and by countries that don't recognize its existence. It's hard to believe, but there are even people in the United States or on this very campus who are against Zionism, the Jewish National Liberation Movement of their homeland. As Martin Luther King himself said at a speech in Harvard, "When people criticize Zionists, they mean Jews; you are talking anti-Semitism."

Thanks to its ability to defend itself and U.S. support, Israel has been able to stave off attempts by its neighbors to annihilate it time and time again, and has been able to prevent another holocaust from occurring. There is one country and only one country in the world whose neighbors have sought to annihilate it and its people for over 50 years: Israel.

Information from http://server12.easyup.net/mfa/incitement.htm, http://www.memri.org, and http://www.bridgesforpeace.com was used in this editorial.

Gilad Skolnick is a Collegian columnist

Submit a letter or opinion



In order to be considered for publication, all submissions must include the writer's name, address, and telephone number or e-mail address. Letters should be between 200-400 words in length and addressed as 'Letters to the Editor.' Commentaries should be no more than 750 words and addressed as 'Editorial/Opinion.' Submissions may be edited for clarity and condensed. You may write, fax, or e-mail your submissions to:

E-mail: editorial@dailycollegian.com

Fax: 413-545-3699

Mail: Letters to the Editor 113 Campus Center Way Amherst, MA 01003

Common senior sentiment

Frances Carr

My mother, Ellen Gilliam, attended the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill between the years of 1969 and 1973. In December 1972, in the fall semester of her senior year, she wrote the following column for the Daily Tar Heel entitled, "Sneezes, wheezes and yawns."

I stumbled upon this recently while looking through her old scrapbook. I was completely floored. The content and the tone are so right on with what my senior colleagues and I are going through. This piece stands the test of time. It is as relevant to those of us who are experiencing senioritis as it was in 1972 when she wrote it. I share this with you, hoping that you find it as entertaining as I do ...

I'm a senior, an expert in selective reading. I mean, after four years you know what's necessary and what's a waste of time.

A semester starting off with a bang ... has degenerated into a sneeze, a wheeze and a yawn. Nourished by fresh experience, an "adventure-filled" summer in New York behind me, I came back to Chapel Hill in September beaming with cosmopolitan inspiration and a conviction to read the books, write the papers and still make it a memorable senior year.

Jeeze, I was good at first. All that energy. I could ride my bike a mile and a half to campus each morning, sit through four hours of class every day, spend two or three hours at the Daily Tar Heel office, drink beer until midnight ... and still read the books and write the papers.

Parties and concerts, trips to the beach and mountains, hikes in the woods, five-mile afternoon bike rides, daily consumption of a couple of magazines and newspapers. There was time for it all. Everything fit.

"Let's get a beer."

"Where's the free flick?"

"Dick Gregory tonight."

"Be sure and get the playmakers tickets."

It all came, and I always went. So I couldn't read every word of the history assignment. I'm a senior, an expert in selective reading. I mean, after four years you know what's necessary and what's a waste of time.

"Let's get a couple of beers."

"Jackson Browne? Sure, why not!"

"Ride to Raleigh to meet Arlis Pettijohn? Hot Damn. Ready in five minutes."

"How about Dunkin Donuts? It's still open."

Vitamin C plus iron, just a little vitamin deficiency. Two classes out of three ain't bad. This weekend I'll start on my English incomplete for last fall. I've already read the novels, and I like my professor. Should enjoy writing that dreaded paper.

"Get some beer and bring it to my place."

"Pass it this way. Who's got a light?"

"Don't forget King Nyle's party."

"Kuka Racha Koo. I missed the Boop-La-Boop. Why don't they close Franklin Street off every weekend?"

Missed that English quiz, but I'll make an A on the next one. One of these days I'll make it to the 9:30 Tuesday/Thursday before 10:00. I'm a senior; I should be able to hear that goddamned alarm clock by now. The midterm. Hmmm ... who took good notes in there? Just half a hit ... Is that the sun already?

"Nixon at the Greensboro Airport? Jesse will be there too? Can't miss the making of history."

"Here's to the opening of Town Hall."

"How about Elton John in Charlotte?"

"Well, I'm supposed to have a paper due tomorrow, but O.K. You're on."

Should I finish the book that was due last week or start the one that was due yesterday? "I know I never come home Mom. It's all the work I have to do. I'm a senior. Things are tough your last year." Thanksgiving. I'll make it all up over Thanksgiving. Four nice long days with just enough time out for turkey with the family.

"New Riders? What time do the tickets say?"

"No, I haven't finished 'Fear and Loathing in Las Vegas' but I will over Thanksgiving."

"Is there a late movie in town anywhere?"

"Miss Teenage America ... Can't miss the coronation."

—Ellen Gilliam, December 5, 1972

This article has been reprinted with the permission from the UNC Chapel Hill Daily Tar Heel.

Frannie Carr is a Collegian columnist.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

A REVOLUTION

All's well that ends well

By Matthew M. Burke
Collegian Staff

'The Matrix Revolutions'
Directed by Andy and Larry Wachowski
Starring Keanu Reeves, Carrie-Anne Moss, Laurence Fishburn
Warner Bros.
Rated R
129 mins.
Grade A+

Andy and Larry Wachowski had a problem. After the phenomenal success of "The Matrix" had rocket powered the names of these sibling writer/directors to the paramount of critical acclaim in Hollywood, they still had two more films to make in the Matrix trilogy. When dealing with such amazing expectations, sometimes it can be easy to fold under the pressure.

Then came "Matrix Reloaded." A sophomore slump could easily ruin their ever so fragile careers, and although they avoided such an unfortunate demise, it was a narrow escape. The film's success was primarily based on the buzz created by its predecessor. The special effects were unreal, but many who saw "Reloaded" felt that something wasn't right.

The "Reloaded" piece of the puzzle didn't quite fit, as it seemed the two brothers had begun to veer away from an action movie and toward an intellectual thriller. The ending was climactic, yet it left viewers sitting in their seats wondering, "That's it?" The picture stranded moviegoers, and inevitably left them curious as to whether the first film was a fluke.

Well, have no fear about the third installment of this war for mankind.

"Matrix Revolutions" is an amazing film and could quite possibly be the best movie of the year.

"Revolutions" picks up right where "Reloaded" ended. We find Neo (Keanu Reeves) sapped of all of his powers and trapped in a realm between the Matrix and the Machine World. Trinity (Carrie-Anne Moss) and Morpheus (Laurence Fishburne) must find a way to rescue their dear friend, and alleged savior, from this coma of sorts or all hope is lost. They consult the Oracle (Mary Alice) as to what the proper plan should be for rescue, but when it comes down to it, Trinity's love for Neo is all that can save him.

With Neo back in the real world, the three companions join up with a ship full of Zion's best. Niobe (Jada Pinkett Smith) must pilot one of the two ships back to Zion, the last human stronghold, for one final stand against the ensuing machine onslaught that has already begun there. Neo must take the Oracle's advice to heart and decide what path he shall pursue on his way to fulfilling his destiny. He decides that he and Trinity must take the other ship and go

Continued on page 8

Fans enter 'The Matrix'

By Cameron J. Woods
Collegian Staff

Roald Dahl may have rolled over in his grave, when Laurence Fishburne first asked Keanu Reeves if he wanted to know "just how deep the rabbit hole went." Then again, maybe not. What is certain though is that the Wachowski brothers changed the world of sci-fi/action films with their 1999 blockbuster "The Matrix."

Audiences were wowed with the revolutionary special affects and the witty philosophical dialogue. But beyond the flickering lights on the screen and the image of Reeves fighting for the survival of humanity is a culture of individuals who saw "The Matrix" as more than a film.

Seeing Reeve's character Neo spend most of the night staring at a green cursor, struck a chord with insomniac malcontent technology junkies (there are more of them than one would think) everywhere. Watching this hero go to a meaningless job everyday only to find out that reality as he knows it, is a lie, was a dream put on to film for so many who ponder the meaning of why they get up every morning. After the first half an hour of the trilogy, there could be heard the workings of mental wheels, turning over all the little "glitches" that we encounter in our day to day lives.

For those who could almost legally declare their permanent address with a URL, this movie was a manifesto of the possibilities of a separate world. It was a rally cry to these typical loners to unite.

And unite they have. Simply search the Internet and you will find groups and sites filled with message board conversations that elaborate and explore this realm of mind.

What makes this group of devoted believers more than mere fans of "The Matrix" is their dedication to the exploration of this new world. Animated Web-toons, Web sites crammed with chapters and chapters of fan fiction, all leading to one of two ends — the ultimate salvation or destruction of mankind. For many, this fantasy world is intoxicating and has caused a few creative minds to be overwhelmed with its possibilities. For those who were touched by this film, it is more than a movie; it is a codex of philosophy and belief that show how to properly view 'reality.'

With a script that drew on Platonic philosophy, Greek mythology, Buddhism and postmodernism, the ideas expressed in these films were not figments and whims of the Wachowski brothers imaginations, but ideas that many people already live their lives by.

"There are hundreds of 'Matrix' [Web sites] out there, and they're not about how cute Keanu Reeves looks," said Glenn Yeffeth, editor of the book "Taking the Red Pill: Science, Philosophy and Religion in The

Continued on page 8

EVERYTHING THAT HAS A BEGINNING HAS AN END

Latest film captures old Disney magic

By Lauren Freeman
Collegian Staff

'Brother Bear'
Directed by Aaron Blaise, Robert Walker
Starring Joaquin Phoenix, Jeremy Suarez
Walt Disney Pictures
Rated G
85 mins.
Grade A-

Thank God — or in the case of "Brother Bear," thank the 'Spirit in the Sky' — because Disney finally remembered something vital from the days of Mickey Mouse cartoons. Kids love animals. And talking-animals are pretty cool too.

In 1919, the father of animation, Winsor McKay, had Gertie the Dinosaur. Soon after, Otto Messmer gave the public Felix the Cat. Now-a-days Jim Davis has Garfield and Dilbert has Dogbert. The list goes on and on.

Walt Disney wasn't slow to figure it out. After all, Mickey Mouse quickly became the first Disney icon with his 1928 premiere in "Steamboat Willy." Animal tales ranging from "Dumbo," "Lady and the Tramp," "The Rescuers Down Under," "The Jungle Book" and "The Lion King" have followed behind, creating for Disney a grandiose canon of animal-lovers' favorites.

Recently, Disney has made an effort to re-market the princess stories. This is a sure sign that interest in these lovely ladies is dwindling. Cinderella, Snow White and Ariel are collecting dust, while "The Jungle Book's" Baloo, Stitch of "Lilo and Stitch" fame and now add "Brother Bear's" Koda to the list, are 'bearly' sitting still.

Though there is an undeniable draw for audiences to the damsel-in-distress stories, these gender-biased tales about a female needing a male to save her life don't exactly jive with the independent women of modern times. Perhaps, then, Disney is on to something more universal with animal stories like "Brother Bear."

What do the words 'animal' and 'animation' have in common? If you guessed the root 'ani,' you get an A.

The Greek root 'ani' means movement and/or life. Obviously animals are alive, and they move. Animation is a means of making the non-moving (illustrations) appear to move, or live. Animating animals is therefore a double positive.

In all seriousness, it is an extremely difficult task for animators to mimic or recreate the movements of real, living animals. In the case of "Brother Bear," it required a vast amount of research. Directors Aaron Blaise and Robert Walker, along with the "Brother Bear" creative team journeyed to national parks like Denali, Sequoia, Katmai, Yosemite and Yellowstone to study animal movements. Likewise, animal movement and anatomy experts, professors, preservationists, artists as well as real bear cubs and other quadrupeds frequented the Florida-based studio.

According to the press release, the research was inextricable. Alex Kupershmidt, supervising animator for bear cub Koda said in the release, "Every animal presents its own difficulties. My job as animator is to find out what it is about the way they move that make them distinct. That's what gets exaggerated during the animation process.

"Bears tend to rock from leg to leg when they walk. Their legs spread wide, because they are so massive. It appears clumsy, but it's just the way they transfer their weight. Our starting point on this film was to watch a lot of documentaries about bears," he said.

COURTESY WALT DISNEY

Though the songs are unbearable, "Brother Bear" is a triumph for Disney.

However, not everything about this film is based in reality. For one thing, bears can't talk (at least to humans) and in "Brother Bear" certain bears, like Koda, just won't shut up.

"Brother Bear" tells the story of a young Native American man named Kenai, whose vocals are provided by Joaquin Phoenix, living at the end of the Ice Age in the Northwest.

Kenai receives his coming-of-age totem in the shape of the bear, which represents love. He is to use this totem as a means of guiding the rest of his life but has mixed feelings about the totem when he is humiliated and teased by his older brother Denahi, voiced by Jason Raize.

Things get really messy when eldest brother Sitka (D.W. Sweeney) sacrifices his life to protect the lives of his younger brothers from an attacking bear. When Kenai seeks the bear to avenge Sitka's death, the spirit of the mountain chooses an entirely unexpected path for Kenai. The young man is turned into a bear.

The remainder of the film follows Kenai and his newfound companion, Koda, brought to life by Jeremy Suarez, as they trek through the icy tundra to the salmon run, and to the mountain where the spirits have promised to restore Kenai's human form.

Following closely behind Kenai and Koda is Denahi, who is certain that the human Kenai has been killed by a bear, and believes the transformed Kenai to be the culprit ... Confused? Maybe not, but some of the youngest kids in the audience were.

However, the confusion was minimal and shouldn't be a discouragement for anyone looking to take his or her favorite tikes to see this movie. When the storyline gets unclear, a pair of slapstick moose played by Rick Muranis and Dave Thomas, may hold a child's short attention span.

The scenery is expansive and colorful. It will give you the chills. Unfortunately, the songs will give you chills too ... but not the good kind. Unlike most of Disney's classic tales, this film fails where many of the studios modern animated efforts have failed before it. The songs simply aren't good enough.

In "Brother Bear," Tina Turner and Phil Collins sing lofty tunes that encompass every possible meaning one might derive from the film. There are no implicit meanings here folks. There is nothing catchy or rhythmic to these songs. They are dull, flat and trying too hard to impress.

A child who happens to be an opera aficionado may shed a tear during the Tina Turner song that plays over a naturalistic montage of the mountains and valleys surrounding the story ... but most children will just cry unhappily until one of the moose does another yoga move.

Yup, the moose do yoga. And for that reason, if no other, this is a film that is recommended to the young and young at heart alike.

Hip-hop play looks at class

HartBeat Ensemble Theater Presents: 'Graves'
Thurs. Nov. 6
UMass Amherst Free

"Today is the day to be, live, love, listen, understand, sing, dance, laugh — change." The editors of the journal Rethinking Marxism present the HartBeat Ensemble, tonight at 7:30 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom.

The three-member troupe, based in Hartford, Conn., aims at revealing the universal stratification between race and class. Inspired by a television documentary and a 13-month interview process in the greater Hartford area, "Graves" has evolved into a theatrical piece with the objective of voicing the political and economic struggles of the second poorest city in the United States.

While the setting does play a large role in the efforts set out by the group to promote change in their locale, "HartBeat is dedicated to creating new works that challenge the status-quo," as the show's press release boasts, and is therefore relevant on a national spectrum.

"Graves" is based on a modern-day take on John Steinbeck's classic, "The Grapes of Wrath," which is the depiction of the lives of ordinary people striving to preserve their humanity in the face of social and economic desperation.

"So often, we are bombarded with the themes of race, gender, and ethnicity in entertainment. We rarely see content based on the issue of class differences, which is what this performance aims at providing," said Julia Rosenblatt, one of the core members of the ensemble.

The play is about the city, Gregory Tate, co-founder of HartBeat, says, but it's also much more.

"It illustrates the 'race to the bottom' — a national phenomenon that effect's everyone," said Tate.

This rendition of "The Grapes of Wrath" may appear quite distinct from the book most are familiar with reading in high school, as the group employs a progressive hip-hop method as the means for communicating with their audience.

"We can use the commercialization of hip-hop as a tool to educate the youths of today about important social issues that they will be making decisions about tomorrow," said Rosenblatt. "We aren't locked in to one style; we just try to use the best method in which the story can be heard."

While this is the HartBeat Ensembles first main stage production, they have a strong background in the performing arts as members of the San Francisco Mime Troupe. Rosenblatt, Steven Ginsburg and Gregory R. Tate were previously touring in and around Hartford, engaged in improvisational street theater and rally marches for the issues affecting the area.

The group has also become involved in teaching educational workshops, which use theater as a device for social and political change.

-Eva Piccozzi

The BLUE WALL PUB

THIS WEEK at The BLUE WALL PUB

MONDAY — UMass/WRNX Basketball Show
Karaoke 8-11
Monday Night Football- 10 cent Wings

TUESDAY — Open Mic from 8-12

WEDNESDAY — DJ-Rhythm Systems

THURSDAY — 5-College Dance Sponsored by SGA/Auxiliary Services

FRIDAY — DJ-Aquarius

SATURDAY — Squash
Jazz Guys

LIVE MUSIC starts at 9:00PM.

OPEN MIC starts at 7:00PM. The Sign-Up sheet goes out at 6:00PM. Bring your talent and your friends and your instruments. We'll provide the stage and sound equipment and 20 minutes for you to knock'em dead!

ALL MUSICAL STYLES are encouraged to participate!

AS ALWAYS, 18+ to party, 21+ to drink.

Peer Health Education

What would tick you off?
Getting drunk and...

❒ A. Having a friend pee on your floor.
❒ B. Waking up to someone you don't know.
❒ C. Getting the scoop from your friends about what you did last night.

Get Involved
Make a Difference
Earn 6 credits

Take Com HL 213, Peer Health Education, a 2-semester course that proactively addresses public health issues at UMass.

Call the Health Education Department during pre-registration at 577-5181 to make an appointment to discuss enrollment with instructor.

The Strokes keep it lit up

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

To all Strokes fans twisting themselves in knots after hearing that longtime Radiohead producer Nigel Godrich was manning the boards for the New York scenester's second album: you need not worry. With "Room On Fire" the Strokes sound exactly the same as they did on the critically-drooled over breakthrough "Is This It?" There's the same skuzzy guitars, same down and dirty drum thump, the same distorted vocals and the same blasé moan emanating from frontman Julian Casablancas.

There's a lot of expectation riding on the backs of Casablancas and company, and you can feel the strain the weight has left on them. The Strokes are generally acknowledged as being responsible for the recent five-second long trend in gritty, neo-garage rock — stripped down, lo-fi, blues-copping affairs that had little use for the bombastic overload or gleaming production values of modern arena fist-pumpers. "Last Night" — the Strokes' agreeably scratchy buzzsaw of a song — ushered in a new wave of retro-rock and music, for a time, was all the better for it.

There's nothing as remotely catchy as "Last Night" or "Hard to Explain" — the band's other great song — to be found on "Room on Fire." The band recedes into their formula in order to deal with the overwhelming pressure heaved upon their artfully mussed heads Ruff and tumble guitar licks? Check. Disaffected sneer, the been-there-done-that-too-cool-for-the-room attitude? Check. Retreat into the safe womb of established patterns? Check.

What does seep into "Room on Fire," what cannot be heard on the nonchalant fuzz of "Is This It?" is a darker shadow to their music. Much of "Room on Fire" is concerned with the aftermath of heartbreak and disillusionment. "I'm not your friend/ I never was" Casablancas spits in "Automatic Stop," mustering as much as venom as he can without breaking his cucumber-cool shell. The very title of "You Talk Way Too Much" suggests a bitter slap across the cheek, while Casablancas coolly says that he "never needed anybody" in "Between Love and Hate."

If Casablancas does have any kind of mode, it's one of coolness. The shaggy-haired hipster heartthrob seems forever unperturbed by his surroundings, singing in the same serenely offhand timbre throughout the album. His bandmates never push too hard behind him, though, which may partially account for his cavalier attitude.

Fab Moretti's drumming remains simple and uncomplicated, steadily pushing the beat forward without challenging it. The moments that do move the music beyond the garage — like the new wave keyboards the hum along "12:51," the unobtrusive funk of "Under Control," and the tinny reggae on "Automatic Stop" — are appropriately low-key and understated additions.

"Room on Fire" is a mostly unfussy affair, with Nikolai Fraiture's bass adding the tight rhythmic bounce where Moretti's stomp can't while the guitars of Albert Hammond Jr. and Nick Valensi add color and texture to Casablancas' remote singing. The crunchy riffs and bouncy rhythms on "The Way It Is" are nice little presents to the listener.

Change isn't always a necessity, though it is a nice thing. The fact that the Strokes opted to return to producer Gordon Raphael rather than going with Godrich is probably a plus in the long run. However the Strokes need to think about moving forward rather than spinning their wheels. "Room on Fire" opens with Casablancas singing the salvo "I wanna be forgotten." If the Strokes aren't careful, Julian Casablancas may just get his wish.

The Strokes 'Room on Fire' RCA

Courtesy Colin Lane

The Strokes don't mess with success on their sophomore album "Room on Fire."

Cali meets NoHo

The barrage of underground hip-hop shows flooding the area continues this semester with some of the best in the West Coast underground scene.

Indeed, this fall has seen the some of the hottest names in the circuit come through town — ranging from People Under The Stairs and C Rayz Walz to Cannibal Ox and Murs. Tonight will be no exception, as the Cali Comm Tour hits Pearl Street. Fans who are dope to underground hip-hop definitely should not miss this show.

Call Comm Tour Presents: Grouch and Eligh From The Living Legends, Abstract Rude, Lyrics Born, Ugly Duckling, and Pigeon John
Thurs. Nov. 6
Pearl Street
Northampton
$15 adv.
$18 door

Headlining the tour are Grouch and Eligh from the Living Legends, who have fast been making a name for themselves. Though this is their first trip to NoHo alone, they trekked through the Pioneer Valley last year with the rest of The Living Legends crew.

Grouch and Eligh, originally hailing from the Bay area and now based in Los Angeles, are known for their experimental music and high energy shows.

Joining the two "living legends" will be four other acts, some veterans and others just getting their names out there. The group Ugly Duckling, from Long Beach, will bring its fun and lighthearted style to compliment the lyrical stylings of fellow veteran Abstract Rude. Rude, a popular underground-head from California, has most recently gotten nods for his collaborations with underground hip-hop legend and former Freestyle Fellowship member, Aceyalone. The newer and lesser-known Lyrics Born, who got his start on Blackalicious label Quannum, and Pigeon John, an affiliate of The Living Legends and a quickly rising star will also appear. Pigeon John's music has appeared on two X-Box games and a few films.

The concert begins at 8:30 p.m. and tickets are $15 in advance, $18 at the door.

-Justin Chellman

Third time's a charm

Continued from page 6

further into machine territory than any other human beings have ever gone. The question is, can Neo defeat Agent Smith (Hugo Weaving) and futfill his destiny of becoming "The One?"

"Everything that has a beginning has an end," the Oracle eloquently puts it. The special effects in this movie are by far the best on film to date and will be difficult to top in future flicks. This movie sets a new precedent in Hollywood; all films that follow will be measured up to "Revolutions."

The fight sequences are mind-blowing, equipped with "Matrix" trademark freeze-framing and gravity defying martial arts. "Revolutions" is the action flick we have all been waiting for, though it has more of a science-fiction influence than the two previous films, as most of the action comes between machines and human beings. This is the best film of the trilogy and the awards for the special effects are sure to pile high for the Wachowski brothers.

The cast in this movie also put in an excellent performance. For those who still see Keanu Reeves as the slow talking guitar shredder from "Bill and Ted's Excellent Adventure," you will have a new found respect for his dramatic acting. Carrie-Anne Moss gives an equally admirable performance and is sure to have many more lead roles in the future. The love between Neo and Trinity is touching, but doesn't go too far in ruining the mood of this action-packed, adrenaline-filled ride that is "Revolutions." Hugo Weaving plays the ever-so-hated Agent Smith with passion once again. The viewer can actually see the hatred for Neo in his eyes during the fight scenes. Despite Laurence Fishburne's role being down-played in this film, his theatric excellence helps the movie tie all loose ends together and helps "Reloaded" finally make sense.

The Wachowski brothers finally got it right. They stuck to the formula that made the first "Matrix" film great and then built on it. With such an excellent cast, all they had to do was boost the storyline and crank up the special effects. They did all that and more. This film is not a run-of-the-mill action flick. It evokes feeling and leaves the viewer on the edge of his or her seat from the opening sequence until the credits roll at the end. The conclusion leaves the audience breathless yet curious, and fully satisfied.

"Revolutions" did not try to be funny, but there are some scenes that display a dry humor that will warrant laughter. The film itself warrants the highest recommendation.

Matrix proves to be more than a movie

Continued from page 6

Matrix" in an interview with the Christian Science Monitor.

"This is a movie that ... captures people's intellectual imagination."

What exactly is this intellectual imagination? Is it the higher levels of the human mind grasping at straws to build some grander structure out of or is it merely the playground of overactive imaginations?

One problem that many inhabitants of this "Matrix" culture have is that the sequels seem superfluous. Sure, we all want to know whether or not Neo is really the "One," but not at the cost of the stories integrity. If only we could all experience a massive déjà vu and have "Reloaded" remade, perhaps the stinging disappointment among fans would be lessened.

Many have compared "The Matrix" trilogy to that of the "Star Wars" saga. On the surface this is a fair comparison; both of these series have three initial episodes and both captured the imaginations of the youth of their respective generations. However, time makes this an unfair comparison. "Star Wars" was a huge hit in the '70s and to this day the culture that was spawned is still going strong despite many years labeled as 'uncool.'

The release of the prequels in the late '90s gave way to the re-emergence of the series. Given time, it is likely that there will be another trilogy from the world of "The Matrix." People will then say they loved the first films and have always been huge fans, but those who were 'unplugged' by the first film and began to see reality in a different light, will know.

Regardless of the last movie release and the possible ruination of the original dream of "The Matrix," the culture that it has spawned shall continue to thrive in search of the meaning of "reality" ... or just perhaps the next moving sci-fi/action masterpiece.

Seven's
Rt. 116 | Sunderland, MA
(413) 665 - 8788
Next to Cliffside Apartments
KARAOKE EVERY WEDNESDAY
KARAOKE CONTEST EVERY SUNDAY
2 6 1
Open Mic Night
Every Thursday
WEEKLY PITCHER SPECIALS

GREAT Reasons to use UHS Eye Care Services
1 Savings on eyeglasses from the on-site Optical Services at UHS
2 A great place to get contact lenses
3 Convenient hours and location
4 FREE eyeglass adjustments and one year warranty on frames
5 Savings on routine eye exams for students at UMass
SPECIAL OFFER: 10 PERCENT STUDENT DISCOUNT ON ALL FRAMES AND EYEGLASS LENSES!*
"I invite you to use the Eye Care Services"
* Cannot be combined with other insurance discounts.
For appointments or questions, call 577-5244
Frederick H. Bloom, O.D.
Director, UHS Eye Care Services
UHS EYE CARE SERVICES

Rent One of Ours
No additional fee for 21–25 year old drivers
• Cars
• Passenger Vans
• Trucks
• Direct Billing to Insurance Companies
• Free Local Pick Up
• Locally Owned and Operated
549-RENT (7368)
POTTERS AUTO & TRUCK RENTALS
OOPS!
at North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
76 Sunderland Road, North Amherst, MA 01059
www.northamherstmotors.com
On Bus Route • One Mile North of UMass

HAMPSHIRE FITNESS club
90 Gatehouse Road, Off Rt. 9 Two miles East of Amherst Center • On the Bus Route
www.hampfit.com
Click On:
• Class Schedule
• Pool
• Courts
And More!
Hampshire Fitness Club has it all for you
•Full Sized Indoor Pool •Cybex Free Weights •Yoga / Pilates
•Aqua Aerobics •Full Court Basketball •Aerobics / Step / Bosu
•Cybex Nautilus Circuit •Volleyball •Jacuzzi / Saunas
• Boxing Studio •Indoor Tennis •Cardio-Vascular Equipment
OPEN 6am to 10pm Mon-Fri 8am to 9pm Sat-Sun
TEL 256- 6446

Four Seasons Wine & Liquors
Beer:
Harpoon 2/12 pk btl.. $19.99*
Amstel Light 24 btl case.. $19.99*
Coors Light 30 pk cans.. $18.49*
Molson 2/12 pk btl.. $17.99*
Keystone 30 pk cans.. $13.49*
Milwaukee's Best 30 pk cans.. $10.99*
Busch & Busch Light 24 pk btl.. $10.99*
Shipyard 12 pk btl.. $9.99*
Red Stripe 12 pk btl.. $9.99*
Wine:
Sterling Vineyards Merlot 750 ml...$17.99
Canyon Road Chard, Cab, Merlot 1.5 lt...$10.99
Inglenook Blush, Chablis 4 lt...$8.99
Chandon Fresco Brut & Extra Dry 750 ml...$8.99
Casa Lapostolle Chard, Cab, Merlot 750 ml...$8.99
Jacobs Creek Chard, Cab, Merlot, Shiraz 750 ml...$6.99
Freixenet Carta Nevada Brut & Semi Dry 750 ml...$5.99
Arbor Mist All Flavors 1.5 lt...$4.99
Marcus James Chard, Cab, Merlot, White Zin 750 ml...$2.99
Liquor:
Chivas Regal 750 ml..$24.99
Wild Turkey 1 liter..$21.99
Makers Mark 1 liter..$24.99
Courvoisier 750 ml..$24.99
Bushmills 1 liter..$22.99
Irish Mist 750 ml..$22.99
Malibu Rum 1.75 lt..$20.99
Stolichnaya 1 liter..$19.99
Sauza Tequilla 1 liter..$17.99
Ballentine's Scotch 1 liter..$17.99
Kuya Rum 750 ml..$11.99
Carolans Irish Cream 750 ml..$9.99
Old Smuggler 750 ml..$9.99
Seagram's Gin All Flavors 750 ml..$8.99
*all beer prices plus deposit
Four Seasons Wine & Liquors
333 Russell St., Rte 9, Hadley, MA 01035
584-8174 • Mon.- Sat. 9am- 11pm
SALE 11/06 THROUGH 11/12

A new Bryant?

By Beth Harris
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES (AP) - Kobe Bryant built an image on and off the court as clean-cut and well mannered and quickly became a role model who earned millions in endorsements.

As his eighth and most scrutinized NBA season begins, he is expressing himself in ways fans and teammates hadn't seen. He has new tattoos and a diamond earring the size of a marble, and he rides a motorcycle. He's also constantly surrounded by security guards and frequently refers to God.

The changes to Bryant's appearance and persona came during a turmoil-filled off-season, when he was charged with sexually assaulting a 19-year-old woman in Colorado.

Teammates say they don't know whether Bryant's new image is related to his legal trouble or just part of growing into adulthood for a player who entered the NBA straight out of high school.

"What you've seen is just a continual understanding of himself and his likes and dislikes and a willingness to be a little more true to himself and not so concerned about what everyone else thinks," teammate Rick Fox said.

Derek Fisher, a rookie with Bryant in 1996, sees the tattoos as a way for Bryant to assert himself outside the tightly controlled world in which he lives.

"I think he also wants to let people know that he is an adult, that he can make his own choices and people have to respect that," Fisher said.

Bryant's tattoos on his right arm extend from his shoulder to the elbow: a crown, his wife Vanessa's name, a halo and angel wings above Psalm XXVII. His daughter Natalia Diamante's name is in script inside his lower left arm.

"This is a crown for my queen," he has said of his wife. "She's my angel. She's a blessing to me, her and Natalia."

He has worn an earring in the past, but his current one is so big his earlobe practically droops, and it's comparable to the $4 million diamond ring he gave his wife shortly after he was charged in Colorado.

The Lakers say they have no problem with Bryant riding a motorcycle, something many NBA contracts prohibit.

"Kobe grew up in Italy, so fast cars and racing, we always knew he had a fetish for that," Fisher said. "Definitely no fear of high speeds."

Bryant was raised in a religious, upper middle-class household in Italy and later in suburban Philadelphia. He's always been polite and respectful, qualities that worked against him in an unsuccessful venture into rap music a few years ago with lyrics that were considered too clean.

His longtime position as a role model and product pitchman worth millions in endorsements hasn't allowed him room for much individual growth, his teammates and marketing experts say.

"He's growing up," said Michael Sands, a media and marketing consultant in Los Angeles. "He's learning to be his own person by not being emotionally tied to his parents."

Only one of Bryant's sponsors – Italian hazelnut-chocolate spread maker Nutella – has dumped him since the sexual assault charge, but none currently airs his commercials. He has a multimillion-dollar sneaker deal with Nike and contracts with Sprite, McDonald's and Spalding.

"I don't think this is really going to hurt him that much," Sands said, assuming Bryant is acquitted at trial of the charges. "He's coming clean, he's showing up. He's respectful of the law, and that's important to a sponsor."

Since his arrest in July, Bryant has frequently cited God as one of his guiding principles.

He has recited some of the words of the scriptures inscribed on his arm, among them the Psalm of David, which reads in part: "Teach me Your way, O Lord, And lead me in a smooth path, because of my enemies. Do not deliver me to the wilal of my adversaries; For false witnesses have risen against me."

"I'm sure he's always had those beliefs or that faith, but sometimes it takes something bad happening or something you wish didn't happen to get you back to a point where you put that first again," said Fisher, a devout Christian. "Maybe that's what he's going through."

Fox believes Bryant is leaning on the foundation on which he was raised as he searches for answers during a chaotic time in his life.

"Obviously, something is working for him because he's been able to come out here and continue to push through the pressure that's mounted outside the court as well as on the court," Fox said.

Despite the turbulence in his life and his new look, Bryant doesn't seem to have lost much support among longtime Lakers fans, who still cheer him loudly at home games.

"He seems like regular old Kobe," said Ricky Vieira, 24, who wore Bryant's No. 8 jersey during a recent Lakers game. "I'm still a Kobe fan even though he's got all that drama going on."

QB erases tainted record

By Jim Litke
Associated Press

A lot of people went to a lot of trouble to get the kid the record.

Three days later, Nate Haasis gave it back.

Next week, in what should be little more than a formality, some grown-ups will meet and strike it from the Central State Eight Conference record books.

The story of why that vote was even necessary reminds us that sportsmanship isn't dead, it's just very much in hiding.

The Saturday before last, on the final play of a remarkable high school career at Springfield (Ill.) Southeast, the 17-year-old senior quarterback completed a 37-yard pass that made him the conference's career passing leader.

Not long after he figured out how he was able to get the record, Haasis wrote a letter to league officials.

"It is my belief that the directions given to us in the final seconds of this game were made in 'the heat of battle' and do not represent the values of the athletes of the Southeast football team," Haasis wrote in the letter.

"In respect to my teammates, and past and present football players of the Central State Eight, it is my hope that this pass is omitted from any of the conference records."

The phrase "in the heat of battle," like so much else in sports these days, makes the games sound more important than they are.

What actually happened is that with less than a minute left in what would turn out to be a 42-20 loss, Southeast coach Neal Taylor called a timeout, walked onto the field and huddled with Cahokia coach Antwyne Golliday.

They agreed to a deal that allowed Cahokia to score, uncontested, in exchange for allowing Haasis to do the same on what was his record-breaking 37-yard pass.

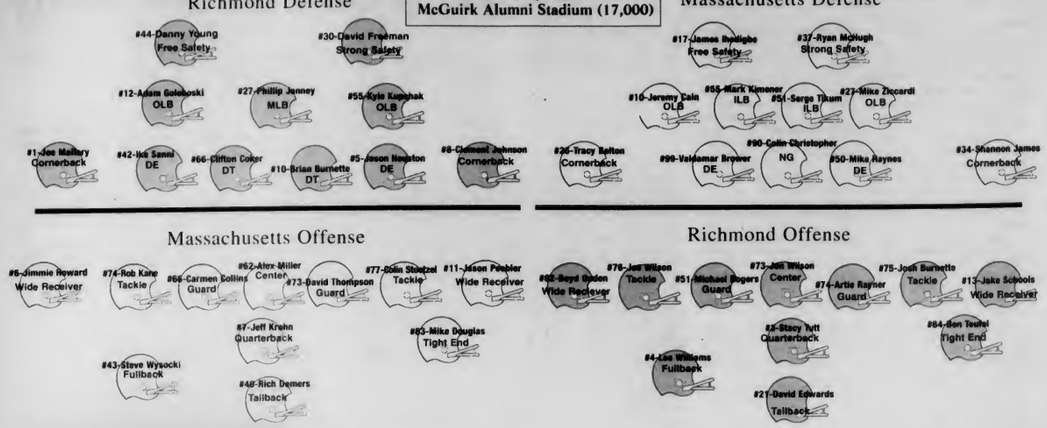
The principals have regretted that decision nearly every day since. Taylor, who works at a middle school in Springfield, might quit as Southeast's coach, or be forced out.

After being hammered relentlessly, he won't discuss that decision anymore. But Taylor has known Haasis since the kid was in seventh grade and something the coach said at the end of the Cahokia game was as articulate a defense as he could offer for his decision.

"He was leaning toward going to a different school and he and his parents told me that he went to Southeast because of me," Taylor said then, wrestling back his obvious emotions.

"And when someone does a nice gesture like that, it deserves a nice gesture back."

The world would no doubt be a better place if everybody followed the golden rule, but that isn't going to happen anytime soon.



And one place where it shouldn't have happened, at this particular moment, is in sports.

www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com

TRUST "Before locking into a long term contract for a fitness facility with no machinery in place, why not give the veteran professionals a visit."
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB
"Big enough to own the best equipment, but small enough to know your name."
* In business 22 years
* Locally owned & operated" 0043806
www.amherstathletic.com
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB 256-0090 90, AMHERST

On our team, your brightest ideas get noticed.
Here, it's merit we turn to. We're not interested in how old you are or where you're from. If your idea is good, it's good. That's why we'll put you alongside teammates with the experience and knowledge to spot it. It's your time to shine.
ey.com/us/careers
ERNST & YOUNG
Quality In Everything We Do

Richmond (2-6 1-5 A-10)
@
No. 4 Massachusetts (8-1 6-0 A-10)
Saturday Noon
McGuirk Alumni Stadium (17,000)

Rob Kane and the Minutemen will host Richmond on Saturday.

UMass to host Spiders

Continued from page 12

where the Spiders boast one of the conferences best athletes in wide receiver Boyd Ouden, who has caught balls for yards and touchdowns on the season.

And as far as Whipple is concerned, with current Richmond boss and former UMass coach Jim Reid having adapted the Spiders' offense from a traditional wishbone-style attack to more of a spread, Ouden becomes even more dangerous.

"They've always been a big play action team, and now they've gone to more spread and they've never done that," Whipple said. "I think trying to get their athletes in space is scary because they make everybody miss and have really good skill.

"Ouden's a guy who's made plays for years, and he's the one guy you try not to let get over the top and beat you. He's really outstanding. He's talented and fast — fast enough for all the crossing routes and play action that they do."

The Minutemen, who have been susceptible to the pass at times this season, will also face a more daunting task in containing Ouden, as they could possibly be without top cover corner Steve Costello, who suffered an abdominal strain but could possibly play if needed.

Strong safety Anton McKenzie and cornerback Bobby Boyer may be able to return from a torn hamstring and a thigh contusion, respectively, to shore up what may be a depleted secondary, but Whipple has confidence in some of his younger players when and if they are forced into action.

"Shannon [James] has been out there, and Tracy Belton's played pretty good," he said. "Leroy Brooks has been out there too, and the one thing is that we're probably a little better because Ryan McHugh did some good things last week at safety."

"Hopefully we can get Anton [McKenzie] some reps, and it'll help if Bobby [Boyer's] back because then we can hold Steve [Costello] out."

On the offensive side of the ball for UMass, sophomore tailback and leading rusher Steve Baylark is banged up again, and may only see limited action, while junior Rich Demers is approaching 100 percent, and will likely share the bulk of the load with a healthy Raunny Rosario.

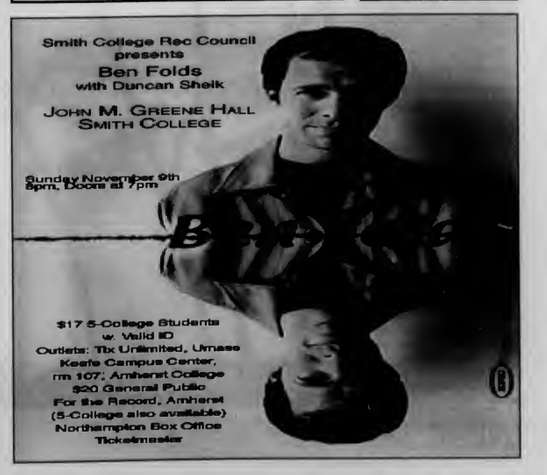
"Demers is better; Baylark didn't practice [Tuesday]. He's a slow starter, and it seems that the first carry every single game someone has twisted his knee or his ankle, Whipple said.

"Raunny [Rosario] has been better this week, so maybe we can plug him in place of Baylark."

Kickoff is slated for noon at Warren P. McGuirk Alumni Stadium.

Clip & Curl 665-2629
Hair Skin & Nails Massage Therapy
Route 116, Sunderland (Located on bus route)
Accepted: Visa MC
Open Tuesday - Friday 9 to 6:30, and Saturday 9 to 4
Stress Relief Package
30 Minute Massage
30 Minute Aveda Facial
Hair Shampooed & Dried
Regularly $73, Now $60
(Add a Complimentary Lavender Paraffin hand dip!)
Expires 11/22/03
Aveda • ARUM • Paul Mitchell Two full service rooms!

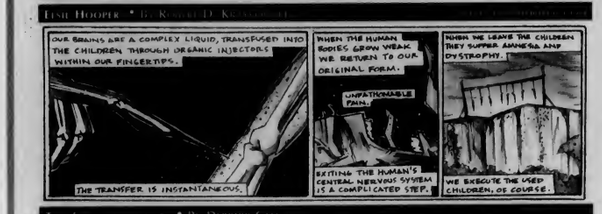
Oasis Body Wraps and Tanning
243 Russell St.
Hadley, MA 01035
(413) 587-9742
• The first UV FREE tanning machine in the area
• Get $5.00 off your first visit
• A rich golden tan in just a few seconds
• You'll look and feel great
1/2 Price tanning every Tuesday
Conveniently Located
OASIS • UMASS



The Score is coming

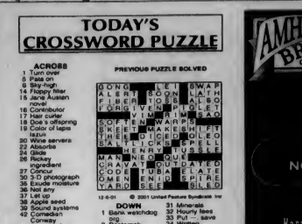
Our Members Tan FREE on Sundays!
Purchase a package of California tan and receive a FREE upgrade on Sundays 'til 12/31/2003!
BEACH CLUB TANNING STUDIOS
65 University Drive • ph 549-HOTT

Nick's...for the morning after
63 Main Street, Amherst
Traditional & eclectic breakfast fare, featuring a Southwestern flare, Jewish favorites, & vegan items.
20% STUDENT DISCOUNT
Monday-Friday for the fall 2003 semester
Monday-Friday 6:30am-2pm
Satuday & Sunday 7am-2pm
256-4643
OCMP

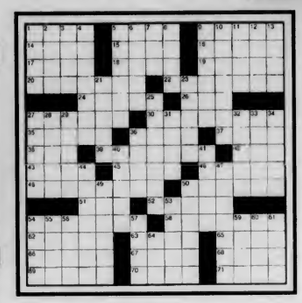


TOTAL FITNESS
WITHOUT WAITING IN LINE
$139
★ Student Special ★
4 months
Best Aerobics~Best Machines
KEISER • NAUTILUS • FREE WEIGHTS • CYBEX • STAIRMASTERS • LIFECYCLES • TREADMILLS • ELLIPTICALS • LIFEROWER
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB 256-0000 90 AMHERST
ON BUS ROUTE • OPEN 7 DAYS

LIFE IN THE FUN LANE!
Work a flexible schedule in a fun environment!
PART-TIME POSITIONS AVAILABLE:
• Servers – Monday and Wednesday - 6 p.m. to 9 p.m. Friday and Saturday – 9 p.m. to 1 a.m.
• Marketing Assistant – Can you work a flexible schedule of about 20 hours per week that includes some days and evenings? This is a great entry level position promoting and coordinating parties and bowling events.
• Machine Mechanic - Do you enjoy working with machines and have the ability to troubleshoot? We will teach you how to monitor and maintain our pinsetter machines. Mechanical experience necessary. PT day, evening and weekend shifts available.
Apply today @ Northampton Bowl, 525 Pleasant St., Northampton. Ask for Bill or Vinny.



Quote for the Day



"People who work sitting down get paid more than people who work standing up."

-Ogden Nash

Today's Crossword Puzzle

Amherst Brewing Company
Upstairs at the ABC
No Cover Charge
Karaoke
Two Cow Garage
Kaizen Quartet
413 4400

Dining Commons Menu

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Oriental Beef & Vegetables
- Chicken Cutlet Sandwich
- Spicy Black Bean Burger (vegan)

DINNER
- Roast Turkey
- Stuffed Shells (vegetarian)
- Ginger Black Beans (vegan)

Daily Weather Forecast

For Amherst

THURSDAY
- High: 56
- Low: 34

FRIDAY
- High: 51
- Low: 25

SATURDAY
- High: 41
- Low: 19

Production Crew

On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Jennifer Eastwood
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Brendan O'Meara
COPY EDITOR
Sheryl Wolnik
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Scott Pihl
PRODUCTION STAFF
Samantha Nielsen/ Lindsay Clark

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
You're an angel in devils clothing ...

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Sometimes booting just makes you feel better.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
It's important to see "Earnest Goes to Jail."

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Make the decision you've been putting off. The worst that happens is you chose wrong.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
Everything will be all right now. Except for your problems. They'll never go away.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Get a bandage for that nasty growth on your neck. Oh, that's your face. Sorry.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Keep on jamming man.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
You look like a Furby gone terribly wrong.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Get new shoes. Those things on your feet now are stanky.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Wear a facemask. Someone is aiming for your nose.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Turtlenecks are a good idea.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
It's funny how things always work out poorly for you.

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Announcements

Student Director Wanted For Play on Lord Jeff Amherst. Shows the 'hero' as biologic warrior who deliberately slaughtered the Indians with Smallpox, 'winning' the war. STYLE: Brechtian. Loud, raucous. Simple sets. Musical. Goal: controversy, outrage. AUTHOR: AC graduate, many past productions VENUE/ACTORS: your choice CONTACT: 718-601-8089 nites Leave name/address please

Apartment for Rent

3 Bedroom Apartment for January 665-9254

Auto for Sale

96 Dodge Intrepid White runs good Power everything Brand new Pioneer CD/Stereo Must sell Asking $2400 Amy 413-222-5754

Honda 1995 Civic Ex Coupe, red, 91K, moonroof, LoJack, well maintained, $4,250, 413-695-5527

Auto for Sale

Mountainview Auto Route 47 South in Hadley 585-0599 '89 Mercedes 300E Clean $3500 '94 Nissan Sentra Limited Edition $2850 '87 Honda Civic excellent transportation $950 '87 Saab 900 Automatic $950 '88 Dodge Caravan Very Clean 100,000 miles $1200

1992 Silver Ford Taurus Excellent condition $2400 118000K Call 549-3930 210-7393 All Power

1999 Explorer XLT 4x4 Excellent Condition Sunroof 6cyl. Loaded $12,500 Call 546-3477

- $500!!! Police Impounds. Hondas, Chevy's, Jeeps, etc. for listings 1-800-319-3323 ext4554

93 Pontiac Bonneville SDN All Power Must Sell $1500 B/O 253-5537

Employment

!Bartending!$ $250/day potential No experience Nes. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext 162

Employment

$875.00 WEEKLY SALARY mailing our postcards from home. No experience necessary. FT/PT. Genuine Opportunity. FREE supplies. Call 1708-686-0300 (24 hours)

PART-TIME POSITIONS 20+ hrs/wk; set your own schedule. Conduct surveys over the phone at our Hadley location—NO SALES! Evngs/wkends; hlth/dent/401(k); PVTA accessible. Email mvivian@fieldmarketmgmt.com or apply in person, First Floor 100 Venture Way, Hadley, MA (888) 423-5381

Spring 2004 Internships with The Student Legal Services Office: Get hands-on experience in the legal field; work directly with attorneys and clients; earn up to 15 undergraduate credits. No experience necessary. Training provided. Contact the Student Legal Services Office Today! 545-1995, 922 Campus Center

Employment

MAD SCIENTISTS WANTED! PT to conduct fun science after-school programs, parties, etc. Requirements: Experience with groups of children, enthusiasm, car. Performance experience a plus. 413-584-7243

Landscaping Services: Part-time positions available for fall clean-up and snow work. Need to be ambitious, hardworking, own transportation, and flexible hours. Call Steve at 413-665-3493

Movie Extras/Models Needed For local Casting Calls. No exp. or age required EARN up to $200 a day 1-888-820-0167

Telephone Interviewers NO SALES! Conduct interviews over the phone at our Hadley location Flexible Evening and Weekend Hours $7.50/hour to start 20+ hours/week PVTA accessible For more info: 1-888-423-5381 FMI

Employment

Internship Motivated students seeking leadership outside the box. Gain experience in all aspects of running a small business. Average pay: $9300 Call 508-246-1230

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

For Sale

Concept II Indoor Rowing Machine for sale. Like New $500 or BO 546-5459

$Save$ Wholesale- Discount prices, video games, clothing, jewelry, more. www.tylersdiscounts.com

House for Rent

Amherst 3-4 Bedroom house. Hobart Ln. Available Jan. 1. $1650/month. Call 413-549-4001

Instruction

University Bartending Classes Start Soon 1-800-U-CAN-MIX Call now for information!!! Space is

Instruction

Limited www.university-bartendingfg.com

Lost

Lost: Wallet Near Parking garage 10/14 If found please call with description 413-237-1015

Room for Rent

Fully furnished bedroom Conveniently located across from the bus stop near Puffton and Hobart @985 North Pleasant St. Available for winter and spring sessions. Rent is approximately $350/month. Please contact Chris @ 413-687-7313

Services

SHEAR BLISS DAY SPA SERVICES Body Sugaring (waxing) for men and women *Safe *100% Natural *Effective 253-2322 https//shear-bliss.image411.com

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

Services

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

Travel

#1 Spring Break Vacations! 110% Best Prices! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, Florida, Acapulco. Book Now & Receive Free Parties & Meals Campus Reps Wanted! 1-800-234-7007 endlesssummertours.com

SPRING BREAK 2004! Beach Life Vacations! Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas, Florida. Sell Trips, Earn Cash, Travel Free!! Call 1-800-733-6347 www.beach-lifevacations.com

Spring Break – Nassau/Paradise Island, Cancun, Jamaica and Acapulco from $489 Air, Hotel, Transfers, Parties and More! Organize small group- earn FREE TRIPS plus commissions! Call 1-800-GET-SUN-1

Travel

Spring Break 2004 Travel with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator to Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas and Florida. Now hiring campus reps. Call for group discounts. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com For more information contact STA Travel at 413-256-1261

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Destinations, including Cruises! Free Parties, Free Drinks and Club Admissions. Rep Positions and FREE trips Available. 1-800-231-4388 www.EpicureanTours.com

A "Reality" Spring Break 2004's Hottest Prices Book now ... Free Trips, Meals & Parties www.sunsplashtours.com or 1-800-426-7710

Tutor

Math/Physics Tutor $30/hr Plus travel Call Dr. Kline 413-552-3805

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 6, 2003 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Weaving their own web

No. 4 UM looks to remain perfect in A-10 against Spiders

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

It's rare that a football team faces potential trap games in consecutive weeks, but that very well may be the case for the Massachusetts football team.

After watching his team come out flat in practice following an emotional win over Villanova on Oct. 25, UMass coach Mark Whipple gave his team a thorough tongue-lashing prior to facing intra-state rival Northeastern last Saturday, and then watched the Minutemen come back from a lackluster start to slip past the Huskies 28-24.

Now, with a colossal showdown at second-ranked Delaware on the docket for a week from Saturday, the Maroon and White (8-1 6-0 Atlantic 10) could be poised for yet another letdown when Richmond (2-6 1-5 A-10) invades McGuirk Alumni Stadium on Saturday.

However, Whipple has let his team know that with a win, the Minutemen will all but secure a birth in the Division I-AA Playoffs; he feels a new week has brought new emotion and life to his team.

"I'm more happy with the level of practice this week, because the emotion has been there," Whipple said. "I told them that nine wins gets us a shot to play for a National Championship, and we need only look to last year to see that eight wins won't get it done.

"If we have a letdown, then we'll lose the game, or it'll be right down to the wire. It'll probably be right down the wire anyways.

"We have three games remaining, and we need to win one of them to get into the playoffs.

"They want Saturday to be that one."

While the Spiders are considered one of the weaker teams in the A-10, they do have one of the leagues best playmakers in quarterback Bryson Spinner, a transfer from Virginia, who has rushed for 332 yards in Richmond's spread offense, and has also thrown for over 200 yards in each of his last six games.

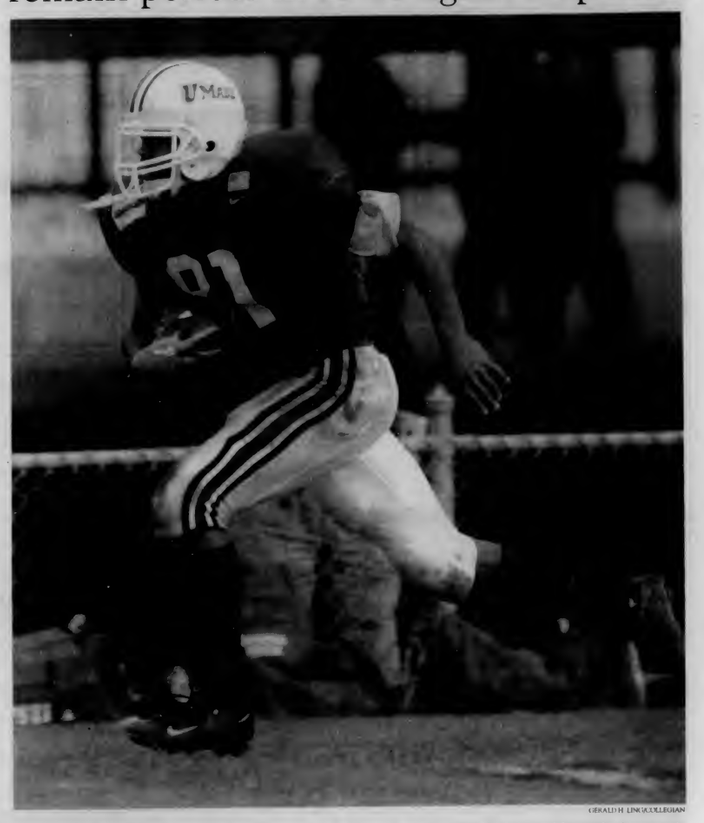
However, late word Wednesday morning out of Richmond has Spinner unable to play due to a rib injury sustained in the first quarter of a 42-13 loss to Villanova on Saturday.

Ron Spinner, Bryson Spinner's father, told the Richmond Times-Dispatch that his son "has a terribly bruised rib area," and that "chances are he won't play Saturday." Spinner did not practice with the team on Tuesday.

The Dispatch also reported that it is not known at this time whether Spinner will be available again this season — his only season of eligibility with the Spiders — and that sophomore Stacy Tutt, a receiver who started the last nine games of last season under center for RU, will get the call in his place.

"We haven't looked into [Spinner not playing] that much because it just came up," Whipple said. "Tutt is a really good athlete, so I don't know if their game plan will change. And if their game plan doesn't change then ours won't either.

"We have to go back and look at when Tute played, and see what they do with him. But him and Spinner are so similar that it shouldn't change much for them."



Making the task of containing Spinner or Tutt even more daunting is the fact that the Minutemen will be playing without defensive lineman Doran Davis, who is out for the next two weeks with a high ankle sprain.

"We can't afford to lose Doran, because he's a great leader who's having a super year," Whipple said. "But if there's one place we can afford to lose someone it's on the defensive line.

"[Noseguard] Ian Dyche is close to being back, and we have six guys we can plug in up front to try and contain either of their mobile quarterbacks, because that will obviously be important."

The talent on the offensive side of the ball, however, is mostly focused at receiver,

Continued on page 10

GERALD H. LINGUE/COLLEGIAN

Wide receiver Johnson Owumi, a transfer from UMass-Lowell, has caught 11 passes for 179 yards and a touchdown in his first season in Amherst.

GERALD H. LINGUE/COLLEGIAN

Stephen Werner and the Mass Attack will play a home-and-home with Merrimack this weekend.

Double trouble

No. 12 UMass set for two with MC

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts hockey team is six games into its season, and three games into the conference slate. But with a home-and-home series against Merrimack this weekend — its second in a week — there are still plenty of questions to be answered.

The Minutemen (5-1-0, 2-1-0 Hockey East) will travel to North Andover tomorrow to face the Warriors, before returning to the Mullins Center Saturday night to host Merrimack in the second game.

Among those questions are how the team rebounds from being manhandled at home by the Providence Friars, who never trailed in a 6-2 win at the Mullins Center, as well as simply who will be in the starting lineup.

Although a regular cast of characters has been established, at least one or two significant changes have been made to the lines and pairings for each game since the start of the season. Greg Mauldin and Stephen Werner, whose "WAM" line compatriot Matt Anderson has been redshirted due to a shoulder injury, have bounced around with a couple of different trios, and Josh Hanson was a scratch for three games after scoring twice in the season-opening 6-3 win over Connecticut, notched his first assist of the season in last Saturday's 4-2 victory over Providence while skating on a line with Chris Capraro and Mike Warner.

"We've got three or four positions up front, and a couple of positions on defense that a number of people are competing for," UMass coach Don Cahoon said. "What it will take will be a group of people to get together and have a real feel for each other, a line you wouldn't want to break up. So a person creates a job for himself based on that, being a complement to other people on a line ... it's a necessary protocol to go through to have your best lineup on the ice when it's crucial to play your best hockey."

Merrimack enters the weekend series at 2-4-1 overall, and 1-2-1 in Hockey East play. But while the Warriors' record isn't quite as pretty as Providence's 4-1-1 overall number entering last weekend's home-and-home, Cahoon warns that they could still be a handful.

"Quite honestly, there's not a big difference between the two teams. And that's the great thing about our league; top to bottom teams can hurt you. But you can't go into a game saying you'll play at one level against this opponent ... we need preparation, we need to have the ability to prepare ourselves to compete in earnest for every game that we play, and there's got to be a more workmanlike mentality that is a part of this team day to day.

"We saw two very contrasting brands of hockey played by our club [last] weekend. We need that team that showed up on Saturday night, that mentality to be there every night."

The Warriors, who battled with Providence to a scoreless draw on Oct. 25, have struggled to score against conference foes, with seven goals in four Hockey East contests. Four of those came in Merrimack's best effort of the season, a 4-2 win over Northeastern on Oct. 24 that saw Casey Guenther post a career-high 35 saves.

Guenther's performance against Northeastern was an anomaly, though, as his 3.12 goals against average this season puts him last on the overall list. The junior has fared better against conference foes, though, with a 2.35 GAA that puts him in the middle of the pack.

The order of the home-and-home set will be reversed for the Minutemen, who travel first to the newly-renovated Volpe Center and the J. Thom Lawler Arena, and then return home to the Mullins Center, which wasn't so kind to them last Friday.

"I don't think you can let yourself fall into that trapping, where you don't deal with playing at home well," Cahoon said, "because you feel a little bit more pressure. I think the focus of playing at home could be a little more difficult, because you've got kids with friends coming and family coming. You've got people calling, people in the dorms talking about the game, and it's hard to keep that narrow focus that's so critical."

The Daily Collegian

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 7, 2003 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 47

'Spoken, But Not Heard': A celebration of women's voices

By Kate Farrell
Collegian Correspondent

A panel of feminist writers and activists, including Gertrude Fester, Patricia McFadden, and Meredith Tax, gave a lecture on feminism that analyzed the struggles of women, celebrated their contributions and looked toward a better future.

The lecture, titled "Spoken, But Not Heard: Democracy, Feminism, and the Challenge of Gender-Based Censorship," emphasized that "even in democratic societies, voices of feminists, activist women — especially writers are often muted and marginalized," said Paula Giddings, a professor of Afro-American Studies at Smith who compiled the panel. The lecture also celebrated women all over the globe expressing their voices through writing.

Each panelist brought with them their own experiences of gender-based censorship as well as their desires and goals for the future of women. Gertrude Fester, a commissioner on the Commission on Gender Equality in South Africa, shared her experience of three and a half months in solitary confinement in a South African prison in 1988. She was imprisoned for treason because of her work with women's organizations such as United Women's Organization and Federation of South African Women.

Her survival mechanism in confinement was writing a one-woman play in her mind since the use of writing utensils was banned. Since her release, her play, "Apartheid's Closet: The Spirit Cannot be Caged," has been performed all over the world, finally vocalizing her opinion in the public sphere. Fester vehemently expressed the importance for African women to write their own history instead of letting it be told for them through the voice of a white outsider.

Patricia McFadden, a Smith research associate who is active in the Zimbabwean Women's movement, shared her experience growing up in the colonized world of Swaziland in Southern Africa. She described the racial segregation that surrounded her and how her only experience with white people was through her father's cattle business. McFadden came to the U.S. during the immense social change of the 1960s and was heavily influenced by black writers of the time, including Angela Davis and Malcolm X.

It was her experience in the U.S. that taught her she was different because of her skin color. She realized her destiny as a feminist and social activist and returned to Africa in order to fight for the rights of women. She experienced gender-based censorship with the collision of feminism and nationalism. McFadden soon realized that women's opinions were not a primary concern in national liberation movements, but instead women were expected to act "normal" and continue to provide services for their male counterparts.

She called for the need for all women, in any way they can, to express themselves and their experiences through the written word.

Meredith Tax, founding director of Women's WORLD, a global network of women writers aimed at protecting females from censorship, depicted her experience with gender-based censorship through her work with PEN.

In 1986 a conference of global writers held by PEN neglected to incorporate female writers. Tax rebelled by establishing the PEN American Center Women's Committee and later in 1991 she founded the International PEN Women Writers Committee. She has since experienced censorship in her work as a writer and the credibility often neglected to be given to female writers. Tax insisted that a woman's writing, whether it is a short story or an epic, should be taken seriously.

Each panelist's zeal for their work was evident in their descriptions of their experiences as well as their effect on the audience.

The lecture concluded with a hopeful request for the future that all women should be able to find their voices through writing, but Fester reminded us that "the struggle continues".

The lecture was held at the Nielson Library on the Smith College campus on Wednesday.

Anti 'pop-up' ad campaign launched

By Ted Bridis
Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) — Regulators disclosed a new legal campaign Thursday against an annoying method for delivering unwanted "pop-up" Internet advertisements, accusing a California company of "high-tech extortion" in its offers for software to block the very ads it was sending.

The courtroom effort by the Federal Trade Commission could dampen some of the most irritating practices by Internet marketers, who have learned ways to display intrusive messages on computer screens using a technology built into most versions of Microsoft Corp.'s Windows software.

"This is a shot across the bow," said Mark Rasch, an expert on technology law and former head of the Justice Department cyber-crimes division.

The FTC obtained a temporary restraining order against D-Squared Solutions LLC of San Diego from a U.S. District Court in Baltimore.

The FTC's legal papers accuse D-Squared of unlawfully exploiting Microsoft's "Windows Messenger" feature by sending unwanted ads to Internet users as frequently as once every 10 minutes.

The director for the FTC's bureau of consumer protection, Howard Beales, said company executives were "creating a problem and trying to charge customers for the solution." He called that "high-tech extortion" and "a fundamentally unfair business model."

The FTC asked the judge to block D-Squared from sending any more advertisements or selling its ad-blocking software. It also wants D-Squared to repay consumers who bought its software, which Beales said represents "hundreds of thousands" of dollars.

The head of D-Squared Solutions, Anish Dhingra, declined to comment on the government's accusations. His lawyer, Jacob C. Reinbolt, did not return repeated telephone calls to his office from The Associated Press.

Windows Messenger — unrelated to Microsoft's instant-messaging software that uses the same name — commonly allows network administrators to display messages on a user's computer screen, such as a warning that a company's Internet connection might be having problems.

EDITORIAL/OPINION
PAGE 5

GONE TOO FAR?
SHOULD GERMAN PARLIAMENT MEMBER BE DISMISSED?

ARTS & LIVING
PAGE 6

FOLDED UP
BEN FOLDS AT SMITH COLLEGE SUNDAY

SPORTS
PAGE 12

NOW OR NEVER
PLAYOFF CONTENDERS BATTLE IN R.I.

COMICS/CLASSIFIEDS
PAGE 10

PFC PAUL STEVANSON/AP/ASSOCIATED PRESS

U.S. Army chaplains David Deppmeir and Valerie Faria of the 3d Armored Cavalry sing 'Amazing Grace' during a memorial service at the Rifles U.S. Base, near the Al-Asad Iraqi village.

Service held for fallen American soldiers

By Robert H. Reid
Associated Press

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — Two American soldiers were killed near Baghdad and along the Syrian border, the U.S. military said Thursday, and Polish forces suffered their first combat death since World War II.

The new violence occurred as a senior Japanese official said his country would honor its commitment to send peacekeepers to Iraq despite the heightened threat to Japanese military and civilian personnel.

Yukio Okamoto, top diplomatic adviser to Prime Minister Junichiro Koizumi, said withdrawing from Iraq would send the wrong message to "terrorists who seek to thwart international support efforts," the Kyodo news agency reported Thursday.

At an airfield west of Baghdad, the U.S. military held a memorial service for soldiers killed Sunday when their Chinook helicopter was shot down by insurgents. Combat helmets were placed atop 15 standing rifles on the back of a flatbed truck.

Mourners sang "America the Beautiful" and recited Psalm 23 from the Bible, which says,

"Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death; I will fear no evil."

The U.S. military identified two high-ranking Iraqi army officers captured Wednesday as Lt. Gen. Khamis Saleh Ibrahim Al-Halbossi and Lt. Gen. Ibrahim Adwan Al-Alwani. Both were believed to have played a significant role in organizing the insurgency in the Fallujah area west of Baghdad, the military said.

The number of daily attacks on coalition forces dropped to 29 last week from a spike of 37 the week before, a U.S. military spokesman said.

A senior figure from the U.S.-led coalition warned that the Americans and their allies face a "rough winter" of attacks by insurgents.

One soldier from the 3rd Armored Cavalry Regiment was killed at about 8 a.m. Thursday when his truck hit a land mine near the Husaybah border crossing point with Syria 195 miles northwest of Baghdad, the military said.

The soldier was a member of the South Carolina National Guard, said Fort Carson, Colo., spokesman Capt. Bren K. Workman.

A paratrooper from the 82nd Airborne Division was killed and two others wounded when their patrol came under rocket-propelled grenade and small arms fire near Mahmudiyah, 15 miles south of Baghdad, about 8 p.m. Wednesday, the military said.

Their deaths brought to 140 the number of U.S. soldiers killed in Iraq by hostile fire since President Bush declared an end to major combat May 1. A total of 114 U.S. soldiers were killed in action before Bush's declaration.

Polish Maj. Hieronim Kupczyk, 44, died of gunshot wounds suffered when he and 15 other soldiers were ambushed while returning to their base from a promotion ceremony for the Iraqi civil defense corps. He was among 2,400 Polish troops commanding a large swath of south-central Iraq since September.

"This is the saddest day of my presidency," Polish leader Aleksander Kwasniewski said in Warsaw.

Two U.S. soldiers were slightly injured Thursday afternoon when several mortars were fired at an American command post in Mosul, the military said.

Two rockets were fired Wednesday evening at a U.S. civil-military operations center in Samara north of Baghdad but caused no damage or casualties, Maj. Jossyln Aberle, spokeswoman of the 4th Infantry Division, said Thursday.

Troops from the division also arrested 14 people, including a suspected member of a local terrorist cell and a weapons dealer, during at least seven raids north of Baghdad, Aberle said.

The chief British representative here, Jeremy Greenstock, said coalition forces face a "rough winter" of attacks. The Times of London newspaper said in Wednesday's edition.

Greenstock, Britain's former ambassador to the United Nations, also said it would be difficult to defeat the insurgents without the sort of heavy-handed measures that would further alienate the Iraqi people, the newspaper said.

Energy grant is received

By Nathan Chomsky-Higgins
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts' Center for Energy Efficiency and Renewable Energy, along with Pace Law School's Energy Project, received $450,000 in grants to establish the Northeast Regional Applications Center, a center for the advancement of energy efficient technologies and practices in the region.

The U.S. Department of Energy and the New York State Energy Re-search and Development Authority awarded the grants to Beka Kosanovic, the assistant director of the Industrial Assessment Center and CEERE member, and Lawrence Ambs, a professor in the Mechanical and Industrial Engineering department at UMass and Co-director of the CEERE.

The main purpose behind the NERAC is to advance clean, efficient, and reliable on-site energy systems around the six New England states and New York that would help ease the energy burdens felt by many in the area.

These on-site energy systems are most commonly referred to as Combined Heat and Power systems and can help energy consumers generate their own electricity while allowing them to utilize previously untapped hot waste. This wasted heat could be put to use in climate control, or for other various industrial processes.

Currently, the standard power generation efficiency rate is about 35 percent, but companies which are using CHP technology are seeing the rate rise to as much as 85 percent. This reduces the consumption of fuel and the generation of greenhouse gases, which in turn reduces dependency on fuel and helps save the environment. Along with these beneficial advances, there is another added bonus.

According to Kosanovic, since the power is generated on-site, there is no need to transfer it anywhere. This reduces the strain on the electrical grid, which increases the reliability of a system that is aging and prone to failure, most notably with the recent Aug. 14 crash that caused a blackout of much of the northeast and southern Canada.

As stated on the CEERE website, increasing CHP in the northeast will "improve the environment, raise productivity in buildings and industry, lower regional energy costs, strengthen security, enhance consumer choice and reduce price risks for end-users."

Along with the NERAC, there are five other Regional Application Centers around the country, each with the same purpose. They supply not only feasibility studies to see which industries and companies are eligible for the CHP technology, but educate and provide technological assistance to companies trying to make the conversion.

Many companies are eligible for CHP technology, including such varied industries as hospitals, hotels, office complexes and manufacturing plants. Though there is a cost to switching over to CHP, this cost can be recouped with electrical savings. For example, according to Kosanovic, a company that decides to buy the equipment outright can make their money back within an average of four to seven years.

The DOE currently has a goal of doubling the number of CHP equip companies in the Northeast over the next decade. Interest in the Northeast, which has one of the highest energy prices compared to other regions, is already growing. "We're already getting calls," Kosanovic said.

NASA releases space station safety plan

By Marcia Dunn
Associated Press

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Spurred by a post-Columbia safety review, NASA is stepping up exterior inspections of the international space station and making numerous improvements, including installation of more extensive shielding against orbiting debris.

The space agency Thursday released its plan for safely keeping a crew aboard the space station without the help of the remaining three shuttles, grounded until at least next fall. Smaller Russian spacecraft are delivering crews and supplies for now.

The 84-page report points out the need for more and better inspections of space station wiring, equipment and outside surfaces, and improved shielding against space junk. NASA said all these issues are being addressed.

"The Columbia tragedy serves as strong reminder that spaceflight is harshly unforgiving of engineering deficiencies, over-confidence, system or human error and inaccurate risk assessments," the internal report stated.

So far, space station officials have found five pieces of equipment that pose an unacceptable risk. The five items involve a power-distribution box that failed its vibration requirements, a robot-arm workstation that had wires installed that were smaller than specified, and problems with a radiator, heart defibrillator and ammonia fixture.

Soon after Columbia disintegrated over Texas in February, NASA's space station program began examining its own operations to identify safety risks.

The team looked at every recommendation and observation put forth by the Columbia Accident Investigation Board to see how the lessons might apply to the space station.

One area where the program was found lacking was external inspections. Visiting space shuttles routinely photograph the exterior of the space station. But with the fleet grounded, NASA has become worried that outside damage — like loose panels, aging equipment, and holes left by space junk — could go undetected.

As a result, NASA has begun using cameras already on the station to examine the outside of the space station. But blind spots exist in remote corners, and the space agency said it may seek observations from satellites or spacewalking astronauts.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Jennifer Eastwood
Managing Editor Dan Lamothe
Business Manager Peter Foundas
Production Manager Scott Pihl
Night Supervisor Nick Markantonatos
Advertising Manager Sean Costello
Editorial Production Shannon Farrington
Arts & Living Editor Glen Straub
Comics Editor Molly Eggleston
Editorial Editor Paige Cram
News Editor Ferron Sulaiker
Photo Editor Gerald H. Ling
Sports Editor Andrew Merritt
Circulation Manager Kristen Weiss
Classified Advertising Marty Pappas
Distribution Manager Julie Beauchamp
Finance Manager Greg Stamm
Human Resource Sandra Marquez
Special Issues Betsy Feldman
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising David Bor
Assistant Business Jaclynn Sorenson
Assistant Distribution Mark Logatic
Assistant Finance Richard Pacheco
Advertising Production Liza Lynch
Graphics Advisor Charlie Higgins
Layout Manager Lindsay Clark
Asst. Arts & Living Meghan Healy
Asst. Arts & Living Cameron J. Woods
Assistant Editorial Matthew Reid
Assistant News Erika Lovley
Assistant News Morris Singer
Assistant Photo Emilie Duggan
Assistant Sports Mike Marzelli
Assistant Sports Robert McGovern

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is entirely funded by sales and advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the Collegian in 1907, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Rifle focus in sniper case

By Sonja Barisic
Associated Press

VIRGINIA BEACH, Va. (AP) — The rifle found in sniper suspect John Allen Muhammad's car was the weapon used to kill eight people and wound three during last year's sniper attacks, a ballistics expert testified Thursday.

Walter A. Dandridge Jr. of the U.S. Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives said he examined microscopic markings left on fired bullets, bullet fragments and casings taken from shooting victims or crime scenes. Such markings are unique to each individual weapon, he said.

"I was able to determine that each of the bullets and bullet fragments were fired from the same firearm," Dandridge told the jury at Muhammad's murder trial.

Dandridge then matched those fragments to the .223-caliber semiautomatic Bushmaster rifle found in Muhammad's car when Muhammad was arrested last fall in Maryland.

The bullets that killed Dean Harold Meyers and seven other victims in the Washington area last October came from the Bushmaster "to the exclusion of all other firearms," and so did the bullets that wounded three other victims, Dandridge said.

AP PHOTO/TRACY WOODWARD, JR./E

U.S Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms agent Walter A. Dandridge holds the Bushmaster rifle used in the sniper shootings.

Campus Perspectives

By Amelia P. Lincoln

"What would you change about Southwest?"

sophomore
Communications major

"It doesn't make sense to have Health Services away from half the campus population, so having a direct shuttle there is a good idea."
Allison Zarick

graduate student
Communication Disorders major

"They should change the unisex bathrooms to co-ed only floors."
Missy Davis

sophomore
History major

"They should shift the time of trash removal with trucks to a later time. Early trash disposal prohibits people who study late at night from getting enough sleep."
Issac Funk

junior
Communications major

"I would have bathrooms for both sexes on every floor."
Heather Twombly

freshman
Legal Studies major

"I wouldn't have the police walking around all the time. It makes it feel like a prison."
Kathy Schmidt

sophomore
Spanish major

"I think it's awesome the way it is."
Carlos Garduno

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

HAMPSHIRE FITNESS club

90 Gatehouse Road, Off Rt. 9 Two miles East of Amherst Center • On the Bus Route

www.hampfit.com

Click On:
• Class Schedule
• Pool
• Courts

And More!

Hampshire Fitness Club has it all for you

- Full Sized Indoor Pool
- Aqua Aerobics
- Cybex Nautilus Circuit
- Boxing Studio
- Cybex Free Weights
- Full Court Basketball
- Volleyball
- Indoor Tennis
- Yoga / Pilates
- Aerobics / Step / Bosu
- Jacuzzi / Saunas
- Cardio-Vascular Equipment

MasterCard VISA OPEN 6am to 10pm Mon-Fri 8am to 9pm Sat-Sun TEL 256- 6446

LIFE IN THE FUN LANE!
Work a flexible schedule in a fun environment!

PART-TIME POSITIONS AVAILABLE:

- Servers – Monday and Wednesday - 6 p.m. to 9 p.m.
  Friday and Saturday – 9 p.m. to 1 a.m.
- Marketing Assistant – Can you work a flexible schedule of about 20 hours per week that includes some days and evenings? This is a great entry level position promoting and coordinating parties and bowling events.
- Machine Mechanic - Do you enjoy working with machines and have the ability to troubleshoot? We will teach you how to monitor and maintain our pinsetter machines. Mechanical experience necessary. PT day, evening and weekend shifts available.

Apply today @ Northampton Bowl, 525 Pleasant St., Northampton. Ask for Bill or Vinny.

apply now for the expanded

CRIMINAL JUSTICE PROGRAM

Criminal Justice Concentration
Department of Sociology

Earn a Certificate in Criminal Justice

For students who plan a career in some aspect of the criminal justice system: police officers, probation and parole officers, paralegals, public and private criminal attorneys, district attorneys, judges, etc.

Applications are now being taken for the program.

A wide variety of courses are scheduled for 2004, including new classroom and online courses in domestic violence, crime and forensics, criminal violence in America, Corporate Deviance and Official Corruption, organized crime, and serial murder.

Courses offered Winter Session 2004:

SOCIOL 241 Criminology (online)
SOCIOL 347 Corporate Deviance and Official Corruption (online)
SOCIOL 392G Alternative Sanctions in the Criminal Justice System (online)
SOCIOL 395K Domestic Violence (online)
SOCIOL 397D Delinquency and the Juvenile Justice System (online)

Watch for the exciting line-up of Spring courses!

For more information, and to apply to the program, contact Prof. Anthony Harris, Sociology Department, Thompson 524, 545-0475.

To register for winter and spring courses, go to www.umass.edu/contined or the Division of Continuing Education Registration Office, 358 N. Pleasant St.

UMassAmherst Continuing Education

Priority will be given to registered Criminal Justice Program students.

STOCK UP NOW!

Buy $50 or more of JanSport® merchandise and get a FREE TURTLENECK.*

Crewneck Sweatshirts
Hooded Sweatshirts

UMASS AMHERST University of Massachusetts UNIVERSITY STORE
Campus Center • Phone: (413) 545-2619
www.umass.bkstr.com

JANSPORT

FREE 100% Cotton Turtleneck!

* White: unisex sizes S-XL available while supplies last. Offer valid in store only. Not valid with any other offer.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 7, 2003 EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Iraqi bloodbath goes on despite 'end' to war

As the war in Iraq loomed earlier this year, attention on the news increased dramatically. Once the war began in March, all eyes were on the overseas chaos. The war ended in a few weeks and soon everyone slowly drifted back to their lives and shuttered out the media.

But one thing has remained constant, both during the war and after: deaths. The number of American soldiers who died during the war in Iraq is 138. Since President George W. Bush declared major combat operations had ended on May 1, the number killed in action, as of Nov. 3, is 238 — a difference of 100 people. And a whopping 2,176 people have been wounded since the war started.

These startling statistics show that while the war in Iraq may have been officially deemed over, the calamity continues. While everyone's eyes were glued to television sets and people avidly asked for updates to the war in March, that interest has since waned.

Part of the blame belongs to the media that saturated the nation with coverage leading up to the war and during the war. Indeed, the first few months of 2003 were used to shamelessly promote the war in Iraq as if it was a patriotic duty. The media failed to ask important questions, even though that was the patriotic thing to do.

So when Bush declared an end to hostilities, media interest dwindled. It's unfortunate that our nation has lost more lives since May 1 than during the time when the war was in full force.

Few people even seem to know about the great disparity between these numbers and, sadly, some people probably don't know how many people are dying overseas on a daily basis. Since the so-called end of the war, the media hasn't been able to conjure up the same type of "hype" to capture Americans' attention. The deadly helicopter attack in Iraq that killed 15 people on Sunday made headlines and turned heads but it was just a flicker compared to the amount of attention the war received in March.

The relatively sober coverage of the goings on in Iraq doesn't seem to be loud enough. Not enough people know; not enough people are talking about it; not enough people are reacting. What's most appalling is that no weapons of mass destruction have been found and, in case one needs to be reminded, that was the reason we first stepped into Iraq eight months ago.

The total of 376 deaths will continue to rise, and unfortunately there seems to be no easy solution to this problem. We cannot abort our mission overseas and leave Iraq in utter ruin. But there is one thing all Americans can do: follow the event carefully. With the impending presidential election, American awareness is of utmost importance.

The media — and ultimately the American people — should not remain as quiet as they did before the attack in Iraq. The candidates, who will include President Bush vying for a second term in office, should be carefully questioned. Each candidate's next plan of action for resolving the problem in Iraq should be carefully scrutinized.

Above all, let us not forget that deaths of our fallen heroes that continue to mount, even though the "war" is supposedly over.

Information from www.antiwar.com was used in this editorial.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

Revolution in Bolivia gets dismal coverage by U.S. press

Did you hear the news? You probably did not. There was a revolution in Bolivia! You'd figure an event like that you would at least hear something about.

Well apparently Kobe Bryant made the front page of most major newspapers that day. Maybe it was because I was in Bolivia and I saw the people and the beginning stages of the situation that it hit me especially hard. Or maybe it is because I enjoy a good political conversation, I don't know. Well for those of you who did not hear there was a revolution in Bolivia, it was bloody; it was intense, and the American mainstream media did a terrible job reporting on it.

Adam Greenspan

Bolivia is the most impoverished country in South America and it has the second largest oil reserves in South America. This poor country with rich natural resources recently had a revolution to force U.S. backed president Sanchez to resign. The main and uniting reason for the forced resignation was his plan to export the country's vast natural gas reserves to the ports of Chile (or Peru), and then to the United States via Mexico. The exportation of the natural gas would force the profits to leave the country resulting in more Bolivian poverty. The president was receiving pressure from the Free Trade Area of the Americas along with U.S. support for the gas program.

Bolivia has had a history of having nonrenewable natural resources exported. Tin, rubber, guano, and silver have all been victimized. Protests were staged by miners, teachers, farmers, students, bus drivers, and Aymara peasants. Each group had been protesting for their own agendas, but they were all united from the inherently evil natural gas exportation plans. The protests forced Sanchez to flee the country. He reportedly flew to Miami for refuge. The protests were bloody. According to reports, 65 had died and several more were injured. Military personnel that did not kill protesters on demand were to be executed.

Protesters responded by digging trenches, using dynamite, and slingshots.

In essence, La Paz, the Bolivian capital, and the surrounding area as far as 70 km away turned into a war zone. La Paz was blockaded and food and oil shortages became a commonality in the city. The indigenous leaders have given President Mesa, the new Bolivian president, 90 days to change the countries policies and throw away the original gas exportation plan. If the president does not comply the leaders have threatened to revolt again.

It is necessary that the media stops bowing down to the White House and actually begins acting like the "liberal media" ... The people should know about America's involvement in Bolivia.

The reporting done by the United States' mainstream media on the situation was worse than dismal. The articles were limited, broad, and from the eyes of the Pentagon rather from the people fighting and dying for their lives in Bolivia. The media mentioned nothing on the FTAA involvement, or the obvious U.S. support for Sanchez. After reviewing the stories published by CNN, the Boston Globe, the New York Times, and the Washington Post, I realized that none of them were different. All articles were from the Associated Press, the only difference lying in methods of copying and pasting.

It is necessary that the media stops bowing down to the White House and actually begins acting like the "liberal media." The United States is involved in practically every aspect of the global economy in today's world.

The people should know about America's involvement in Bolivia. Why is the United States supporting Sanchez, and why is the FTAA placing pressure on Bolivia to export the natural gas?

The mainstream articles that I read did not reveal that information. I am sick of wondering. I want to know what is going on. I want to know what my government is doing around the world. I am tired of all the secrets. I should not have to do a five-hour research session with my buddies to find out what is really happening. The media should be keeping the White House in check, acting as a watchdog, and report on behalf of the people.

I received most of my information from sites such as indymedia.org and zmag.org. These sites are left wing sites, but they tell you why the Bolivian people are risking their lives, the U.S. involvement, and the involvement of the FTAA. The sites even mention companies that are involved. I want to know what is going on from the people's perspective. That is what democracy is, "For the people, by the people." It is time to start reporting that way.

Adam Greenspan is a UMass student.

Submit a letter or opinion

editorial@dailycollegian.com
413-545-3699
Letters to the Editor
113 Campus Center Way
Amherst, MA 01003

German government must take a firmer stand against hatred

Morris Singer

Religious hatred is a disappointing problem in our world. Most Americans would probably think of al-Qaeda and Islamic extremism as some of the most well known forms of this hate, but a more classic example is anti-Semitism. In the past week, there's been a bit of an upset in German government, starting when member of Parliament Martin Hohmann made a speech in front of 108 other MPs on Germany's national day, calling Jews "a race of perpetrators."

Jewish involvement in the Bolshevik revolution justified his comments, Hohmann said.

"Thus one could describe Jews with some justification as a nation of perpetrators," Mr. Hohmann said, according to the New York Times. "That may sound horrible, but it would follow the same logic with which one describes the Germans as a race of perpetrators."

Germany has strict laws against Nazism and inciting racial hatred. Hohmann's public statement is a clear violation of such laws, and Germany has been quick to act on anyone following Hohmann's recent footsteps in promoting anti-Semitism.

On Nov. 4, Brig. Gen. Reinhard Günzel was discharged for his support of Hohmann's statement.

"It was an excellent speech of courage, truth and clarity that one seldom hears or reads in our country," the New York Times reported Günzel as saying in a letter to Hohmann. "Even if all those who agree with me or even clearly articulate this opinion will be referred to as right-wing extremists by the media, I can assure you that the majority of our people share your thoughts."

This backing of incitement is intolerable, and Defense Minister Peter Struck understood this. Struck dismissed Günzel Tuesday, calling him a "lone, confused general" who "damaged ... Germany," the New York Times said.

The German government is very sensitive to upstart racial hatred within its own bodies, and it is indeed good to see that they are taking steps to weed out anti-Semitism backed by military might. This combination, if left unchecked could lead to a renewed rise of Nazism.

It is particularly critical that the [German] government react in this case, and that they do so with more than a strike against less prominent figures with less prominent positions and, in turn, less significant roles in the incitement of hatred.

But at the same time, it is worrisome to see that the government has done nothing to censure the German MP for his remarks. Although political figures within the German government have chastised Hohmann for his remarks, Hohmann has not been dismissed from his post. In fact, no organized action under the official auspices of the government has been taken, or even reported.

This is utterly disappointing. In a country that attempts to put forth an image of tolerance and acceptance of racial minorities — a country that must strive day to day to put forth such an image after committing unprecedented racially motivated atrocities in the last century — action must be taken to secure not only this image, but to back it with realities that reflect a true German determination for reform.

The days in which Germany is judged by the international community vis-à-vis the Holocaust are not over. It is particularly critical that the government react in this case, and that they do so with more than a strike against less prominent figures with less prominent positions and, in turn, less significant roles in the incitement of hatred.

It is still a good thing that Günzel was dismissed. Don't mistake these words. In fact, it is quite rare that such a general in Germany would be dismissed. London's Daily Telegraph reported a spokesman for the German defense ministry as saying.

Nevertheless, Hohmann must face the consequences of his hate speech as well. If not, can the American people, and the international community, really trust Germany's claim of reform since 1945, or will they see this as Germany's true sentiment?

In the Daily Telegraph, Struck said that Günzel, in agreeing with Hohmann, "had agreed with an even more confused opinion [than his own]." It is time Germany put some strength behind this statement and shows the world that the country means what she says. Otherwise, the German government has, by consequence implicitly agreed with those who speak out in the name of hate.

Information from the New York Times and the Daily Telegraph was used in this column.

Morris Singer is a Collegian columnist.

A delightful little Saturday night out with friends

Matt Brochu

No witty intro today. Here's my running diary of the events that transpired between the hours of 9 p.m. and 3:04 a.m. on Sept. 27 and Sept. 28. Names have been changed to protect the innocent.

9 p.m.: "On your mark, ready set go, lemme go, lemme shoop, to the next man in a 3-piece suit ... " I'm the DD tonight, so I need to be responsible, and by "responsible" I mean make everyone in my car listen to my Salt-N-Pepa mix CD. My best friend and I — let's call her Ebony — are on our way to E.L. Palooza 2003 (a.k.a.: a party with way too many people from our hometown, East Longmeadow). Our mission: to get in and out in 15 minutes or 2 beers, whichever comes first.

9:07 p.m.: Pick up my friend Manny. Great kid; receding hairline at 19-years-old.

9:10 p.m.: Arrive at the party. Begin betting when the cops will show up.

9:11 p.m.: Get asked to pay for the keg that we're not going to drink anything out of. Damn it, I forgot my yearbook. I guess I'll just talk to people like I'm writing in a yearbook instead: "Wuz (arrow pointing upwards)? Spanish class was fun. Remember the fruit snacks? Haha. Have a good summer. Luv ya."

9:11 p.m. : Get asked to pay for the keg that we're not going to drink anything out of. Damn it, I forgot my yearbook. I guess I'll just talk to people like I'm writing in a yearbook instead: "Wuz (arrow pointing upwards)? Spanish class was fun. Remember the fruit snacks? Haha. Have a good summer. Luv ya."

9:13 p.m.: We have a winner. Just got the first generic, "How's school?" question.

9:14 p.m. Winner number two. Just gave the first, "Pretty good. You?" response.

9:17 p.m.: Finish beer number one. Time flies when you're having fun. Beer flies when you're not.

9:21 p.m.: Go upstairs and find the freshman who's had far too much fun in her first month of school and far too little exercise.

9:25 p.m.: Fresh air. Get locked outside the house because the sliding glass door is stuck. Franny sees a random girl from her own school and starts beating on the door like a spaz. Ever seen a bird stuck in a greenhouse? Yeah, same thing.

9:29 p.m. Door gets fixed, beer number two is finished, and yes, someone's wearing a bandana. It's time to go.

9:52 p.m.: Back in the car. "AH, push it ."

10:30 p.m.: Time to head to the townhouses for Trigger's birthday. Unfamiliar faces in our apartment = locking the beer fridge before leaving. Meanwhile, my car keys are sitting on my desk and my roommate's checkbook is chilling on the coffee table. But hey, the beer is safe, and that's what matters.

10:47 p.m.: Trigger made his friends grow beards for his birthday so they could shave them into the designs of his choice. My friend Scheuf looks like Hairy Harry, that old CVS toy where you could draw facial hair on the man using a magnet.

11:41 p.m.: Time for Phillips Street. Hop in the car. "Hahaha. You so crazy. I think I wanna have yo baby."

11:50 p.m. 2,500 kids in a 3-block radius. Yeah, this is going to end well.

11:51 p.m. I think I'm starting to like the taste of pepper spray.

2:14 a.m. Belligerent girl is able to walk .. and she's coming this way with tube-top intact. She must be 4'6"

2:15 a.m.: OH NO YOU DIDN'T! Ebony just shoved belligerent midget off the stoop. Catfight in progress. I try to break it up.

2:16 a.m.: OK, I definitely just got dropped by two chicks on the ground — rolling, grabbing an ass — ponytail in my mouth and I'm free. They've been separated and both are detained.

2:21 a.m.: Uh-Oh. Who let the midget out of her cage? Apparently someone stole her shoe. She's throwing full beers at the apartment.

2:22 a.m. OK, that one almost hit me. Pick up the beer. Open the beer. Drink the beer, but I won't enjoy it.

2:24 a.m. Yeah, she's tiny, but she's wicked cute. Should I get her number?

2:31 a.m. Female Webster's male friend, who might weigh a buck thirty if she were on his back, comes to the door with a cute message for the girls: "I'd slap all you [expletives]." We've now had someone threaten to hit a girl. This kid needs to be hit by a bus.

2:45 a.m. Smuggle Ebony out of the house to walk her back.

3:04 a.m. Pass out with one shoe on and half eaten Easy Mac on my chest.

Matt Brochu is a Collegian columnist.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 7, 2003

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Many ways to play with your Wario

Press Start to Play

Reid Davenport

The latest craze in the handheld market is found in a game actually released back in May. Though it has been on the shelves for about six months, it is only recently that gamers have picked up on the craze that is "Wario Ware Inc."

"Wario Ware" condenses a load of mini-games into one neat little package that can provide hours of entertainment. It can even distract you long enough to get through another boring lecture.

"Wario Ware" is a highly addictive reaction game. It throws seemingly simple tasks at the player, yet it is accented with difficult levels as well. You begin game play with the easier levels, which, while addictive, present little in the way of challenges. As you beat these levels and unlock additional mini-games the pace quickens and your eyes become locked onto your Gameboy Advanced. With every passing game comes another one at random and it could require you to do something as simple as jumping a car or as complicated as choosing a correctly assembled GBA.

The game has many tasks that promise to keep you entertained and laughing yourself silly. These mini games are some of the most addictive and creative games placed into one package.

With that in mind, it is fair to say that "Wario Ware" is all about senseless mini games that have no real point. One of the first mini-games available for play is "Jump Forever." In this game the player helps Wario jump rope, and he can literally jump forever. Despite the lack of thought it takes to play "Jump Forever," you may find yourself trying it at first and then returning to see how many times you can jump the rope, if you can top your last score.

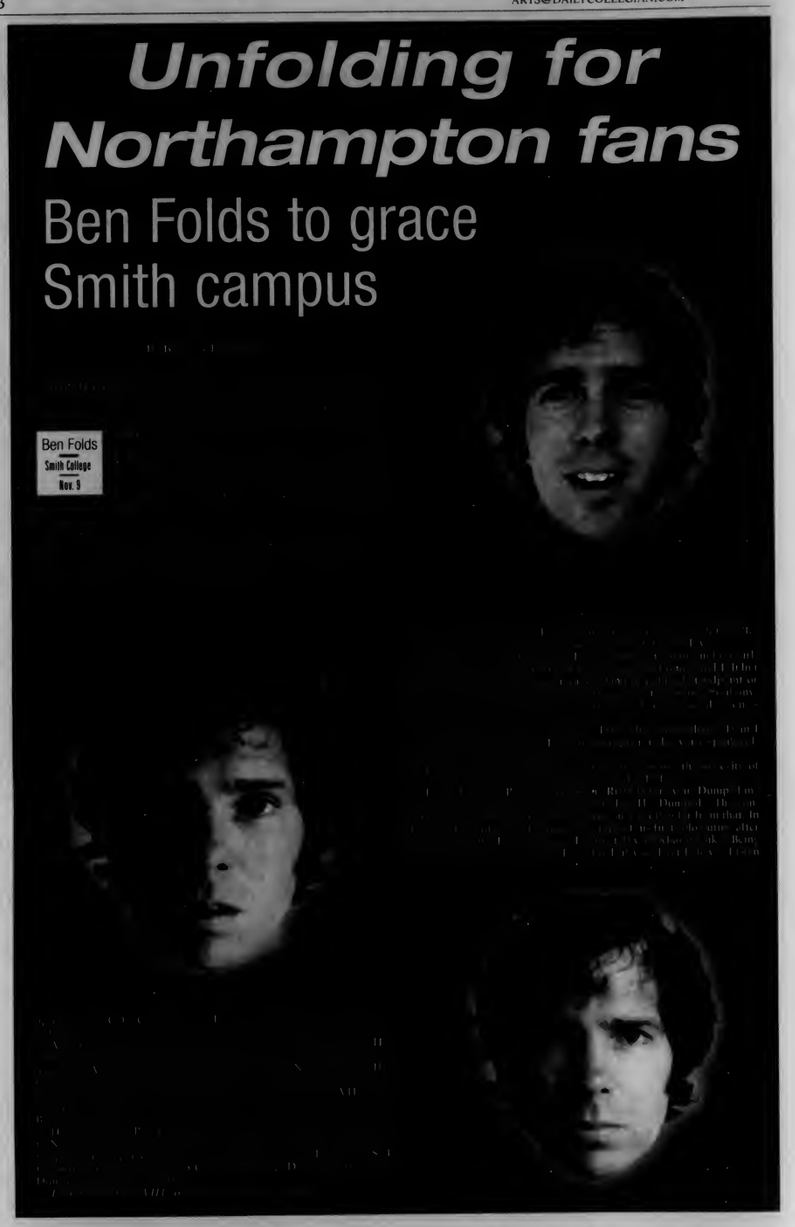
'Wario Ware Inc.: Mega Microgame
Gameboy Advanced
Publisher and Developer: Nintendo
Puzzle
Rating: E
Grade: A-

While the game is quite addictive, it can also become a bore for those who master the mini-games too fast. You might find yourself stuck playing the same games over and over again, which can get annoying. There is a way to avoid this tedium though; simply replaying the levels you have already beaten and unlock more mini-games. As you get further into the games you will be able to play more extended ones, such as "Dr. Wario and Fly Swatter."

A nicely added touch to "Wario Ware" is the reincarnation of old Nintendo favorites like "Super Mario Bros.," "Legend of Zelda," and "Duck Hunt." These old favorites appear revamped on this game. While they are nowhere near as fun as playing the actual games, it is nice to see the renovation of a few classics in a new game.

Overall "Wario Ware Inc." is a game that you would want handy for a long plane or car ride. Grab a game like "Final Fantasy Tactics" or "Advanced Wars 2" if you're looking for a game to play regularly because Wario can wear out his welcome over time.

"Wario Ware Inc." is available in stores now for around $35. Look for Wario and the rest of the Nintendo crew in "Mario Kart Double Dash" on Nov. 17th.



Reid Davenport is a Collegian columnist

COURTESY NINTENDO.COM

Unfolding for Northampton fans

Ben Folds to grace Smith campus

Ben Folds
Smith College
Nov. 9

The Eels are winding into Noho for an electrifying show

By Nick Romanow
Collegian Staff

"A lot of people say to me ... 'you look sad,' " confided The Eels' notoriously dour frontman E (real name: Mark Oliver Everett) from the Pearl St. stage this past Sunday night. "But I feel pretty happy right now." Of course, at that remark the audience boomed with cheers and applause and E continued to smile, and rock.

The Eels
Pearl St.
Nov. 11

"I'm not the happiest guy on earth, but I'm not the saddest guy," E explained over the phone, a few days after the Northampton show. "The rock can save me." While this may seem to be a lofty, and possibly cliché, statement, one can't help, but think its true listening to E's records or watching him on stage.

E's records have evolved from dreamy pop music into experimental, often bluesy, rock music. On stage, E noted that despite having a long career in music he was making his first trip to Northampton. "We have 11 years of material that we're trying to catch you folks up to tonight," he remarked to the crowd. The band tried to make up for all the lost time by sticking around for more than 90 minutes, playing four encores and a career-spanning set, much to the audience's delight.

"It can be hard," E said, discussing how he chooses setlists from a wide selection of songs. "There are always complaints, people are always shouting out for songs."

The Eels seemed to leave no fan unsatisfied, though, as they rolled through songs from every album. In fact, while the tour is ostensibly designed to support the band's latest release "Shootenanny!," which came out in June, the new tracks were not the main focus of the night. Still the crowd seemed thrilled to be hearing new songs; the stomping bluesy-rock of "All In A Day's Work" and the sweet pop rock of "Dirty Girl" were highlights of the night.

Though The Eels may have a silly sound, Everett packs the music full of serious lyrics.

Among the highlights of the evening was the depth that the full live-band added to songs. Bassist Kool G Murder, drummer Puddin', and guitarist Chet Atkins comprised the Eels ensemble, dressed all in orange jumpsuits with black t-shirts, while E arrived on stage in blue jeans, a denim jacket, and sunglasses. As E switched off beiween mulitipic guitars and the keyboard, Murder alternated between his bass and the keyboard, meanwhile Puddin' and Atkins both proved to be superb musicians. Atkins added amazing fills, lead lines and solos into many of the songs that fit seamlessly into the tightly constructed songs.

While Murder has been with The Eels for some time, Puddin' and Atkins are new to the lineup, both having joined midway through this tour. E seems to take pride in his ever-changing lineup of musicians, "anyone can join The Eels," he commented. Not only does the band change but the songs do too. Halfway during the set the band started to play music that no one in the crowd recognized, but everyone dug it. Then E started singing "Life is hard/ And so am I/ You better give me something/ So I don't die" and the crowd realized, with great glee, it was the band's biggest hit to date, "Novocaine For The Soul."

"We always change up the old songs," E said. "We haven't been playing 'Novocaine' for the last couple years so we came up with many different versions." The one the band came up with, a full on rock-assault, as opposed to the original's keyboard-driven music, was a huge hit with the crowd at Pearl Street. Not only was the crowd having fun, the band seemed to be having the time of their life up on stage, and E constantly remarked how much he loved being up there. It was odd when considering that it wasn't until recently that E even liked the touring process.

"I wouldn't say [I love touring] — I enjoy it. I started to last year. After a while it starts to beat you into submission but then you start to realize the things to enjoy and the things to be upset about."

Despite E's bright demeanor, both on-stage and off, he still seems to have things to be upset about in his life. "Shootenanny!" finds him experimenting even more with the juxtaposition of combining darker, sadder lyrics with more upbeat music. In "Love of the Loveless" E pseudo-raps, over a Casio-keyboard beat, "Don't have too many friends/ Never felt

Continued on page 8

PHOTOS COURTESY FELSTHEBAND.COM

Mark O. Everett, otherwise known as E, is an artist in a field all his own.

Nosing around the Noho film festival

Nosey Parker pokes fun at New England

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON — The ninth annual Northampton Independent Film Festival kicked off Wednesday night with a screening of the Vermont-set indie comedy "Nosey Parker." The movie is the third in director John O'Brien's "Vermont Trilogy," which began with 1992's "Vermont is For Lovers" and continued into 1996's "A Man With A Plan."

O'Brien's films are set in quiet, rustic Vermont towns, the kinds of places that explode with a smear of red and yellow in the fall, and the locals live simple, unpretentious lives. Which is exactly what drives young photographer Natalie (Natalie Picoe) and her older, wealthy psychiatrist husband (Richard Snee) to buy a large, expensive converted barn in the painter-ly town of Turnbridge.

'Nosey Parker'
The Northampton International Film Festival
Nov. 5
Academy of Music Northampton

Natalie has fallen in love with the bucolic charms of the local village and the local environment — the fire-colored leaves that illuminate the fall, the lack of traffic or sprawl, the fact that the town's church comes complete with a white steeple.

But she is troubled. A former therapy patient, Natalie hears her biological clock ticking but can't get her husband — a gruff, clinical man with two grown children of his own — to agree to have more children. Natalie wafts around their lovely pastoral home in a saddened funk ... until local tax assessor George Lydon (played by George Lydon) stops by on a business call.

George is a genial, fast-witted elderly man, and Natalie finds him to be interesting. He's smart, funny and a good listener and Natalie hires him to help around the house. The two become fast friends, to Richard's mounting jealousy.

> "'Nosey Parker'— the name comes from the local slang for being unduly interested in nosing around people's lives."

"Nosey Parker" — the name comes from the local slang for being unduly interested in nosing around people's lives — is a gentle, unforced comedy that ambles along a shuffling pace.

For anyone who has lived in New England — particularly those who have experienced a life in Vermont, New Hampshire and Western Massachusetts — the movie perfectly captures the easy-going feel of a quiet New England town. O'Brien has obvious affection for his town and his characters, and his care is palpable in his loving treatment of the area. He captures nicely naturalistic performances from the cast, notably the lovely Picoe and Lydon, and he was smart to frame his story with a documentary feel without resorting to the now cheap and overused mock-documentary format. The movie's placid realism and hovering camera gives you the feeling of being right there with the characters, and David Parry's lovely cinematography gives the film a postcard pretty sheen. The only faults are the movie's few dry spots and the cardboard in which the story is wrapped up in the end.

"The Winter People," a 14-minute short shot on Cape Cod by filmmaker John Stimpson, preceded "Nosey Parker." This eerie, spooky film tells the story of a divorcee and her daughter returning to their beach house one last time to close it for the winter. The daughter has heard stories of ghosts — or "winter people" — living there in the off months and begins to see signs that people have indeed lived there. Looking like a very professionally made film — the icy cinematography and musical score are Hollywood slick — "The Winter People" suggest a bright future ahead for Stimpson, who keeps the chilling aura humming along until a misguided final shot the breaks his Twilight Zone spell.

The 'proof' is in the show

Broadway drama unveiled at UMass Curtain

By Joe Piedrafite
Collegian Staff

First and foremost, "proof" is not a drama about math.

Well, yes, it's about math, but it's also about family, relationships, trust, and above all, finding out who you are.

David Auburn's 2001 Pulitzer Prize winning play centers on Catherine, a vibrant and troubled young woman who has been taking care of her genius, but now mentally unstable mathematician father, Robert, in their suburban Chicago home. On the eve of her 25th birthday and the funeral of her father, Catherine is forced to cope with many challenges, including the arrival of her manipulative older sister Claire and the appearance of Hal, a handsome and mysterious would-be suitor.

'proof'
Curtain Theater
Nov. 7-8

Hal, a former graduate student of Roberts, finds a highly complex proof in one of the professors beat up notebooks that threatens to unearth a buried secret that may tear the fragile family apart.

With "proof," Auburn has shown his talent as both a dramatist and a writer. His words are both elegant and natural at the same time. In what is basically a highbrow soap opera about math and relationships, Auburn takes what would normally be an extremely dry subject, appealing to only certain audiences and injects his own charismatic style of drama and wit to engage the audience in a highly thought-provoking piece. The dialogue comes naturally, and most of the time it doesn't feel forced. Filled with conversational banter, how real people talk, the performance is all the more accessible to audiences. Auburn's razor-sharp dialogue provides one of the most jaw-dropping Act I curtain lines in modern American drama.

Now, after a two-year stint on Broadway, a Pulitzer Prize and the 2001 Tony Award for Best New Play in hand, "proof" has arrived at the Curtain Theater, by way of the University of Massachusetts Theater Department. And what a production it is.

For starters, Rachel Cummings takes on the massive role of Catherine, and carries the bulk of the show. Cummings gracefully rises to the challenge, but occasionally gets lost in the dialogue. At times it feels that her performance is forced, but overall she balances her sarcasm and cynicism with warmth to come off as a troubled yet sensitive young woman looking to find her true self.

As Hal, the former student and hopeful suitor, Charnino Cheyenne-Rindge steals the show. His performance is the highlight of the production. He has a completely nuanced presentation and the audience is constantly drawn to him whenever he is onstage. Cheyenne-Rindge is a bundle of energy, which he consistently delivers to the audience. Hal's relationship with Catherine is somewhat tepid, but one can't help and cheer when they finally share that long awaited kiss in the middle of Act I.

UMass film professor Marty Norden turns in a solid performance as Robert, Catherine's father and mentally unstable math professor. He can turn Robert from calm to angry and defensive on a dime. Norden's slightly disheveled appearance and subtle movements only add to his performance. His scenes with Cummings are wonderful, they both perform very well off each other, making the father/daughter relationship all the more heartbreaking.

Rounding out the intimate cast is Lindsay Grace Robintaille who puts in a fine turn as Catherine's self absorbed sister Claire. She is more than qualified for the role, although she can be a bit overbearing at times, almost coming off as too caring. In the end, however, she paces herself and gets control of the dialogue and the character. Her scene with Hal and Catherine arguing over the proof is extremely well executed.

Director M. Honatke Miller has safely guided this production to its harbor, making the most of the intimate space in the Curtain. Her performers have a strong grasp of Auburn's lyrical and intense script, if at times it is a little much for them. Amy Davis' stunning set completely engulfs the tiny Curtain (the theater is smaller than most lecture halls on campus); her rendering of a Chicago back porch is amazing, giving the actors a wonderful performance space to work with.

If you're looking for some stimulating entertainment this weekend, check out this impressive production of "proof." Tickets for this weekends final three performances (tonight at 8 p.m. and tomorrow at 2 p.m. and 8 p.m.) can be obtained by calling the Fine Arts Center Box Office at 413-545-2511 now. Prices are $10 for the general public and $5 for UMass students and senior citizens. So if good theater, or even math, is your thing, "proof" is worth investigating.

CMT awards honor Johnny Cash

By John Gerome
Associated Press

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Johnny Cash wasn't wild about the video for his rendition of the song "Hurt" the first time he saw it, said his daughter, Kathy Cash.

"He wasn't sure he liked it at first, then he kept watching it and he said, 'You know, that is a good video,' " she said of her late father. Cash won the Country Music Association's video of the year award Wednesday night for "Hurt." He also won single of the year for the song and album of the year — giving him his first CMA award since 1969 and tying him with Alan Jackson for most wins during the night.

COURTESY CMT.COM

Martina McBride won this year's female vocalist of the year.

Jackson won three awards, including vocal event of the year for his hit duet with Jimmy Buffett, "It's Five O'Clock Somewhere." Jackson also won male vocalist of the year and entertainer of the year — giving him 16 career CMA awards. Vince Gill, who hosted the show, holds the record with 18.

"Thank you, Alan Jackson — I'm glad I can help your struggling career," Buffett joked. "It was about 31 years ago I came to this town to pursue my musical madness. I never won anything for anything and it's great to do it here."

Jackson said, "Thank you, Jimmy. No problem."

Martina McBride got the nod for female vocalist of the year over Dolly Parton, Patty Loveless, Alison Krauss and Terri Clark.

"I'm so honored to be in this category," McBride said. "Dolly Parton, my God, she's my female vocalist of the year every year."

Toby Keith led all nominees with seven but was shut out. Keith was nominated for best entertainer, male vocalist, and album of the year for "Unleashed." "Beer For My Horses," a collaboration with Willie Nelson, was nominated for best song, single, music video and vocal event.

Keith, whose other hits include "I Wanna Talk About Me," "Who's Your Daddy," and "Courtesy of the Red, White & Blue," has long been a popular choice for nominations. But despite his multi-platinum sales success, he's won only one CMA award — male vocalist of the year in 2001.

The Dixie Chicks also were shut out. The group was nominated for vocal group and album of the year for "Home."

Cash, who died Sept. 12 at age 71 of complications from diabetes, won all but one award he was nominated for: vocal event of the year.

"It's amazing my father had such a life that he could expose himself and still never lose his dignity and his charm," said Cash's son John Carter Cash, who accepted the awards with Kathy Cash.

The announcements drew a standing ovation at the CMA's 37th Annual Country Music Awards held at the Grand Ole Opry House.

CMA voters — about 5,000 industry insiders who belong to the association —nominated Cash before his death for best single and video for "Hurt," a song about drug addiction written by Trent Reznor of Nine Inch Nails.

Cash also was nominated for best album ("American IV: The Man Comes Around") and vocal event of the year for "Tears in the Holston River" with the Nitty Gritty Dirt Band.

The "Hurt" video underscored Cash's frailty by contrasting images of a young, robust Cash from concerts and movies with new footage of the weathered and gray singer crooning, "You can have it all, my empire of dirt."

"We were all a little shaken by it because of the revealing nature of the video," John Carter Cash said. "But his life was an open book whether it was revealed in a video or whatever."

Cash has now won nine CMA awards, the last coming in 1969 when he won a then-record five awards in one night. That record has been tied by Gill and Jackson. "I don't believe it's a token recognition," John Carter Cash said. "This is about a great impact in the history of music."

The Cash family has suffered a tragic year. June Carter Cash, Cash's wife and John Carter Cash's mother, died in May after complications from heart surgery. Cash died in September. And last month, Rosey Nix Adams, June Carter Cash's daughter and Cash's stepdaughter, was found dead in a camper bus from accidental carbon monoxide poisoning.

COURTESY CMT.COM

Johnny Cash won three awards at this year's CMA awards.

"It's been a pretty tough year, pretty intense," John Carter Cash said. "But coming here tonight is almost like a beginning for my father in a lot of ways."

Largest choral gathering this year

Tomorrow night a combination of the top choral groups at the University of Massachusetts and some of the best off-campus ensembles will be on hand for the 5th annual Choral Spectrum in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall.

5th Annual Choral Spectrum
Fine Arts Center
Nov. 8
$10 general Public
$3 Umass Student
7:30 p.m.

From UMass, the Chorale, the Chamber Choir and the Women's Choir will perform while a statewide high school Men's Honor Choir and Women's Honor Choir will assist them in the entertainment. Cantabile, a professional classical octet that has performed a capella Venetian Renaissance works across western Massachusetts and New York, will be performing at the Spectrum as well.

According to the Department of Music and Dance at UMass, each ensemble will perform its own repertory but the plan is to have all the groups come together to sing "Donna Nobis Pacem (Give us Peace)" from J.S. Bach's "B Minor Mass" to conclude the event.

"The Choral Spectrum concerts are fast-moving samplers of the many styles and sounds of choral music from around the world, director of Choral Activities, F. Wayne Abercrombie, said in the press release. "Singing, especially singing together, is one of the oldest ways humans have expressed their emotions and moods. Our voices are unique aspects of our personalities, and choirs uniquely express cultural personalities."

Right up until the concert, the high school students who were lucky enough to be selected to perform in the all-star choirs will participate in choral workshops. The event is made possible by the sponsorship of the American Choral Directors Association, a national organization with 21,000 members.

Start time for the 5th Annual Choral Spectrum is 7:30 p.m. Tickets for the event are $10 for the general public; $5 for students, senior citizens and children under 18; and $3 for UMass students. Groups of over 15 will be admitted for $4 per person. Tickets can be ordered in advance or picked up at the Fine Arts Center Box Office. The number is 413-545-2511.

— Glen Straub

COURTESY THE DEPARTMENT OF MUSIC AND DANCE

Members of the University Women's Choir (above) will perform as part of Choral Spectrum in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall tomorrow at 7:30 p.m.

The evolution of 'queer'

By Martha Irvine
Associated Press

CHICAGO (AP) — Something queer is happening to the word "queer."

Originally a synonym for "odd" or "unusual," the word evolved into an anti-gay insult in the last century, only to be reclaimed by defiant gay and lesbian activists who chanted: "We're here, we're queer, get used to it."

Now "queer" is sneaking into the mainstream.

Jay Edwards, a 28-year-old gay man from Houston, has noticed it.

"Hey Jay," a straight co-worker recently said. "Have you met the new guy? He's really cute and queer, too. Just your type!"

It's the kind of exchange that still makes many wince. That's because, in the 1920s and '30s the word "queer" became synonymous with "pansy," "sissy" and even "pervert," says Gregory Ward, a Northwestern University linguist who teaches a course on language and sexuality.

Now, Ward says, the increasing use of "queer" — as in the prime-time TV show titles "Queer Eye for the Straight Guy" and "Queer as Folk" — is changing the word's image.

"It's really losing the hurtful and quasi-violent nature it had," Ward says.

Trish McDermott, vice president of "romance" at the-Match.com online dating service, says she's seeing the word appear more often in personal ads.

The title of one current ad: "Nice Guy for the Queer Guy."

A recent review in the Chicago Tribune's Metromix entertainment guide defined the crowd in a new upscale bar as "model-types and young clubbers amid dressy Trixies, middle-aged Gold Coast cigar-chompers and queer-eyed straight guys."

And while some in the gay community began using the word in the last decade or two as an umbrella term for "gay, lesbian, bisexual and transgendered," today's young people say that "queer" encompasses even more.

"I love it because, in one word, you can refer to the alphabet soup of gay, lesbian, bisexual, questioning, 'heteroflexible,' 'omnisexual,' 'pansexual' and all of the other shades of difference in that fluid, changing arena of human sexuality," says 27-year-old Stacy Harbaugh. She's the program coordinator for the Indiana Youth Group, a drop-in center in Indianapolis for youth who may place themselves into any of those categories.

"I find myself attracted to boy-like girls and girl-like boys," Harbaugh adds. "If 'lesbian' or 'bi' doesn't seem to fit, 'queer' certainly does."

Heteroflexible? Pansexual? The growing list of terms can be downright boggling.

James Cross, a 26-year-old Chicagoan, personally likes the term "metrosexual," meant to describe straight men like him who are into designer clothes, love art and fashion and even enjoy shopping (much like "queer-eyed straight guys").

He's also noticed the word "queer" being bandied about more often, especially at the public relations firm where he works. He says women are "definitely more comfortable" with it.

"I hate to admit it, but I certainly wear masks with the term. When I'm at work and talking with women, I'm down with it," he says. "But when I'm out on the rugby pitch or drinking beer with my 'bros,' I'm just one of the guys."

Use of a word that carries so much baggage can cause confusion.

Andy Rohr, a 26-year-old gay man living in Boston, noted that when a straight co-worker told him she liked the show "Queer Eye for the Straight Guy," "she whispered the word 'queer.' "

Dan Cordella says he is perplexed about what he "can and can't say."

"An entire generation of suburban youth was taught to practically walk on eggshells with their wording around those that, one, chose an alternative lifestyle and, two, were of a different ethnic background," says Cordella, a 26-year-old straight man who lives in New York and grew up outside Boston.

Ward, the Northwestern linguist, says that people are wise to use "queer" carefully because it is still "very context-sensitive."

"It really matters who says it and why they're saying it," he says.

Edwards says he likes when straight people are comfortable using it.

"If they can say the word with as much casualness and confidence as my gay friends, it lets me know that they are comfortable with who I am," he says.

Rohr, from Boston, is less sure about its use in everyday conversation but says it works with the "Queer Eye" title because its use is "archaic and unexpected."

"The bottom line is, I think the term has lost its political potency, if it ever had any, and has just become campy," he says.

And a spokesman for one conservative Christian group that monitors the media says he's "glad that 'queer' might be losing its edge in terms of being an insult."

"It's not a particular word we're concerned with," says Ed Vitagliano, of the American Family Association in Tupelo, Miss. "It's that the media and the entertainment industries are such powerful transmitters of values for only one side of this controversial issue."

Others, especially those with strong memories of the word as an insult, still find its use hurtful. "I believe this word continues to marginalize us," says Robin Tyler, a California-based activist and lesbian who's in her 60s.

That lingering negativity was apparent last month, for instance, when a Senate committee questioned federal appellate nominee Claude Allen about his use of the word "queer" when he was a press aide to Sen. Jesse Helms. Allen said he didn't intend it as a slur against gay people.

Incidents like those are proof that "queer" will be slow to shed its negative connotation, says researcher Caitlyn Ryan.

"It will take a long time to transition into common use in middle America," says Ryan, a clinical social worker at San Francisco State University who is conducting a long-term survey of gay, lesbian and bisexual youth and their families.

Eclectic rockers set to perform at home/ Always been my own man/ Pretty much alone." However, both on record and in concert, the listener is grooving along to the music.

Continued on page 6

"Sometimes I [combine darker lyrics with lighter music], sometimes I do the opposite. The last song on [The Eels' previous album] 'Souljacker' is upbeat music with crazy punk music. It's a way to subtly change the lyrics to the music."

E often wrestles with despair and sadness in his music, but always wants to make sure that the listeners enjoy themselves. The Eels second album, 1998's "Electro-Shock Blues," was written and recorded in the wake of E's sister's suicide and his mother being diagnosed with terminal cancer. E's father having died in 1982, the singer/songwriter was facing the loss of his entire family.

"There are some songs I recorded that I didn't put on," E disclosed when asked about whether he was ever afraid of putting himself too out there. "It's one thing to purge your guts but I don't see any use in doing that if people can't enjoy it. With some of the songs I was like, '[these] are just for me.' The songs I did [make available], I felt like the world needed [so] I'm glad I did [release the songs]."

While E has flirted with commercial success he tries his best to retain his integrity. He has long argued against putting songs in commercials but will occasionally put songs in films, as they are, as he said in his biography, "somebody's idea of art." However, E does try to select only films with merit, although he admits to some mistakes.

"You try to pick the movies that are gonna turn out good but it's hard. A lot of great movies look terrible, more often the opposite is true. You try to guess which ones are good, sometimes you feel it, sometimes you don't; sometimes you regret it. I just saw 'Holes' [A Disney movie that was released earlier this year featuring two songs by The Eels] on an airplane the other day and it was pretty good. Sometimes it's political, with the record company."

This topic seems even more crucial as The Eels record company, Dreamworks, has just recently been bought out by Universal.

"I don't know what to expect. I have no idea what's going to happen," E said, not quite scared but clearly not at ease with the idea. "It's a sad thing because the guys there are the reason I signed with them and now they're gonna be gone."

E is trucking on, however. "Shootenanny!" is one of three albums he was working on simultaneously and he plans on getting back to work on the other two soon. However, when asked for a release date, E advised, "I wouldn't hold your breath."

For now, E and his ever-changing touring band will continue to travel across the country, bringing rock to those who need it.

COURTESY EELSTHEBAND.COM

Everett is the master of his music. Having turned out numerous Eels albums each with its own story.

Natural living to the extreme

By Anne Wallace Allen
Associated Press

STANNARD, Vt. (AP) — Ben Graham remembers the way he felt the first time he stepped into an earth house.

The house was in Oregon. The floor was made of earth, and the walls were clay, sand and straw, with big chunks of stone in them. The roof was wood, mostly from trees cut down around the home site.

The handmade home built from natural materials integrated his two passions: building and community.

"The feeling I got in there was something I'd never experienced before. It wasn't a subtle energy; it was big-time," said Graham. "I said, 'this is what I want to pursue ... this is what the world needs more of.' "

Pursue it he did. Today, Graham and his partner, Amber Wiggitt, teach others how to build their own earth, or cob, homes. The pair offer workshops that cover all aspects of cob construction, from the drainage in the floor to the logs of the roofing.

that are pressed into place by hand to form thick walls. Cob builders enhance structures with other natural materials such as straw bales, stone and local wood.

Cob's proponents say it's an ideal alternative to materials like the lumber, concrete, fiberglass and drywall so common in the building industry because earth is free, readily available and organic. Plus, builders can sculpt cob into appealing, fluid shapes instead of the straight lines and sharp angles demanded by many mass-produced ingredients.

"This ancient technology doesn't contribute to deforestation, pollution or mining nor depend on manufactured materials or power tools," says the Web site for the Cob Cottage Co. of Cottage Grove, Ore., whose founders study and teach natural building. "In this age of environmental degradation, dwindling natural resources, and chemical toxins hidden in our homes, doesn't it make sense to return to nature's most abundant, cheap and healthy building material?"

that surrounded him as he grew up.

"I got a lot of values from that," he said.

Graham graduated with an architecture degree and then traveled for a while, visiting cob homes that were hundreds of years old and still in use in Scotland. He learned about alternative building methods besides cob.

Today, Graham and Wiggitt live in Plainfield, where he and several others are looking for land nearby where they and the nonprofit group they founded, Spiralworks, can start a commune. They want the families to use renewable energy and grow as much of their own food as possible — and teach others who want to live that way as well.

Building with indigenous materials fits right into the plan. "First of all, it's about the quality of life," said Graham. "Look at the decision between building a toxic, lifeless space to live the rest of your existence in by yourself, or building a beautiful structure made with natural materials that are healing and integrated with the web of life."

Cob is affordable. About $5,000 can build a 450-square foot cob home (though Graham uses the term "round feet" because there are no straight lines).

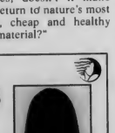
"One of the main reasons it's cheaper is because we encourage people to be a part of their building process, so there's sweat equity," he said.

Although building by hand takes time, Graham points out that there is no need for an architect or engineer.

This past summer, Graham and Wiggitt offered for the second time a number of cob building workshops around the country. In a five-day course at the Sky Meadow Retreat in Stannard in mid-July, students helped build a large round free-standing cob room that will be used for meditation.

Like Graham, they see cob construction as a way of life — not just a building method.

"I feel that there's a better way to live," said 24-year-old Mike Tokarz, a new builder from Raynham, Mass.



Tokarz, a college graduate, works in the service department at Tweeter, a Massachusetts home electronics retailer. But he and some friends dream of starting a commune where they can build their homes of natural materials, grow their own food, work together and avoid the agonizing repetition of commutes and a 40-hour workweek they see around them.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
Is Looking For a
Bright,Talented, Multitasking Wizard!

Now Accepting Applications For:
'HUMAN RESOURCES MANAGER'
*Freshmen and Sophomores preferred
*Great Resume Builder
*8.5 hours per week
Applications Available in Room 113 Campus Center Basement. Attn: Sandra Marquez
-Please Bring Resume-

Shear Bliss Premieres
Asian Ceramic Hair Straightening Package!
• Permanent Bone Straight, gorgeous shiny hair Now!!
• Chinese Botanicals used by certified trained specialist
• SPECIAL STUDENT PACKAGE OFFER
Call for FREE Consultation Appointment
253-2322
479 West St., Amherst, MA

TOTAL FITNESS
WITHOUT WAITING IN LINE
$139
★ Student Special ★
4 months
Best Aerobics-Best Machines
KEISER • NAUTILUS • FREE WEIGHTS • CYBEX • STAIRMASTERS • LIFECYCLES • TREADMILLS • ELLIPTICALS • LIFEROWER
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB
256-0000
ON BUS ROUTE • OPEN 7 DAYS

Do or die at Rhody

Continued from page 12

is the explosiveness of the URI offense. The Rams have outshot their opponents 290-221 this season.

Leading the attack is senior forward Perek Bellah, whose nine goals are tops on the URI scorers list. He has received plenty of support from Sasha Gotsmanov and Simon Gattl, who have collected 27 points between them.

As potent as the Rams offense has been, Koch is more concerned with the way his team is approaching this game.

"I'm not worried about them, I'm worried about us playing well. The bottom line is we have to do our job and we have to do the things we need to do," Koch said. "We don't need to worry about what they are doing as much as we need to worry about what our jobs are."

The Minutemen have their share of offensive weapons with the scoring trio of Ptah Myers, Oral Bullen, and Dan Colwell. Myers and Bullen are separated by only one goal with nine and eight, respectively.

Over the past few games the offense has either been on or off. The Maroon and White's shutout loss to Temple on Halloween was followed by its most impressive showing of the season, a 5-0 shellacking of St. Joseph's two days later.

Koch has made a few personnel moves over the last few weeks, but is determined to put the most consistent team on the field.

"We're going to put the best guys out there," Koch said, "we're just going to try to do a better job in areas where we've had problems."

One area that needs attention is the defense, which is missing its vocal leader, sophomore Craig Canavan. The Minutemen have been defending solid all season and hope to continue even with the veteran loss.

Koch understands that there needs to be a variety of adjustments on the defensive front in order to shut down the Rams offense.

"We need to be patient on defense and get behind the ball and work hard as a group and stay compact as a group," Koch said.

While the regular season still has one last breath left tonight, it will be a postseason atmosphere for two teams on the brink.

"We're in the playoffs already, the winner moves on, the loser goes home. So it's really our whole season in one game," Koch said.

Swim teams return

Continued from page 12

400-yard individual medley in the pre-season Husky Invitational. Chartier is the current UMass leader in 100, 200 and 500-yard freestyle events, with times of 49.14, 1:45.44, and 4:50.08, respectively. He also leads UMass scorers in the 100 (52.72) and 200-(1:59.74) yard butterfly events.

"Talent-wise I think we can be as good as last year, but I've only been coaching these freshman for two months," Yarworth said. "Chartier, Swisher, [Jake] Hogue and [Mike] Cordes have all showed great potential, but it's too early to tell how the team compares to last year's."

In his first collegiate race, Hogue led the Minutemen to victory over UNH, with wins in the 200-yard butterfly and 1,000-yard freestyle, with marks of 2:01.90 and 10:31.15, respectively.

The BU diving team may prove to be the largest hurdle for the Maroon and White in tomorrow's home opener.

The Terriers have one of the most prestigious diving programs in the country, and the strongest the Minutemen will face this season. Led by American East Conference Diving Coach of the Year Agnes Miller, the Terriers boast both of last year's AEC Outstanding Divers of the Year. Junior Victor Paquia won the one and three-meter diving events for the men in last year's AEC Championships, as did senior Stacy Gallacher.

"BU probably has the best divers we'll see," UMass women's coach Bob Newcomb said. "Joanna Walsh has done very well so far, she's come in first or second in every competition, but she'll need to be on top of her game against BU."

The last six times the two teams met, the last relay race decided the women's meet.

"BU's a very good team but it's easy to get excited about a home meet; it's always down to the wire, but I think we're ready for the challenge," Yarworth said.

Senior captains Lauren Rowel and Christen Dexter hope to lead the team to its first regular-season victory. Rowel and Dexter anchored last week's 400-meter butterfly relay event, a second place finish for UMass, along with fellow tri-captain Diana Alberti, and sophomore Aimee Bourassa.

Alberti, who holds the all-time record at UMass in the 200-yard fly, will be looked upon to lead the team in butterfly events throughout her senior season.

Bourassa, one of the team's five sophomores, hopes to add to her team-high two victories, which she tallied in 500-yard free and 200-yard IM events against UNH.

The teams will take a week off before traveling to St. John's on Nov. 22 to face a Red Storm team that set four team records in last year's Big East Championship.

Clubbin' it

Laura Walendziewicz looks to make a play during the UMass women's hockey club's practice on Monday. The team plays St. Anselm on Saturday at 5 p.m. at the Mullins Center Practice Rink.

A-10 invites two

Charlotte and Saint Louis are asked to table

By Dan Gelston
Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Charlotte and Saint Louis were invited to join the Atlantic 10 Conference on Thursday in an expansion that would boost the league to 14 teams.

Charlotte and Saint Louis are currently in Conference USA, which already will lose Cincinnati, Louisville, South Florida, Marquette and DePaul to the Big East in 2005.

While neither school announced a decision, Atlantic 10 commissioner Linda Bruno said the offers would not have been extended unless the conference knew that the schools would accept.

"They were interested in joining us and we were interested in them," Bruno said. She said the schools will have to pay an entrance fee, although she would not say how much it was.

Charlotte athletic director Judy Rose said the school was "thrilled to receive an invitation."

"With the invitation comes access to greater information about the league. We have done our homework, but we are going to use the next few days to review their policies and formats," Rose said. Charlotte scheduled a news conference Monday to announce the school's decision.

Saint Louis athletics director Doug Woolard said the Billikens were "pleased and excited to be considered for expansion by the Atlantic 10," with which the school has exchanged information.

The moves come in the same week the Big East also voted to expand, although Bruno said that wasn't a factor in the decision.

"We're one of the few conferences that didn't need to expand unless we saw something come available that could be of value to the conference," she said.

One of those factors was expanding into markets where the Atlantic 10 did not have a presence, Bruno said. She said adding bigger markets also would help television exposure.

The Atlantic 10 already has 12 members: Dayton, Duquesne, Fordham, George Washington, La Salle, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Richmond, St. Bonaventure, Saint Joseph's, Temple and Xavier.

Charlotte and Saint Louis will add to an already strong basketball league. The Billikens made the NCAA tournament four times in the last 10 years and Charlotte advanced in 2000. Their additions could make it a 14-team, two-division conference.

"We haven't determined if that's what we'll continue to do," Bruno said. "We'll have discussions about the best scheduling format for everyone."

Bruno said the conference would not change its name and had no other plans to expand.

"I think we're at a good number," she said.

Man arrested for driving slain outfielder's SUV

PHOENIX (AP) — A man found driving a vehicle that belonged to slain Cincinnati Reds outfielder Dernell Stenson was booked on a charge of possession of stolen property, police said Thursday.

The man, Kevin Riddle, was arrested and jailed Wednesday night about two hours after Stenson was found dead in the Phoenix suburb of Chandler, police said.

No other charges were filed against Riddle, whom police called an "investigative lead." Police said they didn't know if the two men knew each other.

Stenson's body was found Wednesday by police responding to a report of shots fired. He appeared to have been shot and run over by the SUV, authorities said.

Stenson, 25, made his major league debut this season and played 37 games for the Reds. He hit .247 with three home runs and 13 RBI — his homer accounted for Cincinnati's final run of the season.

"I am terribly saddened by the sudden and tragic death of Dernell Stenson yesterday morning. My deepest sympathies go out to his family, his friends and his teammates," baseball commissioner Bud Selig said.

Stenson was playing this month for the Scottsdale Scorpions of the Arizona Fall League. He was hitting .394, third-best in the league, in 18 games.

Stenson was a third-round draft pick of the Boston Red Sox in 1996. He stayed in their system until this year, when the Reds claimed him off waivers during spring training.

Stenson played four seasons for Triple-A Pawtucket. In a statement Thursday, the team sent its condolences to the player's family, and said Stenson had been a "true gentlemen" during his stay in Pawtucket.

Bye week adventures

By Howard Ulman
Associated Press

FOXBORO (AP) — The New England Patriots are off to their best start in 23 years and the toughest part of their season is over.

After plenty of injuries and close games, they can enjoy their bye week and contemplate the future: an easier schedule than any of their AFC East rivals.

But they don't view their next seven games as just a tuneup for the playoffs.

"What have we accomplished? We're not in the Super Bowl. We're not in the playoffs. We're 7-2," safety Rodney Harrison said. "I've never seen a team make the playoffs with 7-9."

And he hasn't seen a team make the playoffs with some of the Patriots experiences — injuries that led them to start 40 different players in nine games and a youth movement that allowed them to overcome it.

Stung by the release of safety Lawyer Milloy and his signing with Buffalo, the Patriots lost to the Bills 31-0. Since then they are 7-1 after winning their last five games.

They began the unbeaten streak with a 38-30 win over Tennessee after trailing with four minutes left. They also won two big road games — 19-13 in overtime at Miami and 30-26 at Denver last Monday night on a touchdown with 30 seconds left.

"I like the fact that we've played some tough opponents and we've proved that we can beat those tough opponents," quarterback Tom Brady said. "That we can play in the rain. We can play in the cold.

"We can play on the road. We can come from behind to win. We can hold the lead. I think that is the thing that stands out, that this team knows how to win ballgames."

The Patriots have won the last 21 games in which they were ahead entering the fourth quarter and lead Miami by 1 1/2 games in the AFC East. Coach Bill Belichick and his staff have been outstanding no matter what the score was.

"He always has a plan," kickoff returner Bethel Johnson said. "He keeps a cool head about everything."

Belichick isn't always a stoic strategist. He smiled broadly and hugged players after Brady beat Miami on an 82-yard pass play to Brown, and when he beat Denver with an 18-yarder to Givens.

"There are dramatic plays that have won some games and some tough situations," Belichick said. "Even as unemotional as I am, I react to those."

But he's realistic about having a bye when the streaking team might prefer to keep playing.

"It is not something we have any control over," he said. "When we have them we try to take them and utilize them the best we can."

There have been some problems — 14 penalties against Denver, only 10 touchdowns on 26 trips inside the 20-yard line and an inability to pull away from opponents.

"We are 7-2 and we still haven't played up to our capabilities," Brady said.

They can be 8-2 for the second time, and the first time since 1978, if they beat Dallas on Nov. 16. But the Patriots know an opponent should have extra motivation because of their success.

They also remember opening at 3-0 last season, then losing their next four games and missing the playoffs.

"Everybody thought we were the best thing since sliced bread when we were 3-0," guard Damien Woody said.

They were highly regarded going into this season after picking up Harrison from San Diego and linebacker Roosevelt Colvin and Ted Washington from Chicago. But Colvin is out for the season after breaking his hip in the second game and Washington has missed the last six games with a broken leg.

Guard Mike Compton is out for the season with a broken foot after playing two games, linebacker Ted Johnson missed the last eight with a broken foot and linebacker Mike Vrabel missed three with a broken arm.

Defensive lineman Richard Seymour, wide receiver David Patten and cornerback Ty Law are other starters who missed time with injuries.

But the Patriots' strong draft is paying off.

Defensive tackle Ty Warren, taken in the first round, has started four games. Safety Eugene Wilson (second) replaced Milloy and leads the Patriots with three interceptions. Bethel Johnson (second) is fourth in the AFC in kickoff returns. Dan Klecko (fourth) has played defensive tackle, linebacker and fullback. Asante Samuel (fourth) has two interceptions at cornerback, and Dan Koppen (fifth) has started eight games at center.

"I knew the first day of minicamp (last spring) they brought in a pretty good class," Bethel Johnson said. "It was just up to the coaches to have the confidence in us."

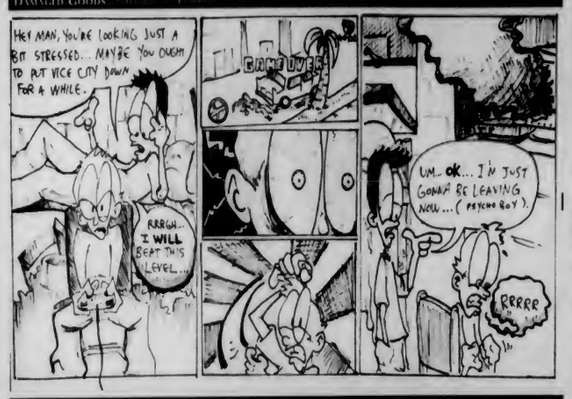
Second-year players also are helping. Three of them — wide receivers Deion Branch and David Givens and tight end Daniel Graham — each caught a touchdown pass at Denver.

"We worked hard in the offseason together and that's panning out the way it should right now for our class," Givens said.

Brady also has productive receivers Troy Brown and David Patten and tight end Christian Fauria. Leading rusher Kevin Faulk is second on the team with 28 catches.

"I have so much confidence in my teammates," Brady said. "We've been there with a lot of tough circumstances and I think we continue to prove that we are up to the challenge."

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM
SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM
SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM
SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

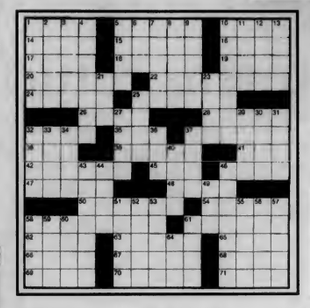


JAMAICA
Spring Break 2004
The Ultimate Experience
CALL 1.800.733.6347 $549
UMASS Amherst University.... Live Life the Beach Life Way!
Group Discounts
Book before Dec 15th and Save!!
Sell trips, earn cash, travel free!!
www.BeachLifeVacations.com

TRUST
"Before locking into a long term contract for a fitness facility with no machinery in place, why not give the veteran professionals a visit."
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB
"Big enough to own the best equipment, but small enough to know your name."
* In business 22 years
* Locally owned & operated
www.amherstathletic.com
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB 256-0000 ON BUS ROUTE

Clip & Curl 665-2629
Hair Skin & Nails
Massage Therapy
Route 116, Sunderland
(Located on bus route)
Accepted: Visa MC
Open Tuesday - Friday 9 to 6:30, and Saturday 9 to 4
Stress Relief Package
30 Minute Massage
30 Minute Aveda Facial
Hair Shampooed & Dried
Regularly $73, Now $60
(Add a Complimentary Lavender Paraffin hand dip!)
Expires 11/22/03
Aveda • ARUM • Paul Mitchell Two full service rooms!

LAUNCH YOUR CAREER
Apply now for a
Legal Assistant Internship
at the Student Legal Services Office
*Serve the campus community while enhancing your resume
*Earn up to 15 credits working 36 hours a week or 6 to 9 credits working 26 hours a week
Student Legal Services Office
922 Campus Center
(413) 545-1995



TODAY'S CROSSWORD PUZZLE

ACROSS
1 Excess ads
6 Wallops
10 Polite cough
14 Make a salary
15 Theater part
16 Bird's opposite
17 Tart
18 Be part of the crowd
19 Competes
20 Moon, in poetry
22 Lab work
23 Digress
24 Dieter's no
26 Gambler's town
28 Fall apart
32 Fly ball paths
35 Left turn from SSE
37 Feline
38 Thai neighbor
39 Interior
41 Tire gauge
42 Lair
43 Pasture grazer
46 Light sword
47 Calmer stop
48 Well-briefed about (2 wds.)
50 Low bow
54 Gobbles
56 Threatening gesture
61 Badge
62 "— it": joke response
63 Ceremonies
65 Magma on the move
66 Writer Nin
67 Ninth Iliad
68 Writer Amber
69 Excursion
70 Wading bird
71 Cold and wet

DOWN
1 Mountain
2 Millionaire's toy
3 Fairies
4 Wins over
5 Burglar's target
6 Twice XXVI
7 Houston pro
8 Traversed a mine
9 Become aware of
10 Press onward
11 Fur
12 Nov. event
13 Scream
21 Casual farewell
25 Budget cuts
27 Long-ears' LPs
27 Salesperson
29 Buffalo feature
30 Jean Stein bestseller
31 Allot
32 Dog-food brand
33 — -ray
34 Murmurs
36 Before
37 Slant a glance
40 Done tape
43 False move
44 11th-grade
45 Fashioned
48 Flabbergasted
49 Persistence unit
51 Roll
52 Burning up
53 Following
55 Nurse Barton
56 Coatrack of films
57 Loud sobs
58 Singer Carina
59 Bonanza picnic
60 Half
61 All-sports channel
64 Help-wanted abbr.

10-7-01 © 2001 United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

DINING COMMONS MENU

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Chicken Quesadilla
- Fish & Chips
- Fiesta Rice & Cheese (vegetarian)
- Curried Chick Peas (vegan)

DINNER
- Veal Parmesan
- Salmon Miso
- Tofu Fajita (vegan)

DAILY WEATHER FORECAST

For Amherst

FRIDAY
- High: 56
- Low: 28

SATURDAY
- High: 42
- Low: 15

SUNDAY
- High: 42
- Low: 28

PRODUCTION CREW

On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Nikolas P. Markantonatos

PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Amelia P. Lincoln

COPY EDITOR
Meghan Healy

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Irene Ros

PRODUCTION STAFF
Ryan Flaherty/ Emilie Duggan

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Work it out. People are willing to compromise.

pisces • FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Give people third and fourth chances.

aries • MAR. 21-APR. 19
Sweatpants do not look great but they are so comfy.

taurus • APR. 20-MAY 20
It'll be a rough weekend, but you can make it through.

gemini • MAY 21-JUN. 21
Don't procrastinate so much. Be careful of the way you manage your time.

cancer • JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Never underestimate the power of the potato.

leo • JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Express your issues to the Sagittarius you've been annoyed with.

virgo • AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Just because something is bigger doesn't mean it's better.

libra • SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Garbanzo. Funny name, good bean.

scorpio • OCT. 23-NOV. 21
You can fix your problems with others.

sagittarius • NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Don't take crap from others trying to bring you down.

capricorn • DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Clueless people always seem to ask other clueless people for advice.

QUOTE FOR THE DAY

"Give a man a fish and he will eat for a day. Teach a man to fish and he will eat for the rest of his life."

-Chinese Proverb

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Grants up to $2000: The Student Affairs Cultural Enrichment Fund is available to RSO's, grad student organizations, and university departments that are planning events that enliven the cultural life at UMass. Next deadline is November 19. Call 545-3928 for more information or come by Room 416 Student Union.

Student Director Wanted For Play on Lord Jeff Amherst. Shows the 'hero' as biologic warrior who deliberately slaughtered the Indians with Smallpox, 'winning' the war. STYLE: Brechtian. Loud, raucous. Simple sets. Musical. Goal: controversy, outrage. AUTHOR: AC graduate, many past productions VENUE/ACTORS: your choice CONTACT: 718-601-8089 nites Leave name/address please

APARTMENT FOR RENT

3 Bedroom Apartment for January 665-9254

AUTO FOR SALE

1992 Honda Prelude SI, Loaded, $3900 587-0242

96 Dodge Intrepid White runs good Power everything Brand new Pioneer CD/Stereo Must sell Asking $2400 Amy 413-222-5754

Honda 1995 Civic Ex Coupe, red, 91K, moonroof, LoJack, well maintained, $4,250, 413-695-5527

Mountainview Auto Route 47 South in Hadley 585-0599 '89 Mercedes 300E Clean $3500 '94 Nissan Sentra Limited Edition $2850 '87 Honda Civic excellent transportation $950 '87 Saab 900 Automatic $950 '88 Dodge Caravan Very Clean 100,000 miles $1200

1992 Silver Ford Taurus Excellent condition $2400 118000K Call 549-3930 210-7193 All Power

AUTO FOR SALE

1999 Explorer XLT 4x4 Excellent Condition Sunroof 6cyl. Loaded $12,500 Call 546-3477

$500!!! Police Impounds. Hondas, Chevy's, Jeeps, etc. for listings. 1-800-319-3323 ext4554

93 Pontiac Bonneville SDN All Power Must Sell $1500 B/O 253-5537

EMPLOYMENT

MAD SCIENTISTS WANTED! PT to conduct fun science after-school programs, parties, etc. Requirements: Experience with groups of children, enthusiasm, car. Performance experience a plus. 413-584-7243

Telephone Interviewers NO SALES! Conduct interviews over the phone at our Hadley location Flexible Evening and Weekend Hours $7.50/hour to start 20+ hours/week PVTA accessible For more info: 1-888-423-5381 EMI

EMPLOYMENT

PART-TIME POSITIONS 20+ hrs/wk; set your own schedule. Conduct surveys over the phone at our Hadley location—NO SALES! Evngs/wknds; hlth/dent/401(k); PVTA accessible. Email mvivian@fieldmarketinginc.com or apply in person, First Floor 100 Venture Way, Hadley, MA (888) 423-5381

Spring 2004 Internships with The Student Legal Services Office: Get hands-on experience in the legal field; work directly with attorneys and clients; earn up to 15 undergraduate credits. No experience necessary. Training provided. Contact the Student Legal Services Office Today! 545-1995, 922 Campus Center

Movie Extras/Models Needed For local Casting Calls No exp. or age required EARN up to $200 a day 1-888-820-0167

EMPLOYMENT

Internship Motivated students seeking leadership outside the box. Gain experience in all aspects of running a small business. Average pay: $9300.00 Call 508-246-1230

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

!Bartending!$ $250/day potential No experience Nesc Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext 162

FOR SALE

Concept II Indoor Rowing Machine for sale Like New $500 or BO 546-5459

$Save$ Wholesale- Discount prices, video games, clothing, jewelry, more. www.tylersdiscounts.com

HOUSE FOR RENT

Amherst 3-4 Bedroom house. Hobart Ln. Available Jan. 1. $1650/month Call 413-549-4001

INSTRUCTION

On the Rocks School Bartending. Become certified in one weekend. Great way to earn money. Call us toll free at 866-mix-5600. www.OTRBartending.com

University Bartending Classes Start Soon 1-800-U-CAN-MIX Call now for information!!! Space is Limited www.universitybartending.com

ROOM FOR RENT

Fully furnished bedroom Conveniently located across from the bus stop near Puffton and Hobart @985 North Pleasant St. Available for winter and spring sessions. Rent is approximately $350/month. Please contact Chris @ 413-687-7313

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

SERVICES

Stuck on a tough term paper? ThePaperExperts.com can help! Expert writers can help with editing, writing, graduate school applications. We'll help with any subject- visit us 24/7 at ThePaperExperts.com.

SHEAR BLISS DAY SPA SERVICES Body Sugaring (waxing) for men and women *Safe *100% Natural *Effective 253-2322 https://shear-bliss.image411.com

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

TRAVEL

A "Reality" Spring Break 2004's Hottest Prices Book now .. Free Trips, Meals & Parties www.sunsplashtours.com or 1800-426-7710

TRAVEL

Spring Break 2004. Travel with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator to Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas and Florida. Now hiring campus reps. Call for group discounts. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com For more information contact STA Travel at 413-256-1261

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Destinations, including Cruises! Foam Parties, Free Drinks and Club Admissions. Rep Positions and FREE trips Available. 1-800-231-4386 www.EpicureanTours.com

Collegian Classifieds: To place your ad come to the Campus Center Basement or call 545-3500

ALL UMASS STUDENTS ARE HEREBY CALLED UPON TO CHEER ON THE UNBEATABLE AND UNDEFEATED IN THE A-10

UMASS Minutemen

AS THEY CHALLENGE THE

RICHMOND Spiders

THIS SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 8, 2003
GAME TIME: 12:00 PM

SPONSORED BY CAMPUS ACTIVITIES

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEEKEND

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 7, 2003 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Now or never

Minutemen in make or break clash

By Bob McGovern
Collegian Staff

Today is the day of reckoning for the Massachusetts men's soccer team.

After a series of ups and downs, the Minutemen find their season in limbo against Rhode Island, a team facing an identical scenario. The squads have a 7 p.m. opening touch at Kingston, R.I.

Both teams are in a position where a win will clinch a berth in the A-10 tournament. The loser's destiny will rely on George Washington losing to conference leader Richmond, a scenario Massachusetts coach Sam Koch isn't looking forward to.

"If George Washington loses we can get in but I don't even want to think about it," Koch said. "For us to think that GW is going to lose is a mistake, we need to go out and do the job ourselves."

The Maroon and White started the season on a roll and won seven out of its first 10 games, including a seven-game unbeaten streak. UMass was slotted at the top of the A-10 until subsequent losses to Xavier and Dayton stalled their momentum.

After losing four of their last eight games the Minutemen have set themselves up for a dramatic finish to a roller coaster season.

"I think it's exciting in the fact that we'll see where we are," Koch said. "Do we be belong in the playoffs? I think we do and we have to prove it on the field."

The Rams have also had a roller coaster season, beating some teams that UMass has lost to, and vice versa. The most recent was a 3-1 victory over Temple, which shut down the Maroon and White 2-0.

"It's been pretty bizarre because they have lost some games to teams we've beaten and they have won some games against teams we've lost to," Koch said. "You can't really look at how teams have done against certain team because they are night and day."

One thing that has been very clear

Continued on page 9

AMELIA F. LINCOLN/COLLEGIAN

Oral Bullen battles a Temple pursuer during the Owls' 2-0 shutout on Halloween. The Minutemen bounced back to down St. Joseph's two days later, and look to continue their winning ways tonight at Rhode Island.

UMASS

Weekend Schedule

Friday, Nov. 7

Sport	Opp./Event	Time
Men's Soccer	at Rhode Island	7:00 p.m.
Women's Basketball	vs. Team Concept	7:00 p.m.
Hockey	at Merrimack	7:00 p.m.

Saturday, Nov. 8

Sport	Opp./Event	Time
Football	vs. Richmond	12:00 p.m.
Swimming	vs. Boston Univ	1:00 p.m.
Hockey	vs. Merrimack	7:00 p.m.

Sunday, Nov. 9

Sport	Opp./Event	Time
Men's Basketball	vs. Globetrotters	2:00 p.m.

Making history his own way

Andrew Merritt

He just didn't want to be given the record. He wanted to earn it. Instead, he earned the respect of the sporting world.

His name is Nate Haasis. He's a quarterback for Springfield Southeast High School in Illinois. Check that; he's the stellar quarterback for Springfield Southeast High School. He has racked up an incredible amount of yardage in his career at Southeast, and could probably find himself throwing bombs for a competitive Division I school next fall.

But before he reaches the college ranks, before the hype that could follow him all the way to the pros if he's really that good, Nate had to do one more thing in high school — become a sports icon.

The idea was simple. With not much time remaining in Southeast's final game of the year, coach Neal Taylor recognized that Nate was just 29 passing yards short of breaking a five-year old conference record. So, Taylor and coach Antwyne Golliday of Cahokia high agreed to set up a scenario where Cahokia would be given a free score, an uncontested shot at the end zone.

In return, the Cahokia players would stand still the next time Haasis went airborne, which he did for a 37-yard completion. No Cahokia player rushed Haasis, no safety or cornerback tried to stop the receiver or bat down the pass. Nate Haasis' name would be etched into the Central State Eight Conference record books forever, his 5,006 yards a mark that would be targeted by young quarterbacks for decades.

But that's where the story becomes one not of gridiron glory, but of a heroic move that is unparalleled on the field of battle ... because Nate Haasis isn't just a great quarterback, he's a great person as well.

After the game, Haasis made a call — of his own accord — to the conference brass. He wanted his record stricken from the books. He didn't want to just be given his place in history. He saw all those Cahokia players standing around, and realized that this isn't the way it should be. And rather than go along with the best wishes of both coaches, as well as the players on the field, he took a stand. He did what very few pro athletes could even conceive.

Since the game, both coaches have heard questions and criticisms for the deal. Taylor has gotten both ends, being railed against for cheating by some, and praised for trying to help a young kid become a legend by others. But this story has nothing to do with a coaching scandal, or cheating. It has to do with young Nate Haasis, and his humble, strong convictions, the likes of which should be documented and distributed to every man and woman who earns a paycheck to play a game.

This isn't anything like the story of the mentally handicapped running back in Ohio, who ran for a touchdown thanks to a deal made by the two teams' coaches the week before. That story brought tears to the eyes of anybody who heard, saw, or read about it, because it was an act of kindness, allowing a young man to experience likely the greatest moment of his life, and certainly his greatest moment in sports.

This story is different. While Coach Taylor had similarly good intentions when he asked Coach Golliday to call off the dogs, it was about stats, about records, the kinds of things that really don't matter to the truly great athletes, but provide fodder for us mere mortals as we sip our coffee and read the morning sports section.

This story is about the intangible qualities of a true hero. There are hundreds of guys, the 'Big Men on Campus,' all over the country, who walk tall in their accomplishments, and are ready to rattle off their best stories and greatest numbers. But then there are guys like Nate Haasis, the ones who realize that numbers and achievements don't matter, that trophies are really only as good as the shelf space they occupy.

The true glory of sports is in the game itself. It's not the 98-yard touchdown pass that sets team and conference records, it's the hard work, discipline, and dedication to the game that made the play possible. Nate Haasis gets it. Many pro athletes don't.

In an age where coaching scandals, betting scandals, drug scandals, and every other possible evil can make top-level sports seem like a circus, it's people like Nate who remind us of what the game's really about. This is a young man who could have sat back and basked in the glow of an achievement he'd be able to tell his kids and grandkids about. He could have let everyone at school praise him for breaking the record, and become just another good football player. But his conscience took over, and he made the call.

That Nate was disgusted with the way he "got" the record isn't a bad reflection on his coach. To say that Taylor is a bad guy because he set this up is ludicrous. The fact is, Haasis is just a world apart from most athletes. Sure, he'd have loved to have the record, the glory is a real nice perk of great work on the field. The point is, it wasn't earned.

Where most athletes protest when hard work at practice doesn't result in playing time, Nate Haasis took exception to what the play meant. Specifically, that all that time and effort he'd put in to becoming a good football player didn't matter for that last play. He didn't get the final 29 record-breaking yards on his own merits. Instead, they were given to him.

Did Nate Haasis want to break the record? Sure. Is his name in the record books? No. But he did something that he couldn't have done by throwing a tight spiral to a sprinting receiver. Nate Haasis did it right.

Andrew Merritt is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at Merritt_Collegian@yahoo.com

Swimming brings it all back home

By Matt Barstow
Collegian Staff

After three weeks of scrimmaging, two months of training, and a dual meet against the University of New Hampshire, the Massachusetts swimming and diving teams are eager to enter the heart of their seasons with tomorrow's home opener against Boston University.

The meet, which starts at 1 p.m., will be the first time the teams have gotten a chance to compete at the Boyden pool since Feb. 8, when the men's squad topped Boston College 183-117, and the women dropped a 175-123 decision to the Eagles.

The Minutemen hope to start strong, as they attempt to duplicate the success of last year's squad, which won the Atlantic 10 championship. The women will look towards nine freshmen to rebuild a program that finished atop the conference in 2001, but finished fifth at the conference championship last year.

The men are coming off a successful scrimmage against Brown University, in which the team showed promise in the 300-yard backstroke relay event. The winning relay team consisted of freshman Evan Swisher, junior Dylan Smith, and senior captain Conner Townsend. The three led UMass scores with the squad's sole victory, over a previously undefeated Brown team that came in fourth among Ivy League schools in last year's Eastern Intercollegiate Swimming League Championships.

Smith, named to the All-Conference team after taking gold in the 200-yard butterfly in last year's A-10 Championship, will be looked upon to lead the Maroon and White in several different events.

"Dylan's one of my go-to guys, he's an extremely versatile swimmer who should be able to help the team out where they need it," UMass men's coach Russ Yarworth said. "It's nice that two of our three meets have been scrimmages, because we have so many freshman (10) who are still trying to adjust to the speed of college races."

On Wednesday, the Atlantic 10 Conference named freshman Greg Chartier the co-Rookie of the Week. Chartier has won the 200-yard freestyle in the season opener at UNH, and the

Continued on page 9

The Daily Collegian

MONDAY NOVEMBER 10, 2003 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 48

U.S. steps up military operations

IVAN SEKRETAREV/ASSOCIATED PRESS

A U.S. Army 720th military police battalion soldier sits atop his humvee during a night raid in the village of Tall Maghar, about 280 kms (175 miles) northeast from Baghdad, on Saturday.

By Slobodan Lekic
Associated Press

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — Soldiers arrested 18 people in a deadly missile barrage last month that Deputy Defense Secretary Paul Wolfowitz narrowly escaped, officials said yesterday. U.S. warplanes bombed near a center of Iraqi resistance, and the military said it was intensifying the fight against insurgents after increasingly bloody attacks.

The U.S. command also announced the death of another soldier, killed late Saturday when his vehicle struck a land mine in Baghdad. A senior Iraqi official warned that mounting violence may delay steps toward a new constitution, considered a major condition for returning the country to full Iraqi rule.

Lt. Col. George Krivo, spokesman for the U.S. command, said the 18 suspects were arrested in Baghdad by the 1st Armored Division but gave no further details. The missile attack Oct. 27 against the Al-Rasheed Hotel killed a U.S. colonel and injured 18 others.

Wolfowitz, one of the architects of the Iraq war, was staying in the hotel but escaped injury. The barrage was part of a series of escalated attacks over the past two weeks, including the downing of a Chinook helicopter Nov. 2 in Fallujah in which 16 soldiers were killed and 21 injured.

The downing of the Chinook and the crash Friday of a Black Hawk helicopter in Tikrit made the first week of November the bloodiest for American forces since President Bush declared an end to major combat May 1.

With the start of the holy month of Ramadan on Oct. 27 in Iraq, U.S. forces lifted curfews in Baghdad and Tikrit and scaled down nighttime raids to avoid angering ordinary Iraqis at a time of heightened religious sentiment.

But after the wave of attacks that began around the start of Ramadan, the military now appears to be returning to a more robust operation.

The military has launched a new, massive response tactic aimed at taking the fight to the insurgents, officials said. Krivo said there was a "new focus" in the north and west of Baghdad to find areas where Saddam loyalists "and other noncompliant forces are operating."

"We have picked up the intensity of our offensive operations and this is specifically manifested with the larger numbers of troops in the 82nd Airborne and other forces to the west," Krivo said, without giving details on the numbers of troops.

"We are on offensive operations," a U.S. officer said on condition of anonymity. "You can expect to see an increase in the level of intensity and the amount of activity that is occurring, especially in those 'challenging' areas."

Lombardi to pursue better student life

By Mike Travis
Collegian Correspondent

Chancellor John V. Lombardi remains confident in his pursuit to provide a better student life, excellence in teaching and research, and to remain nationally competitive.

Although everyone expects a flagship university to provide excellent teaching, fine student programs and activities, and the other attributes of an effective undergraduate experience, research quality and productivity identify a campus as belonging among higher education's top institutions.

One way Lombardi intends to create more campus involvement is through sports. Intercollegiate sports have existed in all universities of every type since the beginning of the twentieth century.

"The function of intercollegiate sports is to draw people to campus," said Lombardi. "It motivates and mobilizes alumni and friends, brings them to campus, and out of that they acquire a sense of the place that is easier to understand then the complexities of the academic environment that provides the real value." Sports often stand as a surrogate for the things people have a hard time understanding.

"Try to explain to the general public what's going on in the chemistry department and their eyes glaze over, but they can see when the basketball team, the hockey team and football team are successful then maybe that's as good as everything else that's going on," said Lombardi.

The University of Massachusetts has more sports than most public institutions, with 23 intercollegiate sports. Most institutions are a lot smaller in the number of sports they have. UMass, currently in Division I-AA football, is debating on moving up to division I-A.

"We have a study out interviewing alumni to find out whether the financial capacity is there to do it . . . we should have an answer on that by the end of November," said Lombardi.

Out of the 117 schools that take part in I-A football, about 63 have the chance to break even with their financing. Those are the schools that go on to BCS conferences.

"The others all lose enormous amounts of money and at the same time perform badly . . . it's not clear that their getting their money's worth," said Lombardi.

Lombardi is also expanding his efforts to keep the university nationally competitive. "It's what gives us our reputation . . . students come here as opposed to someplace else because of that reputation," said Lombardi.

UMass is rated one of the best schools in the nation, but to get even better Lombardi stresses investing in things that the university has already been successful in.

"The competition against other institutions with students and faculty and their money is a one on one competition. . .we only have to win enough to recruit a first rate class and over the last two to three years the university has constantly been improving the quality of its class, so we're winning in the competition," said Lombardi.

Having both an affinity and talent for fixing cars, even working as a mechanic for a few years in his youth with a couple of friends in Las Angeles, Lombardi compared fixing the university to fixing a car.

"Both of them have an engine and if the car is essential to your life you can't stop to fix it completely," said Lombardi. "A university has an engine that can never stop because if the engine stops students get dumped, research stops and everything fails."

"The engine of the university has to run all the time, so like an old car your busy fixing it while it runs and this means often you can't fix it perfectly," he said. "But, a smart mechanic replaces the part that's broke and the part that's going to break next and each time you do that you move ahead."

For the University's size Lombardi said it is performing very well overall.

"This is a university with an exceptionally good faculty and students, but it has some serious deficiency in its physical plant that hold it back and make it somewhat less competitive then it could be otherwise, which is why we're spending a lot of money in the next five years to upgrade the physical plant so we can remain competitive," said Lombardi.

The Physical Plant is beginning a large energy performance project to provide better lighting, heating, cooling and ventilation for building occupants.

EDITORIAL/OPINION PAGE 3
SWEEPS SIN
SMART, LYNCH SHOULD NOT BE IN COMPETITION
ARTS & LIVING PAGE 4
ELF
AHEAD OF IT'S TIME
SPORTS PAGE 8
OVER THE TOP
MINUTEMEN DOWN SPIDERS, 30-17
COMICS/CLASSIFIEDS PAGE 7

Officials begin drug crackdown

By Lolita C. Baldor
Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP)

Urged on by the U.S. government, Canadian officials are cracking down on companies, pharmacists and physicians within their borders that help provide American citizens with cheaper prescription drugs.

But complex jurisdictional issues guarantee the enforcement won't be that quick or that simple.

Although the U.S. Food and Drug Administration has escalated its threats to shut down companies exporting drugs to America, FDA Commissioner Mark McClellan said there are "no automatic mechanisms set up between our countries."

"We have to have those discussions," he said. "We have to work together to identify where our laws match up and where they don't."

High-level U.S. and Canadian health officials have met several times in recent weeks to coordinate their attack on the booming Internet pharmacy trade.

But the FDA has no jurisdiction in Canada. And Health Canada, the federal agency that regulates drugs, has only broad authority over drug safety issues.

Instead, most direct enforcement over pharmacists and physicians cosigning and filling prescriptions for American patients falls to separate organizations in each province, where regulations vary.

"The challenge is the practice taking place is illegal in the U.S. and the U.S. has enforcement problems, but in Canada the activity of the pharmacists follows the letter of the law," said Canadian Pharmacists Association Executive Director Jeff Poston. "And they don't have that many legal or policy levers to play with at the moment."

PVTA bus station to open

By Gabriel Leiner
Collegian Correspondent

Beginning in 2004, the Central Fire Station on Maple Street in downtown Holyoke, Mass. will no longer be empty.

As part of a spending approval by the House Appropriations Committee, Congressman John Olver has acquired at least 2 million dollars in funds for a new Pioneer Valley Transit Authority PVTA multimodal transportation center to be developed within the former fire station.

PVTA anticipates that upon completion of the Holyoke Multimodal Transportation Center HMTC, the building will be privately owned by a combination of retail shops, business offices, and entertainment establishments, with the PVTA multimodal transportation center as the main tenant within the facility.

The specifics of the development for the new center are still open to proposal, but the PVTA believes that whatever the final plan, the HMTC will function as a major transportation center, and contribute to the economic development and revitalization of Holyoke.

"It will attract people and revenue, and bolster the economy of the city, and the region," said Gary Shepard, a PVTA administrator.

According to the PVTA, the upper three floors of Central Fire Station each have a combined gross floor area of 18,600 square feet, which will be renovated with government funds and made available to developers to put the final finishing on the tenant spaces.

Because the new station is a joint effort by the PVTA, the city of Holyoke, and the federal government through Olver, Gerald Epstein, co-director of Political Economics Research Institute and professor of economics at the University of Massachusetts, thinks the new multimodal center may have a more lasting effect on Holyoke's local economy, which is still trying to recover since losing many manufacturing jobs.

Labor and energy intensive firms in Holyoke followed the national pattern as industry evolved, moving to the South and West, to be nearer raw materials and cheaper labor. In the mid 1970's, remaining industries in Holyoke were hurt by the recession of America's economy. The 2000 U.S Census for Holyoke indicates that the city is still struggling to recover, almost a quarter of families were reported in poverty.

"It is very difficult to get going a community with so many needs," Espstein said. "It sounds like Holyoke is a good example of a real partnership between government and city where the government invests to help an economy. There are all kinds of things you can do once you build something like [the multimodal center]. Complimentary side businesses can be created like restaurants, government subsidized news, bus maintenance jobs, all of which are very helpful to an economy."

Central Fire Station provides a unique space for the new multimodal center in that it is located in the center of town and within walking distance of many public buildings and businesses. The original structure also includes 14-foot high apertures on the ground floor, once large entrances for fire engines, which open on to Maple Street and provide an open market place type setting for planned ticket counters, internet kiosks, food service areas, and rest areas.

Not many Holyoke citizens know about the HMTC plans. Holyoke Republican writer Martin Lauer said there has only been coverage of a few meetings about the HMTC because the renovation plans are still in the formative stages.

But those who work near the station and know about the plans are optimistic about the new center.

Thomas Wilson, of the Daniel Szostekiewicz & Thomas Wilson law firm located a few blocks south of Central Fire Station, said he likes the idea of the old building and is hopeful that there will be enough consumers to drive the businesses that open in the station.

"Residents like the idea of renovating the fire station and look forward to its opening," said Michael Burke, city editor of the Chicopee/Holyoke edition of The Republican and long-time resident of Holyoke. Burke looks forward to the new businesses that will open up in and around the station, "We need some more variety," said Burke.

The HMTC project is part of a larger overall urban renewal plan in Holyoke, including the Elm Street Renewal Plan, a plan to renovate buildings and bring professional offices to the downtown area, and Canalwalk, a plan to build along the currently unused canals in Holyoke.

"It will be beautiful down there once they get it cleaned up," said Burke, hopeful about the renovations in Holyoke. "I'll tell you, once the Canalwalk project is completed along with this entire renewal project. Holyoke could once again be the queen city of western Massachusetts. Economic development may be a little slow, but it's going to take time, and that's the sure way to do it."

Author opposes war in Iraq

By Christina Mills
Collegian Correspondent

"We were lied into Vietnam, as we were lied into Iraq. Iraq was a well-done war of aggression and it has become very reminiscent of Vietnam," writer Daniel Ellsberg told a crowd at Smith College Thursday.

In his lecture, Ellsberg compared the parallels of the Vietnam War and the current war in Iraq, with a subtext about the use of nuclear warfare. The Bush administration, according to Ellsberg, is following horribly bad examples.

"It took eight years to get U.S troops out of Vietnam and there's no oil there... Like in Vietnam, if we pull our troops out of Iraq now we'll lose credibility- or worse, we'll lose oil," Ellsberg sarcastically quipped.

During the Vietnam War, Ellsberg, author of "Secrets: A Memoir of Vietnam" and "The Pentagon Papers: Secrets and Lies About Nuclear Threats, the War on Terror, and Iraq," believes that President Nixon lied about the war and lied about his involvement, afraid he would be unable to win another election if he revealed his hidden agenda. President Nixon was trying to make a world empire out of the United States. However, Ellsberg pointed out that he used the same terrorist tactics, like unprovoked nuclear threats, to bully smaller countries.

"Proving our manhood, our power, to the world should not be the problem for a world super-power that has used the A-Bomb," he said.

Once the war was over it, was impossible for the U.S. to leave, he said. This was due to the belief that the United States had an obligation to fix the mess it made. For Ellsberg, the current war in Iraq inspires frightening similarities.

"I knew then (during the Nixon Administration) that every time they said anything, it was a lie ... I feel like the current administration pulled the wool over my eyes again," said Ellsberg. Ellsberg said President George W. Bush has burned many bridges and the United States has lost many allies because of the empire the administration is striving to build.

Ellsberg said if President Bush had allowed other world powers to help, the turn out would have been very different.

He said that not only was the war in Iraq supposed to be short, it was supposed to be cheap and it was not supposed to yield an American death count. Wartime creates jobs and garner unity behind a leader. The purpose of the war in Iraq is not to fight terror.

"We helped create the Taliban, we helped create Osama Bin Ladin and now that genie is at work on us. And where are we? In Iraq," said Ellsberg.

Ellsberg said the United States maintains that the forces used in Vietnam and Iraq are justified as preventative because more American lives would have been lost had those measures not been used.

"The United States is a country that believes itself not guilty of winning a war by terrorism. The A-Bomb wasn't used so there is no guilt," said Ellsberg.

However more bombs were used during the Vietnam War than there are in an A-Bomb. Ellsberg said if President Bush gets re-elected, his administration will start testing nuclear bombs within three years. Right now, over 40 countries worldwide could be nuclear in less than one year because the psychology that permitted the U.S to use the A-Bomb is not solely American.

"If it happens, it will happen with the best of intentions because we will be protecting our own. Good intentions, for patriotism and everything else, pave the way to hell," said Ellsberg. "When it comes to take the irrevocable step of killing someone, it is never a sufficient reason for the President to say, 'Because I said so.'"

Ellsberg, 72, is an energetic activist, writing and lecturing against the use of nuclear weapons since the end of the Vietnam War. He worked as a strategic analyst for the RAND Corporation, and was a consultant to the Department of Defense and the White House. He joined the Defense Department in 1964 as a Special Assistant to John McNaughton, Assistant Secretary of Defense for International Security Affairs.

The speech was brought to the Five College Area by the Veterans Education Project.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Jennifer Eastwood
Managing Editor Dan Lamothe
Business Manager Peter Foundas
Production Manager Scott Pihl
Night Supervisor Nick Markantonatos
Advertising Manager Sean Costello
Editorial Production Shannon Farrington
Arts & Living Editor Glen Straub
Comics Editor Molly Eggleston
Editorial Editor Paige Cram
News Editor Perron Sulniker
Photo Editor Gerald H. Ling
Sports Editor Andrew Merritt
Circulation Manager Kristen Weiss
Classified Advertising Marty Pappas
Distribution Manager Julie Beauchamp
Finance Manager Greg Stamm
Human Resources Sandra Marquez
Special Issues Betsy Feldman
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising David Bor
Assistant Business Jaclynn Sorenson
Assistant Distribution Mark Lagatic
Assistant Finance Richard Pacheco
Advertising Production Liza Lynch
Graphics Advisor Charlie Higgins
Layout Manager Lindsay Clark
Asst. Arts & Living Meghan Healy
Asst. Arts & Living Cameron J. Woods
Assistant Editorial Matthew Reid
Assistant News Erika Lovley
Assistant News Morris Singer
Assistant Photo Emilie Duggan
Assistant Sports Mike Marzelli
Assistant Sports Robert McGovern

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts academic semester. The Collegian is independently owned and operated. Advertising revenues support the paper which is also free. After the first copy, each additional copy is 25 cents. The Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936 published daily since 1967. The Collegian has been recognized since 1984 for excellence in advertising, sales and innovation, and weekly on Twitter, Facebook and Snapchat.

Made your head turn sideways...
Collegian: it just makes sense.
News meeting today at 4 p.m.
www.dailycollegian.com

GERALD H. LING/COLLEGIAN

Plug it in; plug it in!

Drum major Jon Korhonen looks on as equipment staffers Jeff Lindequist and Rob Spanos from the UMass marching band test out their new electric vehicle. The vehicle was among many donated by Robin Food Ltd., a non-profit organization.

Gay bishop begins ministry

By Katherine Webster
Associated Press

PETERBOROUGH, N.H. (AP) The Rev. V. Gene Robinson began his ministry as the Episcopal Church's first openly gay bishop yesterday by saying he wants to bring the message of God's love to "those on the margins."

He also said the church should speak out on issues of social justice, including the lack of access to health care for many Americans.

"How dare we in this country spend $87 billion on war when 44 million people have no health insurance?" he said in his sermon. "It's up to the church to lead on some of these moral issues."

After the service at All Saints Church, where he was married to his former wife, Robinson said he hopes that people who disagree with his confirmation will remain within the Episcopal Church, instead of breaking away.

"A church founded on unhappiness and anger is not going to go very far," he said.

New Hampshire's Episcopalians elected Robinson as bishop in June, and his selection was approved at the convention of the Episcopal Church USA in August. But his consecration a week ago has threatened to divide the Episcopal Church, the U.S. branch of Anglicanism.

On Nov. 3, overseas bishops who said they represented 50 million of the world's 77 million Anglicans jointly announced they were in a "state of impaired communion" with the Episcopal Church — a step short of declaring a full schism.

In addition, conservatives within the U.S. church have asked the Archbishop of Canterbury, the spiritual head of the Anglican Church, to authorize a separate Anglican province for them in North America.

In his sermon, Robinson said Jesus spent most of his time with women, tax collectors and foreigners, not with the rabbis and wealthy members of the temple. Jesus "looked at the religious establishment of his day and realized they had closed their eyes to those on the margins," he said.

"Think of all the kinds of blindness right outside this door: not seeing people in need, or turning the other way when we do," he said.

Robinson told a story about three American soldiers in World War I whose fellow soldier was killed in combat, then was buried just outside the fence of a French churchyard because the priest didn't know whether the soldier had been baptized. When the Americans returned to pay their respects, they couldn't find his grave outside the fence.

The priest explained to them, "I realized I'd followed the rules, but I hadn't done the right thing — so I moved the fence," Robinson said.

"You and I in Jesus' name are called to move the fence ... as far away from us as possible," Robinson said.

At a reception for the bishop following the service, churchgoer Jack Jones said he was "all for" Robinson.

"He's a real brave man, and intelligent, and if people don't want to come to church for him, let them go somewhere else," said Jones, 64.

Elsewhere in the state, about half the members of the Episcopal parish in Rochester walked out of Sunday services to protest the dismissal of their interim minister, who opposes Robinson's appointment.

Sunken warship found

BOSTON (AP) — Five amateur divers have discovered the submerged remains of a lost U.S. Navy that exploded in waters off Boston almost 60 years ago, killing almost a dozen people.

The bow of the YF-415 U.S. Navy ship lies about 240 feet underwater, its bow completely buried and its bridge ripped off by fishing gear, where it sank in 1944.

The deep-sea divers who found it, normally secretive about their discoveries, are going public in hopes of putting to rest any lingering curiosity from loved ones or descendants of those who were on the ship.

"It's sacred ground," Bob Foster of Foxboro told the Boston Sunday Globe. "We didn't know what we had found at first."

Only about 10 percent of the 10,000 to 15,000 shipwrecks off New England's coast have been definitively identified. While the state Board of Underwater Archaeology knows roughly where and when many ships went down, exact locations are often elusive.

When Foster and his friends go "shipwreck searching," they look for rises or bumps on the ocean floor. The group then uses a sonar to identify shapes on the sea bottom, seeking those showing right or sharp angles that may be man-made.

Foster first spotted the YF-415 a year ago in an area 14 miles northeast of Boston, and off the coast of Rockport, known as the "dumping grounds," where old ships were scuttled and waste was dumped overboard. Weather prevented the group from diving to check it out until last July.

When two members, Captains Heather Knowles and Dave Caldwell of Northern Atlantic Dive Expeditions of Marblehead, discovered a compass stamped "U.S. Navy," Foster searched declassified naval documents, and matched the sunk vessel with the YF-415 in naval records and alerted the Navy.

Amid those old documents, Foster also uncovered a play-by-play account of a tragedy that fell particularly harshly on a group of black sailors from the now-defunct Hingham Ammunition Depot.

Shortly after noon on May 11, 1944, after Navy workers had already hoisted two-thirds of the ship's 151 tons of old ammunition overboard, survivors heard a whooshing sound as the explosives caught fire and lit into the air.

Other ordnance caught fire and the men, many of whom could not swim, jumped over the side without life preservers. Explosions continued for nearly 40 minutes. By the time the haze cleared, the YF-415 had sunk.

A passing naval weather ship plucked survivors from the water, including skipper Louis Tremblay, a former antiques dealer from Marblehead, who was credited with getting men off the ship and helping a severely burned Newport, R.I., man into a preserver.

In all, it appears 11 of the 16 enlisted men from the Hingham depot died that day, and all but three of the ship's crew died.

The newspapers two days later ran the story under a bigger headline of "Allies win 3 miles in Italy, bag 150 Nazis over Reich," but within days, it was forgotten amid news of the war.

"It's still an amazing story," said Jack Ahern of Plymouth, one of the divers.

Neither the divers nor the Globe has been able to track down any of the wreck's survivors today.

Ahern and the other divers want to glean more clues, but their time at the site is limited. The gas mixture they use and the cold temperatures gives them only about 20 minutes at the wreck each dive.

While they sometimes keep items from shipwrecks, they are not allowed under naval law to keep anything from the ship, or disturb it, because it is considered a war grave. They still won't give out the exact location of the wreck to anyone but the Navy.

"This is something most divers dream about," said Foster. "It's a detective story; it's history. Being the first to actually see this ship in 60 years is amazing."

Last Monday, the wreck of the Wyoming, a 329 1/2-foot, six-masted cargo carrier launched in 1909, was found off Cape Cod. The Wyoming sank in 65 to 70 feet of water during a gale in 1924.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

Monday, November 10, 2003 Editorial@dailycollegian.com

Smart and Lynch stories exploited in Primetime

Last night, television viewers had to make the difficult choice of what to watch at 9 p.m. The choices were a special made-for-TV movie on CBS, or a special made-for-TV movie on NBC.

The competing programs, which ran as a part of sweeps week for the networks, were "The Elizabeth Smart Story" (CBS) and "Saving Jessica Lynch" (NBC). Both films portrayed the two young women who were kidnapped over the course of the past year and a half (Lynch in March of this year, Smart in June of 2002). Both had the same feel-good appeal and the same "giving America hope" message.

To pit Jessica Lynch against Jessica Smart against each other, like a pair of heavyweight boxers in the ring at the MGM Grand, does a disservice to many people. First of all, it makes a mockery of the two situations. Made-for-television movies have a sort of cheesy, corny connotation to them. It is unfortunate, first and foremost, for the Smart and Lynch families that these traumatic ordeals will be dramatized and commercialized in this way.

It is also a disservice for the American public. Are people so incapable of keeping up with the news that they need to have their information nicely packaged for them in the format of a made-for-TV movie?

And are we supposed to tune in to these movies because it will make us feel patriotic? Both films were promoted as being good for our country and something that all true Americans should tune in to. Loving your country is one thing, but to have to sit through a movie that depicts an already over-analyzed and over talked about story is another. Having a highly personal and sensitive issue commercialized and shoved in our faces may make us feel American, but it shouldn't make us feel patriotic.

Simply making these movies is bad enough. What is even worse is that they air in the same 9 p.m. time slot. The made-for-TV movie format would allow the general public to watch the events of these two women unfold right before their eyes, possibly answering any questions they may have had. But to have the films air at the same time forces people to choose between one or the other. If the two respective networks truly cared about informing Americans about the stories of Smart and Lynch, they would have aired the movies on different nights, allowing people to view both. Clearly, it was all about ratings.

Another issue is the fact that these two stories are so fresh in the minds of Americans. Do network executives feel as though Americans will have forgotten about these two girls in another year from now, forcing the movies to be made so quickly? In reality, while the Elizabeth Smart and Jessica Lynch stories may have been on the front page of every major newspaper and on every single twenty-four hour a day TV news channel, neither story is particularly newsworthy. So, the networks needed to produce these programs as soon as possible, before the names of the two girls faded to memory (which has already started to happen to many people).

Only time will tell who wins the battle of the kidnapped sweethearts. But does it really matter? Neither movie will do anything to better the lives of anyone, with the exception of a few people's checkbooks.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

Please retract your claws

Liz Jennings

It's Friday night and my girls and I are itching to go out. We make some calls and find a "gathering." It is around 8 p.m. First there is the initial battle for who gets the good shower. After clawing tooth and nail for the one with the best water pressure, we get squeaky clean.

We then stand around in bathrobes and towels, pondering which shirt matches those sexy shoes, and what belt will go best with the jeans that show off our booties. Finally, the primping begins. Eyelashes are curled, lips are glossed, and hair is ironed, sprayed, and blow-dried. The daiquiris swirl in the blender tempting us. We pose critically in front of the full-length mirror, to examine the finished product. What stares back at us is a sexy mama ready to go out and knock the fellas on their behinds.

There is, however, an underlying motive.

I have noticed it on many occasions, as I am sure my fellow females have as well. The question I want to pose is: whom are we really dressing for?

While many are hoping to catch the eye of that special someone and spark a fairy tale romance, I can't help noticing how we girls size one another up the second a hot new chica struts through the door. Sure, all the heads turn when a sexy man walks in, but I would say that women get just as much attention, if not more.

It is not usually a positive experience, and I admit I am guilty of doing it. They are given the once over, inspected from head to toe in hopes of finding a flaw. Then they are torn down and picked apart. Women by nature are competitive and catty. This comes as no surprise: we are all trying to out do each other and be the most beautiful, sexy or whatever.

However, is this really fair to do?

This kind of behavior does not put women in a favorable light. It screams insecurity, jealousy and snobbery. I am sure it has been done to everyone at one point or another. Maybe it hasn't exactly been in this context, but something similar. And it doesn't just happen at parties — it can happen on campus, at dinner, on the street, in class, or anywhere else.

Women feel out their competition and think of ways to crush their opponent, in hopes of going home victorious that day. It doesn't just have to be over looks either — brains, talent, anything goes. It is just something we do.

What is occurring is not only unhealthy, but also extremely unfortunate. We all come in different shapes, sizes, and colors and we bring our own special gifts as well. First of all, comparing yourself to someone else is doing you an injustice. Ripping her down or beating yourself up for not looking "the best" is horrible. We look the way we look, and we must embrace and accept it. Every diva brings her unique beauty to the table. A first look only is only skin-deep, and any judgment based on a first look can be called nothing more than shallow. Plus, it doesn't tell you anything. She might be beautiful, but have the personality of dry toast. She could be plain looking but have the most colorful character. Looks don't reveal a thing.

Any kind of judgmental behavior should be frowned upon. We could be missing out on meeting some really cool people by acting cold to others we don't know.

Any kind of judgmental behavior should be frowned upon. We could be missing out on meeting some really cool people by acting cold to others we don't know. There are two sides to every coin, and as much as we women have participated in casting a girl off, I am sure we have been snubbed a few times ourselves.

Think of how terrible it felt and how awkward it made your night. Initially no one talks to you or even gives you a chance. Later, once they get to know you, it is fine but you have to pass some "test" at the time. Sometimes you leave there with nothing but ice cold glares watching your every move as the door slams behind you. All I can say is treat people how you want to be treated. Give them a chance you never know how cool they can be.

We are all different, but there is an unspoken bond between women that only we can truly understand. Being catty accomplishes nothing. It is neither attractive nor classy.

Practicing acceptance and not being judgmental shows that you are secure and confident. It also says that you are nice and compassionate. Personally, I know two things: I am not about to let anyone think they are better than me, and I intend to pay them the same respect.

Being friendly and outgoing can get you a long way while being nasty and snotty can shut many doors. In the end we should partake in positive experiences and support each other. We are human and as such we are sensitive beings. Girls already have ridiculous standards they have to meet.

Why make it worse by telling someone else they are not good enough? What might be funny and entertaining to one can be the source of tears and low self-esteem for another.

So next time you are out and "that girl" appears in the doorway, try a different approach. Attempt to be nice and get to know her ... then make up your mind. Everyone deserves a chance.

Liz Jennings is a Umass student.

The 'Thought Market'

Mark Ostroff

They say that in America, "there's a sucker born every minute." Not to say that Americans are idiots, but at one time or another, everyone falls for something.

But, in this country, fooling people has become a major industry and a sizable force to be reckoned with.

From the red label on a Coca-Cola can, to the beautiful faces and sleek cars of Hollywood, more cognitive trickery has been hammered out than any totalitarian government in the modern world. But as late as the past decade, the psychoparasitical snare of the mainstream media has been looking to sell something else to the masses — thought and reasoning.

No, it's not a conspiracy, nor is it a corporate media Bush fetish. Simply put, there's money to be made. When it comes to war, more money is made for covering it than by debating it. So solely out of financial interest, the public has to be convinced that war is necessary.

But there are some problems: Inspectors came up empty-handed and the White House gave a marvelous presentation to the UN, using "sexed up" intelligence, magazine clippings, and even forgeries. So how can we still get people to agree that we need to go to war?

This is where the media works its magic, using specific tactics to sway public opinion in favor of the war. They are known as Manicheanism and Schadenfreude, and they aren't new by any means.

Manicheanism is a millennia-old ideology with roots in Christianity. It simply dichotomizes an individual's worldview into two distinct camps of Good and Evil. In fact, the existence of a Satan to counterbalance God is attributed to manicheanism. Although it has evolved throughout the centuries, it's outcome is always the same: "either you're with us or your with the terrorists," "America: Love it or leave it," or how "Christ and Allah" compares to "light and darkness" (as preached by Franklin Graham).

Many media outlets use manicheanism to simplify information, being that if news is too complex, readers will tune out from boredom or discouragement. The average attention span is about 20 minutes, so to keep your attention, information must be brief and broken-down, while another tactic, schadenfreude, comes into play.

Schadenfreude is loose German for "harming joy." It's used to describe pleasure that someone gets out of the discomfort of others. Ever notice that people are just waiting for Simon to blurt out his trademark insults to warped, wannabe pop stars on American Idol? Ever wonder why you love watching that trashy ex-boyfriend on Jerry Springer get slammed by Steve the bodyguard? Whenever you watch shows like American Idol or Jerry Springer, you are experiencing schadenfreude.

Schadenfreude is practically hypnotic. By exposing a person to it, they can become more open to suggestion, which is actually just another form of peer-pressure.

There are two shows that make good examples of this tactic in swaying opinion: The Sean Hannity Show (radio) and the O'Reilly Factor.

During Hannity's show, while slamming a carefully screened "liberal," he tells his live Dallas audience, that the US had supported Saddam Hussein's regime so America could "fight totalitarianism." After making this point, he ended the call by telling the caller to "get it through [his] thick, liberal skull!"

Checks were cashed, jokes were told, flags were waved, and while Rupert Murdock ate caviar, our troops ate shrapnel.

Hannity's ad-hominem attack on a faceless dissident added cheap validity to the entire exchange. While the audience cheered over his verbal assault, they inadvertently agreed to an obvious doublethought: "We support Saddam Hussein in order to fight totalitarianism." (George Orwell spins in his grave.)

Schadenfreude worked its magic, as the sheer pleasure of bashing a fellow human took precedent over the hard facts, conveniently covering Hannity's backward logic.

And then, there is Bill O'Reilly. In another dead-in-the-water "No-spin" segment, he tells Jeremy Glick, a Stanford professor whose father died in the 9/11 attacks, that he shames his family with his anti-war view.

When Glick tries to explain his side of the story, O'Reilly yells, "Shut up!" repeatedly, cuts Glick's microphone and then goes to a commercial. During the commerical break, he loudly threatens to "tear [Glick] to f*cking pieces!"

The next day, O'Reilly tells his audience, "Glick was out of control and spewing hatred for this program and his country using vile propaganda. This is a no-spin zone, and wild ravings will be shut down quick."

Did his audience acknowledge that it was, in fact, O'Reilly who was "out of control and spewing hatred?" Did his audience also realize that during the entire segment, O'Reilly had not made a single substantial argument? In fact, whenever Glick began citing historical fact, O'Reilly started in about how he was shaming his mother.

O'Reilly knew that his audience would be more fascinated with slamming Glick, rather than debating him, which is why he resorted to emotional appeals and insults. He was absolutely right: they ate it up.

And like Hannity, O'Reilly came through for Fox. When President Bush said, "Let's go," Fox got their long-anticipated, green-backed spoils of covering a war, which all of America watched. Checks were cashed, jokes were told, flags were waved, and while Rupert Murdock ate caviar, our troops ate shrapnel.

When will the media step up and take responsibility in working toward objectivity, rather than manufactured consent? And when will news and commentary be more like a source of information and less like a source of family-grade pornography? When there's no more money to be made in the 'Thought Market' ... that's when.

Mark Ostroff is a Collegian Columnist.

From the sex couch to sour milk

Matt Elder

Living off campus has made me realize a lot of things that I took for granted when I was growing up in Framingham, or living in the dorms. I've learned such important life lessons that, like my mom told me all these years, "dishes don't clean themselves!" and, "Clothes aren't cleaned by the cleaning fairy."

The past two years were spent in John Quincy Adams in Southwest (hey, at least I ducked out before all these stupid changes). Even there, I could use as many dishes as I wanted, and make as big of a mess as I deemed necessary, although not in my room which served as my living room, bedroom, dining room, and on long, lonely nights, my bathroom.

However, here is a list of things that I miss from not living back home in Framingham.

My home in Framingham doesn't have "that smell" that my apartment in Amherst has. The source of this smell: unknown.

I've learned such important life lessons that, like my mom told me all these years, "dishes don't clean themselves!" and, "Clothes aren't cleaned by the cleaning fairy."

In Framingham, I always have milk. This milk always has a liquid consistency; there are no chunks and no smell. And I learned another important life lesson: if you leave milk out in a glass for three days, it takes twice as long to get the smell out of your kitchen table after the glass spills.

Note to self: Before turning on the heater, check to make sure your Playstation 2 controllers are NOT on it. A sharp knife cleans up said controller very nicely.

I miss a kitchen floor that is never sticky. For about three months, my apartment here has a square foot of eternal stickiness. This stickiness refuses to go away, regardless of what products are spewed upon it.

Here, in my living room, there is a couch that is classified as "the sex couch." If you turned all the lights off and ran a black light over this couch, it would resemble the back of a Dalmatian.

I miss clean toilets and showers. The back of our shower would astound modern scientists. I think we can probably grow something back there. As I shower, I frequently look behind me to make sure nothing is going to bite me. It only happened twice so far.

Note to self: Bottle caps and tabs to beer will break a disposal.

However, don't get me wrong, I really enjoy living in my apartment with my two roommates. And to prove it, here's why it's better living in Amherst.

I don't think my mom would approve of the Playboy on the back of our toilet. Whoops.

You gotta love the sex couch. I mean, that thing has more action than a Schwarzenegger flick. Or, in this case, a Jenna Jameson flick. Whichever you prefer.

You don't have as many options for ordering food or eating out here that I have as home. I swear, I'm putting Bruno's kids through college. Also, we've had more Wings at my place than the runway at Logan.

Back home, I don't think I could keep my fridge the way I do here. I have to adapt to the life I've been accustomed to. We have more Bud in there then Snoop Dogg has in his living room. And we use different varieties. Bud Light, Budweiser, bottles, cans, etc. We don't discriminate. We love all types of beer!

My house in Framingham is too predictable. After a party at my place, the most enjoyable part is the morning after. I walk downstairs and I see a half dozen or so people passed out on the floor, pull out sofa and, yes, the infamous sex couch. Out of these half dozen or so people, I tend to actually know half of them. When a person asks who I am and I say the owner of the floor you just slept on, the look on his face is priceless.

You've got to love college. It's now time for me to go and make my dinner, which will consist of Easy Mac, flat soda, and mashed potatoes from a box. Only the best for me!

Matt Elder is a Collegian columnist.

Submit a letter or opinion

editorial@dailycollegian.com | 413-545-3699 | Letters to the Editor, 113 Campus Center Way, Amherst, MA 01003

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 10, 2003 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The D master the art of the DVD

Comedic rockers continue success

By Nick Romanow
Collegian Staff

What does a rock group do to follow up its amazingly acclaimed and successful debut album?

Tenacious D believes the answer may lie in the DVD format. Jack Black (aka JB or Jables) and Kyle Gass (aka KG or Kage) make up Tenacious D, otherwise known simply as The D, the hard-rocking acoustic duo who, despite having only released one album, have an enormous and dedicated fanbase.

Tenacious D — "The Complete Masterworks" — Epic

The important thing everyone should know about Tenacious D is that while they have a reputation of being a 'comedy act' there is a real reason that the band is worshiped: The D, simply, rocks.

The band started on the underground Los Angeles comedy scene before getting its own short-lived HBO show. By the time the band signed with Epic Records and released its first album in the fall of 2001 its cultish fanbase (known as "D-sciples") had grown to hundreds-of-thousands.

"The Complete Masterworks" recognizes the fan's appetite for The D and the music. The first disc contains an entire live performance from London, along with all six of the HBO episodes that introduced the world to The D. The second disc of the set, labeled "For Psycho Fans" lives up to its promise with its comprehensive documentation of nearly everything the band has done in the past two years. It features three short films that were made for HBO, in-the-studio and on-the-road documentaries, all the band's music videos — along with two making-of documentaries, and three different television performances by the band.

The focus of the DVD is the concert footage. The show, shot last November at the Brixton Academy in London, is a full, hour-long set that finds The D playing most of its album tracks, including fan favorites such as "Double Team" and "Kyle Quit The Band."

The live set also rewards fans with unreleased songs and The D's patent stage banter. The purpose of a concert film is always to bring the live experience home to the viewer and "The Complete Masterworks" does indeed bring JB and KG straight to your room. There is another reason why the live set should be interesting to D fans; for the album JB and KG recruited an all-star backing band that included Dave Grohl (Nirvana, Foo Fighters), Steve McDonald, and Ken Andrews (Failure, Year Of The Rabbit) to flesh the songs into full-out electric rock extravaganzas. Live, though, The D is simply just Jables and Kage playing with just two microphones and two acoustic guitars and they rock just as hard, if not harder, than on the album.

The HBO shows are, at their best, just as good as the band's album or live show. They do drag at times though. The show is still, as a whole, righteous and welcome to have on DVD. In addition to the comedy they provide early looks at some of the D songs that made the album, as well as plenty of fan-favorites that didn't make the record.

The documentaries are all a lot of fun and are worth multiple viewings. They provide far more laughs than they do insight, but that is to be expected from The D. The short films are all under 10 minutes and are hilarious, though disgusting. The music videos — "Tribute", "Wonderboy", and "Fk Her Gently" — and TV appearances — on Conan, MadTV, and Crank Yankers — are all on the DVD for the sake of completists.

While some of them are great D moments (the "Tribute" video) and some are just boring (the Crank Yankers appearance — if you can call two puppets that look like JB and KG dancing to The D's song "Friendship" an appearance), it's hard to argue with more content.

So how does the greatest rock band in the world follow up the greatest debut album in history? Well, Tenacious D has proven that they found the answer; D-sciples should gladly proclaim it nothing short of the greatest DVD in the world.

PHOTOS COURTESY SEAN MURPHY/EPIC

Jack Black and Kyle Gass make up the humorous rock 'n' roll duo, Tenacious D. The band released its first-ever DVD last Tuesday.

An Early Christmas

'Elf' released way ahead of season

'Elf'
Directed by Jon Favreau
Starring Will Farrell, Bob Newhart
New Line Productions
Rated PG
95 mins.
Grade A-

By Lauren Freeman
Collegian Staff

Every year the holidays seem to arrive sooner and sooner. This year as soon as Halloween was over, the Christmas film "Elf" was distributed to the theaters. Obviously, this means that the film will not be in theaters at Christmas time. However, the rationale behind this early release is a marketing decision. The sooner the film leaves the theaters, the sooner it arrives in stores and under Christmas trees everywhere.

The "sooner to DVD the better" philosophy, is indicative that supplying the people with their own copy of the film is more important than scheduling a timely theater release. Ironically, this move seems to infer that people generally would like to own something and watch it individually over the holidays, rather than go to the movies and watch as a large family. This attitude is very revealing.

Christmas is increasingly about what and when we can get something, not where and with whom we can share something with.

Equally ironic is the problematic fact that this disinterest in the actual theater release means that less people are going to see "Elf" in the large screen manner that it is supposed to be viewed in.

This story is about an oversized elf. The image of this oversized elf, played by Saturday Night Live Alum Will Ferrell, simply cannot be portrayed as an effective size difference when watched on a TV rather than the movie theater screen.

Alas, despite the very typical Hollywood mentality that accompanies the early release of this film, the movie must be able to stand on its own, one way or another. Perhaps, viewing the Christmas film long before the actual holiday spirit is in the air is a better unbiased means of determining whether the story is good or not. How many people could really be critical of a Christmas film in mid-December, when their heads are full of sugarplums and dancing gingerbread men?

The story of "Elf" is about Buddy (Farrell), a human child raised by the elves at Santa's workshop. When he is old enough to acknowledge the fact that he is simply too large to be a "real" elf, he decides to go looking for his human family. His search brings him to New York City, the Empire State building, where his real father (James Caan), is the leading executive at a children's book publishing company.

Regardless of the fact that his business is dealing with children and what children want, Buddy's dad is self absorbed and cares more about making a buck than making a good book. Isn't this the same

Continued on page 5

PHOTOS COURTESY ALAN MARKFIELD/NEW LINE

Amy Sedaris, left, James Caan, center, and Will Ferrell star in "Elf."

Distillers make big label debut

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

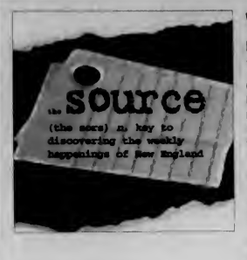
Brody Dalle's heart is breaking. The raccoon-eyed, nouveau iconic banshee who fronts the raggedy punk band the Distillers picks up where former grunge princess and current psychiatric anomaly Courtney Love left off — that is, she's fast becoming the leading female force in punk rock music.

The snarling, sneering femme fatale who's shifting hair colors and bruise-colored eyeshadow will establish rebel fashion trends years from now. (She makes kindergarten-punk singer Avril Lavigne look like the tie-flaunting, tomboy Britney Spears she really is.)

But underneath her burgeoning idol status is a heart that's tortured and burned by the ghostly dark side of romance. Just as her band is achieving its greatest success, her personal life is hitting the rocks.

The Distillers — 'Coral Fang' — Hellcat/Sire

"Coral Fang" is the anticipated major label debut of the Distillers, following the acclaimed "Sing Sing Death House," which was released on the Hellcat/ Epitaph recording imprint a few years back. It's an album that's meant to position the Distillers as a modern distaff variation on Nirvana, or — to further the Love comparisons — the new Hole. But as the band hit the rise, Dalle's marriage to Rancid vocalist Tim Armstrong began to fall apart, and purist fans began to call her a sellout and a ladder climber (Rolling Stone photos showing her tongue to tongue with Queens of the Stone Age majordomo Josh Homme did not help matters any.)



Dalle's dejection is palpable on "Coral Fang," which is as much a document to her despair as it is a launching pad for the Distillers as they move to the next level. Dalle gives songs titles like "Drain the Blood," "Die on a Rope" and "The Gallow is God." The art on the cover is a sketch of a woman's crucified nude body, as blood spouts out a slash in her

Continued on page 5

COURTESY HELLCAT/SIRE

Vocalist Brody Dalle documents her pain on the Distillers' new record "Coral Fang."

MondayNovember10

Books

The Odyssey Mystery Book Group will discuss Ian Rankin's "The Black Book" at 7 p.m. tonight at the Odyssey Bookshop. The store is located at 9 College St. in South Hadley, Mass. For more information call 413-534-7307.

TuesdayNovember11

Art

James Young, professor of English and Judaic studies at the University of Massachusetts, James Young, will join Joel Meyerowitz — the only photographer to gain unlimited access to the Ground Zero area within a few weeks after the World Trade Center attacks on Sept. 11, 2001 — to discuss Meyerowitz's photo exhibit, "Aftermath: Images from Ground Zero." The exhibit appears at the University Gallery in the Fine Arts Center and the gallery talk will take place in the same area at 7 p.m. tonight. The event is free.

WednesdayNovember12

Music

Scottish indie-rock band Belle and Sebastian makes a stop at Northampton's Calvin Theater tonight. Opening for B&S is Rasputina. The show starts at 8 p.m. Tickets are priced at $28.50, and can be purchased at the Northampton Box Office or by calling 413-586-8686 or 1-800-THE-TICK.

ThursdayNovember13

Books

The Odyssey Bookshop is hosting award-winning author of "Oscar and Lucinda" and "True History of the Kelly Gang," Peter Carey, as he reads from his new novel "My Life as a Fake." The new book follows the renewals and blessings in nature and throughout life. The reading is at 7 p.m. and is free. For more information call the Odyssey Bookshop at 413-534-7307.

Music

Folk music takes over the Pearl Street Ballroom tonight, as Yonder Mountain String Band headlines a concert that will also feature Rani Arbo & Daisy Mayhem with special guest Darol Anger. The show was originally scheduled to appear at the Calvin Theater but was moved to Pearl Street last week. The event begins at 8.pm. Tickets in advance are $20 and at the door they will cost $23.

Performing Arts

The Augusta Savage Gallery in the New Africa House on the University of Massachusetts campus will present a music performance by award-winning Korean born musician and composer Jin Hi Kim tonight. Kim is the first Korean American composer to receive National Endowments for the Arts funding. The show starts at 7 p.m. and is free to the public.

FridayNovember14

Performing Arts

The Fine Arts Center will be hosting two different performances for "Nori: Korean Drums and Music" today. The performances contain traditional Korean drumming, dance, ritual, theater, and entertainment that will fascinate anyone interested in world cultures. The first showing starts at 10 a.m., mainly a performance for schools in the area, and the second begins at 8p.m. For more information contact the Asian Arts and Culture Program at 413-545-1980.

Music

Mount Holyoke College will be presenting "Year of the Blues" a jazz concert exploring indigo moods with songs from artists such as Miles Davis, Kenny Dorham, and Duke Ellington. The show starts at 7:30 p.m. in the McCulloch Auditorium. To contact call 413-538-2306.

SaturdayNovember15

Books

Tonight the Odyssey Bookshop will be celebrating its 40th anniversary. Activities for children, raffles for free books, and a 60-second shopping spree for a lucky grand-prize winner will occur. Refreshments will also be provided. For more information call the Odyssey Bookshop at 413-534-7307.

Music

UMass-bred band band, Migrant Pickers, comprised of an acoustic guitar, harmonica, vocals and electric bass, will be performing at the Black Sheep in Amherst tonight. The show begins at 7:30 p.m and is free.

weekly pinup

FEELIN' BLUE

The New World Theater brings a new poetic and musical journey called "Eyewitness Blues," created by Mildred Ruiz and Steven Sapp, to the Northampton Center for Arts tonight and Thursday. The second show is the following evening. The performance starts at 8 p.m on both nights. Tickets are $15 for general audience, $8 for senior and low income, and $5 for children and Five College students with an ID.

'Elf' still shines despite pre-Christmas release attitude Hollywood executives who released this film in November, despite its Christmas theme, harbored?

Continued from page 4

Thus, the story driving "Elf" seems to be self-reflexive of the Hollywood mentality spawning such an early release and thus self-depreciating.

It is a tough call. What would kids prefer? An extra present under the tree, or a trip to the movies? Would a pair of tickets in an envelope promising the child a day out with mommy and daddy at the movies mean more to a child than yet another movie bought with the intention of keeping little Bobby out of mommy's hair for a few hours? Kids are plopped in front of the TV by themselves far too often. Is "Elf" making fun of the very mentality that provides motivation for its November release? It certainly appears that way.

Nevertheless, Elf is a hilarious, heartwarming movie. Will Ferrell, with eyes that seem child-like in their elfish innocence, is truly convincing. When a 21-year-old can go to this movie and laugh like the four-year-old sitting behind her, that is a very good sign.

At the theater two complete strangers watch the movie together, enjoying each other's company because two laughs are better than one. For the adult, the laughter of a child is as therapeutic as it gets. That silly overly loud cackle of the four-year-old, at the most unlikely of moments, makes one feel warm and fuzzy inside. One remembers he used to get that very same feeling when waiting at the top of the stairs to be let down into the living room full of brightly packaged gifts at Christmas.

So please, see this movie in the theaters, despite its untimely release. Bring a child and hear them laugh. Don't be afraid to look like a geek, you're in a dark theater after all. If anything this movie can help you to realize your true elf … I mean self.

The Distillers create quasi-dark record, 'Coral Fang'

Continued from page 4

side. Drawings of razor blades and severed limbs crop up throughout the packaging. To say that this album is dark may be an understatement.

But, actually, "Coral Fang" isn't a dark album — it may traffic in images of gore and morbidity in the songs, but it is not to celebrate gore or morbidity. These blood-soaked metaphors exist to paint a portrait of a wounded young woman coping with sadness and loss. Dalle's bruised tough girl act takes on another dimension in light of her musical meanderings on "Coral Fang." She shows a complex, multi-faceted character, a woman who is both strong and vulnerable at the same time.

Dalle certainly can roar with the best of them. Her raspy, guttural drawl is as sexy as screaming gets — she veers between a deep, forceful rumble and a rough and tumble yelp. Her voice isn't beautiful in the traditional sense, the kind of pristine, melismatic form that she associates with the likes of Kelly Clarkson and Mariah Carey. But her voice does have beauty to it, a kind of darker, rougher, more imperceptible prettiness. She may be the best female vocalist in modern punk, her grunting roar giving Karen O's libidinous howl or Andrea Zollo's girlish chirp a run for their money.

But as tough as Dalle makes herself sound, she can't mask her pain. "He's gone away" she sings in the coda to "Drain the Blood," and it's hard to figure out who she's talking about.

"Holy eyes, I never knew I'd beg down at your feet" she sighs during the acoustic-tinged opening of "The Hunger."

It helps that the musicianship is especially tight. The songs are tuneful and catchy without sacrificing the punk. Each song has a visceral, raw power — strong, brutal, and corrosive — as well as a firm melodic sense.

While the Distillers don't really break new ground with "Coral Fang" they find enough breathing room to expand the sound. Ryan Sinn's venomous guitars, Andy Granelli's colorful, surging drums and Tony Bradley's throbbing bass add solid support to Dalle's vocals; Dalle, in turn, is generous enough to share the space with her bandmates. The only time one may be turned off by the Distillers is on the 12-minute, feedback-drenched album capper "Deathsex" in which the gargling wall of sound guitar – it sounds like its being fed through an amp in the throes of torture – seems to go on endlessly.

But from the grunge-copping "The Gallow is God" to the hyper-hooky, pop-flirting (but never pop-punk) likes of "Drain the Blood" and "Dismantle Me" the Distillers have crafted an instantly accessible and addictive album that demonstrates a hard-earned musical and emotional maturity.

"Coral Fang" is an incessantly capturing album and proves that Dalle has every right to becoming the next punk princess icon. The year of punk rock treads on with another successful counterattack to the bloat of modern radio.

Former Secretary of Labor
Robert Reich

Parian Flaherty

will be speaking on

UMass and the Future of Public Higher Education

Wednesday, November 12, 5 PM
Mahar Auditorium
University of Massachusetts-Amherst

Free and Open to the Public

Sponsored by Massachusetts Society of Professors, NFA, Five College Lecture Fund, UMass Center for Public Policy and Administration, UMass Economics, English, Journalism, Political Science, Sociology, Women's Studies, and the Economics Departments of Amherst, Mt. Holyoke, Hampshire, and Smith Colleges.

Attention all Arts & Living writers:
MANDATORY MEETING ON WEDNESDAY AT 5:30 P.M.
IN THE NEWSROOM.
PLEASE ATTEND.

TOTAL FITNESS
WITHOUT WAITING IN LINE
$139
★ Student Special ★
4 months
Best Aerobics-Best Machines
NAUTILUS · FREE WEIGHTS · STAIRMASTERS · TREADMILLS · LIFECIRCUIT · LIFEPOWER
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB
256-0080
50 AMHERST
OPEN 7 DAYS

The BLUE WALL PUB
THIS WEEK at The BLUE WALL PUB
MONDAY Karaoke
Monday Night Football- 10 cent Wings
TUESDAY Open 3-1am
WEDNESDAY DJ-Rhythm Systems
THURSDAY Mpeli Mwakaliku
DJ DMAD
FRIDAY EcloDrive
SATURDAY Richard M.
DJ-Aquarius
LIVE MUSIC starts at 9:00PM.
OPEN MIC starts at 7:00PM. The Sign-Up sheet goes out at 6:00PM. Bring your talent and your friends and your instruments. We'll provide the stage and sound equipment and 20 minutes for you to knock'em dead!
ALL MUSICAL STYLES are encouraged to participate!
AS ALWAYS, 18+ to party, 21+ to drink.

MC is swept away

Continued from page 8

3 victory. In all, three different UMass players had two-goal games over the weekend, as senior Thomas Pöck scored twice in Friday night's matchup. That game, however, was less about offense, and more about goaltending, as UMass blanked Merrimack 2-0 behind the efforts of net minder Gabe Winer, who earned his first career shutout.

Werner's goal, at 17:09 of the second, was a result of the Warrior defense falling asleep as the sophomore from Chevy Chase, Md. finished serving his two minutes for a hooking penalty.

Werner streaked out of the box, and senior defenseman Jeff Lang battled mightily to knock the puck out of the corner to blue line partner Thomas Pöck, who sailed a pass from behind his own goal line to Werner at Merrimack's blue line. Werner took the feed in alone on Warrior keeper Jim Healey, decked to his backhand, and with Healey moving out of position, slipped a forehand wrist shot into the net for the deciding tally.

Mike Warner added his second goal of the game with 3:11 remaining, although it likely won't make any highlight reels. The senior captain misfired on a slap shot, and the puck wobbled just past Healey to make it 3-3.

Mauldin scored the game-tying goal after a frantic eight minutes that saw the teams trade three goals apiece. The junior's second goal of the night came on a one-timer set up by sophomore Chris Capraro, stationed on the right wing boards. Mauldin's slapper found an empty corner of the net, and made it 3-3.

Just prior, the Warriors had tied the game, and then taken the lead on three unanswered goals. Brend Gough got an early Christmas gift when Jeff Caron's slapper from the point deflected off of Tony Johnson's stick, and landed at Gough's feet. The sophomore from St. Albert, Alberta knocked the puck in to finally put the Warriors on the board after four scoreless periods against UMass.

Merrimack kept charging from there, as Brendon Clark slipped a shot between Winer's legs 35 seconds, and Ryan Sullivan gave the visitors the edge when he took a pass from Gough and put it home at 12:05 of the second for his first collegiate goal.

But the Minutemen struck back shortly after with Mauldin and Werner's goals, and held the lead through the third period.

"Our guys were just getting tired," Merrimack coach Chris Serino said. "And [UMass] had more junip. That's because we played so much in our own end."

The scoreless first period was a snoozer, and a complete contrast to the tremendous pace of the middle frame.

"The game today seemed to be almost three different games; first period, second period, and third period," UMass coach Don Cahoon said. "And they all took shape differently. The first period was about staying patient, staying with it, because I thought we played OK, not great but OK, we certainly had a lot of good chances and I thought the offense would come. The second period was totally different. It was all special teams."

"The third period became a game in itself, and how do you survive in the third, win the game, and forget everything that's happened up until now."

Friday night at the J. Thom Lawler Arena in North Andover saw a rougher, slower game as the Minutemen shut down the Warriors to win 2-0. Merrimack didn't get a shot on Winer's net until the second minute of the second period, and the sophomore from Stoughton kept things clean the rest of the night for his first collegiate shutout, and the first by a UMass net minder since Mike Johnson and Tim Warner combined to stop every shot the Niagara Purple Eagles took on Dec. 28, 2001.

Thomas Pöck broke things open at 13:24 of the second period. Mauldin cycled to Merrimack goaltender Casey Guenther's left side and made a pass from the faceoff dot to Marvin Degon, who slid it to Pöck on the opposite point. The senior from Klagenfurt, Austria skated in a few steps, and ripped a wrist shot that beat Guenther glove-side, making it 1-0 Minutemen.

Pöck added another goal at 19:02 of the third period, when his long wrist shot found the empty net to make it 2-0, solidifying the victory.

The teams set a very physical tone in the first period, and although the Minutemen had a number of chances, they failed to capitalize. The Warriors were kept mostly away from Winer, and put no shots on net, compared to UMass' nine. However Merrimack seemed to hold much of the physical advantage, repeatedly throwing hard checks at the Minutemen as they came up the ice.

DAVID J. PHILLIP/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Chad Campbell watches his tee shot on the 17th hole during the third round of the Tour Championship at Champions Golf Club Saturday in Houston. Campbell shot a 10-under-par 61, setting a new course and tournament record. Campbell continued his flawless performance yesterday, and shot a record-breaking 16-under 268 to win the tournament, his first victory on the PGA Tour.

Fallen hero rises to thank his supporters

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

NORTH ANDOVER — Joe Exter doesn't remember much about the play that nearly took his life, and sent his career in a direction he never expected.

But that isn't what defines Joe Exter anymore. He is no longer 'that goalie from Merrimack who got hurt.' He has moved on, mentally and in the world of hockey.

He still is warmly regarded in the college hockey universe, from online message boards, to the standing ovation he received Friday night at J. Thom Lawler Arena in the Volpe Center at Merrimack College. Standing just a wrist shot away from the crease that he manned so capably during his career in a Warrior uniform, Exter addressed the 1,934 in attendance for Joe Exter Night.

After being given a Merrimack sweater with his name and number on it in a beautiful frame by Warrior coach Chris Serino, Exter stood at the end of a red carpet, microphone in hand, and thanked the many supporters who wished him well during the harrowing weeks following the scary end to his college career.

"Many times I'm asked by people if I saw the prayer service held here at Merrimack," Exter said, his New England-accented voice booming. "I wasn't able to see it, but I felt it."

"It means a lot obviously," Exter said of the support he recieved. "Merrimack College is like a community, and the community itself is like a family. It's just an opportunity to give thanks to a bunch of people who prayed for me during this tough time."

Still, he never saw the evening's tribute as an honor to him.

"I said 'you can definitely have a night, but it's not to honor me, the only reason for this night in my eyes is to give thanks for the support that I've gotten."

It all came crashing down on a play that's happened a thousand times before, and a hundred times since. Exter left his crease to reach a loose puck that had just crossed the blue line during a Hockey East playoff game at Conte Forum. But Boston College's Patrick Eaves had the same intentions, and when the two met along the right wing boards, the result was disastrous. Eaves went high, and Exter went low, and the collision sent the goalie sprawling to the ice, where he banged his head on the milky surface, knocking him unconscious.

What came after was intense surgery and therapy to rehabilitate the young athlete, nearly cut down in his prime. Exter suffered a shattered skull, and was comatose for nine days. He was released from the hospital after a month.

After an incredible recovery he says even his doctors couldn't believe, he'll begin looking for a place to begin his professional career in December, and as for the incident on March 7, of which he says he has no memory, he doesn't go out of his way to consider the events of that night.

But he's made peace with what happened, and even wrote a letter to Pat Eaves. Although Eaves has never responded, Exter, in a classic example of his nature, harbors no ill will on the BC sophomore.

"I think it's something he must have put behind him, which is understandable. As for myself, it's never going to be forgotten by both of us, I don't think, but there's nothing but positives to get out of it."

No magic tricks as 'Trotters beat UM

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

Prior to facing off with arguably the most storied team in basketball, the Harlem Globetrotters, Massachusetts men's basketball coach Steve Lappas told his young team that he wanted two things from them.

With a team that was outsized and less experienced at all five positions, the third-year Minuteman coach knew a victory would be hard to come by against a team fresh off a 97-83 win over No. 3 Michigan State. He told his players they needed to avoid being out-rebounded, and hold the 'Trotters to less than 40 percent from the field if they wanted to avoid "running for an hour."

Globetrotters	77
UMass	68

Mission half accomplished.

Sophomore center Gabe Lee tied a game-high with seven rebounds as UMass won the battle of the glass 34-27, but the Globetrotters shot 50 percent from the field to slip past Massachusetts 77-68 at the Springfield Civic Center.

Playing in their first collegiate games, freshmen Art Bowers and Rashaun Freeman contributed 12 and 14 points, respectively, with the latter also dishing out five assists.

Junior captain Anthony Anderson led the Minutemen with 16 points, while former UCLA point guard Darrick Martin led all scorers with 19 points for the Trotters. Former Phoenix Sun Cedric Ceballos was the only other Globetrotter in double figures, with 11 points.

The Globetrotters opened up a nine-point advantage when guard Keiron Shine scored to make the score 64-55 at the 6:21 mark of the second half.

The Minutemen, however, chipped away at the lead with their transition game. After narrowing the margin to 64-59 with a pair of layups, Bowers hit Freeman with a no-look pass on the fast break for an uncontested dunk. Fellow freshman Maurice Maxwell returned the favor, finding Bowers on the run for a layup that made the score 64-63 with 4:46 remaining.

UMass was unable to even it up, though, as Ceballos answered with a 3-pointer to make the score 67-63, and Martin netted 10 of his points down the stretch as the Globetrotters built their lead to as high as 11 before eventually salting the game away.

The Maroon and White came out gunning from the start. After Martin opened the game with a 3-pointer, UMass wheeled off nine straight points and built their lead to as high as seven. The Minutemen held the lead exclusively following the Martin trey until a Ceballos layup gave the Trotters a 14-13 edge with 10:45 remaining in the first half.

The teams traded buckets and the lead for the next three minutes until a pair of Chris Chadwick layups, along with five straight points from Bowers gave UMass a 27-22 advantage with just under six minutes remaining.

The Globetrotters then went on a 6-0 run, utilizing a William Pippen layup and free throws from Charles Wells and Ceballos to retake the lead at 28-27.

The teams proceeded to score just one bucket apiece for the final 4:07 of the first half, and a Chadwick three-pointer rimmed out at the buzzer, making the score 30-29 'Trotters at the end of the first half.

The Maroon and White never saw the lead in the second frame, as a pair of Juaquin Hawkins layups and a Martin 3-pointer made the score 45-37 before Chadwick hit a three of his own.

GERALD H. LING/COLLEGIAN

Richard Higa was sent off after an altercation during UMass' 3-0 loss to Rhode Island Friday Night. The freshman had two goals this season.

Rams halt UMass

Continued from page 8

through the rest of the half. UMass showed moments of life, but was unable to pose any serious threat as it was outshot 8-2.

The second half began with more of the same as URI continued to pressure the Minuteman defense and freshman goalkeeper Nick Billman. URI junior Sasha Gotsmanov was credited with an unassisted goal at 56:31, although his shot was clearly deflected by a UMass player.

URI finished things off at 67:07 when sophomore Brian Mazza took a feed from classmate Gotsmanov, and put it home to make it 3-0.

"Tough, tough goals," Koch said, "I think the second goal was a deflection off one of our players and then the third goal we put in ourselves."

Defensive standout Craig Canavan was on the bench with an injury, and the UMass backline lacked communication and unity.

Although other defensemen stepped up there was a lack of control in the backfield. Sophomore Tim Kitchell, senior Devlin Barnes and junior Chris Camerota all made important stops, but it wasn't enough.

Billman made four saves in the loss while URI goalie Dean Ruddy notched three.

With the game winding down, frustration began to build for the Maroon and White and it showed. With less than 10 minutes remaining there was a questionable slide tackle by UMass freshman Richard Higa in front of the URI bench. The tackled Ram retaliated and both benches cleared.

After a few minutes the referees were able to sift through the huddle and cards were handed out. UMass senior Dan Colwell received a yellow card along with Rams sophomore Anthony Ward-Smith, and Higa was sent off with a red card.

The Minutemen were outshot 13-6.

Game Room - Delicious Menu - Free Popcorn
Rafters
SPORTS BAR & RESTAURANT
University Drive & Amity Street, Amherst
• Monday •
MONDAY NIGHT FOOTBALL
1/2 Price Appetizers, Wings & Nachos 'til Midnight
• Tuesday & Wednesday •
1/2 PRICE WINGS
Open to Close...eat in only!
Coors LIGHT
PITCHER
$6.50
October Special

Oasis Body Wraps and Tanning
243 Russell St.
Hadley, MA 01035
(413) 587-9742
NOW FEATURING SUN SPRITZER UV FREE TANNING
• The first UV FREE tanning machine in the area
• Get $5.00 off your first visit
• A rich golden tan in just a few seconds
• You'll look and feel great
1/2 Price tanning every Tuesday
Conveniently Located
OASIS
Hampshire Mall
University Drive
UMASS
Route 9

Are you ready for the challenge?
Start here.
Each day of our intense Winter Session equals an entire week of course material, which means that you can earn three credits in just three weeks! Best of all: Winter Session costs less. There are fewer fees now than at any other time of year. Save time and money.
You know you're ready. Start here. Registration begins November 12.
UMassAmherst
Continuing Education
www.umass.edu/start • (413) 545-2414

JAMAICA
Spring Break 2004
The Ultimate Experience
CALL 1.800.733.6347
$549
UMASS Amherst University... Live Life the Beach Life Way!
Group Discounts
Book before Dec 15th and $ave!!
Sell trips, earn cash, travel free!!
www.BeachLifeVacations.com

TRUST
"Before locking into a long term contract for a fitness facility with no machinery in place, why not give the veteran professionals a visit."
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB
"Big enough to own the best equipment, but small enough to know your name."
* In business 22 years
* Locally owned & operated 0243606
www.amherstathletic.com
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB 256-0980 90 AMHERST

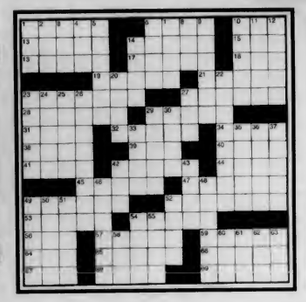
Our Members Tan FREE on Sundays!
Purchase a Package of California Sun and receive a FREE Upgrade on Sundays 'till 12/31/2003!
BEACH CLUB TANNING STUDIOS
65 University Drive • ph 549-HOTT

QUOTE FOR THE DAY

"You're just mad because I tell it how it is and you tell it how it might be."

-Puff Daddy

TODAY'S CROSSWORD PUZZLE



PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

ACROSS
1 Quartet member
5 Skeptics projection
10 Lincoln another
13 Limoncello flavoring
14 "Sour grapes" owner
15 Type of trip
16 Hermove errors
17 Tex-Mex dip
18 Isaac Newton's bane
19 Sentence
21 Say over and over
23 Quarterback Joe
27 Dragon slayer
28 Accustomed
29 Damp
30 Actress Garr
31 Hard-pad
33 Hard-set, as cement
36 Soften
38 Picnic intruder
40 Cure
41 Snow coaster
42 Deluge
43 Actress like Shamu
45 Willow shoot
47 Swimsuit or tape deck
49 Take for granted
52 Biggest, as a shirt
53 Get together
54 Abounds
57 Grin
58 Cat's napping
63 Ogling
64 Sci-fi craft
65 Send elsewhere
66 Hoarse
67 Heat source
68 Smart earring
69 Colony of bees

DOWN
1 Smidgen
2 Capt.'s heading
3 Bird beak
4 Buckeyes' sch.
5 Muscular
6 Jeer
7 Early vegetables
8 Early
9 Blanks
10 Labor activist Jacob
11 Mellowing, as whiskey
12 Rich cake
14 Orient
20 Reverse
22 Show-offs
24 Bank amounts
25 NBA's Shaquille
26 I.C.U. provider
28 Auditioned
27 Musician's job
29 Child
30 Is — suspects
33 Corduroy rib
35 More than odd
36 Cattle treats
37 Lasts
42 "For shame!"
43 — and gloom
46 Smudges
48 Tough questions
49 Cookery term
50 Pig mom
51 Hammer and Nail
52 Suggestive look
54 Soy product
55 — out, made do with 58 Sodden
60 Seesaw, as a stock
61 "Here — Sidi
62 PBS relative
63 Fitness center

DINING COMMONS MENU

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Cavatelli Supreme
- Battered Fish
- California Chili Nachos (vegan)

DINNER
- Chicken Mamou
- Southern Fried Steak
- Thai Seitan (vegan)

DAILY WEATHER FORECAST

For Amherst

MONDAY
- High: 49
- Low: 28

TUESDAY
- High: 49
- Low: 38

WEDNESDAY
- High: 55
- Low: 37

PRODUCTION CREW

On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Dan Lamothe

PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Gerald H. Ling

COPY EDITOR
Leah Wyner

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Scott Pihl

PRODUCTION STAFF
Cory Rosenberg/ Sarah Loyd

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
You're not a member of the cool kid club.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Curl up in a ball and try to escape your problems.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Sometimes you just need a crying session.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Put a hat on, your hair looks ugly.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
Don't be uncomfortable. You look hot.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Don't bother devoting yourself, no one notices.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Give out your cell number, people are trying to reach you.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Throw those old shoes out the window.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Listen to more country music, there's a cowboy in us all.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Crawl under your bed and hide from all the problems in your life.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Don't deny your feelings, you have a right to be sad.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Clear your throat and yell loudly.

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Grants up to $2000: The Student Affairs Cultural Enrichment Fund is available to RSO's, grad student organizations, and university departments that are planning events that enliven the cultural life at UMass. Next deadline is November 19. Call 545-3928 for more information or come by Room 416 Student Union.

Fraternities- Sororities- Clubs- Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with a proven Campus-Fundraiser 3 hour fundraising event. Our free programs make fundraising easy with no risks. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so get with the program! It works. Contact CampusFundraiser at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

APARTMENT FOR RENT

3 Bedroom Apartment for January 665-9254

AUTO FOR SALE

96 Dodge Intrepid White runs good Power everything Brand new Pioneer CD/Stereo Must sell Asking $2400 Amy 413-222-5754

Honda 1995 Civic Ex Coupe, red, 91K, moonroof, LoJack, well maintained, $4,250, 413-695-5527

Mountainview Auto Route 47 South in Hadley 585-0599 '89 Mercedes 300E Clean $3500 '94 Nissan Sentra Limited Edition $2850 '87 Honda Civic excellent transportation $950 '87 Saab 900 Automatic $950 '88 Dodge Caravan Very Clean 100,000 miles $1200

AUTO FOR SALE

1992 Honda Prelude SI, Loaded, $3900 587-0242

1992 Silver Ford Taurus Excellent condition $2400 118000K Call 549-3930 210-7393 All Power

$500!!! Police Impounds. Hondas, Chevy's, Jeeps, etc. for listings. 1-800-319-3323 ext4554

93 Pontiac Bonneville SDN All Power Must Sell $1500 B/O 253-5537

EMPLOYMENT

Internship Motivated students seeking leadership outside the box. Gain experience in all aspects of running a small business. Average pay: $9300.00 Call 508-246-1230

EMPLOYMENT

PART-TIME POSITIONS 20+ hrs/wk; set your own schedule. Conduct surveys over the phone at our Hadley location—NO SALES! Evngs/wkends; hlth/dent/401(k); PVTA accessible. Email mvivian@heldmarketinginc.com or apply in person. First Floor 100 Venture Way, Hadley, MA (888) 423-5381

Telephone Interviewers NO SALES! Conduct interviews over the phone at our Hadley location Flexible Evening and Weekend Hours $7.50/hour to start 20+ hours/week PVTA accessible For more info: 1-888-423-5381 FMI

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

EMPLOYMENT

!Bartending!$ $250/day potential No experience Nesc Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext 162

FOR SAEL

$Save$ Wholesale-Discount prices, video games, clothing, jewelry, more. www.tylers-discounts.com

HOUSE FOR RENT

Amherst 3-4 Bedroom house. Hobart Ln. Available Jan. 1. $1650/month. Call 413-549-4001

INSTRUCTION

On the Rocks School Bartending. Become certified in one weekend. Great way to earn money. Call us toll free at 866-mix-5600. www.OTRBartending.com

ROOM FOR RENT

Fully furnished bedroom Conveniently located across from the bus stop near Puffton and Hobart @985 North Pleasant St. Available for winter and spring sessions. Rent is approximately $350/month. Please contact Chris @ 413-687-7313

SERVICES

SHEAR BLISS DAY SPA SERVICES Body Sugaring (waxing) for men and women *Safe *100% Natural *Effective 253-2322 https://shearbliss.image411.com

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free resting and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

#1 Spring Break Vacations! 110% Best Prices! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, Florida, Acapulco. Book Now & Receive Free Parties & Meals Campus Reps Wanted! 1-800-234-7007 endlesssummertours.com

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Destinations, including Cruises! Foam Parties, Free Drinks and Club Admissions. Rep Positions and FREE trips Available. 1-800-231-4386 www.EpicureanTours.com

TRAVEL

A "Reality" Spring Break 2004's Hottest Prices Book now .. Free Trips, Meals & Parties www.sunsplashtours.com or 1800-426-7710

Spring Break 2004. Travel with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator to Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas and Florida. Now hiring campus reps. Call for group discounts. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com For more information contact STA Travel at 413-256-1261

Want to place an ad in the Collegian Classifieds? Simply visit the Campus Center Basement or call 545-3500 Mon. - Fri. 9am-4pm

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SportsMonday

Monday, November 10, 2003 Sports@dailycollegian.com

Over the top

Gerald H. Ling/Collegian

Jason Peebler catches a touchdown pass from Jeff Krohn to increase the Minutemen's lead to 30-17 on Saturday. They held onto that edge to stay undefeated against the Atlantic 10, and moved to the top spot in the conference standings thanks to Delaware's loss to Northeastern. Peebler caught three of four touchdown completions from Krohn, and earned A-10 co-Offensive Player of the Week honors for his efforts.

With win, UM takes first place in Atlantic 10

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

"You win, you're in."

That was the simple directive Massachusetts football coach Mark Whipple gave his team before Saturday's Atlantic 10 contest with Richmond.

Simple in the fact that if UMass defeated the Spiders, it would all but qualify for the Division I-AA playoffs for the first time since 1999, and likely host a first-round game.

Richmond	17
UMass	30

Difficult, however, in the fact that nothing is simple with the 2003 Minutemen.

As has been the case often this season, the Maroon and White fell behind early to the Spiders, trailing 17-7 at halftime. Yet thanks to 23 unanswered points and a defense that gave up only 35 yards and two first downs in holding the Spiders scoreless in the second half, No. 4 Massachusetts downed Richmond 30-17 before 6,167 at cold, windy McGuirk Alumni Stadium.

With their eighth consecutive win, UMass (9-1, 7-0 Atlantic 10) remains perfect in A-10 and I-AA play, and takes over sole possession of first place in the conference following No. 2 Delaware's 24-14 loss to Northeastern.

"I felt like there's more of a relief," said Whipple. "In the six years I've been here, only one year have the kids not had a chance to play for a championship in late November. That's what we try to do, and we give them the opportunity right now."

"We can celebrate today but we've got to get back to work tomorrow," junior wide receiver Jason Peebler added.

Peebler lead the way for UMass, as his seven catches for 144 yards and three touchdowns earned him A-10 Co-Offensive Player of the Week honors. Quarterback Jeff Krohn's four touchdown passes were a season high.

Sophomore tailback Steve Baylark chipped in with 144 yards on 21 carries, while junior Rich Demers racked up 124 yards on 18 carries to give Massachusetts its first pair of 100-yard rushers since Oct. 5 of last season.

Trailing at halftime for the first time this season against a I-AA opponent, the Minutemen operated with the gusting wind at their backs in the third quarter and began their second possession of the quarter at midfield, trailing 17-7.

Following a 12-yard completion from Krohn to Peebler, three consecutive Baylark runs brought the ball to the 23-yard line, before Krohn again found Peebler, this time in the end zone, to cut the lead to 17-14.

Freshman placekicker Michael Torres tied the game with a 28-yard field goal at the 1:11 mark, and the Maroon and White got the ball back after forcing a three-and-out and calling a timeout to force the Spiders (2-6 1-7 A-10) to punt into the wind.

The strategy worked for UMass, as the punt from Richmond's Chris Radford netted only 25 yards, giving the Minutemen the ball at their own 48.

After an incompletion on first down, the Maroon and White committed to the run on the next six plays, as Baylark carried four times and Demers twice in moving the ball to the 4-yard line.

That set up Krohn's third touchdown strike of the afternoon, a 4-yard pass to Demers at the 11:47 mark, that gave the Minutemen their first lead of the game at 23-17, after Torres' extra-point attempt sailed wide right.

Krohn (13-of-28, 201 yards, one interception) capped the afternoon with his fourth and final touchdown pass, as he hit Peebler in stride with a 20-yard scoring toss, solidifying the 30-17 victory.

RU got on the board in the first half courtesy of a 26-yard Joseph Fore field goal, before UMass took a 7-3 lead on a 38-yard scoring toss from Krohn to Peebler.

The Spiders regained the lead with a 1-yard scramble by tailback David Edwards, and pushed the edge to 17-7 when quarterback Stacy Tutt (11-of-21, 99 yards passing, 18 carries 70 yards rushing) found paydirt from 3 yards out on a play that was set up by his 54-yard run on third down.

For the half, the UMass defense limited the Spiders to just 35 yards after giving up 231 yards, including 145 rushing, in the first frame. Tutt, who ran for 83 yards before halftime, netted minus-13 yards in the second half.

Massachusetts returns to action on Saturday, when they will travel to Newark, Del. to face the Delaware Blue Hens at noon. A win for the Minutemen clinches their first Atlantic 10 title since 1999.

Broom job for UMass

Werner's goal gives UMass a weekend sweep

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

Greg Mauldin wore a blue T-shirt after Saturday night's game between the Massachusetts hockey team and Merrimack that read, in white block letters, "Eat right. Get lots of sleep. Drink plenty of fluids." and finally in large red text: "Go like hell."

While Mauldin's eating and sleeping habits weren't on display this weekend, the punch line to the T-shirt's mantra was certainly exhibited by the Minutemen (7-1-0, 4-1-0 Hockey East), who swept the two-game home-and-home set against the Warriors (2-6-1, 1-4-1 HEA).

UMass	2
Merrimack	0
Merrimack	3
UMass	5

Mauldin tallied two goals, as did senior Mike Warner, and sophomore Stephen Werner scored the game-winner in the second period at the Mullins Center Saturday night to complete the sweep with a 5-

Continued on page 6

Gerald H. Ling/Collegian

Stephen Werner slips the puck past Merrimack goaltender Jim Healey to give UMass a 4-3 lead. Mike Warner would add another goal to complete the weekend sweep.

URI halts run for men's soccer

By Becky Horowitz
Collegian Staff

Call it a tough game, call it a battle of egos. Either way, it was an Atlantic 10 game that won't soon be forgotten. Like most A-10 matchups, the season-ending clash between the Massachusetts men's soccer team and Rhode Island was a physical one.

UMass	0
URI	3

UMass (11-7-1, 5-5-1 Atlantic 10) went down fighting Friday night at the URI Soccer Complex. With a final score of 3-0, the Rams (10-9-1, 6-4-1 A-10) secured a bid to the A-10 tournament.

"All the credit goes to them," Massachusetts coach Sam Koch said, "we played at the end but it was a little too late."

UMass, URI and George Washington were all playoff contenders; the two top teams at the end of the weekend would earn the five and six spots in the tournament. With the win, URI was able to control its own fate while the Minutemen left theirs in the hands of the Richmond Spiders, who'd have to beat GW in order for UMass to make the tournament.

The Colonials (7-10-2, 5-4-2 A-10) pulled out a tie by holding strong through two overtime periods, giving them a total of 17 points and a one-point edge over UMass in conference standings.

GW enters the tournament as the No. 6 seed while the Maroon and White's season ended in dramatic fashion.

"Give [URI] credit," Koch said, "they outplayed us, simple as that, we were outplayed."

Unable to gain control during Friday's game, the Minutemen fell apart, and as a result, fists flew.

The tone of the game was set immediately as senior Perek Belleh was fouled in the box and awarded a penalty kick just 40 seconds in. Belleh found the bottom left corner of the net and gave the Rams a 1-0 lead.

The score remained unchanged

Continued on page 6

The Daily Collegian

Wednesday, November 12, 2003 New England's Largest College Daily • Est. 1890 Volume CXIV Issue 49

Jewish community of Amherst addresses conflicts in Israel

By Ikaika C. Arnado
Collegian Staff

This past weekend, the Jewish Community of Amherst hosted a conference focusing on the Palestinian-Israeli conflict in the Middle East.

The two-day conference featured four speakers, a workshop and a Middle Eastern lunch.

Rita Kropf, a writer and researcher for the Jerusalem Center for public affairs, discussed the impact of the Oslo Accords and the Road Map on Saturday night.

"We went over what the Oslo Accords was trying to do and then we talked about how it was failing...the practical process of implementing it was very difficult," Kropf said.

The conference continued on Sunday morning with a panel discussion by three speakers – Ehud Eiran, Tal Ben Shahar and Mazin Qumsiyeh – who all gave their personal perspectives and expressed their solutions for peaceful co-existence between Israelis and Palestinians.

Eiran, who participated in the Israeli-Syrian negotiations in the government of Prime Minister Edhud Barak, said that to solve the problem people have to understand the history and be able to reach a peaceful resolution.

"There were two issues that I think were high on the agenda," Eiran said. "One...different perspectives about history are central to solving the conflict, and a lot of the debate was around our interpretation of history as opposed to our Palestinian colleague. The second point was trying to think forward on what could be a positive outcome."

Shahar, also a Ph.D. candidate of the Harvard Business School, discussed that Palestine must accept Israel as a Jewish state, and it must reform its educational institutions.

"We talked about the conditions — the social conditions that will be acceptable to both sides, the Palestinians, the Arabs, and the Israelis," Shahar said. "My point was that three things have to happen for there to be any hope for peaceful co-existence. First thing is for the Arab countries, and that includes Palestine, to accept through self-determination and freedom in the Middle East. Right now, there is a rejection of the right for Israel to exist."

He said that the second thing that needs to happen is that Arab countries have to accept Israel as a Jewish state.

"The third thing that has to happen is the change of education, anti-Israel, anti-Zionist and anti-Semitic, education that takes place in the Arab world today and under the Palestinian authority. So there has to be an acceptance of Jewish self-determination," he said.

Qumsiyeh, associate professor of genetics at Yale University, discussed the Palestinian condition.

"What I basically tried to cover in the talks that I gave is a discourse, a presentation that does not hold in the mainstream U.S. media today, but is held in Europe, in the Middle East, in Latin America and South East Asia," Qurnsiyeh said. "What happed to the native Palestinians over the past 55 years? [My talk covered] how this happened and how to arrive at peace in the Middle East."

Continued on page 2

Gerald H. Ling/Collegian

Mazin Qunsiyeh and Ehud Eiran, two panelists at the JCA teach-in, speak on the Israeli-Palestinian conflicts on Sunday morning.

Amherst rejects proposal to improve sidewalks and lighting

By Deborah Geiger
Collegian Correspondent

Amherst voters just said no to Article 14, the $1.2 million proposed budget for roadway, sidewalk and lighting improvements in Amherst Center at last week's town meeting.

The two-thirds vote majority quota was not met despite the fact that the sidewalks have not been fixed since 1979.

"You can see the change in the level of the sidewalks," said Disabilities Act Coordinator Maura Plant, who facilitated the photo display at the Town Meeting. "Someone who has a visual impairment, a mobility impairment, even someone who's able bodied could trip over that and get hurt."

Article 14 is designed to "seek if the town will appropriate $1.2 million for town center and neighborhood improvements and to...authorize to borrow." Opponents of the article think that borrowing in lean fiscal times may be a bad idea.

Select Board member Robie Hubley said that now is not the time to pass Article 14 because of "our bleak financial future" or to borrow before "we see all of the choices."

Anne Awad, also a Select Board member, agreed. "I think we should do it when we have a full budget." The project would be completed in two phases, costing the town $2 million. Contracted out, it would double to about $4 million.

Select Board member Dolly Jolly advocated the sidewalk spending for the safety of the "resident, the student, the tourist. This is not a beautification project."

The borrowing interest rates are currently low, and the money needed is included in the town's capital budget. But voter Leo Madley shared a different concern about the cost breakdown not being provided. "I don't see choices," he said.

"We will not have the same rates if we wait," said Brian Morton of the Amherst Finance Committee, expressing awareness of current fiscal times. "I don't want this to be complaint-driven."

"It's as if someone never made up their mind," said Deb Walton, a wheelchair-bound individual who represented the disabled community at the town meeting. "It's ludicrous to put this off any further."

Walton stressed the current hazardous state of the sidewalks by asking controversial questions. "Has anybody taken it upon themselves to take a wheelchair downtown? Vaseline on their sunglasses? Pretend that you have a disability? Anybody?"

One complaint to the state department of public safety would mandate the listing of the sidewalks. Residents expressed disappointment and many were sorry that Article 14 was not passed.

Veterans Day marked by present conflict in Iraq

Associated Press

U.S. Army troops hold a moment of silence while observing Veterans Day in Baghdad yesterday. Veterans Day is observed in many countries to commemorate casualties of warfare.

By Jennifer Peter
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) – As the country honored its veterans in ceremonies nationwide yesterday, citizens expressed their grief over recent soldier deaths and their concerns about the country's military engagements.

State officials honored 14 Massachusetts soldiers who have died in Iraq and Afghanistan, while outside anti-war veterans marched in the city's annual Veterans Day parade.

The Boston chapter of Veterans for Peace was not acknowledged by the parade organizers, while all other entries were announced as they passed the review stand, the announcer was silent as the anti-war veterans marched by.

"We do not consider them true veterans," said Arthur Smith, past department commander of the Massachusetts American Legion. "They're against the war in Iraq, they're against Vietnam, they're against everything a true American veteran stands for."

In Colorado Springs, Colo., a military town hit hard by the war in Iraq, veterans shared emotions ranging from sorrow to pride and fear.

"I hear 15 soldiers reported killed in Iraq in a day and I know there were 150 a day killed in Vietnam with nothing said about it," said Wendell Burnett, a 57-year-old Vietnam veteran. "Iraq has all the makings of another Vietnam except these soldiers have no trees to hide behind."

In New Mexico, the Veterans for Peace organization opened an exhibit called "Expressions of Peace."

"I would serve if called, but I would not be happy serving in a war for oil and for power and being misled by lies about weapons of mass destruction," said Donald Thompson, 79, president of the organization's Albuquerque chapter and a Navy veteran who served in World War II and Korea.

Other veterans called on Americans to show more support for the troops in Iraq.

In Emporia, Kan., older veterans like Bob Ecklund said they see signs of renewed interest in Veterans Day.

"This year there really is an outburst of patriotism," said Ecklund, 86, a World War II pilot in Africa and Europe.

In Florida, a large parade was held in Lake Worth, where more than 135 units, including 14 marching bands, marched through downtown. The parade, sponsored by the United Veterans Advisory Council, previously was held in downtown West Palm Beach.

"We want it to be in Lake Worth to show that Lake Worth supports our troops and vets," said Tom Ramiccio, executive director of the Greater Lake Worth Chamber of Commerce.

Coolidge Hall holds toy drive

By Matt Elder
Collegian Staff

This holiday season, residents from Coolidge Hall will help hundreds of children in need by delivering toys to The Amherst Survival Center for the first Coolidge Hall Toy Drive.

"Nobody has ever done anything like this," said Carlo Brando Zepeda, Coolidge Assistant Resident Director. The drive is taking place in Coolidge Hall from now until the toys are given out on December 10. Zepeda hopes to continue the drive in the years to come.

Zepeda also mentioned that he wants more support from the students in his tower, and thinks that the problem with the drive is a lack of publicity. The drive has put together roughly 100 toys, but aims to distribute gifts to about 400 children. "Ideally, we would like a one for one situation," Zepeda said.

In various toy drives last year, Dennis Meehan, the assistant director of the Amherst Survival Center, said that 550 children were involved.

Zepeda said that the athletic department is helping out with the drive. Attendees who bring toys to the November 25 UMass hockey game vs. Vermont will get in free. Also, the first 200 people to arrive at the game will receive an autographed poster.

Zepeda is also currently trying to get a chorus to sing while the toys are being given out, but plans have not yet been finalized.

The drive is accepting clothes in addition to toys. However, the clothes should be in good condition, according to Zepeda. No food is needed for this drive, as separate food drives will be held later in the year.

Zepeda said that he "had a tough summer," and that the Survival Center was there for him when he needed help. Zepeda, from Los Angeles, had nowhere to go this summer until someone pointed him in the direction of the Center. He said that workers at the Center were very kind to him and helped him with food to eat and people to talk to. This drive is a way of paying them back. "We are not just about riots and drinking, we help out fellow citizens too," Zepeda said.

The Amherst Survival Center offers services for low-income families. Offering free food and clothing to the needy, the Amherst Survival Center aided 13,620 people last year according to its report. The center is located in North Amherst at 1200 North Pleasant St.

Meehan said that the drive is as important to the families as it is to the kids.

"Ideally, [we hope] that people don't have to choose between paying for their food, heat and electricity and paying for toys for their kids," said Meehan, who has worked at the Center for roughly three years. The Amherst Survival Center has been open for 28 years.

Robert Reich to speak today

By Nicole Lewis
Collegian Correspondent

Robert Reich, former U.S. Secretary of Labor and Massachusetts Democratic gubernatorial candidate will speak on "UMass and the Future of Public Higher Education," today at 5:00 p.m. in Mahar Auditorium.

Reich's talk corresponds with the effort of the Massachusetts Teachers Association to fund collective bargaining agreements that have not been funded for two and a half years.

"We are very pleased to have Robert Reich, one of the most passionate defenders of public higher education, speak at the UMass' flagship campus," said Jenny Spencer, president of the Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP). "We welcome his support of our efforts to protect the quality of public higher education in the Commonwealth."

Reich served as U.S. Secretary of Labor under President Bill Clinton. A 1996 poll of Cabinet experts conducted by Hearst newspapers rated Reich as the most effective Cabinet secretary during Clinton's Presidency.

His accomplishments for the Labor Department included implementing the Family and Medical Leave Act, fighting against sweatshops in the U.S. and illegal child labor around the world, increasing minimum wage for the first time since 1989, and protecting workers' pensions by ensuring that companies fully funded their pension plans.

Reich resigned as Secretary of Labor in 1997, and returned to Massachusetts to spend time with his sons. He is currently a professor of Social and Economic Policy at Brandeis University. He is also the author of nine books, including, "The Work of Nations," on the economy and workforce, and "I'll Be Short: Essentials for a Decent Working Society."

Reich graduated from Dartmouth College in 1968, received an M.A. as a Rhodes Scholar at Oxford University, and a J.D. from Yale Law School in 1973. He served as a faculty member at Harvard's John F. Kennedy School of Government. He also worked in the Carter Administration as Director of the Policy Planning Staff of the Federal Trade Commission. In addition Reich also served as assistant to the Solicitor General at the U.S. Department of Justice, representing the U.S. before the Supreme Court, during the Ford Administration. He is co-founder and former chairman of The American Prospect, a political magazine.

In 1993, Reich was awarded the Vaclav Havel Vision Foundation Prize by the former

Continued on page 3

Editorial/Opinion Page 4
Veterans Day A time to honor heroes
Arts & Living Page 5
Ben Folds Acoustic solo tour kicks off
Sports Page 10
Peebler Honored Receiver gives national recognition
Comics/Classifieds Page 9

police log

Saturday, Nov. 1

12:42 a.m. UMass Transit reported a fire at a bus stop on Clark Hill Rd. Emergency Health and Safety was notified and the fire was extinguished.

1:00 a.m. Maintenance reported several broken windows in Emerson Hall. The main lobby stairwell window and two windows in the basement hallway were damaged. Students were found going through the windows to avoid the front door card swipe.

1:07 a.m. A bike was reported stolen from the rack outside of Knowlton Hall. The bike is a blue Mongoose Transport.

Sunday, Nov. 2

12:18 a.m. Following a suspicious person report on Lincoln Avenue, Patrick Hynes Bergin, 18, of 4 Warren Rd., Bourne, was arrested for disorderly conduct.

9:32 a.m. Broken windows were found at the Morrill Greenhouse Number 4. Windows were broken on the south side, near the handicap walkway and at the Clark Greenhouse.

10:38 a.m. Amherst Police received a call from a party in Patterson Hall. The party stated that they could smell smoke and that the room fire alarm was sounding. The Amherst Fire Department and an officer responded; the fire was extinguished.

12:10 p.m. An officer reported three broken windows at Fernald Hall. A carpenter was requested to secure the windows.

3:31 p.m. A Huffy Ironman Triathlon bike was reported stolen from the bike rack outside of Hasbrouck Laboratory.

3:39 p.m. An officer located a suspected stolen vehicle in Lot 11 on Stadium Drive. The ignition was popped and there was damage to the driver's side door lock. Officers conducted an inventory of the vehicle, lifted a partial print off of a window and contacted the owner.

Monday, Nov. 3

12:21a.m. A party reported that he had found his stolen bicycle tire on another bike at Cance Hall.

10:22 a.m. A bicycle was reported stolen from the signpost at the Haigis Mall bus stop.

12:15 p.m. A report was received of a car having been broken into at the North Village parking lots. A Pioneer tape player was stolen and there was damage to the dashboard.

Tuesday, Nov. 4

1:20 p.m. A larceny was reported of a credit card left in a computer lab at Goessman Laboratory. The owner later discovered $525 worth of unauthorized charges to his account.

3:34 p.m. A party reported that their vehicle had been broken into in Lot 22 on University Dr. A stereo and a portable CD player were taken.

Wednesday, Nov. 5

1:03 a.m. Emergency Health and Safety reported that a fire alarm on the seventh floor of Coolidge Hall was set off by someone holding a lighter to the smoke detector. A tech was notified to fix it.

9:59 a.m. UMPD was called to assist the U.S. Fish and Wildlife service at 202 Mary Lyon Hall. The call was related to an investigation of a bald eagle shooting in Cheshire.

7:15 p.m. A party reported her vehicle stolen from Lot 49 near the water towers. The vehicle was entered into the reporting system.

Friday Nov. 7

12:28 a.m. An officer advised that a Resident Assistant would be writing up residents for fighting in John Quincy Adams Hall. The injured party did not wish to file charges.

12:56 a.m. A caller reported that an unknown number of individuals had begun to fight on the third floor of Cance Hall. The responding officer reported that it was a verbal argument and that the involved parties were sent on their way.

2:25 a.m. Police reported that a female subject was the victim of an attempted assault in a bathroom in Kennedy Hall. Housing was advised about the broken partition and latch in the bathroom.

Car stolen from Lot 49

Racially offensive markings found in JQA

compiled by Thomas Coyle

Panelists discuss Israeli-Palestinian conflict

Continued from page 1

After the panel was finished, the group of approximately 40 people ate a Middle Eastern lunch. The menu included tabbouleh, spankopita, couscous salad, sephardic roasted eggs, halava, kakosh and some others.

After lunch, four different workshops were held and the group was divided. The workshops focused on the history and future of settlements, the history of the Arab-Israeli conflict, the Israeli political structure and Palestinian Nationalism. After the workshop the group got back together for final thoughts and a discussion.

Many participants went to the conference to gain a better understanding of the conflict.

Some people became frustrated because of heated debate in the workshops.

"I came here to build bridges and develop a better understanding of commonalities," said Eddy Goldberg, a freelance writer from Amherst. "I saw glimmerings of hope there in the morning speakers, but I also saw people ultimately revert to arguing about the past instead of trying to figure out what we are going to do about the future."

Some people felt that there should have been more emphasis on the role of gender.

"The first biggest complaint I had is that there was no analysis about the relationship of gender and the nation-state that we are still stuck in," said Jyllyn Felman, a participant. "[It is] a place of male leaders talking to male leaders without an understanding that the nation-state is based on a male dominated society for Israel and the Palestinians."

Future
Let us take you there.
There's a reason we're called Travelers.

We're interested in freethinking, no holds barred, motivated individuals with leadership qualities, strong analytical skills, the ability to communicate effectively and clearly and the desire to think outside the box

INTERN FORUM
TIME: 4:30 - 6:30 • DATE: Wednesday, Nov. 12, 2003
LOCATION: Career Services Center (the new wing), Room 108
TOPICS: "Internship Opportunities", "The Intern Process", "Application Deadlines"

Travelers Property Casualty will be one of 5 companies attending the Intern Forum. We are looking for Sophomores and Juniors from various disciplines. Our Summer Internship Programs are designed to attract talented and motivated students who desire a career in actuarial science, finance, information technology, or communications. We offer meaningful work, subsidized housing, volunteer opportunities, social activities, competitive pay. All of our internships are in Hartford, CT.

For more information please visit our college recruiting site at www.travelers.com.

Travelers

Travelers is an equal opportunity employer and values cultural diversity. Applicants to join our team. We actively promote a drug-free workplace.

apply now for the expanded
CRIMINAL JUSTICE PROGRAM
Criminal Justice Concentration
Department of Sociology

Earn a Certificate in Criminal Justice

For students who plan a career in some aspect of the criminal justice system: police officers, probation and parole officers, paralegals, public and private criminal attorneys, district attorneys, judges, etc.

Applications are now being taken for the program.

A wide variety of courses are scheduled for 2004, including new classroom and online courses in domestic violence, crime and forensics, criminal violence in America, Corporate Deviance and Official Corruption, organized crime, and serial murder.

Courses offered Winter Session 2004:

SOCIOL 241 Criminology (online)
SOCIOL 347 Corporate Deviance and Official Corruption (online)
SOCIOL 392G Alternative Sanctions in the Criminal Justice System (online)
SOCIOL 395K Domestic Violence (online)
SOCIOL 397D Delinquency and the Juvenile Justice System (online)

Watch for the exciting line-up of Spring courses!

For more information, and to apply to the program, contact Prof. Anthony Harris, Sociology Department, Thompson 524, 545-0475.

To register for winter and spring courses, go to www.umass.edu/contined or the Division of Continuing Education Registration Office, 358 N. Pleasant St.

UMassAmherst Continuing Education

Priority will be given to registered Criminal Justice Program students.

Peer Health Education

What would tick you off?
Having unprotected sex and...
❑ A. Contracting an STI.
❑ B. Getting Pregnant.
❑ C. Knowing you could have prevented it.

Get Involved
Make a Difference
Earn 6 credits

Take Com HL 213, Peer Health Education, a 2-semester course that proactively addresses public health issues at UMass.

Call the Health Education Department during pre-registration at 577-5181 to make an appointment to discuss enrollment with instructor.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Jennifer Eastwood
Managing Editor Dan Lamothe
Business Manager Peter Foundas
Production Manager Scott Pihl
Night Supervisor Nick Markantonatos
Advertising Manager Sean Costello
Editorial Production Shannon Farrington
Arts & Living Editor Glen Straub
Comics Editor Molly Eggleston
Editorial Editor Paige Cram
News Editor Ferron Salniker
Photo Editor Gerald H. Ling
Sports Editor Andrew Merritt
Circulation Manager Kristen Weiss
Classified Advertising Marty Pappas
Distribution Manager Julie Beauchamp
Finance Manager Greg Stamm
Human Resource Sandra Marquez
Special Issues Betsy Feldman
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising David Bor
Assistant Business Jaclynn Sorenson
Assistant Distribution Mark Lagatic
Assistant Finance Richard Pacheco
Advertising Production Liza Lynch
Graphics Advisor Charlie Higgins
Layout Manager Lindsay Clark
Asst. Arts & Living Meghan Healy
Asst. Arts & Living Cameron J. Woods
Assistant Editorial Matthew Reid
Assistant News Erika Lovley
Assistant News Morris Singer
Assistant Photo Emilie Duggan
Assistant Sports Mike Martelli
Assistant Sports Robert McGovern

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is entirely independently operated by advertising revenue and is not affiliated with the University. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became The College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been headquartered since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays at 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com

Weekly Calendar of events

November 12 - November 18 2003

Compiled by Sara-Megan Walsh

Today

UMass — Robert Reich, former U.S. Secretary of Labor and Massachusetts Democratic gubernatorial candidate, will speak on "UMass and the Future of Public Higher Education" in Mahar Auditorium at 5 p.m.

Smith College — At 7 p.m., there will be a community forum entitled "Civil Rights/Civil Wrongs: Balancing Freedom and Security" in Seelye 106. The forum will discuss the Patriot Act and its effect on civil liberties. The event is sponsored by the Northampton Human Rights Commission, the Bill of Rights Defense Committee and the Northampton Office of the Mayor.

Amherst College — Janet Finkelstein, Counselor to the French Minister of Defense for Transatlantic Security, will give a lecture entitled "American Empire and the War in Iraq: The View from Paris." The lecture will be held in Merrill 1 at 7:30 p.m.

Tomorrow

Amherst College — At 4:30 p.m., Joshua Rubenstein, the Northeast Regional Director of Amnesty International, will speak on his book, "Stalin's Secret Pogrom: The Postwar Inquisition of the Jewish Anti-Fascist Committee." The lecture will be held in the Babbott room of the Octagon.

UMass — The Krasnoyarsk National Dance Company of Siberia will perform Siberian dances to live music in the Fine Arts Center's Concert Hall at 7:30 p.m. Ticket costs start at $7 for students, $15 for adults and are available through the Fine Arts Center's Box Office.

Mount Holyoke College — At 8 p.m., Thursday Night Edge will present Decadance, a night of live music. The event will be held in the Living Room of Torrey. Admission is free for Mount Holyoke students, $3 for Five College students and $5 for the general public.

Friday 14

Amherst College — Dr. Michael Katz, a psychologist, will lead the first part of a workshop entitled "Dream Yoga and Lucidity." The workshop is designed to enhance creativity and allow personal growth through the techniques of dream yoga. The first part will be held from 7 p.m. to 8:30 p.m. in the Babbott room of the Octagon. The second half of the workshop will be held Saturday from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. in the Conway Room of the Alumni Gym.

Smith College — At 7 p.m., Anthony Lake, former national security advisor, and Mary Jean Eisenhower, CEO of People to People International, will give a lecture entitled "Clear a Path to a Safer World: Addressing the Tragedy of Landmines," in Sweeney Concert Hall of Sage. This is the opening lecture of a two-day conference at Smith College on the danger of landmines.

Mount Holyoke College — The Mount Holyoke Chamber Jazz Ensemble will perform in "We've Got the Blues!" featuring songs from Miles Davis, Kenny Dorham and Duke Ellington. The concert will begin at 7:30 p.m. in McCulloch Auditorium of Pratt Hall.

Saturday 15

Mount Holyoke College — At 7 p.m., Mount Holyoke College's film board will show Spirited Away, a Japanese animated film directed by Hayao Miyazaki. The film will be shown in Dwight 101, admission is $2.

Smith College — At 8 p.m., the radio station WOZQ, will host a concert featuring Mirah And The Blow and Ana Oxygen in the Davis Center Ballroom. Tickets are $5 for Smith students, $7 for the public.

Sunday 16

Smith College — Neil Salisbury and Margaret M. Bruchac will speak on "From Beaver Hill to Bark Wigwams: The Native American Presence" at 2 p.m. in Wright Hall Auditorium. This lecture is the first in a series celebrating Northampton's 350th anniversary.

Monday 17

Mount Holyoke College — Cheryl Fish, of the City University of New York, will lecture on "Environmental Justice Made Manifest: Race, Gender, and Toxicity in Ruth L. Ozeki's 'My Year of Meats.'" The lecture will begin at Five College Women's Studies Research Center located at 79 College St. at 4:30 p.m.

Tuesday 18

Hampshire College — Composer Susan Ibarra will give a Jazz Ensemble Seminar workshop from 6:30 p.m. to 9:20 p.m. in the Main Classroom of the Music building. For more information contact Michael Dessen at 559-5622.

UMass — At 7 p.m., Tal Ben-Shahar, an international management consultant and expert on Israeli history, will give a lecture entitled "The Jewish State in Context: The Muslim, the Jew, and the Dhimmi." The lecture will be held in the conference room of the Hillel House, located at 388 N. Pleasant St.

Smith College — Clemency Coggins, archeology and art history professor at Boston University, will hold a lecture entitled "Frontiers of the Maya: Chichen Itza and Copan," in conjunction with the exhibition "Sacred Maya Offerings: Selections from the Chichen Itza and Copan." The lecture will be held in Graham Hall of Brown Fine Arts Center at 8 p.m.

Reich speaks today in Mahar

Continued from page 1

Czech president, recognizing his work in economic and social thought. The talk is free and open to the public.

In 2002, Reich ran for the Democratic nomination for Governor of Massachusetts.

Reich's talk is sponsored by the MSP, Five Colleges Inc. and by several departments at the University of Massachusetts. The talk is also sponsored by the economics departments of Mount Holyoke College, Smith College, Hampshire College and Amherst College.

LAUNCH YOUR CAREER

Apply now for a
Legal Assistant Internship
at the Student Legal Services Office

*Serve the campus community while enhancing your resume
*Earn up to 15 credits working 36 hours a week or 6 to 9 credits working 26 hours a week

Student Legal Services Office
922 Campus Center
(413) 545-1995

Our Members Tan FREE on Sundays!
Purchase a Package of Ultimate Tan and receive a FREE Upgrade on Sundays 'til 12/31/2003!
BEACH CLUB TANNING STUDIOS
65 University Drive • ph 549-HOTT

SPRING BREAK '04
It's time to go!
SPRING BREAK '04 PACKAGES
AIR - HOTEL package prices starting at
> JAMAICA $649
> CANCUN $689
> BAHAMAS $779
> MAZATLAN $839
> AND MORE!
BOOK YOUR TRIP NOW!
44 Main St. (413) 256.1261
exciting things are happening @ www.statravel.com
STA TRAVEL
WE'VE BEEN THERE.
ONLINE • ON THE PHONE • ON CAMPUS • ON THE STREET

The University of Massachusetts
School of Public Health and Health Sciences

Departments of Biostatistics and Epidemiology
and
Environmental Health Sciences
cordially invite you to...

An Open House for prospective graduate students

Please join us from 10am - 12 noon
Friday, November 14th
UMASS Campus Center, Room 162-75

Come meet public health faculty, staff and students from biostatistics, epidemiology and environmental sciences.

Learn about the admissions process, financial aid opportunities, and our curriculum.

Learn about job opportunities in epidemiology, biostatistics and environmental science.

For additional information about the Open House, please email dwolf@schoolph.umass or call Diane Wolf at (413) 545-2861. Visit our website www.umass.edu/sphhs to learn more about our degree programs.

University of Massachusetts Amherst
Dining Services Presents
Restaurant Night
Bringing the area's best restaurants to you at UMass!

Berkshire Dining Commons presents Ham House Cafe
Franklin Dining Commons presents Antonio's Restaurant
Hampshire Dining Commons presents La Cucina Di Pinocchio
Worcester Dining Commons presents Eastside Grill

Thursday, November 13 from 4-7pm
All are welcome!
Use your meal plan or $8.50 cash price.
DINING SERVICES

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 12, 2003

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Veterans Day: reflecting on heros

Yesterday was an off day for most students. They had an extra night out on Monday, and likely spent most of yesterday relaxing, catching up on work or just enjoying a little bit of free time.

But Nov. 11 is more than just a day to sleep in. It is a time to look back on the true heroes of America, many of which gave their lives in servitude of this country.

It is easy to overlook the service of those in our nation's armed forces over the last few decades. In nearly every military action since the Korean War, there has been a split in the public opinion about the wars' legitimacy.

However Veterans Day is not about war. It is not about wins and losses on the battlefield, it is not about the advancement of democracy, the protection of national interests, or the economic and political gains won in international conflict.

The day, which allows so many people to take time off from work, school, and other ventures, is a somber celebration of the men and women who gave their blood, sweat, tears and lives for their country. The meaning of Veterans Day goes beyond protest, beyond ideology and politics. It is the representation of the gratitude of a nation that would not exist in its current form without the truly heroic efforts of its soldiers.

While the day is a deserved respite for many people, its significance is often overlooked in the tedium of everyday life, and instead Nov. 11 is accepted as just another day. However, the legacy of the American veteran is one that deserves not only its own day of remembrance, but the kind of attention that is given to professional athletes, movie stars, and other celebrities regarded as heroic people.

It is not lost on The Daily Collegian that the political ideals on this campus are wide-ranging, and many of them are not in line with those of the U.S. Government. The freedoms granted to the citizens of this country, and by inclusion, the members of the UMass community, are important ones. Freedom of speech is a guiding light for this newspaper as it is for any other publication, and the right to dissent is as important as the right to print the news. So The Collegian would not attempt to create conflict with those who detest the glorification of U.S. involvement in overseas wars.

But it should be remembered that Veterans Day is about the willingness of the American soldier to give his or her life for what he or she believes in, just as a protester would do in certain circumstances. The ultimate cost of victory should not be regarded as an exclusive part of the victory achieved. Those Americans who would travel to foreign lands to act as the arm of their government are achieving nobility of the highest accord.

Veterans Day, which floated under the radar for many people yesterday, must be remembered not simply as a day to relax, but also as a day to reflect on those who gave themselves in the name of this country.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian editorial board.

Commemorating hatred

Elizabeth Carter

Words have the power to relate feelings of all sorts, but the question remains: are the impassioned feelings behind so many words enough to make a person change their views? And assuming in some cases words are enough to change a person's view, then how are we to be able to distinguish the difference between words that just sound nice together, and words that convey truth?

Unfortunately, there is no absolute answer to these questions I raise. So it seems that it is an individual decision how to interpret all that we read and hear. Yet sometimes something you read will immediately make an impression on you, and it will instantaneously be clear to you whether or not the viewpoint you are reading is right or wrong.

In making these decisions for myself, I came across the words of the Reverend Fred Phelps. I must say it didn't take me long to decide my viewpoint about his words, and soon after, to start worrying about the impact they may have if viewed as the truth.

So now you must be asking just who this Reverend Fred Phelps is. He is the leader of the Westboro Baptist church, WBC, whose home base is in Topeka, Kan. As the leader of the WBC, Phelps readily preaches hate gospel to his congregation, a congregation that goes by the belief that "God's hatred is one of his holy attributes." With a motto like that, it shouldn't come as too great a shock for you to find that Phelps and the WBC are vehement anti-gay, anti-Jewish and anti-anything-they-can-be activists. Over the years they have protested at over 20,000 gay pride demonstrations and have their own website which posts their hate-filled views for the world to see.

The thing that really concerned me about this character Phelps was his idea for a park monument. For those who don't remember, five years ago Matthew Shepard, a young homosexual man from Laramie, Wyo., was brutally tortured and beaten to death by two straight men. Shepard's death became nationwide news, and was viewed as a hate crime. Yet, that's not how the Reverend Phelps viewed Matthew's death. Phelps felt, and clearly still feels, that the slaying of Matthew Shepard was a continuance of God's work because "God hates fags," or so his website says.

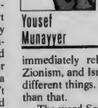
So, in order to commemorate Matthew's murder, the good reverend has proposed a five- to six-foot-tall monument made of marble or granite be placed in downtown Casper, Matthew's hometown. However, this is no regular monument. This one is

Phelps felt, and clearly still feels, that the slaying of Matthew Shepard was a continuance of God's work because 'God hates fags.'

to bear Matthew's likeness and to read "Matthew Shepard, Entered Hell October 12, 1998, in Defiance of God's Warning: 'Thou shalt not lie with mankind as with womankind; it is abomination.' Leviticus 18:22."

Now whether or not you agree with homosexuality, I should think that anyone who reads of this hate-monument should be taken aback. This Fred Phelps fellow is running around pretending to have God's sanction on everything he does, all the while trying to put up a monument that celebrates the murder of one human being by another. If that isn't as sick as it gets, then I really don't know what is.

For me, reading about this hateful monument really hit home. I have a number of very close friends that are gay, and it horrifies me that gay bashing would be supported by anyone, especially a religious group. I simply do not understand how you can judge a person solely on something like their sexuality without knowing them.



If the Reverend Phelps is allowed to put this monument up, it is going to pave the way for other fanatical groups to raise monuments in the name of hatred. What's next? Trying to put up a monument commemorating the KKK and the "good old days" of slavery? What happened to the times where God's message was viewed as, "Judge not lest ye be judged?" I understand that the vast majority of Christians are probably appalled by this, whether or not they agree with homosexuality, so please do not think I'm generalizing here. But this excuse for a reverend has got to be stopped. If a person wants to hate other people, that is their right. However, in the case of Mr. Phelps, this is more than simply shouting from the rooftops to hate homosexuals. Erecting a hate monument for all to see creates a situation in which those who do not wish to receive the message cannot simply turn a deaf ear, especially in the case of Matthew's "monument," which would be in a major part of town, like it or not.

To me what Fred Phelps is trying to do with his monument is disgusting and an absolute abomination. Just imagine how Matthew's parents would feel driving by that monument. Their child's death being mocked in the name of God — how ironic. What worries me the most is if that monument does go up in Casper, what is the true impact it will have on those who see it? What will that monument say to the children of the community? That it is OK to hate those we do not know simply because of what they represent? Formerly, I was led to believe we lived in a modern age of reason rather than ignorance. However, if that monument does go up, it will be an entire step backwards for all those who have been fighting in the gay rights movement. I sincerely hope that Fred Phelps and his obsession with hate do not get their monument, and I sincerely hope that people are aware enough to realize the terrible wake that could follow allowing something of that nature to be built.

Elizabeth Carter is a Collegian columnist.

A look at 'good' and 'bad'

Ben Feder

Many people ask me, "Ben, how on Earth did you get so good looking?" And I honestly only have one answer for them. By eating the Cajun-lightning chicken at the DC. But that's enough about me, let's talk about relationships. More precisely, let's focus in on the good person vs. bad person relationships.

What I mean by this is what is the appeal of a bad guy or a good guy for ladies and vice versa for the men? This issue was raised at work while talking to a female coworker, and I wondered if by examining the roles and qualities of the "bad" person and "good" person in the eyes of both sexes, I could get to the bottom of this quagmire of a quandary.

From the ladies' point of view, the good guy has certain qualities that make him attractive. He is sensitive, dependent and focused with a plan for life. A girl doesn't have to worry about getting hurt as much with a good guy who will treat her sweetly. He is essentially the perfect man whom you can take home to mom and dad; he'll even do the dishes and comment on your mother's fine taste in draperies.

Now this is all fine and dandy, but the problem lies in the very heart of the beast. A good guy is already, in a sense, the perfect man, and some women find this unappealing. Even though he offers comfort and assurance, there is no room for him to grow in the relationship. Most girls find the good boy charming, like a prince who will treat her like a princess. Perfect means finished, and a lady would rather pursue a man who has some faults or defects in which she can have a hand in changing. Women love to change things, and nothing has more to change than a bad boy does.

There is something dangerous and attractive about the bad boy. He is mysterious, daring, confident in his spontaneity and knows where the party is. He is prone to take you on a wild drive in his Mitsubishi Eclipse while playing flip cup on the dashboard. Risk taking is involved and in the back of a woman's mind. She's thinking, "Maybe I can be the girl to turn him around." A girl enjoys the challenge of it with hopes that the guy will realize his romantic side, alter his rogue lifestyle, and fall for the girl.

Bad girls are like shots of tequila. They make your head dizzy, give you a warm feeling in your gut, get your heart beating faster, but with too many you'll end up asleep on the bathroom floor.

The risk lies in that soon the fun of changing him wears off and it makes her miserable trying. Or perhaps the guy doesn't turn out the way she envisioned. Simplified, a woman wants to break a bad boy's shell to expose the good guy deep inside, so that the guy shares qualities from both ends of the spectrum.

Now as far as the guy is concerned, a bad girl compared to a good girl is an equally hard decision — despite our affinity to girls like Christina Aguilera. Bad girls are looking for love, but quick love, which adheres to a guy's need for instant gratification. It's about the need for Mr. Right-now versus Mr. Right, and any guy would be happy to answer that call.

Basically, bad girls are like shots of tequila. They make your head dizzy, give you a warm feeling in your gut, get your heart beating faster, but with too many you'll end up asleep on the bathroom floor. They hold a crazed passion for life and are in it for the thrill. A bad girl won't ask a guy to meet the folks, won't want to go see a chick flick, and won't drop the "L" word. She provides security for a guy since he won't have to worry about these things.

This girl's dark, tempting, crazy side keeps a guy guessing and coming back for more. She has her guy on a short leash with a very strong hook at the end. This is what every guy secretly desires – to be controlled, and to act out those crazy thoughts bouncing throughout his head.

The drawback to all this is when the guy craves affection or a quiet night at home, the bad girl is out flirting with all his friends. This is when the good girl comes in handy. The good girl is the type of woman that'll stand by a guy and make him feel like a king for a day. She'll laugh at his lame pick up lines, snuggle up to him on the couch, and think that him wearing the same t-shirt for three straight days is cute. The guy just wants a warm place to rest his head, and a sweet smelling bathroom, which the good girl provides.

Taking all this into consideration I have come to two conclusions. A guy wants a good girl with a dark, wicked, bad side, and a woman wants a bad boy with hints of a sweeter, good side. Now does this mean that this is true for every case? No, of course not, I'm just generalizing. But I'm sure I am actually making some sense, and I'm just as surprised as you are.

Ben Feder is a Collegian columnist.

Anti-Semitism: the cliché

Yousef Munayyer

I doubt I can think of a term that is as misapplied, misunderstood or overused as much as "anti-Semitism."

Let's begin by attempting to understand the term first. I think we all know what "anti" means. The controversy is in the second half of the hyphenated cliché.

What is Semitism? What does this term mean? Well many people will look at this term and immediately relate it in some way to Judaism, Zionism, and Israel, which are, of course, three very different things. Yet there is much more to Semitism than that.

The word Semitic comes from a particular origin that encompasses much more than just Judaism or Jews. However, when this term is used, or should I say misused, it is invoked to relate to Jews or Judaism. The word originates from the name Shem. Shem, for those not familiar with the Old Testament of the Bible, was one of Noah's (the guy with the boat and all the animals) three sons. These three sons were supposed to repopulate the earth after the deluge that destroyed all humanity.

So what does Shem have to do with any of this? Well according to particular theologies, the world's population can be traced back to these three distinct people or families or tribes. Many Jews trace their origin back to Shem. Now here is the kicker. So do Arabs. Now you might be asking, "Yousef, are you telling me that you yourself are Semitic?" Well the answer is yes. So Arabs and Jews have the same ancestry? Bingo.

Hence the term Semitic languages, if you have never heard of this term. It is a particular language group. Languages are placed into groups with other languages that all have the same origin. So you may have guessed that Hebrew, the religious language of Judaism, and Arabic, the defining characteristic of being an Arab, share the same origin. Arabic and Hebrew, along with other languages that are no longer in use today, have the same origin and are included in the Semitic language group.

So this means that Arabs and Jews are Semites, since both Arabs and Jews trace their lineage back to the same ancestry and speak languages, which are of the same origin. This becomes painfully obvious when you know Arabic and Hebrew and can see the similarities. You really don't have to be a linguistics professor to catch on. Nakhon?

Now when I say this term is misapplied and misused, I do not mean to say that there is no such thing as Anti-Semitism. To say such a thing would be to deny history. However, Anti-Semitism is understood to be some type of racism or prejudice directed towards Jews and only Jews because of who they are. As we can see from the origin of this word, using it in such a manner makes it a misnomer. That however is not the biggest problem I see with the use of this word.

Not only are all Semites excluded from being under the umbrella of the connotation, they are often the targets at which this word is directed. So now you might be asking, "Yousef, are you saying that Semites are labeled anti-Semitic?" Yes, that's correct. The term anti-Semitism is often used to label people who oppose Zionism. This is a problem by almost all definitions of Semitism. Zionism is a political term and Semitism, as we have seen, carries anthropological and in some ways religious connotations.

Some people interpret Semitism to mean Zionism; this is flat out wrong. They are two very different things, and this lies at the heart of the problem of the cliché. Many Arabs (who are Semites) oppose Zionism; also many Jews oppose Zionism. Now you might be thinking, "Yousef, are you trying to tell me that there are Jews who oppose Zionism?" Yes, and there always have been. Zionism is an ideology, a thought that was created in the late 18th century in response to actual anti-Judaic sentiment in Russia and Eastern Europe. Not every Jew supported Zionism then, and many still do not now.

Anti-Semitism is a very powerful word and supporters of Zionism understand this and may use it at will even if they will be using it incorrectly. The issue remains that most people do not understand the meaning of the word, but rather only understand what it has come to mean through the growth of the Zionist movement and how it has been misconstrued. If you criticize Israel or Israel's policies of killing innocents you may be labeled Anti-Semitic. This is ridiculous. If you do something wrong or are acting hypocritical you deserve to be criticized. You wouldn't call a white man racist for criticizing Rev. Jesse Jackson's extramarital relations would you?

If you are criticizing Israel or the Israeli government and are called Anti-Semitic, don't worry about it too much. What you should do is explain to the people who have called you this why they are using the term incorrectly. Also, if that is the best response they have to you criticizing the horrific policies that Israel has been carrying out since 1948; then they are probably losing the argument to begin with.

Anti-Semitism is a cliché. It is overused and misapplied. There is no doubt in my mind that racism and prejudice still exist since I have experienced it first hand. This also includes Jews, who are treated differently because of who they are, and this is wrong, but we should call things for what they are. The proponents of Zionism try to tie their cause so tightly to anti-Semitism in an attempt to win the war for international sympathy. There should be sympathy for victims of hatred, but there should be no sympathy for those who deliberately invoke this term inappropriately. Using the term Anti-Semitism incorrectly only perpetuates hatred and that is surely not necessary.

Yousef Munayyer is a Collegian columnist.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNEDAY, NOVEMBER 12, 2003

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

'Graves' inspires awareness

By Eva Piccozzi
Collegian Staff

Whether we would like to admit it or not, the gap between social and economic class is growing rapidly in present day society. Some of the wealthiest suburbs in the country surround cities whose living conditions are marked by poverty-stricken families, polluted neighborhoods and dilapidated buildings. While some people are unaware of this fact, most believe change is impossible, and instead sit back and blame our politicians. Last Thursday night at the Student Union Ballroom in their presentation of "Graves," the HartBeat Ensemble took center stage as part of the three-day conference, "Rethinking Marxism" at the University of Massachusetts.

HartBeat Ensemble "Graves"
Student Union Ball Room
UMass
Nov. 6

Players Steven Ginsburg, Julia B. Rosenblatt and Gregory R. Tate, whose original idea inspired the production, along with intern Cindy Martinez, acted out the roles of ordinary people under extraordinary circumstances in an attempt to gain awareness of the serious conditions in our cities and the need for improvement.

The arrival of hip-hop theater into mainstream entertainment was used to the troupe's advantage, as they used their roles to reveal the question of how we can make justice possible in the Hartford, Conn. community, United States and ultimately the world.

Through the artistic use of theater, "Graves" awakened hope on an issue that has become more exhausted through debate than actually solved. The show, which reflected a modern-day version of John Steinbeck's "The Grapes of Wrath," didn't try to convince the crowd using all too familiar political clichés. Rather, the ensemble met its commitments by presenting a chronology of truths, allowing the viewer's own psyche to make the decision of how important it is that we are educated about where our society is heading.

The soul of hip-hop artists including Nas, Kelis and 50-Cent echoed through the speakers before the start of the show and between scenes, foreboding the style which would be imitated by the young performers during the evening. Using minimal props consisting primarily of masks to characterize diversity, the actors relied mainly on their talented ways of impersonation, as each took on nearly a dozen different roles. After a while it didn't matter who was playing whom, because through each one's augmented accent, gestures and situations all they appeared as were the individuals they were trying to represent. Perhaps due to the fact that each member had previously trained with the San Francisco mime troupe, the actions of driving a bus, using a cash register and eating were accomplished without the actual tangible devices.

Steinbeck's novel adapted to the 21st century uses WalMart employment to parallel with farming during the Great Depression. The plot follows the lives of two individuals, Sal and Tom, two inmates who have just been released back out into the desperate city of Hartford, whose economic situation is declining. Tom and his wife Jasmine epitomize the story based on factual interviews, taken in the greater Hartford community representing a dark period for skilled workers unable to find employment.

These characters are forced to forget a past when their trade earned them a decent living and a move toward the future of a corporate America. This is a circumstance that is becoming more relative in our lives today than ever before.

Rhyming, beatboxing and blowing into the harmonica, Tom poetically describes how he went from having a skilled job of building fighter jets, to working at the recently developed WalMart. What sounded like Eminem's "8 Mile" rap, Tom preaches with a point, explaining how city housing was seized so that low paying jobs could take its place benefiting big business rather than Hartford's local economy.

"Graves," we come to find out is the street name for a past friend of Tom's named Rhonda, who is presently a starving bum. Her story is perhaps the most depressing, as it symbolizes how, with the destruction of housing, her home is now the sidewalk. It does not take long before old buddies Tom and Sal reunite and decide that the time has come to rise above the conformity of globalization. Risking their position as WalMart employees, the two decide to join the labor union movement and attend a strike outside their place of employment. At this point the audience was overwhelmed with anxiety and forgot that there were no visual props and that we were relying on the sole function of human emotions. Before the strike ends, Tom and Sal have made the ultimate sacrifice for the dream of changing the future of their community. As the police step in to break up the unwanted public demonstration for equality, two dire mistakes are made. Sal is accidentally shot by police and Tom's brutish temper causes him to lose control and beat the officer to death.

As the play comes to a close, we are left with a sense of ambiguity as to where Tom and his wife Jasmine will turn for help. Tom must leave Jasmine and their present residence, a community center based on the idea that city inhabitants share work equally, and remains a fugitive until found by the police. The plot has completed a full circle. This outline of events is an everyday occurrence for those living not only in Hartford, but in numerous cities throughout our country and the world. "Graves" is truly a genuine piece that brings awareness and inspires us to change the universal social injustices.

Northampton is 'The Luckiest'

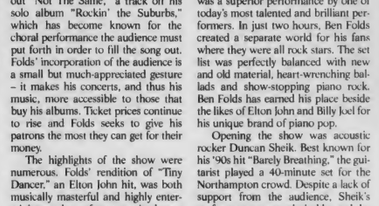
Ben Folds treats crowd to a superb performance

By Meghan Healy
Collegian Staff

As the audience members trickled out of Smith College's John M. Greene Auditorium on Sunday night, there was a general consensus that the show they had witnessed was one of the greatest shows to hit Northampton this year. The energy that Ben Folds created within the crowd did not dissipate as concertgoers went their separate ways, but instead stayed active among the fans. Up and down the frigid streets of Northampton, as the departing audience members made their way to cars and bus stops, the show was already receiving rave reviews. One young fan even ventured to declare, "That show was the best f—ing show EVER!"

Ben Folds
John M. Greene Auditorium
Northampton
Nov. 9

Although his claim cannot be verified, Sunday's show on the Smith College campus was definitely the finest example of what a concert should be. In the two hours he was on stage, Ben Folds managed to charm the audience as he made the crowd a part of the show and created an intimate environment out of the dark auditorium.



For years, Folds fans have idolized the singer and pianist for his lively stage manner and Sunday's show was true to form for the artist. On the final stop of an abbreviated college tour, Folds held nothing back from the Northampton crowd, as always, he played with a certain passion and intensity that lent his performance integrity.

Hitting the stage at 9 p.m., Folds wasted no time getting into the show. He opened with "One Angry Dwarf and 200 Solemn Faces," the unofficial anthem for all those who felt mistreated or underestimated throughout their childhoods. Following quickly with the upbeat "Zak and Sara," some fans started to wonder if the set list was going to be similar to last fall's release "Ben Folds Live," which kicks off with the same two tracks. The crowd need not have worried though; there were appearances by many of the songs included on "Live," but also a slew of Folds' other material including some lesser known tracks, like "Kalamazoo," so rare it had never been played on stage before.

A great deal of the set list seemed to be gleaned from Folds' days as front man of the now-defunct trio Ben Folds Five. Though he did not play "Brick," the only mainstream hit the band ever had, crowd favorites such as "Kate" and "Selfless, Cold and Composed" from the group's 1997 release "Whatever and Ever, Amen" went over well with the Northampton audience. Tracks off of the group's self-titled debut album such as "Underground," "Boxing" and "Philosophy" also made it into the set, pleasing a crowd comprised mainly of Folds fanatics.

Despite Folds' choice of a more obscure repertoire, those present who were not already familiar with his work felt right at home. The performer not only kept the crowd engaged; he also enlisted them to be members of his band. When performing "Army," Folds split the audience in half and created a singalong meant to imitate a horn section. The pianist also pulled out "Not The Same," a track off his solo album "Rockin' the Suburbs," which has become known for the choral performance the audience must put forth in order to fill the song out. Folds' incorporation of the audience is a small but much-appreciated gesture – it makes his concerts, and thus his music, more accessible to those that buy his albums. Ticket prices continue to rise and Folds seeks to give his patrons the most they can get for their money.

The highlights of the show were numerous. Folds' rendition of "Tiny Dancer," an Elton John hit, was both musically masterful and highly entertaining, as the performer got in character and donned a pair of sunglasses borrowed from an audience member to sing it. "Mount Holyoke Correctional Facility," an improvised ditty about women's colleges and Folds' plan to release a live DVD from one of the area "prisons" (i.e. Smith or Mount Holyoke College), was a prime example of his impeccable wit and on target sense of humor. A tasteful tribute to Elliot Smith, Folds covered the recently deceased indie-rock hero's "Say Yes." He said nothing about Smith's passing, just played the song and let the music speak for his sense of loss. His performance of ballad "The Luckiest" brought many in the audience to tears moments after the "song for angry white males everywhere," "Rockin' The Suburbs" brought them to their feet. The finale of a four-song encore, "Song For the Dumped," sent the crowd into maniacal cheers. Folds kept the long-time favorite fresh by switching the key from major to minor and also throwing in a Japanese translation of the chorus "Give me my money back, I want my money back, you bitch."

COURTESY BENFOLDS.COM

Sunday's performance at Smith College gave Ben Folds a chance to play material from his latest EP release 'Sunny 16.'

Sunday's show at Smith College was a superior performance by one of today's most talented and brilliant performers. In just two hours, Ben Folds created a separate world for his fans where they were all rock stars. The set list was perfectly balanced with new and old material, heart-wrenching ballads and show-stopping piano rock. Ben Folds has earned his place beside the likes of Elton John and Billy Joel for his unique brand of piano pop.

Opening the show was acoustic rocker Duncan Sheik. Best known for his '90s hit "Barely Breathing," the guitarist played a 40-minute set for the Northampton crowd. Despite a lack of support from the audience, Sheik's performance was admirable and he proved himself to be a talented musician. He tried his best to engage the audience, but, with the exception of an impressive cover of Oasis's "Wonderwall," couldn't manage to win the Folds fans over entirely.

Local filmmaker takes on chains

By Lauren Freeman
Collegian Staff

For some of us, finding a place to settle down and raise a family is a decision we will never have to consciously make. Many people in the highly competitive job market will first take a job and then settle wherever necessary, in a sort of domino-effect manner. This wasn't the case for the transient, undecided young Steve Alves. After all, he didn't have a career plan and thus made it difficult to settle down.

'Talking to the Wall'
Directed by Steve Alves
Hometown Productions
Unrated
57 mins.
Grade A-

Alves traveled from Long Island to Los Angeles and back before he realized what it was he was passionate about. Ironically, that passion was the act of finding a place to live in and of itself.

Steve Alves had been a good portion of the country and yet remained unrooted. He had grown up on Long Island and done some time in L.A., and he was absolutely bothered by what is best described as the corporate sprawl. He had yet to find a town with personal character.

Chain stores and restaurants were popping up on every corner in every town and city. These corporate-run chains were dotting the skyline and simultaneously draining the unique character that comes hand in hand with privately run businesses. The center of town, that familiar place where the community gathered to shop in each other's stores — this was becoming a characteristic of a

Continued on page 6

The newest flavor of the week: Thursday brings emo to a new level

By Deborah Geiger
Collegian Staff

If you appreciate chaos, melody, screaming and drama, then Thursday isn't just your favorite night to party; it is now your new favorite band. Once a tight circle of friends, the members of the New Brunswick, N.J. quintet merged their musical talent and close friendships into something more. In 1998, Thursday was born. Five years and four albums later, Thursday doesn't have to practice in the garage anymore.

This Emocore entourage wasn't always in the spotlight. Opening up early in their career for bigger acts like At the Drive-In and Hot Water Music, they soon became recognized and built an empire on their signature sound. "War All the Time," their newest album, readily titillates its listeners and fans through a series of highs, rock bottom lows, and few in-betweens. From the gutters of New Jersey to the bright screen of MTV, Thursday's "War All the Time" is the CD that puts them on the musical map.

Comprised of singer Geoff Rickly, guitarists Steve Pedulla and Tom Keeley, keyboardist Andrew Everding, bassist Tim Payne and drummer Tucker Rule, Thursday began their album with a powerful and insightful bang. "For the Workforce, Drowning" is a well-chosen first track with its monotony and insistence. "We will not lie awake in our parents' beds, tossing and turning. Tomorrow we'll get up, drive to work single file with everyday it's like the last. Waiting for the life to start, is it always just always ahead of the curve?" The questions raised in this first track make listeners sit up and take notice. Pedulla's guitar is intense and off kilter at times, which contributes to the rapture of the song, the nomadic quality of the melody and perhaps of our generation.

COURTESY LAUNCHYARD.COM

"War All the Time" is a triumph for Thursday.

Thursday
'War All the Time'
Island

The second track, "Between Rupture and Rapture," opens with what seems to be a strange rendition of En Vogue's "Don't Let Go," but is a superb song that's drum line constantly hovers between edgy and hard rock. "I feel so lost... you can't save me," the band cries out through a series of scientific metaphors. "Through the double helix we are twisting," offers a rushed, painful conclusion, "all alone is all we are."

Thursday continues in their dramatic woes throughout the album. In "Lights out on Division Street," the music is constantly hammering into listeners. "Goodbye to the memories, the fever that will not break, the night is pouring down, it's not enough to put this out, I'll burn up before I wake up." This hopeless but addictive tune is filled to the brim with dark drumming, screaming and demented overtures. "Lights out, lights out..." is repeated endlessly in this stuck-in-your-head-for-hours tune.

"Signals over the Air" lyrically illustrates Thursday's experience with their public, the press, the media and the ill effects that are possible with too much, too soon.

"When you say my name, I want to stop it in your lungs and collect all of your blood to put in the radio." Thursday questions how fame has affected them. "Is this how it feels when you don't even fit into your own skin?" Rickly asks us in a series of teary pleads just how long one can hide "on the radio." Emocore roots may make their lyrics sound more and more like poetry night at Starbucks, but this isn't poetry. These are songs purposefully woven and ordered to reach mood highs and lows, from the melodic to screeching.

"Asleep in the Chapel" is a constant seesawing between release and self-control. "Three chalk outlines sleep in the dirty street and in our beds, under the sheets, they're the halo of guilt hanging around your neck, next to the rosary you count, falling asleep and we're praying to treat the symptoms of letting go of all our hope." Through a stunning array of background chants and urgent guitar interpolations, this song questions the idea of faith and religion. "All the streets were filled with a thousand burning crosses," a dubbed loudspeaker announces, as if indeed we are in the middle of a war.

"War All the Time" will not take you on an intense emotional roller coaster. Thursday has successfully plowed its way into an overcrowded scene and has come out on top. Few bands are able to truly embody a genre, but Thursday have become the poster children for Emocore — a somewhat exploratory genre that's time has come for definition. Anything but formulaic, "War All the Time" is for anyone who craves listening to a highly provocative potpourri of emotion, yearns to see beauty in the depths or simply for anyone who wants to scream along and bang their head on the dashboard while driving home for Thanksgiving.

Amherst hosts 'Marat/Sade'

By Kevin Riley
Collegian Correspondent

Thursday night Amherst College will unveil its production of "Marat/Sade," which will run through Saturday, Nov. 15, at the college's Kirby Theater on campus. "Marat/Sade" was written in 1964 by the German playwright Peter Weiss, and is often considered one of the greatest works of the 1960s.

Directed by Amherst professor Manuame Mukasa, "Marat/Sade" parallels the French Revolution and modern times using traditional roots music, interactive lighting, and other methods to transfuse the theme throughout the play.

Marat/Sade
Amherst College
Nov 13

Set in the insane asylum of Charenton during the French Revolution, writer and philosopher Marquis de Sade, held incarcerated from 1801 to his death in 1814, gets the inmates together to put on a drama entailing the final hours of revolutionary Jean-Paul Marat's life. It is July 13, 1808, and 15 years have passed since Charlotte Corday stabbed Marat to death in his bathtub. The Marquis de Sade makes a spectacle out of the play within a play and the plot thickens as the revolutionary bug spreads throughout the patients from Sade's philosophical and political musings, all the while music and lighting enhance the play's frenzied overtones.

Head musician Levin S. Schwartz, who also gives guitar and mandolin lessons in downtown Amherst, sets a wide range of traditional and cultural music to the play. "Most of the music is from the '60s and '70s. We'll be playing Steely Dan tunes, there'll be Brazilian drumming, bluegrass and even doo-wop," Schwartz said.

Schwartz gathered local musicians from around the Pioneer Valley to form a six-piece band that will perform in character on stage. Schwartz's band, Few and Far Between, accounts for three out of the six musicians and can be seen every other Thursday at the Black Sheep where they perform old-time tunes.

The lighting is composed of 108 different scenes personalized to the action on stage. Schwartz was adamant about the lighting scheme, which he thought added to the chaotic feel.

Showtime for "Marat/Sade," also known as "The Persecution and Assassination of Jean-Paul Marat as Performed by the Inmates of the Asylum of Charenton under the Direction of Monsieur de Sade," is 8:00 p.m. Tickets are free and can be reserved at the Amherst College box office. To contact the box office, call 413-542-2277.

Greenfield activist premiers film in NoHo bygone era. However, Steve Alves was determined to find a place where this was not the case.

Continued from page 5

He found that place not far from UMass, a little town called Greenfield. Greenfield had a center of town crowded with privately owned shops. Alves had found his new home. Little did he know he was going to have to spend a great deal of energy preserving it.

In the early 1990s corporate giant WalMart had its eye on the little town of Greenfield. According to WalMart executives, Greenfield was an ideal location for a new store. They claimed that the people were in dire need of the cheap prices and mass quantities that WalMart had to offer. Unfortunately for WalMart, resident lawyer Al Norman was asked to represent the anti-corporate activists of Greenfield, (especially Alves) and he was willing to further investigate the problem.

Upon researching the effect of chain stores like WalMart on towns just like Greenfield, Norman revealed a disturbing trend. These towns had been lured by promises of greener pastures and in turn had seen the character of their town in essence disappear. In particular, quaint town centers had become ghost towns. The daily bustle that originally brought the town together was replaced by abandoned shops and for sale signs.

This past Sunday at 5:15 p.m. at the Northampton Independent Film Festival, the world premiere of Alves' documentary "Talking to the Wall" was presented.

The documentary, written and directed by Alves, is a personal and funny, but nonetheless, very serious exposé. This documentary is complete with archival footage detailing the Greenfield struggle against WalMart. Alves also presents a historical overview and archival footage from related activism against chain stores that begins in the 1930s with the anti-chain movement, thus solidifying the existence of the problem and placing it on the map to become a subject for further debate.

Alves' film seems a little one-sided at times. It ultimately refuses to touch upon the subject of the benefits WalMart-type stores provide for lower-income citizens. It also refuses to pose a solution to the problem of increasing population and the fact that this is directly related to a demise and failure of many unsuccessful private run businesses. Private run businesses oftentimes simply cannot produce enough goods to meet demand and thus the demand goes looking elsewhere.

In actuality, from a business perspective, WalMart is a very decent business model. If the main goal in marketing/business is to maximize efficiency in order to lower prices for customers and to increase profit, then WalMart seems to be the business ideal.

However, if this is done to the detriment to a town's character, if this company thrives by creating low paying jobs in order to ensure low prices, then this business ideal becomes problematic. More important than all of this, perhaps, is the fact that money spent in chain stores is not recirculated throughout the community.

In conclusion, Alves' film establishes a timely starting point from which further discussion on this topic can be approached. Alves reminds us that revolution is in the hands of the people, no matter how big or small the issue. This documentary is testimony to the fact that the people in America do have the power to control their surroundings. Alves is simultaneously pessimistic and critical of the state of the country, and yet he genuinely displays the purest of democratic ideals on which this country was founded.

Under the cloud

The Red Line

Peter Dale
Justin Chellman

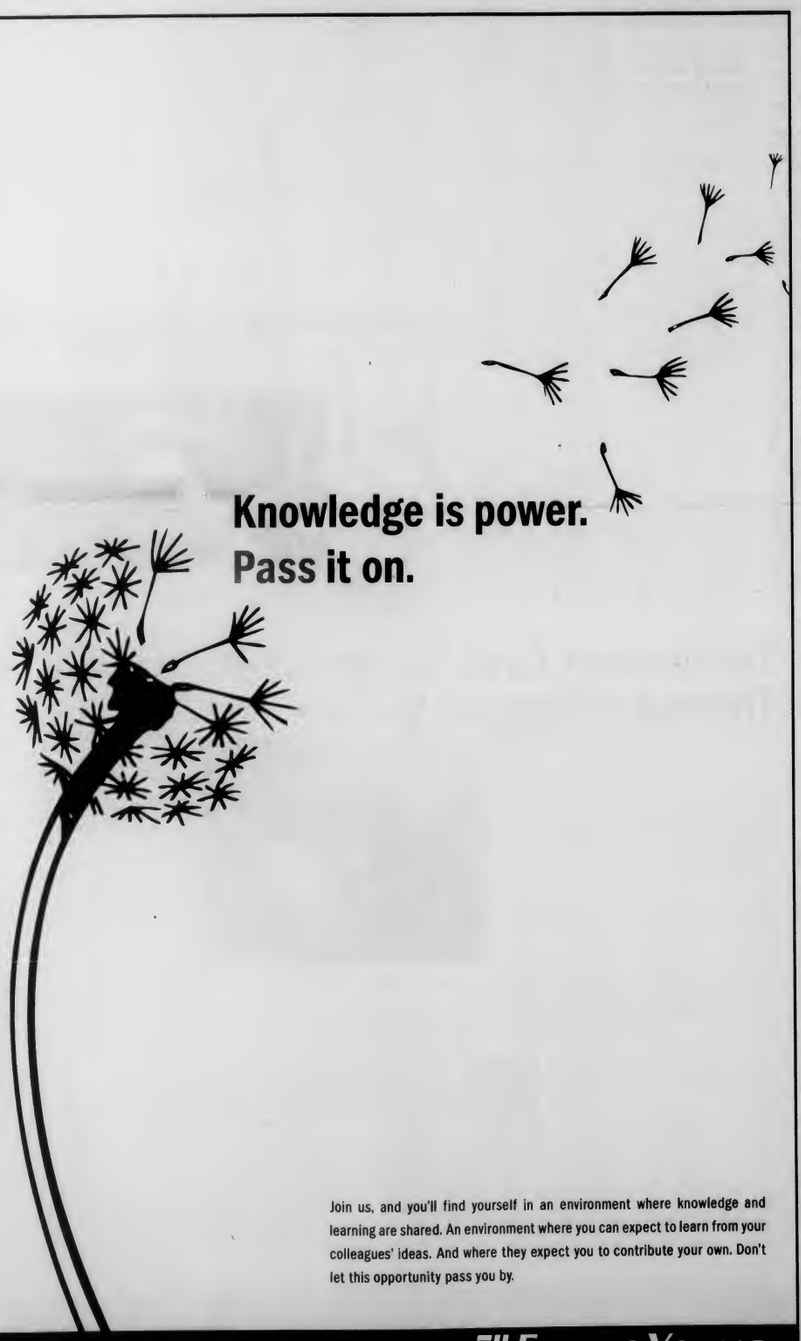
As the world waits and prepares for Jay-Z to drop what has been called his last album later this week, the hip-hop industry is feeling the quiet before the storm. It's not very easy or settling to put out an album anywhere near Jay's release dates, due to the fact that each time he blows the competition out of the water. His album "The Blueprint" changed up the entire game when it was released and started a trend of sampling for beats again. Now the mysterious "Black Album" has many wondering where Jay-Z will take the game next, and how the game and other rappers will respond.

It's always exciting when there is so much anticipation surrounding an album. This year hasn't been short of such situations, as we have also seen a high feeling of anticipation for the double Outkast album. But with Jay-Z it is different. The streets are calling for It, with this being Jay-Z's supposed last hurrah. Many people feel that he will most definitely leave on a high point and with a big bang. It has also been no secret that the list of production credits on this album is one unparalleled in hip-hop.

But just as we are waiting for that album to be released there are still others out there now who are tearing it up under the shadow of the disputed King of New York. Both the underground and the mainstream have a few serious joints out there right now that are circulating and making much noise on the scene. Right now it is no secret that the dirty south is running hip-hop, with Lil Jon producing club hit after club hit and Ludacris, having yet again another hot album of up-to-no-good antics. But almost slipping by unnoticed is actually one of the dirty south's best albums of 2003, a real sleeper hit in T.I.'s Trap Muzik.

Our mainstream pick of the moment goes to T.I.'s album because of its wide array of satisfactory aspects. T.I. can rap, unlike some of his extra counterparts, but he can also create an ill hook to get the club bumping like the rest of them. Plus it doesn't hurt at all that my favorite new producer at the time, Kanye West, has blessed the young man twice on his album. What is most strikingly different about T.I.'s album is that on many of the tracks he is coming across with a message as well as keeping with the down south style that the mainstream has been eating up lately.

This album has a lot of potential radio hits and has been letting them go ever since its release, and we don't think that it's done with at all yet. "Trap Muzik" is the perfect album for all of you who want an album that will bump in your system and will do well at parties. But if you listen closely to it, you'll find yourself realizing that this cat has much more to show than meets the eye.



T.I. is calling himself the King of the South, and although he has yet to earn that title, he is definitely on the right track now with his latest release.

In the underground there have also been a few standout albums of late, one of the best comes from the often-overlooked MF Doom, this time releasing his album under yet another comic book referenced name, Viktor Vaughn. The former member of K.M.D. gained much acclaim from his last full-length album, "Operation Doomsday," under the MF Doom moniker. On that album he produced all the beats as well as dropped very inventive verses on each track. This time, as Viktor Vaughn, he left all the production up to others such as "RJD2," "King Honey" and "Heat Sensor." The top-notch guest production lives up to the very talented production of Doom himself. Where this differs from his last album is that he has improved his lyricism to an even higher level and changed his entire tempo and style for this new character that he has embodied for the release.

His clever and funny lyrics keep the listener on the tip of his tongue, while the dope production throughout provides more than proper backing. This great combination of rhymes and beats makes this album one of the best this year, and is guaranteed to satisfy listeners who desire clever and inventive rhymes, especially those who appreciated his last release.

So if you can't wait for the "Black Album" to drop, or if you are one of the unconcerned and like sure bets, we'd recommend these two releases. Both provide the best in what they are trying to accomplish, and will satisfy the ear, that's why they are our picks of the moment.

You can listen to Justin Chellman & Peter Dale on the radio every Friday night at 9 p.m. until 11:30 p.m. on The Redline at 91.1 FM. You can also email them at TheRedline-HipHop@yahoo.com.

Join us, and you'll find yourself in an environment where knowledge and learning are shared. An environment where you can expect to learn from your colleagues' ideas. And where they expect you to contribute your own. Don't let this opportunity pass you by.

ey.com/us/careers

ERNST & YOUNG
Quality In Everything We Do

There is a mandatory Arts meeting today at 5:30 p.m. in the Collegian news room.

Controversial new book unearths Mickey Mouse's bad side

'The Pirates and the Mouse' details court battle between Disney and the Air Pirates

By Alissa Kramer
Collegian Correspondent

"The Pirates and the Mouse" is a close-up look at an upstart, underground, resistance comic book, with one of the biggest symbols of corporate globalization and the "nightmare of swarming indistinguishable sameness" for a target. It's also a labor of love, and a portrait of the zeitgeist of the '70s. The book is written as a narrative by Bob Levin, an attorney and novelist who tells of the man behind the Pirates, Dave O'Neill. It recounts the 10-year trial of the Air Pirates against Disney and conducts personal interviews with O'Neill and colleagues, contemporaries and experts, all with an obvious fondness for the situation and a quiet, tacitly agreeing sense of humor that roots for the Pirates the whole way through.

Though slow at first, "Pirates" quickly captures the imagination and the spirit with detailed subplots, narrative in reverse chronological order and asides. One leaps on board as Levin brings the reader from the hotel reception in a small town in Nevada to an abandoned warehouse in San Francisco, to New York City and back again. We read about O'Neill, the young idealist, and the story of an "ardent patriot" named Walt Disney, who, in classic Horatio Alger style, became one of the richest men in the world because of one idea, a mouse, that might not have originally been his anyway.

The book really kicks off when Levin gives the reader some historical background. "April 30, 1970: President Nixon announces the invasion of Cambodia and demonstrators cause more than 500 college campuses to close down. In 16 states, the National Guard is called out. At Kent State, Ohio, Guardsmen shot and killed four student protesters. At Jackson State, Mississippi State Troopers killed two and wounded a dozen. In New York City, construction workers attacked anti-war demonstrators, injuring 30. And according to pollsters, three-quarters of the country oppose the anti-war protests and would deny those arrested in connection with them the protection of the Bill of Rights."

Four months later, a bunch of young idealist comic-book fans met at the Sky River Rock Festival and Lighter than Air Fair, or "the First American multi-day, outdoor rock concert," and form a group that would later be known as "The Air Pirates."

"The dream was to have a studio where people...would feel normal." In the 1970s Walt Disney was already grossing over $100 million annually and had filed over 1,700 lawsuits for copyright infringement. Disney was, as Levin wrote, "part of our national collective consciousness...and an internationally known symbol of American culture and power," and was thus subject to be preyed upon, which is exactly what happened.

After the death of Walt Disney in 1966, the initial blows on the Disney character were thrown. A man named Paul Krassner drew Disney characters in compromising positions; having sex and shooting up drugs, and called it "The Walt Disney Memorial Orgy." "The Air Pirates" took it a few steps further. They depicted the beloved characters as liars, cheaters and drug traffickers, with stinging dialogue that consciously parodied the state of the nation, some of which are in the book in the form of 23 glossy pages.

The second half of the book deals mostly with the consequent courtroom trials launched against the Pirates by Disney for copyright infringements, which came to a head in the Supreme Court. "Pirates" becomes an exploration of corporations and corruption that reaches to the highest governing powers. It is a poignant commentary on freedom of speech and the value of parody and terminology such as "counter-culture," "savagely satirical" and "anti-establishment," gets tossed around as Levin describes in detail the 10-year off-and-on struggle of O'Neill and Co.

'The Pirates and the Mouse'
By Bob Levin
Fantagraphics Books

The seldom heard of case was a pivotal one that Levine wrote, "crystallized the tension between the First Amendment and the right to protect commercial characters" and paved the way not only for underground literature, but also for future litigation regarding the First Amendment and copyrights.

By the end of the book, the reader feels satisfied with the interestingly woven allegorical tale of good vs. evil, which parallels that of the real-life saga Levin chronicles. As leisurely as the book starts and then gains speed, it comes back down in similar fashion. The coming down here is commentary from professors and lawyers familiar with the case, and an epilogue of the characters, including O'Neill, who after the trials got involved in the Irish Army and civil politics. He then, after a string of tragedies, including the death of his oldest son to AIDS, moved to Nevada City to live a less high-profile life.

Levin draws to a crisp and clean-cut close with a reflective view of the world as, "neither a totalitarian state like Disneyland nor a free-floating, psycho-drama like the Pirates warchouse," and the reader remains intrigued by this elusive, little-known American man, Dave O'Neill, who until his last days remained faithful to his cause.

'Happy Hour' takes sobering look at life

By Kristin Erekson
Collegian Correspondent

Focusing on the crossroads of careless youth and adulthood, the independent film "Margarita Happy Hour" shows that someday everyone will be forced to grow up.

Set in the slums of Brooklyn, N.Y., "Margarita Happy Hour" explores the trials and tribulations of single parenthood. The story revolves around Zelda (Eleanor Hutchins), a starving porno-magazine illustrator who decides to have a baby rather than opt for an abortion. Struggling to make ends meet, Zelda attempts to seek help from her would-be poet boyfriend, Max (Larry Fessenden), who is good-hearted but too strung out on drugs and caffeine to help support his daughter, Little Z (Jonah Leland). Zelda's only relief from her crowded loft swarming with punks and tattooed druggies is having half-priced margaritas in the afternoon with other single mothers who seem to be battling with the same concept of parenthood.

Directed, written and edited by Ilya Chaiken ("The Actress"), "Margarita Happy Hour" is a story that partially relates to some of Chaiken's own experiences. She also is a single parent who does not want to let go of her youth or the thrills of living her life with no constraints. The title "Margarita Happy Hour" originates from Chaiken's meetings with several other rebellious single mothers who yearned to socialize and loosen up a bit from the burdens of child rearing and Medicaid. They would meet at a Mexican restaurant for $2 margaritas as an escape from their complicated lives. Chaiken's personal touch made "Margarita Happy Hour" one of her most successful films that premiered at the Sundance Film Festival in 2001 and at the Northampton Independent Film Festival on Sunday.

'Margarita Happy Hour'
Directed by Ilya Chaiken
Starring Eleanor Hutchins Larry Fessenden
Passport Pictures and Susie Q Productions
99 mins.
Grade B

The movie avoids the glamorous, fashionable side of New York and concentrates more on the lives of artists, punks and drug addicts inhabiting the Brooklyn borough. The actors and actresses fit into their "bohemian" roles perfectly because they are similar to the rebellious youths seen today on college campuses or in eccentric places like Harvard Square in Boston. Zelda and her friends parade around with tousled hair, leather pants, platform black boots and nose piercings. "Margarita Happy Hour" also brings the audience into the underground artist scene full of masochistic and fantasy role-playing experiences with people hanging off hooks by their skin and men dressing up as monkeys. Rock 'n' roll and digitized music also play a large part in this film because it inhabits such a large part of the characters. The music sets the ambiance of the movie and also shapes the characters' moods to be sexual, angry, mellow or content.

Overall, "Margarita Happy Hour" does not only depict the troubles of single motherhood, but also the "transformation" of an individual. The audience witnesses the dark side of life and how hard it is to be a success in a world that is always bringing a person down. The characters struggle with their own addictions, fears, desires and the personal scars that haunt their lives. "Margarita Happy Hour" shows that the only way to make it through life is to keep moving forward rather than dwelling on the illusions of a past that can never be retraced.

$1000 Zanna Shopping Spree!

For 5 days only! Tuesday, November 11 through Saturday, November 15 we're celebrating our 32nd year of being Zanna. Come to our Anniversary Sale. Enter for a chance to win a $1000 Zanna Shopping Spree! All week we're having Big Sales. Join the fun. Shop the Bargains.

Careers for Historians

The Edwin M. Rossman Alumni Career Forum presents

After the BA - Career Options for Historians

Thursday, November 13, 2003 5:00 to 6:15 p.m. Herter 601

What do history majors do after graduation? We've assembled a panel of alumni to talk about their careers. They're here to tell you how they got started and to offer you advice on doing the same.

The panel below represents only a few options of the many fields open to history majors. The sky is the limit.

PANELISTS

Joshua Grey, Lawyer, Bulkley, Richardson & Gelinas

Bethany Groff, Site Manager, Spencer-Pierce-Little Farm, The Society for the Preservation of New England Antiquities.

Margaret Jablonski, Dean for Campus Life, Brown University

Rob Mei, Specialty Sales Divisional Manager for Southern New England, Forest Pharmaceuticals

Patrick T. O'Brien, Legislative Assistant, Office of Rep. Vinny deMacedo, Massachusetts State House

MODERATOR

Sandra Krein, History Department Internship Advisor

Sponsored by the Campus Career Network, Alumni Association and the Department of History

Nov 12-Nov 26 '03

ARTS ON CAMPUS... a calendar brought to you by the UMass Arts Council

Events

Wednesday, November 12
Film: Korean Film Festival. through 11-14. Campus Center, 6-11 pm. For the full schedule, go to: www.umass.edu/kgsa/events/festival.html

UMass Arts Council Single Projects/Events Grant Deadline at noon

Thursday, November 13
Music: Dances for Trombone Choir David Sporny, director. Bezanson, 8 pm, $, 545-2227
Music: Jin Hi Kim Solo performance on Komungo, six-string zither. Augusta Savage Gallery, 7 pm, 545-5177
Dance: Krasnoyarsk National Dance Company Of Siberia Siberian dances to live music. Concert Hall, 7:30 pm, $, 545-2511
Film: Searching for Asian America (2003) directed by Sapana Sakya, Donald Young, and Kyung Yu (90 min) Herter 231, 7:30 pm, 545-1980

Friday, November 14
Reading: The Captivation of Eunice Williams First reading of a new opera by Paula Kimper. Libretto by Harley Erdman with Linda McInerney. Bezanson, 8 pm, 545-2227
Dance: Nori: Korean Drums and Music Poongmul-Nori is a dynamic mixture of traditional Korean drumming, dance ritual, theater, and entertainment. Bowker, 8 pm, $, 545-2511

Saturday, November 15
Cultural Night: Cape Verdean Cultural Night Cape Verdean artists, singers, dancers and cuisine. CC Auditorium, 6 pm-2 am, $, 545-3600
Comedy: Mission IMPROVable Campus Center, 8-10 pm

Sunday, November 16
Jazz Brunch Franklin Dining Hall, 11:30-1 pm, $, 545-2804
Music: Avanti Wind Quintet Plus Bezanson, 8 pm, $, 545-2227

Monday, November 17
Music: "A Call from Home" Israeli band with UMass' Jewish a cappella ensemble, Kolot, as opener. CC 163, 7 pm, 259-1710 x203

Tuesday, November 18
Music: The Beauty of Inflections: Music for Voices and Instruments Bezanson, 8 pm $, 545-2227

Wednesday, November 19
Literary: Writer's Work presents Brian Henry, Editor and Critic. Commonwealth Lounge, noon-1 pm. 545-5510
Film: LGT Film Festival Nov 19-23. Reel Out Film Festival presented by the Stonewall Center. Bartlett 65. www.umass.edu/stonewall
Music: Collaborations from Switzerland, Brazil and the U.S. Eduardo Leandro, Verena Boshart, Ricardo Bologna. Bezanson, 8:15 pm, $, 545-2227

Thursday, November 20
Music: Rashied Ali and Sonny Fortune Bezanson Recital Hall 8 pm, $, 545-2511
Theater: Blood Brothers. Presented by the UMass Theater Guild. Through 11-22. Bowker, 8pm, $, 545-0415.
Literature: Visiting Writers Series Poets Brian Henry and Leslie Lewis will be reading. Memorial Hall, 8 pm, 545-5499

Friday, November 21
Music: The Russian Year. Concert II of IV by the University Orchestra. Lanfranco Marcelletti, Jr., director. Concert Hall, 8 pm, $, 545-2227

Saturday, November 22
COMEDY: Mission IMPROVable Campus Center, 8-10 pm

Tuesday, November 25
Music: University Chorale & Women's Choir. E. Wayne Abercrombie, Ryan Ellis & Paulo Gomez, directors. Bowker, 8 pm, $, 545-2227

Exhibits

AUGUSTA SAVAGE GALLERY
101 New Africa House · 545-5177
M-TU 1-7 pm; W-F 1-5 pm
La Lucha Continua/The Struggle Continues through November 25

CENTRAL GALLERY
Central Residential Area Infirmary Way-Wheeler House 545-0680
M-TH 3-6 pm; SU 2-5 pm
Alison Aune: Faces of Earth
November 16-December 7
Nov. 25 Gallery talk: 4 pm

HAMPDEN GALLERY & SCULPTURE GARDEN
Southwest Residential Area · 545-0680
M-TH 12-6; SU 2-5 pm
Nora Valdez The Journey Part II: Tag Your Luggage
through December 31
Olivia Bernard. Descent and Flight: Terra Incognita
through November 16
BFA Exhibit by Garret Piermarini
November 20-27
Reception Nov. 20, 4-6 pm

HERTER ART GALLERY
125A Herter Hall · 545-0976
M-F 11-4 pm; SA-SU 1-4 pm
Global Priority
through December 12

STUDENT UNION GALLERY
Student Union Building · 545-0792
M-TH 10-5 pm, F 10-3 pm
Jeffrey King: painting, BFA
November 17-21

UNIVERSITY GALLERY
Fine Arts Center · 545-3670
TUH 11-4:30 pm; SA-SU 2-5 pm
Aftermath: Images from Ground Zero/Joel Meyerowitz
through December 12
Mirror Tenses: Conflating Time and Presence
through December 12

Five College students are offered a discounted admission at Fine Arts Center events sponsored, in part, by a grant from the UMass Arts Council

Are you looking for a place to hold your art event on campus? The Fine Arts Center's new Education/Access web site offers a list of 42 art venues on campus, with information about capacities, how to reserve the space and other important details. Just visit: http://www.umass.edu/fac/education/tools/index.html

UMass Arts Council · 101 Hasbrouck Lab · 545-0202
www.umass.edu/fac/artscouncil

A-10 playoff picture beginning to take form

Continued from page 10

Hempstead, N.Y. and collapsed in the second half, falling to the 1-8 Pride, 34-32.

Backup quarterback Marvin Burroughs was filling in once again for the injured Joe Casamento, and led the Wildcats to a 26-14 halftime lead. But Hofstra came storming back with a pair of third quarter touchdowns by Isaac Irby to take a 27-26 edge. Vemba Bukula added a touchdown run of his own with 3:11 to play and gave Hofstra an eight-point lead.

On the ensuing drive, 'Nova coach Andy Talley went to Casamento in desperation, and the sophomore went 7-for-7 on the drive, finishing off the 76-yard offensive with a 15-yard touchdown to John Dieser with 55 seconds to go. But on the two-point conversion attempt, Casamento rolled out and was sacked by junior Daniel Garay to ice the victory for the Pride.

Playoff picture

With two weeks remaining in the A-10 regular season, the Minutemen are the lone squad to control their own destiny. With a win this weekend at Delaware, the Maroon and White would clinch its 19th A-10 title and first since 1999. Should the Blue Hens come out on top, they could then clinch with a victory over Villanova the last week of the season. Otherwise, the Maroon and White would win the title with a victory over URI in the final week of the season. Villanova cannot win the A-10 title following its loss to Hofstra. All three teams are still in line for at-large bids, but 'Nova would more than likely have to win out in order to find its way into the postseason.

Minutewomen fall in preseason

By Bob McGovern
Collegian Staff

In its first game of the season, the Massachusetts women's basketball team met Team Concept in an exhibition game last Saturday.

The Minutewomen dropped a 72-58 contest to a team that exhibited too much size, talent and overall experience for the Minutewomen to keep up. Team Concept sported a lineup riddled with ex-WNBA players and professionals from overseas.

UMass fought to a 35-33 lead at halftime in a period where the Maroon and White dominated the boards and shut down the Team Concept attack. As the second half started, it appeared that the Minutewomen were slowly losing momentum as Team Concept went on quick scoring runs coming off an array of Maroon and White turnovers.

Team Concept	72
UMass	58

Over a 10-minute span, the Minutewomen were outscored by Team Concept 19-3, which put the nail in the coffin. The Maroon and White committed a total of 23 turnovers in the game and appeared to lose its intensity as the game went on. UMass had trouble finding the basket in the second half and watched its shooting percentage drop drastically from the first period, falling from 57.7 percent to 33.3.

There was, however, some silver lining in the defeat as UMass got its first look at some of its new talent. Leading the way for the new faces was transfer Brooke Campbell, who led the team with 16 points on the night. UMass received some help from its freshman talent with Joyce Massey and Tamara Tatham making their college debuts. Massey had a stellar first night, scoring 11 points and grabbing three rebounds, while Tatham scored eight of her own.

With the departure of All-American Jen Butler due to graduation, the Minutewomen were lacking substantial size in the post. The Maroon and White will be looking toward its upperclassmen to pick up the slack on the boards.

Glamora Maeweather showcased her defensive skills throughout the game, outrebounding Team Concept players that were nearly six inches taller than her. Maeweather finished the night with 11 points and 10 rebounds in an impressive game in the post.

Leading the way for Team Concept were Deanna Jackson and Lenae Williams who scored 15 points apiece. Jackson was also powerful under the basket, grabbing five rebounds on the night.

Hockey East owns standings

Continued from page 10

streak dating back to Jan. 25 when he stopped all of BU's shots in a 3-0 win. He then shut down the Terriers in the Hockey East Final (1-0) on March 15, and then again 14 days later in the NCAA Northeast Regional (3-0).

Extraordinary gentlemen in the league

Joining Ayers atop the goaltending leaderboard is BC's Matti Kaltiainen, whose overall 1.99 goals against average and .902 save percentage belie his excellence against Hockey East. Through two games —both victories for the Eagles — Kaltiainen has posted a stellar 1.00 GAA and .950 save percentage. Ayers is just a few notches behind him with a 1.34 GAA, and leads the league with his .958 save percentage.

Rank and file

Hockey East held on to its overwhelming presence on the national polls this week, with five teams on both the USA Today/American Hockey Magazine and U.S. College Hockey Online polls. UNH (No. 2), Boston College (No. 3), Maine (No. 4), Massachusetts (No. 9) and BU (No. 10) all made the lists, each in the same spot on both polls.

Welcome to the show

Freshmen Luciano Aquino (Maine), Ryan Sullivan (Merrimack) and Jason Tejchma (UMass Lowell) all scored their first collegiate goal in last week's action. Ironically, all three goals came in losses. Aquino's goal was the only one the Black Bears could muster in a 4-1 loss to BC, the Warriors lost 5-3 to UMass on Sullivan's big night, and Tejchma was also the only name on the scoring sheet for the River Hawks.

Willis named R.O.Y.

By Mark Long
Associated Press

MIAMI (AP) — Dontrelle Willis left quite an impression in his first season.

The high-kicking left-hander made the All-Star team, played a key role in Florida's turnaround and helped the Marlins win their second World Series.

Now, he can add NL Rookie of the Year honors to his accomplishments.

Willis, who went 14-6 with a 3.30 ERA, beat out Milwaukee outfielder Scott Podsednik for the award Monday.

"It's a huge honor," Willis said from his home in Oakland, Calif. "I'm still on this World Series high. It's still unreal to me that we won. It's all starting to sink in."

Kansas City shortstop Angel Berroa edged New York Yankees outfielder Hideki Matsui for the AL award, the league's closest rookie race in 24 years.

Berroa received 12 first-place votes, seven seconds and seven thirds for 88 points in totals released by the Baseball Writers' Association of America. Matsui got 10 firsts, nine seconds and seven thirds for 84 points.

It was the closest finish since the BBWAA adopted the current rookie voting format in 1980, a year after Minnesota's John Castino and Toronto's Alfredo Griffin tied with seven votes apiece.

"I was astounded," Berroa said from his home in the Dominican Republic capital of Santo Domingo. "Super-happy is the ideal expression to describe how I feel about receiving this honor."

Willis received 17 first-place votes and 118 points, while Podsednik got eight firsts and 81 points. Arizona pitcher Brandon Webb was third with 73 points.

Willis was in the gym, already getting ready for next season, when he received the news Monday.

"It's not much of a break at all because after Thanksgiving and Christmas it's over," he said. "You don't really have time to look back."

Nonetheless, Willis finds time.

He has his World Series baseball cap, worn out and still stained from sweat, sitting in the living room where he can see it every day.

"Just looking at the World Series patch, it doesn't get any better than that," he said. "No matter what I do in my career or what happens in my life, I can always say I participated in the 100th anniversary of the World Series."

Willis, 21, went 9-1 with a 2.08 ERA in making the All-Star team, then went 5-5 with a 4.60 ERA the rest of the way as the Marlins earned the wild-card spot.

He was dropped from the Marlins' rotation after two post-season starts, limited to relief appearances during the World Series against the Yankees.

He probably will be back in the starting rotation for the Marlins next season but could remain in the bullpen.

"Any opportunity I can get to help the team I'll take," he said. "Whether it's starting or relieving, I won't think about it. I'll just go out there and try to be the best at what I do."

Willis was at his best early last season, when his unorthodox delivery was tough to hit and even tougher to describe.

Bartenders Have More Spirit! Why not be a bartender?
Boston Bartenders School of America
Call TODAY! (413)747-9888
www.bostonbartender.com

Nick's...for the morning after
63 Main Street, Amherst
Traditional & eclectic breakfast fare, featuring a Southwestern flare, Jewish favorites, & vegan items.
20% STUDENT DISCOUNT
Monday-Friday to the fall 2003 semester
Monday-Friday 6:30am-2pm
Satuday & Sunday 7am-2pm
256-4643
OCMP

$2.49 22oz Boomer mug of beer
The Ground Round
12 Beers on Tap
Golden Fries Potato Skins Chicken Fingers Mozzarella Sticks 20 Wings
LATE NIGHT APPETIZER SPECIAL
$5.00 8PM-CLOSE 7 DAYS A WEEK!
Thursday 9pm-midnight KARAOKE!
Positive ID Required 21 and older
Smoke, Eat, Drink, and Sing at THE GROUND ROUND!
Hampshire Mall - 582-0017

New World Theater presents
Celebrating 25 Years of New World Theater Eye
from the creators of Slanguage!
Created by STEVEN SAPP and MILDRED RUIZ
Music by PAUL THOMPSON and CARLOS A. PIMENTEL
Directed by TALVIN WILKS
TICKETS ARE: $15-general public; $8-low income patrons/seniors; $5-students. Call FAC Box Office 413-545-2811. For more info about the show, call NWT at 413-545-1972.
www.newworldtheater.org

The 18+ College Night
$4.00 over 21
$10.00 under 21
$2.00 off cover with this ad
Hippodrome
1700 Main Street
Downtown Springfield
(413) 787-0830
www.hipdome.com
Featuring The World Famous Hot Body Contest $100.00 Weekly Prizes Male and Female
Must Have Valid ID
Dress to Impress

Shear Bliss
Premieres
Asian Ceramic Hair Straightening Package!
• Permanent Bone Straight, gorgeous shiny hair Now!!
• Chinese Botanicals used by certified trained specialist
• SPECIAL STUDENT PACKAGE OFFER
Call for FREE Consultation Appointment
253-2322
479 West St., Amherst, MA
UMASS
Pleasant St.
West St. across from Cigo

Former Secretary of Labor
Robert Reich
will be speaking on
UMass and the Future of Public Higher Education
Wednesday, November 12, 5 PM
Mahar Auditorium
University of Massachusetts-Amherst
Free and Open to the Public
Sponsored by Massachusetts Society of Professors, NTA, Five College Lecture Fund, UMass Center for Public Policy and Administration, UMass Economics, English, Journalism, Political Science, Sociology, Women's Studies, and the Economics Departments of Amherst, Mt. Holyoke, Hampshire, and Smith Colleges

Are you ready for the challenge?
Start here.
Each day of our intense Winter Session equals an entire week of course material, which means that you can earn three credits in just three weeks! But not all Winter Session credits are created equal. There are fewer to choose from than at any other time of year. Save time and money.
You know you're ready. Start here. Classes begin January 5.
UMassAmherst Continuing Education
www.umassonline.net/winter • (413) 545-2414

Damaged Goods • By Jeff Knurek

Get Fuzzy • By Darby Conley

Eisie Hooper • By Rodney D. Knutson

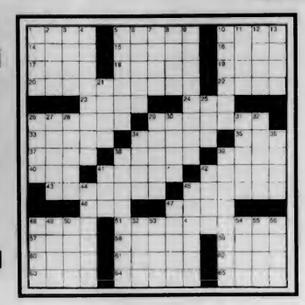
That's What She Said • By Derrick Gendron

1 in 40 Billion • By Meghann Rosales

Quote for the Day

"When it's all said and done, it's real and it's been fun. But was it all real fun?"
-Green Day

Today's Crossword Puzzle



Previous puzzle solved

Across
1 Pupil's reward
5 Savory jelly
10 Killed
14 Wanderer
15 Knife
16 Protective air
17 March 15, e.g.
18 Pasta covering
19 Stop working
20 Remarkable
22 "The Mammoth Hunters" author
23 Casalba cookies
24 Bowling ball
26 Communism origin
28 Summer flowers
33 All kidding —
34 New Style
35 Wedding announcement
37 Spoilers
38 Wish granter
39 Keyseed
40 Long, long time
41 Saurées
42 Dave of old films
43 Bypass
45 Rug
46 "Woah!"
47 Information
48 Leeway
51 End of the race
57 Light brown
58 Presses
59 Tarn
60 Fake move
61 Seedless orange
62 British boys' school
63 Pitch
64 Catch
65 Copenhagen native

Down
1 Cable choice
2 Comedian
3 Help a burglar
4 Young flowers
5 Boats up
6 Goes hang-gliding
7 Shore
8 Rugs
9 Polaroid hunters at work
10 Expedition
11 Hula lassie
12 Pennsylvania port
13 Barrier
21 Merchandises
25 TLC providers
26 Pertaining to mysteries
27 Custom
28 Enthused about
29 Territories
30 Pupil's place
31 Iceberg or Bjork
32 Cuffs
34 "Meet Me — Louis"
36 — out: uses thrifty
38 Fabled monsters
39 Embarrass
41 Connected to
42 Snooker, maybe
44 Traffic snarls
45 Disputes
47 Cheap restaurant
48 Take a scooze
49 Right, to Caesar
50 Assistant
52 Iraq neighbor
53 — Scotia
54 Least bit
55 Midday
56 Ocean bird of prey

The Harp
Irish Pub
413-548-6900 www.theharp.net
163 Sunderland Rd. - N. Amherst
Just north of the apartments
Great new deck!
WED. • Reggae Night Dance Party
THU. • Special Brew
FRI. • Open Irish Seisiun
SAT. • Mamasita
November Special!
Labatt Blue:
$1.75 A pint / $6.25 A pitcher
"Start your own tradition."

Dining Commons Menu

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

Lunch
- Baked Ziti
- Kickin' Chicken
- Beans and Rice (vegan)
- Gardenburger (vegan)

Dinner
- Turkey Cutlet
- Roast Beef
- Madras Tofu Curry (vegan)

Daily Weather Forecast

For Amherst

Wednesday
- High: 60
- Low: 43

Thursday
- High: 52
- Low: 29

Friday
- High: 43
- Low: 24

Production Crew

On staff today

Night Editor
Matt Brady
Photo Technician
Emilie Duggan
Copy Editor
Becky Horowitz
Production Supervisor
Shannon Farrington
Production Staff
Lindsay Clark/ Gerry Auger

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Don't take a day off yet. You need to finish what you've started.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
It's ok that you slept late this morning.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
From within you will discover your true capabilities.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Have sympathy. You aren't the only one who has it rough.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
You will get a childhood song stuck in your head. Ha ha.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Don't let the ants in your house.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Duck when people are aiming for your head.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
The depths of your heart are among the most sacred places.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Taste the rainbow.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Don't wear wool today, it will shrink.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Guys with long hair are either really hot or really ugly. There is no in-between.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Get a band-aid for that hang nail.

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Announcements

Grants up to $2000: The Student Affairs Cultural Enrichment Fund is available to RSO's, grad student organizations, and university departments that are planning events that enliven the cultural life at UMass. Next deadline is November 19. Call 545-3928 for more information or come by Room 416 Student Union.

Fraternities-Sororities- Clubs-Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with a proven CampusFundraiser 3 hour fundraising event. Our free programs make fundraising easy with no risks. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so get with the program! It works. Contact CampusFundraiser at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campus-fundraiser.com

Auto for Sale

93 Pontiac Bonneville SDN All Power Must Sell $1500 B/O 253-5537

Mountainview Auto Route 47 South in Hadley 585-0599 '89 Mercedes 300E Clean $3500 '94 Nissan Sentra Limited Edition $2850 '87 Honda Civic excellent transportation $950 '87 Saab 900 Automatic $950 '88 Dodge Caravan Very Clean 100,000 miles $1200

Auto for Sale

1992 Honda Prelude SI, Loaded, $3900 587-0242

96 Dodge Intrepid White runs good Power everything Brand new Pioneer CD/Stereo Must sell Asking $2400 Amy 413-222-5754

1992 Silver Ford Taurus Excellent condition $2400 118000K Call 549-3930 210-7393 All Power

$500!!! Police Impounds, Hondas, Chevy's, etc from $500. For listings. 1-800-319-3323 ext4554

Employment

PART-TIME POSITIONS 20+ hrs/wk; set your own schedule. Conduct surveys over the phone at our Hadley location—NO SALES! Evngs/wknds; hlth/dent/401(k); PVTA accessible. Email mvivian@fieldmarketinginc.com or apply in person, First Floor 100 Venture Way, Hadley, MA (888) 423-5381

Telephone Interviewers NO SALES! Conduct interviews over the phone at our Hadley location Flexible Evening and Weekend Hours $7.50/hour to start 20+ hours/week PVTA accessible For more info: 1-888-423-5381 FMI

Employment

$875 WEEKLY SALARY mailing our postcards from home. No experience necessary. FT/PT. Genuine Opportuni-ty. FREE supplies. Call 1708-686-0300 (24 hours)

Internship Motivated students seeking leadership outside the box. Gain experience in all aspects of running a small business. Average pay: $9300 Call 508-246-1230

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

!Bartending!$ $250/day potential No experience Nesc Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext 162

House for Rent

Amherst 3-4 Bedroom house. Hobart Ln. Available Jan. 1. $1650/month. Call 413-549-4001

Instruction

On the Rocks School Bartending. Become certified in one weekend. Great way to earn money. Call us toll free at 866-mix-5600. www.OTRBartending.com

Services

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

Services

SHEAR BLISS DAY SPA SERVICES Body Sugaring (waxing) for men and women *Safe *100% Natural *Effective 253-2322 https//shearbliss.image411.com

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

Travel

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Destinations, including Cruises! Foam Parties, Free Drinks and Club Admissions. Rep Positions and FREE trips Available. 1-800-231-4386 www.EpicureanTours.com

Travel

Spring Break 2004. Travel with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator to Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas and Florida. Now hiring campus reps. Call for group discounts. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com For more information contact STA Travel at 413-256-126

A "Reality" Spring Break 2004's Hottest Prices Book now... Free Trips, Meals & Parties www.sunsplashtours.com or 1800-426-7710

Collegian Classifieds: Visit the Campus Center Basement or call 545-3500!

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 12, 2003 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

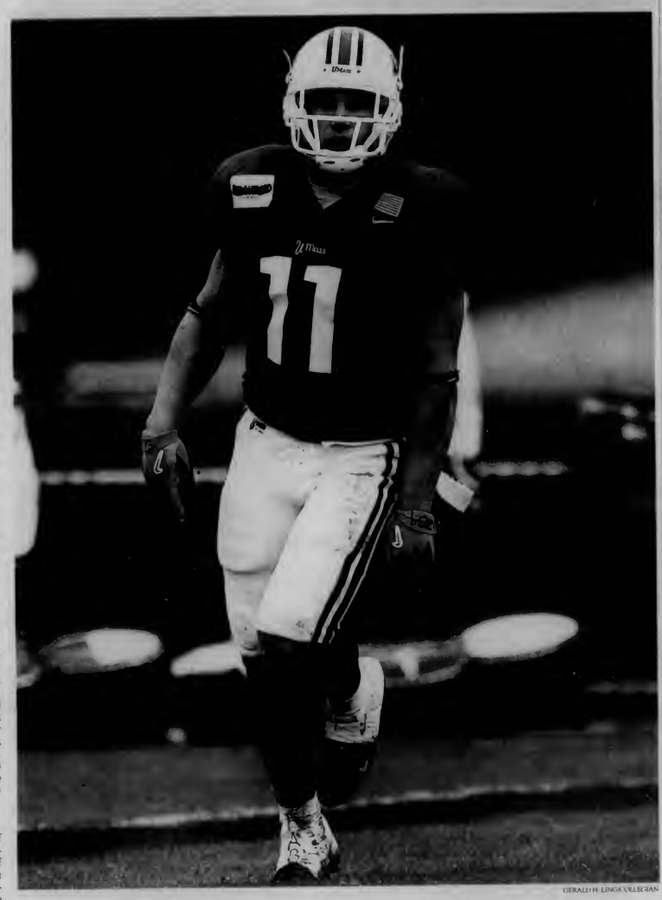
A-10 trio honored nationally

By Matt Brady
Collegian Staff

The Atlantic 10 put up a trio of national performers this week, sweeping the I-AA national awards presented by ESPN/USA Today. Massachusetts' Jason Peebler was named Offensive Player of the Week following his three-touchdown performance in a 30-17 win over Richmond at McGuirk Alumni Stadium on Saturday. Peebler made seven catches for 143 yards, and is now second in the conference in receiving following Saturday's performance, despite missing a pair of games due to injury.

Defensive end George Peterson of New Hampshire was named I-AA's Defensive Player of the Week for the role he played in the Wildcats' 20-17 triumph over James Madison on Saturday. Peterson made 10 tackles, forced one fumble, and recovered two others. He also posted four tackles for loss with 1 1/2 sacks in leading UNH to its second consecutive conference victory, the first time it turned that trick since 2000.

Maine's Arel Gordon was the third member of the A-10 to garner national honors this week, as he hauled in the Special Teams Player of the Week Award. The freshman became the first player in Black Bear history to return both a punt (75 yards) and a kickoff (100 yards) for touchdowns. He is the only player in the A-10 to pull off that feat in one game this season, and led the Black Bears to a 77-24 victory over Morgan State.



A SHIFT IN THE POLLS

Following this weekend's contests, the A-10 once again boasts four teams in the ESPN/USA Today Top 25. Northeastern, which was out of the polls for three weeks, is back in after a 24-14 defeat of previously unbeaten Delaware, and moved to No. 22. With the loss, the Blue Hens fell from second to sixth in the polls, while UMass was the benefactor of the Blue Hens' misfortune, advancing one slot to No. 3. Villanova fell the hardest this weekend, dropping all the way to 13th in the polls after a 34-32 loss to Hofstra on Saturday night.

HEMPSTEAD HURTING

While Northeastern's upset of Delaware last week was somewhat surprising, the results out of Long Island were downright astonishing. Villanova – previously with just one loss, to UMass two weeks ago – went in to

Continued on page 8

GERALD H. LINGA/COLLEGIAN

UMass wide reciever Jason Peebler had 143 yards and three touchdowns in Saturday's 30-17 victory over Richmond. It was Peebler's third 100-yard game this season. The Maroon and White travels to Delaware this weekend for a 12 p.m. kickoff.

Pöck earns HEA honors

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

Massachusetts (7-1-0, 4-1-0 Hockey East) defenseman Thomas Pöck became the second Minuteman to earn a weekly award this season, when he was selected as Defensive Player of the Week. The Klagenfurt, Austria native earned the award for his work in UMass' weekend sweep of Merrimack (2-6-1, 1-4-1 HEA), in which the senior scored two goals and two assists, and finished plus-five in the pair of games. Through the season, Pöck's plus-minus rating is a team-leading plus-10. That mark puts him in a tie with Providence's Stephen Wood and Maine's Prestin Ryan for the plus-minus lead among Hockey East defensemen.

ALL LOCKED UP

UMass also announced yesterday that the contract of coach Don Cahoon would be extended through 2008. Cahoon, the 2002-03 Hockey East Coach of the Year, is in his fourth season at the helm of the Minutemen, and with the extension will hold the reins for at least four more years. Cahoon has led UMass to a 42-64-7 record during his time in Amherst — including last year, when the Minutemen earned the second-most wins in the history of the program at 19-17-1 — and is 222-233-43 in his 17-year coaching career.

TRIO AT THE TOP

Although there are still plenty of games left in the young Hockey East season, three teams have set themselves apart from the pack. As expected, Boston College (5-2-1, 2-0 HEA) and New Hampshire (6-1-0, 3-0 HEA) have taken a strong hold of the top spots in the conference, although Mass-achusetts, with its 4-1 HEA record, currently sits atop the standings. All three teams have won their last two games, with BC beating UMass Lowell (3-3-2, 2-2-0 HEA) on Wednesday, and then Maine (7-2-0, 2-2-0 HEA) on Friday. New Hampshire downing Boston University (2-2-1, 1-2-0 HEA) and the Black Bears last weekend, and the Minutemen completing their home-and-home sweep of Merrimack.

The Eagles and Wildcats will meet tonight at the Verizon Wireless Arena in Manchester, N.H. With a win, UNH will enter a tie for first place with UMass, as each team would have eight points. BC will look to improve on its perfect conference record and grab a share of second place.

The game is likely to be an interesting battle between the Eagles' high-flying offense and the netminding mastery of UNH's Michael Ayers. Ayers shutout BU for a 4-0 victory on Friday, and stopped 34 straight shots after allowing three goals to Maine Saturday in the Wildcats' 6-3 win over the Black Bears.

Ayers earned CCM Player of the Week honors for his efforts, which included his fourth straight shutout of the Terriers, a

Continued on page 8

GERALD H. LINGA/COLLEGIAN

Getting ready

Anthony Anderson and the UMass basketball team prepares for its second preseason game against the Playaz this Thursday in the Mullins Center at 7p.m. The Maroon and White dropped its first pre-season game to the Harlem Globetrotters.

UMass drowns Terriers

Matt Barstow
Collegian Staff

She barely had time to dry off.

Roughly 60 seconds after taking silver in the 200-yard individual medley, Massachusetts swimming and diving sophomore Aimee Bourassa dived back into the pool to anchor the winning 200-yard free relay team.

The relay took place in Saturday's home opener that featured victories by both the men and women over Boston University.

In the women's competition, BU erased a 35-point deficit before falling short against the Minutewomen, 154-146. The defending A-10 champion UMass men's swimming and diving team appeared solid against a BU squad that finished second in last season's America East Championships, doubling BU's effort in a 200-100 victory.

Bourassa finished the day with two first-place finishes in the 500- and 1000-yard freestyle, with times of 5:16.81 and 10:50.07, respectively.

"Aimee had a very impressive day. She's from Canada where they swim meters; she'd swam 800 yards before, but this was her first time swimming 1,000," UMass women's coach Bob Newcomb said. "You can tell she's in great shape by the way she swam several events back-to-back without losing her stroke."

Bourassa's team-high four victories have all come in different events.

Senior tri-captains Diana Alberti, Christen Dexter and Lauren Rowel teamed up with freshman Nicole LeBarge to win their second consecutive 200-yard medley relay, shaving five seconds off last week's time.

Alberti, who holds the school record in the 200-yard fly, will be looked upon to lead the team in several mid-distance events throughout the season.

After surging to a 35-point lead after the first five events, the Maroon and White was able to withstand a BU charge led by sophomore Lidija Breznikar, who won three events for the Terriers.

Breznikar won the 200-yard butterfly, 200-yard breaststroke and 200-yard individual medley, with times of 2:08.20, 2:22.19 and 2:10.32, respectively.

"This was one the best dual meets we've had in years," Newcomb said. "I knew it was going to be close, and I'm very happy that the team rallied when it needed to."

Prior to Saturday's competition, the last six times BU and UMass squared off, the last relay race decided the women's meet.

The largest hurdle for Massachusetts proved to be the Terrier diving team. Led by last season's AEC Outstanding Divers of the Year, Victor Paguia and Stacy Gallacher, BU dominated the diving competition, sweeping all but one of the diving events.

Paguia's first-place finish in the three-meter dive helped BU to a season low three-victory meet.

Senior Joanna Walsh placed third in the one-meter dive, and freshman Mary Jenkins placed third in the three-meter dive for the Maroon and White.

While Gallacher took gold in both diving events for the women, freshman teammate Megan White finished four points behind Gallacher the Terriers.

On the men's side, junior Brandon Doane won the one-meter dive and placed second in the three-meter for UMass.

"BU has one of the best diving programs we'll face all year," Newcomb said. "Joanna continued to come up big for us, and as the only senior diver, it's imperative that she continues to excel."

Last week's A-10 co-Rookie of the Week Greg Chartier continues to have an outstanding freshman season. He led the Maroon and White to victory with three wins on the day.

Chartier took top honors in the 200-yard IM with a mark of 1:57.16. He was also victorious in the 500- and 1,000-yard free, with times of 4:46.95 and 9:52.66, respectively.

In Saturday's meet, Chartier equaled the total number of wins he had in the previous two competitions, which earned him conference honors.

Junior Dylan Smith, who ranked third in the 200-yard fly and seventh in the 500-yard free, matched Chartier's three wins.

Smith started the afternoon by taking top honors in the 100-yard fly with a time of 52.33, the 200-yard free (1:46.20) and 200-yard back (1:59.60).

"Dylan's intense dedication and training really showed this weekend," UMass men's coach Russ Yarworth said. "He's more of a butterfly and free swimmer, but he's in such good shape he was able to step in and race the backstroke, in place of the ill Evan Swisher."

Aside from Chartier, several other freshmen contributed to UMass' lopsided victory. Gordon Leonard tallied his first two-victory collegiate meet, taking top honors in the 100-yard free and 100-yard back, with times of 48:95 and 55:49, respectively, while fellow freshmen Mike Cordes and Jake Hogue both won their relay events.

The Daily Collegian

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 13, 2003 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 50

Reich speaks on higher education

BRENDAN O'MEARA/COLLEGIAN

Former U.S. Secretary of Labor, Robert Reich spoke to a crowd of supporters at the Mahar auditorium last night.

By Nicole Lewis
Collegian Correspondent

Former U.S. Secretary of Labor, Robert Reich, discussed economics and the future of public higher education last night to a packed Mahar Auditorium.

"The main purpose of education is not simply to generate high incomes for people," said Reich. "The major purpose of education ... is to assure that we have people who have full lives and are prepared to function in our democracy, and prepared to utilize their full talent."

Reich said that higher education benefits the economy, and the individuals who receive it. The economy relies on the students of higher education to keep it going.

"Eighty percent of our students go to public higher education, not private higher education," said Reich. "If we fail them, we are failing not only 80 percent of our young people around this country, but we are also removing rungs on the ladder of upward mobility."

Reich said that upward mobility depends on a lot of factors, but one of the most important is access to good education.

Reich explained that evolving technology has eliminated jobs and opportunities within the United States, with machines taking jobs that people once held. Reich cited ATMs, automatic grocery checkout aisles and vehicle service stations as examples.

"Technology itself is changing the very face of our work," said Reich. "Globalization and technology are putting a higher and higher premium on our ability to think critically, be creative and apply knowledge."

Reich spoke about globalization, and the negative effects that it has on the U.S. economy. He explained that with money leaving the country as investments, there is less money that is accessible.

"It's very difficult to tell what is an American company: corporations are rapidly becoming global," said Reich. "Even services are coming from around the world, work is being shipped out to India and the Philippines and China; the global labor market is intruding upon almost every industry."

Reich spoke about tax theories within government administrations, saying that the "trickle-down" tactics for taxing the wealthy is not effective. The theory suggests that if the wealthy are taxed less, they will invest their money in ways that will contribute to new businesses and jobs.

"Wealthy people, if they get extra money from a tax cut, are not going to turn around and spend that tax cut to stimulate the economy," said Reich. "The very definition of being wealthy is you are already spending as much as you want to spend."

Reich also noted that wealthy people are believed to invest extra income, but there is no guarantee that it will be spent in the United States, or even that they will spend it at all.

"We are now in the process of giving tax breaks to the wealthy on the supposition that they are going to invest it in ways that improve all of us," said Reich. "We are robbing our children of the kind of public higher education they need to succeed in this country."

Reich explained that with a tight economy, budgets around the country have been cut.

"Tuitions have been raised dramatically all over the country, removing some of the [opportunities] for young people from poor families who cannot afford public higher education," said Reich. "Students are now graduating with huge debts on their hands."

Before Reich spoke, an announcement was made that by the middle of January, professors' contracts should finally be paid, contracts that have been unfunded for two and a half years. The vote to fund the contracts was passed, but still must be approved by Governor Romney.

Reich congratulated the efforts of the professors' union, but said that the fight is not over.

"We have certain democratic responsibilities ... if we become cynical and negative and if we say we are residing to the way things are, we have given up the game," said Reich.

"The greatest obstacles to progressive change in Massachusetts or the United States is a sense of 'nothing can be done'— cynicism," said Reich. "You have got to organize, energize and mobilize. Nothing happens unless people make it happen."

State legislators pass bill to fund faculty and staff contracts

By Ferron Salniker
Collegian Staff

Massachusetts House and Senate leaders unveiled yesterday a new bill that will honor promised raises to faculty and staff at the University of Massachusetts.

The raises were supposed to take effect in 2002, but fell victim to the state's fiscal crunch.

Former acting Gov. Jane Swift vetoed spending on the raises in July 2002 as the state was reeling for a dramatic drop in revenues. The Democratic-controlled legislature opted not to override the veto.

"The leadership committee committed itself to having a vote to fund the contracts," said University Staff Association President Frank Olbris. "These raises are for the cost of living raises. I like to call them the 'getting back to purchasing' raises."

According to the Associated Press, House Ways and Means Chairman John Rogers, D-Norwood, said the raises would take effect beginning in January. He said the state could not afford to retroactively pay the back money owed to workers now.

"We will keep in mind that outstanding obligation as we move forward," as told to the Associated Press. "Hopefully the economy will one day allow us to honor the retroactive portion."

"The retroactive component will be paid in three installments sometime in the future, when the fiscal situation improves," said Sen. Stanley Rosenberg, D-Amherst. "In the bill, they authorize the payments of new raises but won't immediately pay for retro. They'll put it on a schedule of payment."

According to the Associated Press, House Ways and Means Chairman John Rogers, D-Norwood, said the money for the spending plan will come out of the state's rainy day fund, leaving about $500 million in the account.

In order to speed the bill through the legislature and hold down spending, Democratic leaders are discouraging lawmakers from trying to tack on amendments that would boost the bill's price tag.

"Hopefully any amendments that have anything to do with adding to the bottom line, the members will understand that the money's just not there," Ways and Means Chairwoman Therese Murray, D-Plymouth, told the Associated Press.

Rogers and Murray said they hope to have the spending bill approved by both chambers and placed on Romney's desk before the end of the day on Thursday. After Romney receives the bill, how quickly the bill will become law is still unclear. "The other component is that the governor is expected to veto the bill," said Rosenberg.

"The situation is that if the house and senate go to the governor for signatures he can do several things," explained Olbris. "He can do nothing and after two weeks the bill dies, which is called a pocket veto. He can veto parts of the bill, or he can veto it straight away."

Olbris explained that it appears that 130 representatives support the bill, more than the two-third majority required to override the veto.

The issue remaining for supporters of the bill if it is vetoed is that the legislator must be in session when the bill is vetoed in order for the bill to pass in a timely manner. If Romney does not veto the bill immediately, and delays the veto until the house is out of session, faculty and staff will continue the wait to have their contracts funded.

"It's been a long, hard battle ... the retroactive component is very loose but at least the base pay will be increased," said Rosenberg.

In addition to funding the faculty and staff contracts, the bill includes $10 million designed to ease budget cuts at UMass.

The $102 million spending plan, outlined in the bill, also addresses financial situations throughout the state, not just in higher education. The bill is designed to ease recent budget cuts to homeless shelters, rape crisis centers, courts and social workers.

According to the Associated Press, the bill also includes $10 million for the trial courts and another $8.7 million to help the legislature upgrade its computer systems.

Clark avoids topic of homosexuals in military

By Julie O'Donnell
Collegian Correspondent

MANCHESTER, NH — Despite four attempts by University of Massachusetts students, Democratic presidential candidate Gen. Wesley R. Clark and two of his key aides dodged answering questions Tuesday about the issue of gays serving in the military after he spoke to local veterans at an American Legion Hall.

UMass students sought out Clark during a visit to New Hampshire to commemorate Veterans' Day. Clark spoke about his dedication to the active military as well as retired vets. If elected, he said he promised to support and honor veterans. He also proposed a new Veterans' Security Plan that will include expanding healthcare.

When asked once before he spoke to the vets and once again after his speech about his feelings toward gays in the military, specifically if he would allow fellow candidate Rep. Dick Gephardt's daughter, who is gay, to serve in the military, Clark refrained from answering.

"Let's do it at another time, is that OK?" he said. He also refused to give a 'yes' or 'no' answer to the question, and said, "We have to get going."

Bill Buck, New Hampshire's Communication Director, and Clark's press secretary, was also questioned. He told the student reporter as he was getting into his car to "call me on my cell phone."

Student reporters also questioned Chris Lehane, Clark's strategist, formerly John Kerry's strategist about the issue. "[Clark's] policy is very clear," he said. "We must work with the military so they can change the policy that currently exists."

Lehane also said Clark did not answer the question because perhaps the students were acting "too aggressive."

Students on the UMass campus today voiced their opinions on the matter.

"[Clark] has no right to avoid the question," said Sam Livingstone, a communications major. "Being a political figure, he should have to answer the question."

Most local veterans who attended the event said they left with positive feelings toward Clark and were thrilled that he could have lunch with them.

In addition to speaking, Clark wrote a letter to the veterans. The last line read, "So on this Veterans Day, I salute you, and I pledge to you that I will fight for you and with you today, everyday and every other day of the year."

UMass President Wilson discusses budget proposals with SGA

By Ed Hudson
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts President Jack Wilson announced at last night's SGA meeting that the Massachusetts state legislature voted in favor of funding the UMass staff and faculty contracts $35 million with additional supplemental funding for the University campus raising the grand total to about $47.5 million. It was also announced that charges have been brought against an officer of the SGA.

According to Jack Wilson, President of the University of Massachusetts, the funding of the contracts came to fruition because the faculty groups involved were so well organized. He believes the fact that the faculty had a refined message made the funding possible.

"They are expressing a commitment to UMass and that's a good sign," said Jared Nokes, speaker of the Senate. However, Attorney General Mark Morrison said while he was impressed that Wilson was able to assist in delivering $47 million to the University in only 70 days as President of the University, he condemned the legislature for taking so long. He blamed the legislatures lack of timeliness for the early retirement of many professors. "This is why we have dirty bathrooms," he added.

Wilson addressed many issues at the meeting, which took place in room 163 of the Campus Center, ranging from recent budget cuts and funding problems to his and the University's mission for the commonwealth. Wilson said he has been meeting with many businesses, community groups, the legislature and other state industry officials.

"Every presidents' job is to make friends ... to make [students] degrees more valuable," he said. "I can't promise success. All I can promise is effort and hard work."

He said he has a strong passion for public education that provides opportunities for students who otherwise wouldn't have access to them. "We need a strong public university," he said.

Wilson said he has plans to make joint ventures with private groups for the building of new housing and other projects, similar to what UMass- Dartmouth has been doing.

"We need to get better housing and new housing," he said. "It's gone too long without that."

According to Wilson, the University's budget is $1.45 billion for this year and an estimated $1.6 billion for next. Of that $1.45 billion, he said, only $340 million comes from the state. He added that the problem of funding is compounded when the $300 million in annual research done by the University is taken into consideration.

The $150 million in cuts to the University budget in the past three years were "not a pretty sight," he said. "That forced some of the things we've done," he added referring to the significant increase in tuition and fees.

He said he plans to put more money into financial aid through private fundraising. "That's one of my goals," he said. "Our mission is to service the commonwealth ... to make sure education is accessible." Wilson said he wants to stabilize the University's relationship with the state. "It's not over yet," he said. "But we're heading in the right direction."

"Every legislator needs to know that UMass is in their hometown," he said.

According to Wilson, the Presidential Search Committee could find a permanent president by next summer but potentially as soon as next spring. He said it usually takes about nine months for such a process to conclude.

Anthony Pascoe, Chair of Rules and Ethics, announced that charges have been brought against an officer of the SGA. He declined to name the officer or elaborate on what the charges entailed, but he said a list of discrepancies against the officer regarding specific by-laws was dropped off in his mailbox last week. He also announced

Continued on page 3

EDITORIAL/OPINION PAGE 4
ABORTION
BOTH SIDES OF THE ARGUMENT
ARTS & LIVING PAGE 6
MICHAEL JACKSON
MJ RELEASES GREATEST HITS
SPORTS PAGE 12
TITLE FIGHT
UMASS ATTEMPTS TO CLINCH A-10
COMICS/CLASSIFIEDS PAGE 11

BRENDAN O'MEARA/COLLEGIAN

University of Massachusetts President Jack Wilson addresses the SGA at last night's meeting.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Jennifer Eastwood
Managing Editor Dan Lamothe
Business Manager Peter Foundas
Production Manager Scott Pihl
Night Supervisor Nick Markantonatos
Advertising Manager Sean Costello
Editorial Production Shannon Farrington
Arts & Living Editor Glen Straub
Comics Editor Molly Eggleston
Editorial Editor Paige Crum
News Editor Ferron Salniker
Photo Editor Gerald H. Ling
Sports Editor Andrew Merritt
Circulation Manager Kristen Weiss
Classified Advertising Marry Pappas
Distribution Manager Julie Beauchamp
Finance Manager Greg Stamm
Human Resource Sandra Marquez
Special Issues Betsy Feldman
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising David Bor
Assistant Business Jachyn Sorenson
Assistant Distribution Mark Legatic
Assistant Finance Richard Pacheco
Advertising Production Liza Lynch
Graphics Adviser Charlie Higgins
Layout Manager Lindsay Clark
Asst. Arts & Living Meghan Healy
Asst. Arts & Living Cameron J. Woods
Assistant Editorial Matthew Reid
Assistant News Erika Lovley
Assistant News Morris Singer
Assistant Photo Emilie Duggan
Assistant Sports Mike Marzelli
Assistant Sports Robert McGovern

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently owned, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Index Ejl, became the Collegian in 1907 and the Massachusetts Collegian in 1958. Published as the Daily since 1967. The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Truck bomb strikes Italian base in Iraq, kills 26

By Slobodan Lekic
Associated Press

NASIRIYAH, Iraq (AP) — A suicide bomber blew up a truck packed with explosives at an Italian paramilitary base yesterday, killing at least 26 people. The United States struck at the Iraqi insurgency hours later, destroying a warehouse in Baghdad and chasing attackers who were seen firing mortars.

The Nasiriyah attack was the deadliest against an American ally since the occupation began and appeared to send a message that international organizations are not safe anywhere in Iraq. It came on the same day the chief U.S. administrator for Iraq went to the White House to put forth proposals on transferring more authority to the Iraqis.

Col. Gianfranco Scalas said 18 Italians were killed: 12 Carabinieri paramilitary police, four soldiers, a civilian working at the base and a documentary filmmaker. A spokesman for the U.S.-led coalition said at least eight Iraqis also died. The bomber — whose nationality was not known — also died.

The blast wounded 79 people, 20 of them Italians, hospital sources and Italian officials said. Italians were stunned by their nation's single worst military loss since World War II and its first in the Iraq campaign. At Rome's tomb of the unknown soldier, the green-white-and-red flag rippled at half-staff, and parliament held a minute of silence.

Italian Premier Silvio Berlusconi pledged that Italy's mission in Iraq would not be derailed. Opposition leaders who opposed the deployment to post-war Iraq called on the government to withdraw the contingent.

Jalal Talabani, the head of the Iraqi Governing Council, called the slain Italians "martyrs of the fight for the freedom of Iraq."

There were conflicting accounts of the attack, which took place about 10:40 a.m. at a three-story building used by the Carabinieri's multinational specialist unit in Nasiriyah, 180 miles southeast of Baghdad.

Witnesses said the decoy car ran a roadblock in front of a square where the Italian barracks was located. Guards opened fire but as the vehicle sped away, the fuel tanker approached from the opposite direction and rammed into the gate of the building before exploding.

Italian Defense Minister Antonio Martino said the truck, followed by an armored car, approached the compound at high speed. Gunmen inside one of the vehicles opened fire at Italian troops guarding the entrance, he said. The guards returned fire, but the vehicle plowed through the gate, and then exploded, he added.

It was the 13th vehicle bombing in Iraq since Aug. 7, when a car exploded at the Jordanian Embassy in Baghdad, killing at least 19 people.

Yesterday's blast from the estimated 650 pounds of explosives collapsed all three stories of the building, gouged a 6-foot-deep crater in front of it, and set fire to parked cars. Secondary explosions from stored ammunition shook the area.

ANJA NIEDRINGHAUS/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Italian Army soldiers secure the scene next to their barracks which were destroyed by a car bomb in Nasiriyah, Iraq yesterday. A suicide truck bomber attacked the headquarters of Italy's paramilitary police in this southern city.

The scorched, twisted remains of military jeeps littered the parking lot, and bulldozers cleared rubble. Chunks of concrete and wiring hung from partly destroyed walls.

After nightfall in Baghdad, forces from the 1st Armored Division attacked a warehouse used by insurgents, setting off explosions that reverberated through the capital.

"The facility is a known meeting, planning, storage and rendezvous point for belligerent elements currently conducting attacks on coalition forces and infrastructure," the Pentagon said.

The mission was part of "Operation Iron Hammer," a new "get tough" policy for confronting insurgents.

Also yesterday, troops in Baghdad spotted attackers firing mortars, a statement by the 1st Armored Division said. The attackers fled in a van.

An Apache helicopter gunship discovered the van heading out of the city, near the Abu Ghraib suburb and opened fire, disabling the vehicle and killing two of the occupants, the statement said. A search of the area turned up one 82mm mortar.

write for news

Palestinians approve new government

By Mohammed Daraghmeh
Associated Press

RAMALLAH, West Bank (AP) — Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat swore in a new Palestinian Cabinet yesterday, getting the government he wanted after a long wrangle and setting the stage for a renewed push to implement the stalled, U.S.-backed "road map" peace plan.

The new government earlier won a vote of confidence from Palestinian legislators after Arafat — who appears to have survived the Israeli-American effort to sideline him — joined Prime Minister Ahmed Qureia in calling for an end to three years of violence that has claimed thousands of lives.

"The time has come between us and you Israelis ... to get out of this cycle of destructive war," Arafat said, referring to the violence that buried an ambitious effort to end a century of Arab-Israeli enmity.

Israeli officials said they will give the new premier a chance to restore calm, and Islamic militant groups said they will consider a cease-fire. Officials on both sides said they expected Qureia and Israeli Prime Minister Ariel Sharon to meet soon.

The approval of the Cabinet, which was sworn in yesterday, ended a two-month stalemate that stymied efforts to implement the peace plan accepted by both sides six months ago.

The plan authored by the United States, the United Nations, the European Union and Russia calls for an end to violence and the creation of a Palestinian state by 2005. In the interim, Israel is to freeze settlement construction and the Palestinian security forces are to dismantle militant groups — moves that have not occurred.

Qureia broke the stalemate Sunday by giving in to Arafat on the crucial question of who controls Palestinian security and police, leaving the veteran leader effectively in charge of most forces.

Parliament approved the Cabinet despite some lawmaker complaints it too closely resembled previous corrupt governments.

Israel and the United States, which accused Arafat of stoking terrorism, wanted the security agencies removed from his jurisdiction. In September, Israel declared it would act to "remove" Arafat.

But Israeli officials — who face public pressure to find a way out of the violence — suggested yesterday they primarily were interested in restoring quiet.

"If the new Palestinian government is serious about pursuing peace and takes action to dismantle the infrastructure of terrorism, they will find Israel to be a real partner," Israeli Foreign Minister Silvan Shalom said.

Raanan Gissin, Sharon's spokesman, urged Qureia to halt militant attacks on Israelis and consolidate security forces under one authority.

"We're prepared to give Ahmed Qureia a grace period and judge him by the results," Gissin said.

Speaking yesterday evening to a group of Canadian fund-raisers, Sharon did not refer directly to the new Palestinian government, but declared, "The Palestinians have come to realize that they cannot force us to surrender through violence, terrorism and incitement.

"We are prepared to make painful compromises for the sake of real peace," he said, but ruled out concessions over security issues.

The two sides reached an impasse under Qureia's predecessor, Mahmoud Abbas, over his rejection of the peace plan's call — and Israel's demand — that the Palestinians disarm and dismantle militant groups.

Israel continued raids against the militants, a brief truce declared by the militants collapsed in August and Abbas resigned in September.

Qureia, who was leading a small "emergency government," has said he would use precision — not force — to help end militant attacks. Yesterday, he urged Palestinian militants to end all violence.

Both the Hamas and Islamic Jihad groups — which have staged more than 100 suicide bombings in recent years — indicated they were considering Qureia's call.

Adnan Asfour, Hamas spokesman in the West Bank, said the group "was ready to study any new hudna (cease-fire) offer."

Nafez Azzam, a senior Islamic Jihad leader in the Gaza Strip, said the group welcomes "any dialogue with our brothers in the Palestinian Authority" but believes a truce depends on Israel stopping its "bloody aggression."

SGA addresses investigation of accused senators that the Rules and Ethics subcommittee has proceeded with an investigation of four senators serving in the SGA.

Continued from page 1

Brian Long, Secretary of University Policy, expressed his disappointment regarding the fact that many members of the faculty Senate have not responded to the attempts by appointed student members to reach them. "I'm a little ticked off," he said.

SGA President David Carr also announced that he has been working to create a required class for incoming freshmen called "UMass 101" which would meet once a week for 10 weeks. The class will address student rights and responsibilities.

Secretary of Diversity Issues Russell Plato announced that the next Diversity Roundtable would take place on Nov. 24 at 3 p.m. The location is still pending approval.

BRENDAN SMALARA/COLLEGIAN

SGA President David Carr proposes a new class for incoming freshman, called "UMass 101," last night during the Senate metting.

State prison reform panel looks at inmates' civil rights

By Ken Maguire
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) — A panel headed by former Attorney General Scott Harshbarger convened for the first time yesterday, meeting behind closed doors to consider changes to the state prison system following the cellblock murder of defrocked priest John Geoghan.

The closing of the meeting, as directed by Gov. Mitt Romney, prompted criticism from Common Cause, the open government advocacy group Harshbarger once led.

The commission, appointed by Romney after the slaying of Geoghan, is conducting a "top to bottom" review of the Department of Correction.

The 15-member commission is expected to examine issues related to inmates' civil rights, officers' safety, inmate classification, internal investigations, disciplinary policies, and post-release community impacts.

No decisions were made yesterday, Harshbarger said after the meeting.

"It was a very broad array of things that people are interested in focusing on, at almost every level, from leadership and governance, culture, issues of re-entry," Harshbarger said. "The discipline for us is going to be being realistic in what we can do, but the limitations have not been imposed on us in any way."

Geoghan, 68, a key figure in the Boston Archdiocese clergy abuse scandal, was allegedly beaten and strangled by a fellow inmate at the Souza-Baronowski prison in Shirley on Aug. 23.

"The specific picture is using the Geoghan incident as a basis to examine the gaps," Public Safety Secretary Edward Flynn said after giving the commission its charge. "What are the gaps between what we do and what we say we do? What are the gaps between our practices and best practices?"

But the public and press won't get a firsthand look at all the deliberations, despite Harshbarger's reputation — built while he was state attorney general and Common Cause president — as a champion of open government.

"This is fundamentally an advisory group," said Eric Fehrnstrom, a spokesman for Gov. Mitt Romney. "We believe their best work is done away from the harsh glare of the TV cameras. They're not subject to open meeting laws."

Harshbarger agreed, but said some hearings would be made public.

"We will have public hearings, no question everybody wants to do that," he said. "I can assure you this will be an open, inclusive process, but I also want to make sure it's a good deliberative process and we fulfill our responsibilities to the people who appointed us."

A report from the commission is expected in six months.

Geoghan was serving a 9-to-10 year prison term for groping a 10-year-old boy, but he was accused in civil lawsuits of molesting nearly 150 boys over three decades as a Boston-area priest.

John L. Druce, the inmate charged with killing him, has pleaded innocent.

Harshbarger, before taking a job at a Boston consulting firm last year, fought for open government as president of Common Cause. He also was a strong enforcer of public meeting laws as state attorney general and Middlesex County district attorney.

Pam Wilmot, director of the Massachusetts chapter of Common Cause, said that governmental bodies, regardless of the open meeting law, should try to meet publicly "to the maximum extent possible."

"When meetings are closed, there's always the risk that the public will have less trust in the outcome of any deliberations or resulting policies," Wilmot said. "The very beginning, when the process is being set up, that's a very crucial time."

Public Safety Committee Chairman Sen. Jarrett Barrios, D-Cambridge, who is a commission member, said he understands the administration's goal.

Hey Seniors! Need Help with Your Job Search?

Come to a Job Search Made Easy Workshop!

TODAY! Thursday, Nov 13
1:30 pm
•
Tuesday, Nov 18
3:00 pm
•
Wednesday, Nov 19
12 noon

All Workshops take place in 104 Career Services Bldg.
(across from the Newman Center)

For more information about Career Services, go to www-ccn.acad.umass.edu or call us at 545-2224

CareerServices

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 13, 2003

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Censorship of the press: intolerable at all levels

It has been said many times that money speaks louder than words. On Tuesday, a powerful and prestigious newspaper organization made that perfectly clear again.

The American Society of Newspaper Editors canceled a $55,000 grant to Hampton University this week. The funds were supposed to be used for a program in summer of 2004 dedicated to training high school journalism teachers.

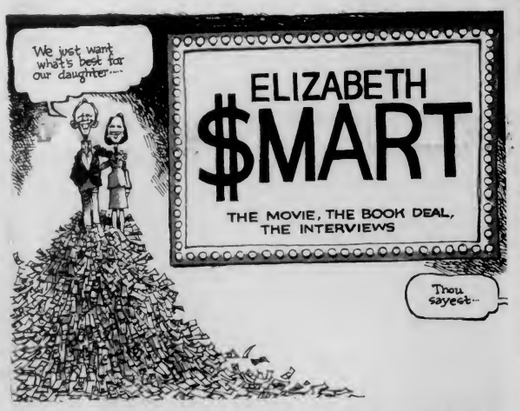
The society pulled their funding to make a point: The university confiscated the Oct. 22 issue of the school's student newspaper after it was printed without a letter from the school's president on the front page, according to the Associated Press.

"We're an organization that is devoted to the interests of newspapers and is devoted to the First Amendment and everything it stands for in our society," ASNE President Peter Bhatia told the Associated Press. "The actions that [JoAnn] Haysbert took fly in the face of that."

In The Massachusetts Daily Collegian's view, the situation at Hampton University stands as a classic case of censorship of the press. While the Hampton Script's student staff may have had their hands tied while dealing with university administration, the ASNE had a way of holding them accountable for their actions. For that, they should be applauded.

While it is certainly unfortunate for those directly effected by the pulled funding for the journalism program, the blame should not be placed on the society — the blame should be placed on the University. The ASNE response to the behavior of Hampton University's administration should not be surprising. To ask the society to fund a journalism program on the very same campus where the administration openly censors its own student press would have been asking them to compromise their own standards of journalistic ethics and integrity.

The situation at Hampton University is one that The Collegian would never have stood for. According to the AP, Script staff members said university employees were instructed to confiscate all newspapers on campus after the staff made the relatively easy editorial decision to run a story on the cleanup of the school's cafeteria after more than 100 health violations were uncovered on the front page.



Haysbert had requested the front page to run a letter criticizing media coverage of the violations and to explain how the school took steps to correct the problems. The staff ran the letter on page three, running their story on how the cafeteria passed a city health inspection on the front page.

The Script's editorial decisions mirror the choices The Collegian would have made in the same situation, and we applaud The Script for not folding to orders their staff says administration made to not deliver the newspaper once the issue was printed.

The Hampton University situation serves as a strong reminder that attempts to censor the press — particularly, the student press — are alive and well. The ASNE should be praised for standing by their journalistic beliefs, beliefs that The Collegian also holds steadfast. No legitimate newsgathering organization, be it professional or otherwise, should be subject to the restrictions that Hampton University administration attempted to impose on their press.

Information from The Associated Press was used to write this editorial.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

College marks time to find an identity

Robert Carey

College has always been known as a strange tenure in one's own life. In many respects, this particular chapter will determine how proceeding chapters will play out. Some people pick up the salt of the earth from their bare feet and become hippies. Others pledge fraternities, get their asses paddled in some bizarre ritual and are thus forever interned into whatever randomly selected Greek letters they have decided to adopt.

Who's to say what course is the proper one to take, certainly not an emotional invalid like myself. Different strokes for different folks, and oh, how many strokes there are. There are those in college only looking for the pre-med, Amherst College sugar-daddy or sugar momma (I include myself in this category) who, while seeking this, take on an inane major like communication, sports management or something obscure like the history of western literature.

The ability to offer a multiple number of perceptions is probably the greatest attribute of University of Massachusetts. In spite of these budget cuts and the problems with the honoring of contracts, where else can gays strut their flamboyance freely, and a lesbian shave her heads without ridicule? Certainly not in Eastern Mass.

Strange things happen when nobody gives a damn. People begin to take on their true colors. As students, many of us being from the loathed eastern parts of the state, it's important to take these colors into consideration. The greatest importance of living in a college town is this accepting outlook on life. Sure, there are those who will expect financial retribution for returning your cell phone to you. But you ignore these needle heads and embrace the rare spices of human condition around you.

When I went to the University of Connecticut, for the longest year of my life, there was a case down there of some locals roughing up a college student because he happened to be walking past the rainbow center. I tried to imagine in my head what type of people would carry out such atrocities at UMass, but I just couldn't comprehend it. For one reason, the guilty party would be so busy busting head that they'd have knuckles as purple as a junior high kids in an unsupervised study hall.

As students, we have a right to be experimental, to be accepting, and to be, dare I say, liberal.

As students, we have a right to be experimental, to be accepting and to be, dare I say, liberal. College breeds many humanitarians; that's why, in case you haven't noticed, so many cars stop at cross walks around here instead of just driving over them, as we do so often in the evil eastern part of the state. Out of all the verbs conducted in anyone's college career, the most important the verb: "to be."

For Shakespeare, this action was the greatest of all contemplative questions: "To be or not to be?" To the Romans, there was no more important verb than "to be," and they had all sorts of ways of saying it: sum, sumus, eram, eras, eramus ... Romans viewed the state of being as the most essential attribute to your animus, or your soul, the only thing that was free from the powers at be, and the only thing worth dying for.

College should be for everyone a matter of soul searching. College isn't all about classes that teach you bull shit rhetoric and worthless equations. College is the search for genuine identity, which is really why a college diploma looks so good on a resume.

We are the representatives of a higher intellectual class; our actions classify our social beliefs. And are we going to close our ears to Noam Chomsky? Ignore Howard Zinn? And decide not to listen to Built to Spill, Modest Mouse and the Dirt Bombs because it's too emotional?

The great carrot of modern civilization is Britany Spears and "Reality" television. To bit upon these banes will make you a slave, a beast of burden to a rotten system of exploitation. Your soul and self-identity will be consumed by the wave of conformity, which if you haven't already noticed is profitable to others. Forge your own character, though it maybe hard, and make your college education worth your while.

Robert Carey is a Collegian columnist.

Opposing the UMass picketing code

Ian Trefethen

We'd like to think that change can be made through peaceful, calm ways. Unfortunately, often the most necessary change does not come by petitioning the system; it comes by disrupting it. Slavery in the United States took a war to abolish. Wars are very disruptive. A century later, civil rights activism relied heavily on the sit-in, the unlawful demonstration and other tactics that broke the law on purpose. Without these forceful means, the resistant state and federal governments never would have been open to civil rights legislation. The whole idea of civil disobedience is that laws are broken on purpose to create the change that wasn't happening otherwise.

Disruption is often necessary to create needed change. It's part of our world history, our history as a nation, and our history as a campus. In 1992, ALANA students took over Whitmore to force the University of Massachusetts administration to confront the institutional racism of the University, as evident in the lack of students and faculty of color, lack of support programs, low retention rate of students of color and other failures on the part of the University to oppose the results of racism. The result of the protest was the ALANA Agreements. In 1997, it was clear that the school wasn't keeping its promises, and Goodell was taken over for six days to remind the administration that this was serious. The school was reinforcing the racism in our society, and it took disruptive protest to get everyone to wake up and try to change it.

If our rights are being violated, and traditional means do not meet our needs, we must be disruptive to be heard.

In the spring of 2002, there was a sit-in at Whitmore to protest the school's refusal to recognize the undergraduate Resident Assistants' right to unionize. The RA's voted in favor of joining a union. The Massachusetts Labor Relations Board ruled in favor of the RA's right to organize. Protesters who were locked down in an office were read the Picketing Code and then arrested; UMass RA's were fired, students were given threatening letters and academic probation. These students could have been expelled, simply for confronting the administration on its illegal actions. The school is now at the bargaining table.

In college, we supposedly learn about how the world works. This is not just for the sake of knowing; we need to develop an analysis so that we can make the world a better place. In college, we are encouraged to explore ourselves and the world. Protest is essential to this experience, not just to change specific things, but to learn how to make change.

The UMass Amherst Picketing Code states that students "have a right to demonstrate on University premises provided, however, that no such demonstration shall be permissible which for any reason of time, place, or type of behavior materially disrupts class work or other University business, or involves substantial disorder or invasion of the rights of others." The code states that students can be expelled for violation of this code.

The code can be interpreted as a way to protect the "rights of others." At the same time, however, it strips us all of our rights. If change needs to be made, if our rights are being violated, and traditional means do not meet our needs, we must be disruptive to be heard. It's very easy for the administration to ignore protest when people are calmly demanding their rights; they do it all the time. Disruption is key to making change on campus and in the world.

Historically oppressed groups are affected the most by this code. Racism, sexism, heterosexism, classism, ableism and other forms of oppression are realities in this society. UMass is not exempt from these oppressions. When the system isn't meeting your needs and change isn't happening through "appropriate" means, disruptive protest is all you have left to make sure your rights are respected.

The administration should not have the power to expel us when we confront it on its wrongs. In 1997, 70 percent of voting students voted for the Student Government Association to oppose the Picketing Code. This issue will continue to repress us every time we need change the most. Let's rise up now and oppose the Picketing Code!

Ian Trefethen is a UMass student.

A little bit of luck ... goes nowhere

Sanam Hakim

People love the concept of magic. It's true. Hypothetically speaking, if a little fairy came down to me right now, waved a wand in my face and said, "Here, have an honors masters degree," I would be very happy and take it with a smile. I might even go further to say that if that fairy said, "You can have an honors masters degree if you do 10 jumping jacks right now," (assuming that I am convinced that this is a real fairy) I would probably do it.

However, these magical flying fairies do not exist. They are the product of a creative mind. The concept of a fairy is showing the powers of the outskirts of the mind's creativity, and not the powers of a little tiny woman with wings that can make your dreams come true.

One of the worst parts of my day is checking my e-mail and finding an e-mail with the subject, such as "Pass this on if u want ur crush to kiss u tomorrow!" Even worse is opening an e-mail from an old friend titled something neutral like "hey," and seeing the scroll bar on the right shrink rapidly after opening it. After scrolling down the thousands of e-mail addresses of the victims of these ridiculous pass-me-on's, there is a little bunny with wings and a halo made out of asterisks, with the message: "Send this to 20 people in 20 minutes or u will have bad luck 4 evah." How cute. A bunny.

The sad part is that there is a slight fear associated with deleting these e-mails. Will deleting this e-mail really give me bad luck forever? Will my crush really kiss me tomorrow if I send this to all of my friends? Will I be a lonely old woman rocking back and forth in my rocking chair with three kittens because I deleted the cute little bunny from college? No.

Along with almost every other unrealistic thing you hear, these e-mails are superstitions. Superstitions offer you eternal happiness in exchange for sending an e-mail to 20 friends, or knocking on wood, or keeping a ladybug alive.

Take ladybugs for example. There are many superstitions associated with them. There are two main superstitions attached to ladybugs.

It is not good luck when a ladybug lands on you. It doesn't even make you special if a ladybug lands on you.

Superstition two: It is good luck when a ladybug lands on you.

It is not good luck when a ladybug lands on you. It doesn't even make you special if a ladybug lands on you. There are about 500 ladybugs in my window alone. At some point during my day, one of these things will fall on me. Every day is not a lucky day, and even if it were, it still wouldn't be. If every day is a lucky day, then I would not know what unlucky is, therefore eliminating the concept of a lucky day in the first place.

Superstition two: Killing a ladybug is bad luck because ladybugs bring lots of money.

So, if I want to be rich in the future, I have to collect all of these ladybugs that, on a side note, are all over my dorm room, and keep them alive for as long as I can. That way, when I graduate, I will be the luckiest girl ever and will become rich. Realistically, however, after college is over, I will not have lots of money. I will have lots of ladybugs. That's it.

In general, I think the ladybug superstition has kept more ladybugs alive than necessary. Ladybugs are horrible creatures. They get into your room through holes that you can't even find, and they bring all of their friends. Then they plant eggs in your light. After they have all of their babies and friends, they spread all over your ceiling, which is particularly bad if you have the top bunk. Then, when you want to kill them, everyone will look at you like you are a horrible monster because you are killing lucky ladybugs.

In conclusion, aside from my desire to encourage all the students on campus to kill all the ladybugs and stop passing around "e-mail bunnies," I'd like to encourage people to think about the logic behind superstitions. You won't be handed the world by an asterisk bunny or shown your financial happiness by a spotted bug on your arm. The time you spend even considering the possibility could be spent working toward making the possibility a reality. Make your own dreams come true, because no fairy will do it for you.

Sanam Hakim is a Collegian columnist.

Mandatory Meeting

Tuesday, Nov. 18
7:30 p.m.
in
The Collegian Newsroom

All columnists must attend

President Bush signs bill regarding abortion

Changing sides: pro-choice to pro-life

Becky Martins

For decades, abortion has been a loaded subject. Everyone is allowed their own opinions on the issue, yet oftentimes, this leads to tension and disagreements. My purpose here is to share information I recently learned. I am not stating what beliefs are correct or incorrect. Any comments made are simply opinions to which I am wholly entitled.

Over a week ago, President Bush signed a bill making it illegal to have partial-birth abortions (PBA), also known as Dilation and Extraction (D&X) abortions. As expected, he was immediately met with both criticism and approval from political peers, doctors and the American public. Pro-choice supporters were enraged that government officials were determining what women could do with their bodies during pregnancy. Pro-life individuals were satisfied that PBA would now be an illegal procedure to perform in American abortion clinics. Currently, several judges have put bans on this law, making it ineffective until it is looked at more "constitutionally."

Before Bush signed this bill, I would have labeled myself as Pro-choice. I believed that no pregnant woman should be told what she can or cannot do with her body, especially by a politician. After initially hearing of Bush's decision, I was outraged that he could have signed such a bill, especially after former President Bill Clinton had vetoed similar bills twice, due to the attention it lacked regarding the woman's health. But while I still believe in free will, recently, some of my views on abortion have changed after researching the procedures.

When a doctor performs an abortion by the third month of pregnancy, I do not consider it to be murder. Personally, when women have abortions during their first trimester, I believe the 'child' to be nothing more than developing cells. According to gravityteen.com, we may mature as our organs form, but we show more human-like characteristics further into the pregnancy, such as reacting to our mother's voice or moving within the uterus. During the first trimester, a woman may need to have an abortion, such as in instances of rape, incest or health reasons. I believe under these circumstances, a woman should be able to terminate her pregnancy in its earliest stages, if needed.

But after the first trimester, the developing fetus assumes many more characteristics of a child. According to gravityteen.com, after month six, the infant could be born into the world early if necessary and survive. Thus, by making partial-birth abortions illegal, Bush was trying ban procedures that terminated pregnancies in the final trimester. And while I do not always agree with our president, I see where he is coming from. To me, aborting a fetus after the first trimester very similarly resembles murder. What makes the procedure worse, though, is the manner in which it is done.

The Web site www.nrlc.org/abortion/pba/diagram.html outlines the process of PBA quite clearly. First, the baby's leg is grabbed with forceps and pulled out of the canal. Next, the abortionist delivers the baby, except for the head, which remains inside the patient's body. He or she then punctures the infant's skull with scissors and inserts a suction tube into the large hole previously made. Finally, the child's brain is sucked through the tube causing the skull to collapse, and the dead body is removed from the patient. Remember, this occurs while the child is fully able to survive outside of the womb, if delivered.

I believe I hold views on both sides of the abortion argument.

After learning what PBA entailed, I was horrified. My heart went out to the children whose lives were taken in such an inhumane manner. I could not believe such a practice was legal in the United States. I also began to understand why many people felt strongly about making the procedure illegal. Thus, my original views on abortion began to shift.

It is impossible to determine when a fetus is truly considered a child. Some will argue it is at the moment of conception. In other cases, people believe a baby exists when it exhibits more human characteristics. But my argument here is that having abortions later in the pregnancy are most times unnecessary and inhumane to the child.

A few doctors and judges have argued since this bill was signed that a mother's health would be jeopardized if the process was made illegal. Maybe in rare cases, this could happen. But after researching partial-birth abortion, many doctors have made clear the procedure would be unnecessary for a mother to have so late into her pregnancy. My own suggestion would be to add an exception to the law for extreme cases. But mainly, the health of the child is what is at risk here, since it has no chance of defending its own life.

This column is not about religion. It is also not about politics. Instead, it is about how we treat fellow human beings. I never really categorized myself as pro-life, but now, I believe I hold views on both sides of the abortion argument. I know not everyone will agree with what I have written. However, I am only making clear the inhumane practices I only recently found that occurred. I still believe women should have the right to choose what they do with their bodies. I just hope their decisions are unselfish, and that they keep in mind the life they carry inside of them.

Becky Martins is a Collegian columnist.

On the Net: www.gravityteen.com/prenatal/ninemonths.com

Threat of reversing of Roe v. Wade

Michael W. Lenz

On Jan. 22, 1973, the United States Supreme Court handed down a ruling in the landmark case of Roe v. Wade. The nine-justice panel ruled that the government cannot prohibit abortion, thus making the practice legal during the first and second trimester.

Fast-forward to November 2003. Today, the high court's decision of more than 30 years ago remains one of the most controversial and discussed decisions in recent history. Should women have the right to choose or should power be vested in the states and federal government to prohibit abortion?

There are those who contend that the right to an abortion is not only morally wrong, but that having the option provides an escape route from the consequences of irresponsible sexual behavior. There are also those, however, who argue that abortion is a personal decision that should be made between doctor and patient. The men and women who share this view believe the right to choose falls under the fundamental right of privacy, which is the basis of the court's 1973 ruling.

In our age of eroding civil liberties, women are quickly realizing that their right to choose is in serious jeopardy.

In recent years, a number of laws have been enacted in several states that severely restrict a woman's constitutional right to choose. Many women and men of Generation Y are horrified by the increasing influence of the pro-life side to strip women of this basic liberty. With a conservative administration in office, coupled with a majority of Republican-appointed justices on the Supreme Court, how can we be sure that the decision in Roe v. Wade will not be overturned?

The decision in Roe v. Wade was and still is a victory for civil liberties activists who believe that privacy is indeed a fundamental right. It is hard to believe that as recently as 1964, state laws existed that banned contraceptive use among married couples. In 1965, the court's decision in Griswold v. Connecticut prohibited states from banning contraceptives for married couples.

Later, in the 1972 decision in Eisenstadt v. Baird, the court granted the use of contraception for unmarried couples as well. Following both cases, the opportunities for American women increased. Due to the legalization of contraception, unwanted pregnancies decreased, female incomes rose and suicide deaths among young women decreased.

Doesn't the same hold true for a woman's right to choose? Single women who were once forced to drop out of high school and live in poverty because they were unable to support their young children now have the opportunity to reverse their doomed fates. Prior to Roe v. Wade, it was oftentimes challenging for a woman, in cases of rape, to prove that she had been sexually abused. Today, females do not need to provide proof — once an unavoidable ordeal.

Unfortunately, in our age of eroding civil liberties, women are quickly realizing that their right to choose is in serious jeopardy. Since 1980, pro-life activists have taken several steps to restrict abortion practices.

No case, however, was as large a setback for pro-choice activists as the 1992 decision in Planned Parenthood v. Casey. It was in this decision that the court, led by conservative Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist, upheld Roe v. Wade, but also held that states can restrict abortions even in the first trimester for non-medical reasons.

Additionally, the court held that new state laws must not place an "undue burden" on women seeking abortion services. According to planned-parenthood.com, however, women, not authorities, have to prove that the regulations are damaging. Other state restrictions include the following:

-Young pregnant women have to include their parents or a judge in the decision to abort.
- Establishing a waiting period between a visit to an abortion clinic and the actual procedure.
-Requiring that information (pamphlets) discouraging women from having operations be offered.
-Total abolition of second-trimester abortions.

What can be done to ensure that women retain their most intimate privacy rights?

It is up to the men and women of our generation to write to our senators and congressmen and plead with them not to confirm any of President Bush's appellate or Supreme Court appointees who harbor anti-abortion views.

The men and women of Generation Y can protest the latest state laws restricting the right to choose, and we can inform friends about the current conservative agenda that threatens to overturn Roe v. Wade.

Finally, we can get involved in the presidential and state elections in 2004. In both cases, your vote can make a difference.

Information was used from www.planned-parenthood.com and www.findlaw.com for this column.

Michael W. Lenz is a Collegian columnist.

Little Pete: the kid, myth and legend

Stephanie O'Shea

Around the tail end of the Clinton administration, there was a rumor floating around the Bay State that Britney Spears was going to attend University of Massachusetts. Those who heard this questionable news used their hands like a balance, decided that swimming around in a tank full of money like Scrooge McDuck outweighed living in Sylvan, and debunked the gossip as hearsay and conjecture. There is good news for the self-esteem of Amherst, however, because Danny Tamberelli, little Pete from "The Adventures of Pete & Pete," is at Hampshire College finishing up his last semester as a music major.

If there is anything that I love more then famous people, it is seeing them in three dimensions. I first wrote my proverbial mission statement to meet Danny last year, when it seemed like everyone except for me was spotting the chubby red headed kid from Nickelodeon around town. Fuel was added to my fire this past summer when reruns of his show were airing twice a day on Noggin, channel 223 on digital cable. My most favorite episode is "What We Did on Our Summer Vacation," when Pete, Pete and Ellen tried to track down Mr. Tastee, the ice cream man who never removed his plastic head, after scaring him off by asking too many personal questions. Little Pete's desperation can be felt when Danny yells "TASSSTTEEE!" after standing lookout in his bathing suit on a high dive for hours on end. Someone get that kid an award.

My plan got off the ground two weeks ago when I found a flyer under my door saying that Special Brew was to play at the annual Halloween party at The Harp. I remembered that the name of Danny's jam band reminded me of beer, and after asking around, my suspicions were confirmed. Naturally, I showed up at the bar with a Kodak Max HQ disposable camera and a thirst for obnoxiousness. I now have an entire stack of pictures of Danny gyrating on his bass dressed as a farmer. The one that is going on the Christmas card has me strategically dancing in front of him while wearing a headband with eyeballs on top. Danny looks exactly the same as he did in the '90s, and he still loves to rock.

As if my low grade stalking was not enough of a conversation piece, my friend Dave called me at midnight this past Saturday while I was at a DuckTales Web site verifying Scrooge McDuck's name. He challenged me to guess who was at the Amherst Brewing Company, and I knew right away that it was indeed little Pete taking the edge off. Danny agreed that I could interview him if I could get there within 15 minutes. I threw on some pants and ran to my car with a notebook.

Danny was a chill young man, especially since he let me sit and talk with him at the bar, despite it being his girlfriend's birthday. Also, he did not call the authorities when I told him the envelope I was holding contained his glamour shots. I asked him about being recognized, and he said it is only a hassle when he encounters a drunk trying to be a comedian for friends. Good thing I was sober.

Danny has not worked with Nickelodeon since he began college, but he is credited as Turtle in "Igby Goes Down." He still keeps up with big Pete, Mike Maronna, who unfortunately dropped out of SUNY Purchase during his last semester after a tiff with a professor. I asked Danny if he feels a little whack because he spent his childhood on a television set as opposed to on a swing set in his backyard. "The Adventures of Pete & Pete" was filmed in New Jersey, where he is from, so luckily the answer is no.

Danny and I wrapped up our conversation in 10 minutes, because the birthday train was ready to leave. I shook his hand and thanked him for putting up with me. As I was bursting with pop culture joy, Danny ventured toward Antonio's wearing a puffy blue vest but sans his token red and black plaid hat. My mission was complete, and I did it with tact. It is important to remember that although he lives in our hearts as the young boy with a tattoo of a woman named Petunia on his arm, little Pete is now regular sized Danny.

Stephanie O'Shea is a Collegian columnist.

Concerning donkeys in the Middle East

Gilad Skolnick

A donkey was murdered this past March.

He didn't do anything to deserve it. A loyal worker and never too stubborn, he didn't have much choice in his last task. It wasn't enough for them to wrap explosives, chemicals and rusty nails on men and women, but now they resorted to abusing animals.

One of the Palestinian Authority's most recent tactics is to strap explosives to animals and send them toward Israelis. When the donkey is brought close enough to the victims, the explosives are detonated. The nails are added in to tear apart any flesh that somehow escaped the explosives.

How is Israel supposed to react to this? Run away whenever they see a donkey? Kill every suspicious donkey in sight? Killing random animals that didn't do anything is wrong?

Arafat and his cronies have even managed to piss off the organization People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals. PETA was so alarmed by the use of animals in an effort to murder Israelis that they sent Arafat a letter demanding he stop this gross act. He never responded, probably too busy siphoning Palestinian-aid dollars to his private Swiss bank accounts.

The Palestinian Authority has repeatedly put Israel in impossible situations, whether by sending animals into the battlefront or using children as human shields. Children are encouraged to stand in the front lines throwing rocks at soldiers while armed terrorists behind them fire weapons and throw grenades.

These tactics are sick, almost as sick as the Palestinian tactic of using children to murder. Palestinian TV is state-run and directly controlled by Arafat's regime. There is one non-cable channel, and hours upon hours a day of television shows are broadcasted and aimed explicitly at children, which glorify dying for one's country and becoming a shahid, or martyr. Children are on TV shows and filmed speaking about how they have no fear of dying. Mothers speaking about how they wish all their children could die for their country are repeatedly televised.

PETA was so alarmed by the use of the animals in an effort to murder Israelis that they sent Arafat a letter demanding that he stop this gross act.

This state-sponsored brainwashing of Palestinian children to encourage them to kill, murder and die is not only disgusting, but a crime against humanity. The state controlled school system's textbooks educate kids to kill and blow up Jews.

Their history books contain no reference to the Holocaust ever happening, and no map will show the existence of Israel. I challenge anybody to find such messages of hate or murder on any of Israel's television stations or in any textbook, especially directed at the most vulnerable group, the children.

Arafat and his tyranny have to come to an end, so that peace can begin. Just as the United States could have never had peace with a Mussalini in Italy, a Hitler in Germany or a Tojo in Japan after World War II, Israel can try as hard as possible for peace, but cannot achieve peace with an Arafat in the Palestinian Territories.

Throughout the entirety of the peace process, the Palestinian Authority has never once stopped promoting and glorifying terrorism on television. The PA must stop exploiting the innocent to kill the innocent.

Information from frontpagemag.com, pmw.org and peta.org was used in this column.

Gilad Skolnick is a Collegian columnist.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 13, 2003

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

New single lowlight of hits collection

By Glen Straub
Collegian Staff

When pop music became popular again in the late 1990s, thanks to bubble gum belly-showing princesses like Britney Spears and heartthrob dancing ensembles like NSYNC, Michael Jackson realized it was the time to remind the world who is the outright, "King of Pop."

So in 1999 he constructed, "Invincible," — his first full-length studio album in five years. But due to poor press before the release and an overall disappointing musical project by MJ, the record failed. "Invincible" received the worst record sales of any Jackson album.

Jackson has continued to blame "Invicible's" failure that his record company Sony/Epic Records did not back him 100 percent on the project and even called Tommy Mottola, president of Sony records, a racist.

Since that point the relationship has gone sour and Jackson has desperately tried to get out of his deal. In an effort to make a quick exit from his working relationship with Sony, next Tuesday Michael Jackson's "Number Ones" — a compilation of his number one hits, both in America and overseas — will be released in stores.

The 16-song collection sketches a timeline of "the gloved one's" greatest hits, starting with "Don't Stop 'Til You Get Enough" off 1979's "Off The Wall" all the way to "You Rock My World" from "Invincible." Of course Jackson's biggest pop anthems like "Billie Jean" and "Beat it," from 1982's "Thriller" and "Black or White" from 1991's "Dangerous" also make an appearance on the disc.

Michael Jackson — 'Number Ones' — Epic

Jackson attempts to give the hardcore fans who own most of his catalogue a reason to purchase the record by releasing a new single, "One More Chance" on the best of album as well.

"One More Chance" is a far less than vintage Michael track. It's a sappy, over-produced love song obviously lacking the kind of powerful pop punch Jackson fans are accustomed to.

That over-production came from fellow bad publicity running mate, R. Kelly. Considering these guys' past history with young children, it is kind of fitting that they work together, just keep it to music not babysitting.

Overall, thinking about how good Jackson's career — in the 20th century at least — has been, "Number Ones" is a fine collection to own, especially compared to the over $20 "HIStory" greatest hits collection released in 1995. But if the song "One More Chance" is any sign of the future for Jackson, he lost his chance to win back the hearts of music lovers worldwide.

Michael Jackson has hypnotized the masses

Glen Straub

It's tough being a fan of a man who has the face of an alien, allegedly made some wrongdoings with little boys in his bed and swung his infant son from a high-rise apartment window, but when that man is Michael Jackson, for me, it doesn't matter.

Other than his ever-changing physical appearance, there is something extraterrestrial about MJ. He is not human. His moon walking abilities prove it.

People either love or hate the man. Many have chosen to mock his looks and dance moves, while others like Justin Timberlake and Usher blatantly display in their work how much of an influence he is to them.

My path in life has led me to envy the gloved one ... Well, not so much envious of his attributes as a man, but for what he has done in the entertainment world.

He has been consistently mesmerizing the world with his musical and dancing prowess since the age of five. Throughout his career, live on stage, in the studio making albums or most notably on the set making videos, Jackson has more than amazed his audience; he has set the bar.

A dance party is incomplete without a rendition of "Don't Stop 'Til You Get Enough" or "Billie Jean." A Halloween weekend on VH1 is incomplete without an airing of the "Thriller" video.

"Wacko Jacko" as haters like to call him, is the ultimate guilty pleasure. There is no educated fan of music in the world that doesn't wish s/he could move their bodies like Michael does. You might not admit to your friends, but your mirror knows all about it. It took me until age 17 to "come out" of the MJ fans closet.

There is nothing like the Jackson persona when the man is on stage. Maybe crotch-grabbing isn't your thing but — more so than 50 Cent or Snoop Dogg will ever be — Michael Jackson was and can still be "pimp."

If its either a sparkling full-body jumpsuit, a red patent leather jacket, or in his best attire — black suit, black felt fedora hat, white T-shirt, high white socks, penny loafers and of course a white glove — MJ kept anyone's eyes glued to his act for three decades.

The Michael Jackson of the 1980s and early 1990s had the complete package — orgasmic signing sounds, flashy get-ups and surreal moves.

But now as a middle-aged man he hopes that fans, like me, give him "One More Chance" with a new single and most likely a new record as soon as he signs with a new record company.

What Michael needs to know is that loyal fans will always remember those feelings that permeate through their skin when the first notes of "Beat It" or "Man in the Mirror" are played. It takes me to another level, and there are millions other who feel the same way.

So next time you see that kid at the party who thinks he can dance like the "King of Pop," rather than making fun of him, be understanding of the fact that s/he has been hypnotized by the ways of Michael Jackson.

Glen Straub is a Collegian columnist and thinks that he's Michael Jackson.

New record 'echoes' similar impact for The Rapture

By Timothy Gabriele
Collegian Staff

When Public Enemy kindly asked us in 1988 that we not believe "the hype," it was hard not to. With "It'll Take a Nation of Millions to Hold Us Back," they had perfected an art form (hip-hop) and taken the cynical street knowledge of Grandmaster Flash to furious new heights. It wasn't long before the media tried to paint them as violent, gun-toting, anti-white, anti-Semitic drug-dealing thugs.

However, like the much more undiplomatic gangster rap that followed, they were not merely capitalizing on their own incendiary knack for inspiring racial tension. Rather, they, like Malcolm X and Martin Luther King before them, were bringing to the surface the tension that had always existed in devastated black communities, now being told that the Civil Rights Movement had ended and the playing field had been leveled.

The Rapture have more in common with Public Enemy then you may think. After a frenzy of initial hype, much of the press and indie intelligentsia has already turned its backs on the band once poised to save music. Rather than attack the band's character or even their music, critics find it more fitting to harp on their own constructed wave of publicity. It's almost as if the dread of anticipation for the release of the now nearly two year old "Echoes" single handedly loaded the bullets in the gun to kill off any chances of The Rapture surviving the 21st century in anything but a 'whatever-happened-to' list.

However, as "Echoes" may prove to fans of their earlier work, The Rapture are full of surprises. Like Public Enemy did before them, this incredible album can stand as the pinnacle of an art form. What exactly is the art form this time around? Disco-punk? Indie Funk House? ElectroGlam? Who knows, but "Echoes" effectively does Robert Smith better than A Guy Called Gerald, Donna Summer better than Public Image Limited, the Psychedelic Furs better than The Neptunes and the Stone Roses better than The Rapture. If none of this makes any sense, just listen to the album.

In The Rapture's short but sweet oeuvre of music, there have been hints of boogie manifesting since their first single in 1998. Apparently transformed by Rickey Vincent's book "Funk," vocalist Luke Jenner gradually turned the rest of the band on to disco and house music while the band was still twiddling broken strings in grimy New York City apartments. This makeover culminated in last year's frequently mentioned but seldom heard "House of Jealous Lovers" (which was only released as a 12 inch vinyl single).

The Rapture — 'Echoes' — DFA/ Universal

"House of Jealous Lovers" was an anomaly. Something about the Duran Duran bassline and those jittery guitars struck a chord inside the city that never sleeps. It must have been an awkward moment when those first indie rock kids, like the gaggle of pogoing Sex Pistols audience members in "24 Hour Party People," started dancing and made New York rock music more exciting to shake shake shake shake shake to than all of techno's bloodless history combined. But The Rapture were not just giving kids a forum to break free from the absurd floor-gazing nausea of elitist underground music. They were, like P.E., freeing the tension that had always existed in these disenfranchised kids, so backed up from the tissue shortage ensuing the latest emo craze, so bruised and battered from a fragmented hardcore scene, so tired of seeing electronic genres fade with the tides.

There is much on "Echoes" to make dance floors for the next few years a more exhilarating place to be, like the album opener "Olio" (here appearing in its third version). "Olio" brushes eery synths along crying piano while a driving dance beat makes all the darkness somewhat inhabitable. The sound is reputably bleak, slick and vibrant, with the electronics lying somewhere between modernity, Casio, and 808. Luke Jenner wails like Disintegration era Robert Smith if Smith wasn't drowned by reverb and had been grooving more to Derrick May than Siouxie Sioux. Compared to the fractured no wave-lite on their last synthless EP "Out of the Races and Onto the Tracks," this song breathes in fresh air and draws out sanguine gasps at every turn.

This comes courtesy of newfound superstar production duo DFA, who are like New York's version of the Neptunes (oh, and plans to work with Britney Spears are in the works). That is, if The Neptunes had the acumen enough to name themselves after a Crispy Ambulance song. Collectively, the duo of James Lavelle and Tim Goldsworthy function as the fifth and sixth members of the band. They are as integral to team Rapture as Mattie Safer's shake-down bass, or Gabe Andruzzi's persistent cymbals.

There's something profound about "Echoes" that is hard to point a hype-weary finger at. Whether it will have the grasp of a "Nevermind" or a "Nation of Millions" is for the 21st century to decide, but there's something underlying those anxious harmonizing "oooohs" in the amazing breakdown of "Heaven" that anticipates a flood coming.

Kids on Napster, Kazaa, and Soulseek have already proved that they can create their own current of musical energy outside of the prescribed rubbish that the music industry has been feeding us ever since they claimed that Seven Mary Three grew out of the same tree as Nirvana. In this world, The Rapture are already superstars, with their rare insound promotional CDs being traded with the same regularity as those juicy shit-quality AVIs of the Matrix Revolutions and with the same integrity as kids and their rookie baseball cards. Love it or leave it, expect "Echoes" to flood the market with both remarkably solid material and pale imitations in the same milieu.

By the third song on the album, The Rapture have pulled their second or third fast one on you. "Open Up Your Heart" is a gorgeous ballad that could have provided the perfect ender for Lou Reed's "Transformer" or perhaps this album. Instead, some Martin Hannett-esque psychotic genius decided to put it within the first third of the album. Amazingly enough, it works so good that it's hard to imagine the band placing the song anywhere else. There's no real easy way to describe what happens at this point that can justify how The Rapture have let the dancing stop and allowed their blistering goth caterwauls to transcend to sentimental longing. I like to think of it as The Rapture's way of saying "Listen up. We're not dancing here because we're mindless slaves to a corporate beat. We're doing it because we're free. This is our world and our music."

Countless DJs from Playgroup to 2 Many DJs to Northampton's own Burn Down the Disco have begun fusing "House of Jealous Lovers" (which appears in a new version on "Echoes") into broader playlists that run the gamut of pop music from Michael Jackson to Missy Elliot. It is not hard to imagine new tracks like the arpeggiated synth-driven "Sister Savior" or the stabbing bass-led "Killing" soon becoming incorporated into those same set lists.

With "Echoes," The Rapture have created a rock and roll gem that sounds more like the fusion of 1983 and 2013 than one of the best albums of 2003, which it undeniably is.

COURTESY STEVE NEBERNET/ALLMUSIC.COM

British indie-rock band the Rapture released a dancefloor-hit filled album, "Echoes."

Nick's...for the morning after
63 Main Street, Amherst
Traditional & eclectic breakfast fare, featuring a Southwestern flare, Jewish favorites, & vegan items.
20% STUDENT DISCOUNT
Monday-Friday for the fall 2003 semester
Monday-Friday 6:30am-2pm
Satuday & Sunday 7am-2pm
256-4643
OCMP

The BLUE WALL PUB
THIS WEEK at The BLUE WALL PUB
MONDAY Karaoke
Monday Night Football- 10 cent Wings
TUESDAY Open 3-1am
WEDNESDAY DJ-Rhythm Systems
THURSDAY Mpeli Mwakaliku
DJ DMAD
FRIDAY EcloDrive
SATURDAY Richard M.
DJ-Aquarius
LIVE MUSIC starts at 9:00PM.
OPEN MIC starts at 7:00PM. The Sign-Up sheet goes out at 6:00PM. Bring your talent and your friends and your instruments. We'll provide the stage and sound equipment and 20 minutes for you to knock'em dead!
ALL MUSICAL STYLES are encouraged to participate!
AS ALWAYS, 18+ to party, 21+ to drink.

The University of Massachusetts
School of Public Health and Health Sciences

Departments of Biostatistics and Epidemiology
and
Environmental Health Sciences
cordially invite you to...

An Open House for prospective graduate students

Please join us from 10am - 12 noon
Friday, November 14th
UMASS Campus Center, Room 162-75

Come meet public health faculty, staff and students from biostatistics, epidemiology and environmental sciences.

Learn about the admissions process, financial aid opportunities, and our curriculum.

Learn about job opportunities in epidemiology, biostatistics and environmental science.

For additional information about the Open House, please email dwolf@schoolph.umass or call Diane Wolf at (413) 545-2861. Visit our website www.umass.edu/sphhs to learn more about our degree programs.

Records with shades of latter days

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

For today's retro-obsessed youth, everything old is new again and everything new is just a pale shadow of what came before. Whether it's recontextualizing '50s girl group harmonies with fuzzed-out distortion (The Raveanettes), taking a nostalgic field trip back to CBGB's in the 1970s (The Strokes) or modernizing the synth-y mope rock of Joy Division and The Cure (Interpol, Hot Hot Heat), today's young musicians often think that the future of rock can be found in its past.

It means nothing really to tread back over these old stomping grounds, but that these bright-eyed and bushy-tailed youngsters so idolize the greats of yesteryear is sweet. When modern rock really does stage a revolution in the music industry, then the future will be realized. Right now this holding pattern — newbies and upstarts remolding forgotten garage rock clichés for the new millennium — suffices.

Most of the bands now bow down at the alters of Led Zeppelin, The Who and the Velvet Underground, but no one has actually attempted to imitate one of the arguably most inimitable strutting bands of the era: namely, the Rolling Stones.

Jet comes from a real deep south (that is to say the Southern Hemisphere, or, more exactly, New Zealand) and they've come to boogie the night away. Compared to Brit band Oasis for the fact that it's led by a pair of brothers (Nic and Chris Cester, who take on guitar and drumming duties, respectively), Jet instead prefers to simply get down with some old fashioned rock 'n' roll.

Jet is a band that definitely knows the power of a killer song. And they come with a doozy with "Are You Going To Be My Girl?" — a stomping, swaggering bit of danceable rock that never, ever sacrifices itself to actual dance music. It comes on like a breath of fresh air on "Get Born," following the stale Southern-fried fandango of "Last Chance." The moment that the jangling tambourines and bouncing bass line kick off, you know you're in the hands of artists who know a swell single when they hear it and are smart enough to ride it for all its worth. Hand claps bobble up and down throughout the song, Nic Cester's sandpaper smooth vocals pounce and swagger with the appropriate cocky zeal, and all this happens while Chris Cester's tight drumming and Mark Wilson's diamond sharp bass slink and slide with a rhythmic thrust.

The guys of Jet are also shameless enough to copy from themselves, and they keep the party going with "Rollover DJ," a song that doesn't differ much from "Are You Going To Be My Girl?" —a preening rhythm section, chopping guitar riffs, a singer who can duplicate the randy, rebellious strut of any good rock and roll and bassist Amanda Tannen, Kremer's slightly and stage maneuvers that let cop either; on "Cold Hard Bitch" they admit a fondness for AC/DC by showing off a nicely pressing, pounding riff that would make those ancient mariners of Brit rock happy.

Unfortunately, while Jet knows how to create great songs, they have yet to create a great album. Too much of "Get Born" actually gets bogged down in watery, sappy ballads. When they aren't killing the momentum with some lifeless slow song, Jet tries to perk things up by replicating the impact of "Are You Gonna..." and "Rollover DJ."

No go. Still, the killer songs are so killer that they may be worth the price.

Stellastarr*, much like Interpol, Hot Hot Heat and the entirety of the short-lived and wisely-reviled electro-clash movement looks no further back then the 1980s for inspiration, complete with the humming, bleeping keyboards and precious, affected vocals. How much of this you can stand depends on how much you can tolerate singer Shawn Christiansen's pompous, gulping voice, with it's artfully smeared new wave treble and feigned hipster smugness.

Christiansen can get mighty annoying on Stellastarr*'s self titled major label bow, but he's at least supported by a tightly constructed band that makes his puffed-up baritone more palatable. Especially promising is the tautly wired rhythm section of drummer/keyboardist Arthur Kremer and Tannen, Kremer's slightly punked-out bounce and Tannen's writhing basslines, along with Tannen's cooing background vocals keeps Stellastarr* grounded even when Christiansen threatens to let the group drift off into the ether.

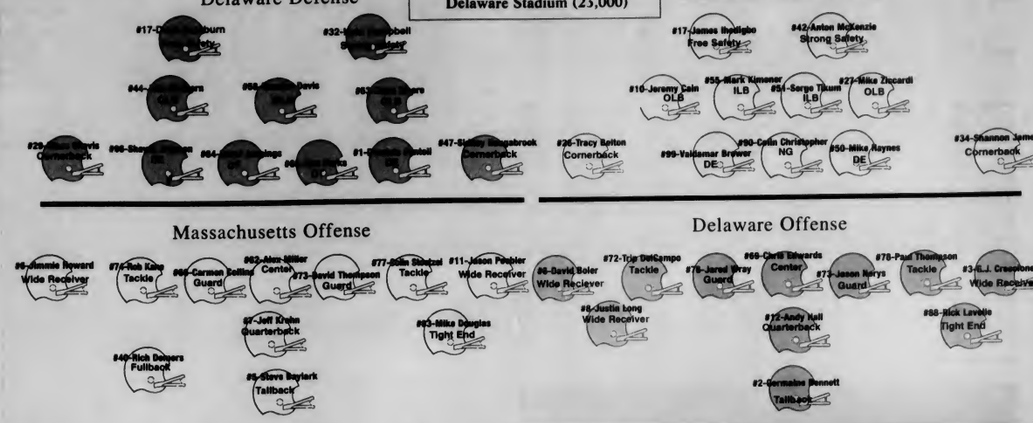
But one can't help to think that this heavily hyped up underground band — one of many that have been emerging from the chic, too-hip-for-the-room New York club scene — wasn't as deserving of the mountainous hype. Decent, yeah, but hardly a new revolution in rock and roll, either — hell, Stellastarr* isn't even a new revolution in the brand new world of what can be called neo-retro. There are songs here that would have flourished in the 80s, snazzy, gurgling numbers with sophisticated, undulating rhythms, but this homage isn't exactly the new wave today.

The High Strung already has one hipster credit to their name just by the fact that they spring from Detroit — the Motor Clty that has improbably become the focal point for everything that is cool in music today. The band drinks from the most familiar fountain of the modern garage rock movement, trading in Southern boogie stomp and stylized new wave for the skuzzy allure of rock's stripped down roots. The High Strung leech off the same source of inspiration as The Strokes, The Hives, and the fifty or so other bands in this movement does.

At least the High Strung are first class pillagers, crafting their own brand of nuevo oldies rock and positioning themselves near the top of the game. The aptly titled "These Are The Good Times" allows the quartet to perfect its Who-like cock-of-the-walk strut, prancing around and indulging in their fondness for dusty old rock tropes. The snotnosed '77 punk of "Wretched Boy" and "Show Me A Sign of Life" leads one to expect a visit down Sex Pistols Lane, with the bands blasting through two two-minute blasts of breathless, dirty rock. But the band experiments with other forms of garage-pop sleaze, veering between the aforementioned Brit-punk to attitudinal, swaggering rock and confidently placed surf rock rhythms.

However, the High Strung never let its love for lo-fi, tinpot production overwhelm their equally unabashed love of classic pop melodies. These songs may be raw and scuffed, but they are also filled with the kind of barbed harmonies that incessantly claw their way into the brain. Bits of pop-loving sonic detritus float through — discordant guitar solos, chiming organs and blissful harmonicas, roughed-up ballads and even breezy, Buddy Holly-esque hooks — and adds to a sound that can only be described as celebratory. That's right — celebratory. "These Are The Good Times" is an unashamedly joyful album, a rock record that sidesteps the self-pitying extravagance of many rock bands. The High Strung is a band that make you believe in the gospel of rock.

The High Strung
'These are the good times'
Yee Pee Records



www.dailycollegian.com

UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS AMHERST
DINING SERVICES PRESENTS
Restaurant Night
Bringing the area's best restaurants to you at UMass!
Berkshire Dining Commons presents Lobster Night
Franklin Dining Commons presents Entrée Extravaganza
Hampshire Dining Commons presents La Cucina Di Pinocchio
Worcester Dining Commons presents Eastside
Thursday, November 13 from 4-7pm
All are welcome!
Use your meal plan or $8.50 cash price.
DINING SERVICES

College of Humanities & Fine Arts
A degree in the humanities and fine arts opens up a world of opportunities!
Come meet some of the College's leading alumni entrepreneurs, who used their degree to launch business ventures, create educational campaigns and much more.
Entrepreneurs Fall 2003
Miriam Zoll BA 1984
"From UMass to the United Nations"
Ms. Zoll is a writer, and communications strategist and producer of public education campaigns for domestic and international organizations. She is the founder and national co-director of A CALL TO ARMS, a new national initiative for America's sons, and the founding co-producer of the Ms. Foundation for Women's annual Take Our Daughters to Work campaign.
4:00 P.M., Monday, November 17, 2003, Room 106, Isenberg School of Management
Reception immediately following
Lawrence Wilker MFA 1967
Tony Award Winning, Emmy nominated Producer
Mr. Wilker is a Tony Award-winning, Emmy nominated producer and entertainment executive. He was the President of the John F. Kennedy Center from 1991-2000. In April 2000, Wilker launched Theater Dreams, a theatrical production enterprise and a new media company, ShowOnDemand. TheaterDreams has successfully co-produced twelve hit Broadway shows, The Dinner Party and Urinetown.
10:10 A.M., Monday, November 17, 2003, Curtain Theater, Fine Art Center
Reception immediately following
Larry Bohn BA 1974
Venture Partner, General Catalyst Partners
GCP is a private equity firm investing in exceptional entrepreneurs building technology focused companies. Bohn focuses on identifying new investment opportunities within the enterprise software and information technology sector. Prior to joining GCP, Bohn was Chairman, President and CEO of NetDemand, a market leading software and analytic solutions provider.
4:30 P.M., Thursday, December 4, 2003, Room 106, Isenberg School of Management
Reception immediately following
Coming Spring 2004
Andy Arons, Gourmet Garage
Mary Lou Andre, Organization By Design
John Jacobs, Life is Good, Inc.

No. 3 Massachusetts (9-1 7-0 A-10)
@
No. 6 Delaware (9-1 6-1 A-10)
Saturday Noon
Delaware Stadium (23,000)

UMass to face Blue Hens

Continued from page 12

the Hens revolve around the wide receiver position, where starters Brian Ingram and David Boler are said to be like Hall in that their practice time will be limited, but are expected to play.

Ingram leads the team with 45 receptions for 486 yards, while Boler has caught 29 balls for 339 yards and a team-best four scores.

For the Minutemen, the onus defensively will once again be on the secondary, which will likely be without top cornerback Steve Costello for a second straight week. Costello, who suffered an abdominal strain, is the team leader in interceptions with six, and also ranks third nationally in that category.

Regardless, Whipple feels comfortable with the depth in his secondary.

"I wouldn't expect him to play," Whipple said. "He only jogged, and jogging and running against Delaware is a big difference.

"We'd like to have [Steve] Costello, no question. But Bobby [Boyer] played last week and so did Anton [McKenzie] so I think we're deeper in the secondary than we were a couple weeks back."

In other injury news, defensive lineman Doran Davis, who was diagnosed with a high-ankle sprain suffered in the win over Northeastern, is likely to be out despite the fact that Whipple said the senior personally plans on seeing some action if at all possible.

Finally, on the offensive side of the ball, the Maroon and White will likely look to the tandem of Steve Baylark and Rich Demers to carry over success from the win over Richmond, which saw the pair of backs become the first 100-yard tandem for UM in over a year.

Baylark, who is wrapping up his first season with the Minutemen, currently sits at 878 yards, needing only 122 in his final two games to become their second 1,000-yard back in as many seasons.

Also, senior quarterback Jeff Krohn will look to build off of his four-touchdown last week against RU. The tri-captain and former Arizona State transfer completed 13-of-28 for 201 yards and one interception against the Spiders, with three of his scoring tosses going to A-10 Co-Offensive Player of the Week Jason Peebler.

Yet regardless of statistics or past success, Whipple knows his team must play its most complete game of the season if it hopes to secure a championship.

"You just want your guys to play very well, and hopefully if we're going to play our best game, then this will be the week that we do it," he said. "If it isn't, then we don't have a chance.

GERALD H. LINGO/COLLEGIAN

Dominique Stewart and the Minutemen will face Delaware on Saturday with a chance to clinch the Atlantic 10 title.

GET PAID TO
GO TO SCHOOL.
TALK ABOUT
ROLE REVERSAL.

The U.S. Air Force will pay for you to continue your education while you serve your country as a nurse. Through selection into the Air Force Institute of Technology program, you could earn your advanced degree in as little as two years and get paid to do it. You'll be part of an elite team of medical professionals who have chosen to serve their country in this proud institution. To learn more about Air Force Nursing, please visit airforce.com or call 1.800.423.USAF to request more information.

U.S. AIR FORCE
CROSS INTO THE BLUE

Careers for Historians
The Edwin M. Rossman Alumni Career Forum presents
After the BA - Career Options for Historians
Thursday, November 13. 2003
5:00 to 6:15 p.m.
Herter 601
What do history majors do after graduation? We've assembled a panel of alumni to talk about their careers. They're here to tell you how they got started and to offer you advice on doing the same.
The panel below represents only a few options of the many fields open to history majors.The sky is the limit.
PANELISTS
Joshua Grey, Lawyer, Bulkley, Richardson & Gelinas
Bethany Groff, Site Manager, Spencer-Pierce-Little Farm, The Society for the Preservation of New England Antiquities.
Margaret Jablonski, Dean for Campus Life, Brown University
Rob Mei, Specialty Sales Divisional Manager for Southern New England, Forest Pharmaceuticals
Patrick T. O'Brien, Legislative Assistant, Office of Rep. Vinny deMacedo, Massachusetts State House
MODERATOR
Sandra Krein, History Department Internship Advisor
Sponsored by the Campus Career Network, Alumni Association and the Department of History

Kobe faces judge

By John Sarche
Associated Press

EAGLE, Colo. (AP) — Kobe Bryant will be back in a Colorado courtroom Thursday for his first hearing before the judge that will preside over his sexual assault trial.

During his initial appearance in state district court, the Los Angeles Lakers' guard is expected to be formally advised of the charge against him, his rights and the penalty he faces if convicted.

Judge Terry Ruckriegle also could adjust Bryant's $25,000 bond and set dates for upcoming hearings, including an arraignment. Bryant could enter a plea, though that isn't expected.

Both sides typically discuss plea arrangements in advance with the judge, but those conversations haven't occurred, prosecution spokeswoman Krista Flannigan said Wednesday. After a plea, a trial must be scheduled within six months.

Attorney Dan Recht, past president of the Colorado Criminal Defense Bar, said Bryant's attorneys probably will ask for an arraignment later this year to delay the start of the trial.

"My guess is the defense wants the trial to start after the basketball season," Recht said.

Bryant, 25, is accused of raping a 19-year-old woman June 30 at a mountain resort near Edwards where she worked and he was a guest. Bryant says the two had consensual sex.

If convicted, Bryant would face four years to life in prison and 20 years to life on probation.

This week's brief hearing will occur between Lakers home games Wednesday and Friday. Bryant's attorneys had sought to allow him to skip his Aug. 6 appearance in Eagle County Court, but they made no such request for Thursday's hearing.

During his preliminary hearing last month, a sheriff's investigator testified the woman's blood was found on Bryant's T-shirt. Defense attorneys suggested the woman was promiscuous.

Attorneys for media organizations including The Associated Press are appealing a judge's decisions to close portions of that hearing involving testimony about Bryant's statements to police.

In filings made public Wednesday, media attorneys argued Judge Frederick Gannett wrongly concluded Bryant's fair-trial rights would be threatened by leaving the preliminary hearing and records open to the public. The attorneys also asked to be allowed to present oral arguments on unsealing the records from the preliminary hearing.

Many other court records and investigative files remain sealed.

Hamilton forgives Parcells

By Howard Ulman
Associated Press

FOXBORO, Mass. (AP) — Bobby Hamilton has been overlooked his entire career.

No team drafted him in 1994. Bill Parcells didn't think he was good enough to start for the New York Jets. And now that he's a mainstay of the New England Patriots defensive line, he doesn't get much publicity.

That's what happens when you work hard, make plays and don't care who gets credit.

"I don't get caught up in who gets all the recognition," Hamilton said Wednesday. "I just want to help my team to win and just try to get to the playoffs."

His next chance to do that comes Sunday night against the Dallas Cowboys, the team Parcells coaches now.

He didn't blame Parcells for not using him more, or complain about not being drafted.

But that rejection provided motivation.

"I go out there every day with a chip on my shoulder," Hamilton said. "I just go out there and approach the game like it's my last one and keep showing everybody that I can play in this league."

That's been obvious since he joined the Patriots for the 2000 season after playing for the Jets and Parcells the previous three years.

Hamilton has started 55 of the 57 games he's played for the Patriots, including all nine at defensive end this year. He's the second leading tackler among the team's linemen and is part of the NFL's seventh-best run defense and the top team in the AFC East with a 7-2 record.

"He's had the opportunity," said Patriots defensive end Anthony Pleasant, who played with Hamilton with the Jets. "He got labeled a certain way, but the guy can play ball."

Hamilton, 32, still doesn't get as much attention as other Patriots defensive linemen — young star Richard Seymour or rookie first-round pick Ty Warren. There's even been a greater focus on injured players Ted Washington, who has played just three games at nose tackle, and Ted Johnson, who has played in one at linebacker, and when they will return.

It could be Sunday night.

Both practiced Wednesday and are listed as questionable on the injury report, rather than out, for the first time since they were hurt.

"It is good to see then back out there," coach Bill Belichick said. "How much they will be able to do in practice, how much they will be able to do in the game, how effective they will be, that is a whole other question."

There's no question that Hamilton will play.

In 1996, the year before Parcells took over the Jets, Hamilton started 11 of the 15 games in which he played. But over the next three years, he made just one start in 39 games.

"You had some good players" in New York, Hamilton said. "You had Rick Lyle, A.P. (Pleasant) there and I was just waiting for my opportunity.

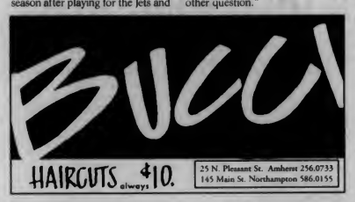
"I can't complain about what happened with the Jets. That's over with. I'm here with the Patriots."

After the 1999 season, Hamilton joined the Patriots, where Belichick had taken over after serving as Parcells' defensive coordinator with the Jets. Suddenly, his playing time soared and his 79 tackles in 2000 led all NFL defensive linemen.

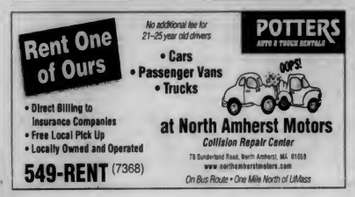
Lyle, who started all 48 games with the Jets under Parcells, is now a backup with the Patriots. So is Pleasant, who started 31 of this 32 games with the Jets in 98 and 99.

Hamilton went undrafted out of Southern Mississippi and signed with Seattle in 1994. He spent that season on injured reserve, was out of football in 1995 after the Seahawks cut him and played for Amsterdam in the World League in the spring of 1996.

He started the 1996 NFL season on the Jets' practice squad but was activated for the opener when defensive tackle Erik Howard was put on IR. Hamilton had two tackles in his debut, then endured three seasons in the shadows.

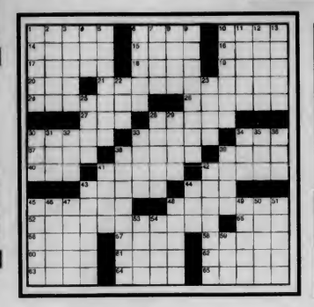


Until he joined the Patriots.



"I had to look inside myself and get focused now that I had another chance to show everybody that I can play," Hamilton said. "If you're in the NFL, you want to play, and all I did is kept working hard."

"I'm not done yet. I'm still here and I'm still battling."



Today's Crossword Puzzle

Dining Commons Menu

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH

- Cheese Quesadilla (vegetarian)
- Philly Steak Sandwich
- Tofu Fricassee (vegan)

DINNER

Restaurant Night

- Eastside Grill at Worcester D.C.
- Judie's Restaurant at Franklin D.C.
- La Cucina di Pinocchio's at Hampshire D.C.
- Zoe's Fish & Chop House at Berkshire D.C.

Daily Weather Forecast

For Amherst

THURSDAY
- High: 49
- Low: 26

FRIDAY
- High: 40
- Low: 24

SATURDAY
- High: 44
- Low: 25

Production Crew

On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Jennifer Eastwood
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Brendan O'Meara
COPY EDITOR
Sheryl Wolnik
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Shannon Farrington
PRODUCTION STAFF
Samantha Nielsen/ Katie Dwan/ Lindsay Clark

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Wear vertical stripes; they are quite slimming.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Don't give two hoots; just hang.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Paint your nails a fun color — like chrome.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
It doesn't have to be perfect.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
Smile like the goof ball you are.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Your beef with a Scorpio is becoming more obvious.

leo • Jul.. 23-Aug. 22
You skipped class again, you slacker.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Your incoherent mumbling is sketching out classmates.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Roll around in a meadow. I suggest you do this before there is snow in the meadow.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Your responsibilities may seem overwhelming, but you'll manage.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
That product in your hair is a little too much.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Surprise!

Quote for the Day

"Four things come not back — the spoken word, the sped arrow, the past life and the neglected opportunity."

-Arabian proverb

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Announcements

Fraternities- Sororities- Clubs- Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with a proven CampusFundraiser 3 hour fundraising event. Our free programs make fundraising easy with no risks. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so get with the program! It works. Contact CampusFundraiser at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

Apartment for Rent

3 Bedroom Apartment for January 665-9254

Auto for Sale

1992 Honda Prelude SI, Loaded, $3900 587-0242

93 Pontiac Bonneville SDN All Power Must Sell $1500 B/O 253-5537

Auto for Sale

96 Dodge Intrepid White runs good Power everything Brand new Pioneer CD/Stereo Must sell Asking $2400 Amy 413-222-5754

1992 Silver Ford Taurus Excellent condition $2400 118000K Call 549-3930 210-7393 All Power

$500!!! Police Impounds. Hondas, Chevy's, etc from $500. For listings. 1-800-319-3323 ext4554

1995 Geo Prism 4 or 1.8ct 5Spd 120,000 miles Gsalomon@psych.umass.edu 546-4375 545-5949

Employment

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

Employment

Pentium Laptop $99.00 Free Printer with Computer purchase Call for details. Great Rates and great turn around time. We fix Laptops, Desktops/PC's guaranteed 584-8857

The Barn
–Shift managers
–Refrigerated warehouse
–Cashiers & stockers
($8 hr) Apply in store. Open 8am – 10pm. 95 River St. Greenfield, MA 01301 (116 to 91N to Exit 26) 413-774-5599

Spring 2004 Internships with the Student Legal Services Office. Get hands-on experience in the legal field. Work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn up to 15 undergraduate credits. No experience necessary and training provided. Contact the Student Legal Services Office: 545-1995, 922 Campus Center

Employment

Telephone Interviewers NO SALES! Conduct interviews over the phone at our Hadley location Flexible Evening and Weekend Hours $7.50/hour to start 20+ hours/week PVTA accessible For more info: 1-888-423-5381 FMI

Internship
Motivated students seeking leadership outside the box. Gain experience in all aspects of running a small business. Average pay: $9300.00 Call 508-246-1230

!Bartending!$ $250/day potential No experience Nesc Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext 162

For Rent

Ski House for Rent So. Londonderry, VT. 15 mins to Stratton, 7 mi to Bromley 3 mi to

For Rent

Magic Mtn. 7 Bdrms, 3 baths, sleeps 30. $1,000/week. Katy.browne@verizon.net or 410-404-6326

For Sale

$Save$ Wholesale-Discount Prices, Video games, clothing, jewelry, more. www.tylersdiscounts.com

House for Rent

Amherst 3-4 Bedroom house. Hobart Ln. Available Jan. 1. $1650/month. Call 413-549-4001

Instruction

On the Rocks School Bartending. Become certified in one weekend. Great way to earn money. Call us toll free at 866-mix-5600. www.OTRBartending.com

Services

SHEAR BLISS DAY SPA SERVICES Body Sugaring (waxing) for men and women *Safe *100% Natural *Effective 253-2322 https://shearbliss.imag411.com

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

Travel

A "Reality" Spring Break 2004's Hottest Prices Book now .. Free Trips, Meals & Parties www.sunsplashtours.com or 1800-426-7710

Travel

Spring Break – Nassau/Paradise Island, Cancun, Jamaica and Acapulco from $489 Air, Hotel, Transfers, Parties and More! Organize small group- earn FREE TRIPS plus commissions! Call 1-800-GET-SUN-1

#1 Spring Break Vacations! 110% Best Prices! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, Florida, Acapulco. Book Now & Receive Free Parties & Meals Campus Reps Wanted! 1-800-234-7007 endlesssummertours.com

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Destinations, including Cruises! Foam Parties, Free Drinks and Club Admissions. Rep Positions and FREE trips Available. 1-800-231-4386 www.EpicureanTours.com Spring Break 2004

Travel

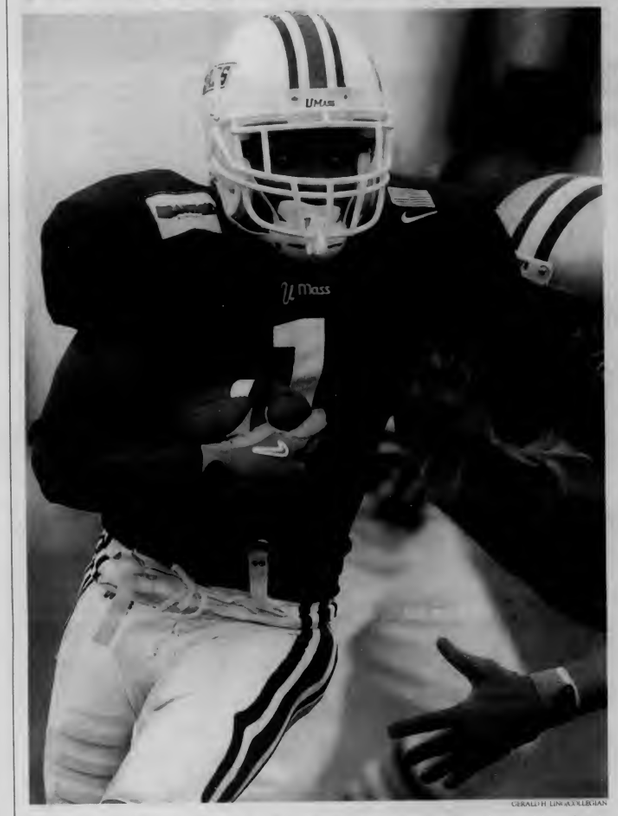
Travel with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator to Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas and Florida. Now hiring campus reps. Call for group discounts. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com For more information contact STA Travel at 413-256-1261

Act Now! Book 11 people, get 12th trip free. Group discounts for 6+ www.springbreakdiscounts.com or 800-838-8202

Tutor

Math/Physics Tutor $30/Hr Plus Travel Call Dr. Kline 413-552-3805

Your Ad Could Go Here:
Call 545-3500 for details!



The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 13, 2003 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The Big One

No. 3 UM and No. 6 Delaware to battle for A-10 supremacy

GERALD H. LIN/COLLEGIAN

Junior cornerback Steve Costello, whose six interceptions lead the Minutemen, is suffering from an abdominal strain and may not play this weekend when UMass takes on Delaware.

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

Quite simply, Saturday's contest between the No. 3 Massachusetts football team and No. 6 Delaware is the game of the year in Atlantic 10, and arguably one of the biggest in all of Division I-AA.

If the Minutemen are able to win, what would be their school-record ninth straight game, they will clinch their first A-10 title since 1999, and wrap up the conference's automatic playoff bid that will guarantee their first trip to the postseason in those four years. Also, it would provide them with a shot to become the first team to run the table in the A-10 since 1997, and the first ever to do so with nine wins over league opponents.

If the Blue Hens win, however, all will not be lost for UMass. On the heels of a 24-14 loss to Northeastern — UD's first of the season — coach K.C. Keeler's squad must win both of its remaining games to clinch the conference championship, including a showdown with rival Villanova a week from Saturday.

With that being said, what will transpire before 23,000 raucous fans and a national television audience at Delaware Stadium is clearly a battle of the titans — two top-five teams, a combined 18 wins against only two losses, two of the best quarterbacks in the country and the A-10's premier defensive units in what is, in effect, an all-or-nothing battle for supremacy in both the Atlantic 10 as well as nation-wide.

For football players, coaches and fans, this is what it's all about.

"The players are excited, I know that," UMass coach Mark Whipple said. "It's going to be a great game, both teams are going to come to play and play hard. It's the biggest game of the year for both teams, and the biggest in I-AA this week.

"As far as UMass goes, this is the biggest game since Georgia Southern in the 1999 semi-finals, and the biggest regular season game since UConn that year."

For Delaware, the game serves as a chance to redeem themselves after the crucial loss to Northeastern that knocked them from the ranks of the unbeaten, and from the top spot in the A-10 for the first time this season. Of greater concern for Keeler, though, were comments made by his players following in which "complacency" was identified as a problem, and that the team had become "too lax."

Keeler was quick to respond, indicating that his team needed to discover new ways to vent its frustrations.

"I told them to shut their mouths," Keeler said. "I told them that if there was a problem, they should have addressed it in the locker room or in our leadership council meeting, and not through the media. I thought that was their frustration coming through."

A silver lining may exist for the Blue Hens, however, in the fact that the game will be played in the friendly confines of Delaware Stadium, before what is widely considered one of I-AA's top fan bases.

With more season ticket holders than the largest crowd at McGuirk Alumni Stadium this season, the Hens have fed off of their faithful to the tune of only one loss in the past two seasons in Newark, proving to Whipple that winning on Saturday will be no easy task.

"There are tougher places to get your team motivated to play," Whipple said, "but it's definitely a good environment and probably the toughest place to win. They hardly ever lose down there, and they have a lot of people in the area who are passionate about Delaware football, so it's going to be tough.

Of even more concern for Whipple and the Minutemen, however, are a pair of I-A transfers who happen to be two of the conferences premier players at their positions. Quarterback Andy Hall — a transfer from Georgia Tech — paces the offense, while 2002 All-Atlantic Coast Conference performer Shawn Johnson has come over from Duke University to lead the defense.

"[Hall's] just a really good leader," Whipple said. "He's a good passer and a tremendous runner, which makes him a really dangerous quarterback. I don't think there's a combination as dangerous as that on anyone we've faced.

"He presents a lot of problems with his feet, his arm, his heart and his head. He's certainly what makes them go on offense.

"[Johnson's] just the best defensive player in the league, no question. I don't think there's anyone even close, he's just head and shoulders better."

Although Hall, a viable double threat under center as evident by his 1,807 passing yards and 17 touchdowns through the air and 645 yards and six touchdowns on the ground, is banged up, Keeler has said that while his signal-caller may not practice much this week due to a broken non-throwing hand, a sore back and knee and a hip pointer, he will play on Saturday.

Johnson, meanwhile, continues to dominate on the defensive side of the football. His eight sacks are a team-high, as are his 15.5 tackles for loss, while his 26 solo tackles place him fourth on the team, and his overall tackles rank fifth.

"He just plays hard — a tremendous football player and an early round draft choice no question. He's aggressive and smart, he's got a good motor and knows how to get to the ball and create havoc."

Another health concern for Keeler and

Continued on page 9

McKeon, Pena receive honors

By Ronald Blum
Associated Press

NEW YORK (AP) — Jack McKeon calls himself an "old goat." He can add "wise."

The 72-year-old manager of the Florida Marlins was voted NL Manager of the Year for the second time after transforming a last-place team into a World Series champion.

"This is something that topped off all the good things that happened to us this year," he said Wednesday after the voting was announced.

Kansas City's Tony Pena won the AL honor after the Royals rebounded from their first 100-loss season to stay in contention until the final week.

McKeon received 19 of 32 first-place votes and 116 points in balloting by the Baseball Writers' Association of America, becoming the first manager to win the award after taking over a team during the season.

He is the third oldest in major league history, trailing Hall of Famers Connie Mack (88) and Casey Stengel (75). He thanked the Marlins for hiring him.

"They had the courage to go out and hire an old goat like me," he said in Miami. "I wanted one more crack."

Florida was 16-22 when McKeon replaced Jeff Torborg on May 11. The Marlins dropped to 10 games under .500 on May 22, falling into the NL East cellar, then rebounded to finish 91-71 and win the NL wild card.

"When I came in here, I didn't think they were having any fun," McKeon said. His solution was to tell his team to "play it like a kids' game."

Voting took place before the postseason, when Florida upset San Francisco in the first round, overcame a 3-1 deficit to beat the Cubs in the NL championship series, then rebounded from a 2-1 deficit to beat the New York Yankees in the World Series. It was McKeon's first time in the postseason.

He started in professional baseball as a player in 1949 and became a manager six years later. His major league managing career began in 1973 with Kansas City, and he went on to manage Oakland, San Diego and Cincinnati.

"The biggest thing I think I've learned is patience and understanding today's young players and realizing these guys are looking for someone to guide them," McKeon said. "They're looking for instruction and they're looking for motivation."

Dusty Baker, a three-time winner of the award, finished second with 62 points after leading the Cubs to the NL Central title in his first season as Chicago's manager.

"I like Jack. He earned it," Baker said, saying Syracuse basketball coach Jim Boeheim put things in perspective during an interview a few days ago.

"He was saying it took him 27 years to win a championship. I'm on No. 12 now. Jack is on what? Fifty-something?" Baker said. "Whoo! Lord have mercy. I don't have nothing to be sad about. Nothing."

McKeon is not thinking about retirement any time soon.

"I'm not going to go home and sit in the rocking chair and drive that tractor," he said. "I hope to do it as long as I'm healthy enough and feel it's still enjoyable."

Pena was an overwhelming choice for the AL award, getting 24 first-place votes and 130 points. Minnesota's Ron Gardenhire was second with four firsts and 44 points.

"When they told me, I got on my knees to thank God. Then I cried with my family," Pena said in a telephone interview from his home in Santiago, Dominican Republic. "There are no words to describe what I feel."

After the unexpected success this season, Pena thinks more will be expected from Kansas City next year.

"Everybody believes we have a good chance to win," he said.

Pena, 46, took over the Royals in May 2002 and Kansas City finished 62-100. The Royals won their first nine games this year, got off to a 16-3 start and were 51-41 at the All-Star break, leading the AL Central by seven games.

But they slumped in the second half and wound up 83-79, their first winning season since 1994. Kansas City used 29 pitchers, including an AL-high 15 starters, and set a team record by using 53 players.

"We did not run out of bullets, we just ran out of time," Pena said.

He is only the second Dominican to win manager of the year. Felipe Alou, who replaced Baker in San Francisco after the 2002 season, was NL Manager of the Year in 1994, when he was with Montreal.

"Felipe was the one that opened the gate for us," he said. "Dominicans, and all Latinos, are showing that we can take on large responsibilities in baseball. We know how to do more than throw hard or hit well."

He talked about Ozzie Guillen's hiring by the Chicago White Sox, and mentioned Alfredro Griffin, Felix Fermin and Manny Acta as possible future managers.

"We have to forget about the language," Pena said. "We have to forget about all the problems we have in the way and go forward."

It was the first manager award for each team and the second honor this week: Kansas City shortstop Angel Berroa and Florida pitched Dontrelle Willis were voted rookies of the year Monday.

COURTESY ASSOCIATED PRESS

Royals manager Tony Pena was voted American League Manager of the Year.

The Daily Collegian

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 14, 2003 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 51

Civil rights activist speaks against USA Patriot Act in forum at Smith College

By Jennifer Marcoullier
Collegian Correspondent

Citizens should fight the USA Patriot Act in order to protect their freedom, State Rep. Peter Kocot said at a civil rights forum at Smith College Wednesday night.

About 65 people attended the forum, titled "Civil Rights/Civil Wrongs: Balancing Freedom and Security," where a six-member panel discussed how the Patriot Act and subsequent executive orders threaten American civil liberties.

The USA Patriot Act was passed following the terrorist attacks of Sept. 11, 2001, and is an acronym for "Uniting and Strengthening America by Providing Appropriate Tools Required to Intercept and Obstruct Terrorism." Critics say the act erodes constitutional freedoms.

"After Sept. 11, I felt small," Kocot said. "I felt I had no control over what was happening in the world. I asked myself how I could overcome this. The best way is to fight this act and regain our freedom."

Yaju Dharmarajah, a union organizer and immigrant from Sri Lanka, said, "I am here to put a face to where the Patriot Act could go. I am ... one of those who has been targeted because of his skin color and accent."

Dharmarajah told of an experience he had last year when he and his wife sought training from the Massachusetts Emergency Management Agency in order to do refugee and relief work abroad.

"I called; not my wife who is a white American with no accent," Dharmarajah said. "I explained that my wife and I wanted to do refugee and relief work. [The woman from MEMA] then asked what do my wife and I do now. I said that I am a union organizer and my wife is a documentary filmmaker."

Five days later, a member of the Amherst police department and a member of the University of Massachusetts police, who is also an FBI liaison campus, visited Dharmarajah's house, he said.

"My wife answered the door. These men said they had received a call from MEMA that a potential terrorist wants to document MEMA training for possible terrorist work," he said. Dharmarajah said he believes that under the Patriot Act, if he had been the one at home that day, the law enforcement officials could have detained him indefinitely in an undisclosed location and not notified his family or friends what had happened.

Mahsa Khanbabai, attorney for the Political Asylum/Immigration Rep-resentation Project in Boston, described the fear and mistrust she has seen in her work with immigrants and asylum-seekers.

"The racial and religious profiling has generated mistrust among the Arab population [in America]," she said. "They feel they have not escaped injustice by coming here."

Alice Hearst, panel moderator and associate professor at the Smith College Government Department, said that in the last two years, international human rights has replaced dot.com or business consultant as the career of choice among her students.

"But there are human rights issues right here, at the local level, that need attention," Hearst said.

Bill Newman, director of the Western Massachusetts American Civil Liberties Union, said that attorney-client privilege has been eroded while detention of Americans without charges or access to courts and lawyers has increased.

He also said the Patriot Act name was politically motivated.

"Who's going to oppose something called the Patriot Act in Oct. 2001? Virtually no one," he said.

Marjorie Hess read the prepared remarks of Barbara Morgan, librarian at the W.E.B. DuBois Library. According to Morgan, the Patriot Act could potentially allow law enforcement agencies to request people's library records and information on their use of library computers. UMass libraries now post notices at computers that the users' privacy cannot be guaranteed.

Irvine Sobelman, cofounder of the Bill of Rights Defense Committee, described the many community resolutions, including one from Northampton, that have been passed in the wake of the Patriot Act to defend civil liberties. But she said change will require more than just passing resolutions.

"What do you want to do? How do you want to ensure that citizens and non-citizens rights are protected?" Sobelman asked.

After all the panelists had spoken, the floor was open to questions. Several audience members asked for advice on how they could bring about change.

"I wish that this movement would spread to college campuses. That seems to be the natural place for it," said Lois Ahrens, a Northampton resident.

The forum was sponsored by the Northampton Human Rights Com-mision and the Bill of Rights Defense Committee, and co-sponsored by the Northampton Office of the Mayor and the Smith College Government Department.

Newman Center gets a facelift

GERALD H. LIN/COLLEGIAN

Katherine Piedra, a graduate student, gets a cup of coffee and soup at the Newman Center Cafe on Thursday. The coffee bar is part of many changes that have been made there, such as the installation of a pizza oven and new microwaves.

By Mike Travis
Collegian Staff

The first step in renovations to the Newman Center kicked off Monday with alterations to the Newman Cafe. The total cost of the construction will be more than $1 million.

Students will no longer be able to get a hamburger and fries due to the lack of a grill. However, they can now enjoy the updated menu featuring hot lunches, including pot roast and mashed potatoes, pizza by the slice, entree salads, breakfast sandwiches, grinders and wraps. Rao's coffee and Adams of Greenfield Donuts was also added to the menu.

"They had to take out the ovens, fryer and grill because the ventilation systems failed [health inspection] and the exhaust was going into the priests' quarters," said junior Ashley Ryan, an employee at the cafe.

The grill is set to reopen in fall 2004, along with a new kitchen.

"There's a lot of good choices ... a lot of things," said Gary Glenn, director of the cafe.

Hundreds of students and faculty enjoy the cafe every day. It is the largest Catholic student center on the East Coast.

"I think that everything looks good ... I had a veggie wrap and it was very good," said junior Jane Brandt.

"I know I miss the blueberry pancakes ... but, I had an omelet this morning and it was pretty good," said Father Sean McDonagh, the Newman Center director.

At the celebration of the 40th anniversary of the Newman Center in September, Springfield Roman Catholic Bishop Thomas L. Dupre announced major financial gifts to help update the Newman Center for future generations of students.

"We recognize that times have changed and the demands placed on the facility ... require even more of our attention," the bishop said.

The diocese of Springfield is providing $900,000 to help repair and modernize the facility. Of that money, $700,000 will be a gift from the diocese and the remaining $200,000 will be an interest-free advance based on a planned fund drive.

Last year, the diocese gave $180,000 for air-conditioning updates and improved access. A $175,000 gift was given last year for an elevator and another $50,000 donation will pay for renovations to the recreation room.

"It's been a rough road with the grill closing, but I'm pleased that Bishop Dupre has shown such support. We've got a good thing going here; we just have a little bump in the road," Glenn said.

"They could have shut down the cafe, but they understand they have an obligation to the community," said junior Dan Eisenstein, a cafe employee at Greenfield College.

The next phase of renovations will not occur until the end of the spring semester, when many of the students who use the facility are on break. This summer, the donated elevator to improve accessibility to the building will be installed, a new kitchen will be constructed, the Dave Bartley Room will be added and improvements will be made to the heating, ventilation, air-conditioning and electrical systems.

"The previous owners built up such a great reputation here in UMass community, and now the current manager [Gary Glenn] is working very hard to work out all the kinks," said Eisenstein.

The improvements are the result of support from both University alumni and the Diocese of Springfield.

Amnesty International explains human rights work in African nations

BRENDAN CYMEARA/COLLEGIAN

Joshua Rubenstein, the Northeast Regional director of Amnesty International, speaks to students Wednesday night.

By Heather L. Bassett
Collegian Correspondent

The Northeast Regional director of Amnesty International, Joshua Rubenstein, spoke Wednesday night about current human rights injustices in Africa.

The talk, titled "Human Rights Challenges in Africa: An Amnesty International Perspective," was intended to create awareness of abuses in Africa and to explain Amnesty International's work to prevent and stop these crises.

Rubenstein, who has been the Northeast Regional Director for 28 years, discussed the atrocities performed by vicious dictators, the prevalence of HIV and AIDS, and the raging civil wars in Sierra Leone and Liberia.

Rubenstein said many Americans are either unaware of or know little about human rights problems in Africa.

In the 1970s, he said, many Americans focused on southern African issues while Amnesty International worked to document abuse and atrocities in other African countries.

"The human rights abuses and the nature of the governments in sub-Saharan Africa were often ignored by America," he said. "People didn't realize the scale of the killing going on there. We believe that as many as half a million people were killed in Uganda alone."

Rubenstein discussed the horrible atrocities committed by African governments and dictators.

"Amnesty's work has always included Africa, not only South Africa and Zimbabwe that have black minority regimes, but the behavior of black governments towards their own citizens," he said.

Issues of impunity affect many African countries, he said, and Amnesty is dealing with those issues now.

Rubenstein also discussed the AIDS virus as a disease scourging the entire continent of Africa.

"One in four Africans are HIV positive," he said. "It has an enormous impact on ill people and children."

Amnesty International attempts to protect activists who work on many issues, including AIDS, from reprisals in their own societies.

In discussing these issues Rubenstein responded to the myth that Amnesty International only deals with individual cases of injustice.

"It is true that most people see our work as focusing on individual cases. That has always captured the imagination of our own members and the public," he said. "We do know of individual cases and we will campaign for them, but we also campaign, report and document the broader issues."

Rubenstein talked about Amnesty International's role in preventing and stopping human rights injustices worldwide but acknowledged the limited ability of Amnesty to end conflicts.

"We don't have helicopters and we don't have a standing army to send to areas of conflict," he said. "I don't want to claim that the human rights organizations deserve kudos for stopping conflicts. We never pretended to have that capacity. There are some aspects of these conflicts, though, where we do have influence and can make a difference."

Amnesty responds to many issues by raising consciousness through campaigning, petitioning and letter writing to government officials.

The talk included an "Action-Discussion" intended to give attendees the chance to discuss and become involved in the actions to resolve these issues.

A small group of about 30 people attended the discussion. Many people were members of Amnesty International's Northampton group. Attendees expressed their opinions on issues including the genocide in Rwanda and the prevalence of female genital mutilation in many African societies.

Amnesty international was formed by British lawyer Peter Benenson in 1961. According to the organization's website the group now has more than one million members, subscribers, and donors in more than 140 countries. Amnesty International's research and action to prevent human rights violations worldwide is funded by donations of its members, the public and organizations.

Ralph Faulkingham, a professor of anthropology at University of Massachusetts and member of the Five Colleges African Studies Council, moderated the talk.

Western Massachusetts Amnesty International and the Five Colleges African Studies Council sponsored the talk and discussion

EDITORIAL/OPINION
Page 4
Stop the Hate
Hate crime incidents see decrease

ARTS & LIVING
Page 4
Folked up
Ani DiFranco comes to UMass

SPORTS
Page 8
For Boston
Hockey takes on BC Eagles

COMICS/CLASSIFIEDS
Page 7

Thanksgiving enthusiasts to trot campus for hunger

By Michelle Dozois
Collegian Correspondent

The first annual "Turkey Trot Event" will take place at 10 a.m. tomorrow, starting and finishing in front of the Student Union. The "Turkey Trot" is a charity run/walk, organized by S.H.A.R.E., a University of Massachusetts registered student organization which stands for "Students Helping Area Reach-Out Efforts."

While burning calories in anticipation of their own upcoming Thanksgiving Day feasting, members of the UMass community will raise money to ensure that others less fortunate will also be able to have a satiating Turkey Day.

The fee for participating in the event is $10. All proceeds will be donated to the Western Mass Food Bank, which will use the money to buy turkeys to distribute to local families for Thanksgiving.

Registration begins at 9 a.m. tomorrow in front of the Student Union. Students, faculty, and "anyone who wants to participate for a good cause" is welcome to sign up, said Alexis Davison, a junior psychology major and vice president of S.H.A.R.E. The course, which loops around the academic quad, is approximately 5 kilometers long (3.1 miles).

"No matter your athletic ability, we want you to get involved," said Davison. "Whatever you do — run, walk, skip — it's for a good cause."

Local merchants have donated refreshments and a variety of prizes for the participants, including $250 worth of gift certificates to Bueno Y Sano. Although the top male and female finishers will automatically earn prizes, the rest of the prizes will be randomly raffled off among all the participants.

The emphasis is not on winning, said Amy Tessier, a senior sport management major and president of S.H.A.R.E.

"It's not really a race, but more of a charity event," she said.

Maggie Moran, a senior marketing major and secretary of S.H.A.R.E., said that in addition to S.H.A.R.E. members, athletes and members of other RSOs will be taking part in the event.

"We have all these different groups participating, so it's more representative of all of UMass" than if only members of one campus organization were involved, she said.

"You can get so much more accomplished when you bring everyone together," instead of competing with other groups to recruit people who are interested in community service Tessier added.

S.H.A.R.E. was founded in 1986 as a senior honors thesis project. Since then, it has become an increasingly active student volunteer group, with the number of members nearing 100, said Davison.

Registration forms can be picked up on the day of the race, or downloaded at http://www.people.umass.edu/share/turkeytrot.htm.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

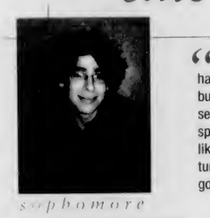
Jennifer Eastwood
Dan Lamothe
Peter Foundas
Scott Pihl
Nick Markantonatos
Sean Costello
Shannon Farrington
Glen Straub
Molly Eggleston
Paige Crum
Ferron Salniker
Gerald H. Ling
Andrew Merritt
Kristen Weiss
Marty Pappas
Julie Beauchamp
Greg Stamm
Sandra Marquez
Betsy Feldman
Linda Wallack
David Bor
Jaclynn Sorenson
Mark Lagatic
Richard Pacheco
Lexi Lynch
Charlie Higgins
Lindsay Clark
Meghan Healy
Cameron J. Woods
Matthew Reid
Erika Lorley
Morris Singer
Emilie Duggan
Mike Martelli
Robert McGovern

For the record

Because of a reporting error in a Page One story in yesterday's Collegian, Frank Olbris was incorrectly identified. Olbris is the UMA Grievance Officer.

Judge fired

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (AP) — Alabama Chief Justice Roy Moore, who became a hero to religious conservatives for refusing to remove his granite Ten Commandments monument from the state courthouse, was thrown off the bench yesterday by a judicial panel for having "placed himself above the law."



"I have absolutely no regrets. I have done what I have sworn to do," Moore declared afterward, drawing applause from dozens of supporters in the courthouse.

Associated Press

Campus Perspectives

By Amelia P. Lincoln

"How have UMass budget cuts affected you?"

sophomore
Communications major

"As an individual I haven't been affected, but I think it's easier to see what they are spending money on, like all of the architectural work that is going on."
Erez Horowitz

senior
Advertising major

"Just through the tuition and fee increases."
David Cote

senior
English major

"I think it's interesting that UMass can afford to beautify the campus but dump professors and classes."
Brian Crockett

sophomore
SOM major

"I think that all the language departments have taken a pretty big hit and that's a sad thing."
Chris Murray

sophomore
Horticulture major

"I wanted to take a physical education class and couldn't."
Chanya Sae-Eaw

junior
History major

"Last semester I was only able to get into one class for my major. I had to take random classes just for credit that I was not very interested in."
Fernando Alejandro

Spring course to help poor

The Grassroots Community Development Alternative Spring Break course, sponsored by the University of Massachusetts anthropology department, is a four-credit honors course offered in the spring semester to all University students. The course studies grassroots development, the process by which communities use their own resources and knowledge to combat poverty and disenfranchisement.

"Teaching ASB has been more exciting and more inspiring than any other work I've done in my 25 years at UMass," said Art Keene, UMass anthropology professor and ASB faculty advisor.

In addition to classroom learning, students participate in a service-learning trip over Spring Break. Last spring, one ASB group traveled to Cape Charles, Va., a coastal community where black families are being driven out of their town by rapid gentrification. In Cape Charles, the ASB group worked with a local citizen group to help people keep their property or find affordable housing. Students completed housing renovations and had the chance to spend time with community members, sharing stories and hearing about each other's lives.

Miriam Manon, a former ASB student and future facilitator, commented about her experience in Cape Charles and with ASB.

"The class for me was really meaningful because it showed that even with the hurdles for making changes these days, changes are being made on a local level," she said.

Keene agreed, saying, "ASB is a transformative experience that helps students discover their own agency and helps convince them that what they do in the world really makes a difference."

This year, there will be two ASB sections of between 20 and 25 students each. Because there is more interest in the course than there are places available, entrance is by application only. Applications for the program are available online at the ASB website and are being accepted through Nov. 24.

For more information, contact UACT, located in the basement of South College, across from the west wing of Machmer, or by phone at 413-545-0696, or email uact@anthro.umass.edu.

On the Net: http://courses.umass.edu/anth397h/asb.html.

—Sofia Binions

www.dailycollegian.com

WANT TO CHANGE THE WORLD ONE POLICY AT A TIME ?

COMPLEMENT YOUR MAJOR WITH AN INTERDISCIPLINARY CERTIFICATE IN PUBLIC POLICY AND ADMINISTRATION

IF YOU'RE INTERESTED IN LEARNING
ANALYZING CITY BUDGETS
SEEKING AFFORDABLE HOUSING SOLUTIONS
DEVELOPING ENVIRONMENTAL POLICIES
REFORMING EDUCATION
EVALUATING WELFARE TO WORK PROGRAMS
IMPLEMENTING INTERNATIONAL AID PROGRAMS

Then this extremely flexible 8-hour course certificate is for you. It allows you to build expertise in your policy and/or administration area of interest.

Certificate courses can also be used toward majors and distributional requirements

VISIT OUR WEBSITE: www.masspolicy.org/undergrad

contact: Professor Brenda Bushouse
416 Thompson Hall
545-3940
e-mail: ugrdcert@pubpol.umass.edu

CPPA CENTER FOR PUBLIC POLICY& ADMINISTRATION

UMASS

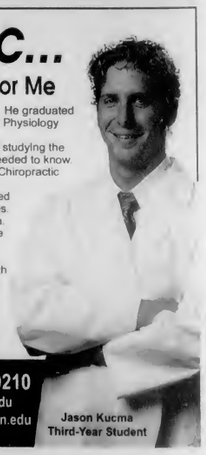
Start here.

Each day of our intense Winter Session equals an entire week of course material, which means that you can earn three credits in just three weeks! Best of all, Winter Session costs less. There are fewer fees now than at any other time of year. Save time and money.

You know you're ready. Start here. Classes begin January 5.

UMassAmherst
Continuing Education

www.umass.edu/start • (413) 545-2414



Chiropractic...
The Choice For Me

Jason Kucma is a Third-year student from Medford, NJ. He graduated from Ithaca College with a Bachelor's Degree in Exercise Physiology concentrating in Cardiac Rehabilitation.

"The only thing that has ever captured my attention was studying the human body. The more I learned in school, the more I needed to know. The most logical step for me was to become a Doctor of Chiropractic so I could truly help people."

Before making his decision to attend Logan, Jason visited nearly half of the chiropractic colleges in the United States. "Logan is in the perfect location in a safe, residential area. The Admissions staff are very friendly and helpful and the faculty are excellent."

Logan College offers students an incredible learning environment blending a rigorous chiropractic program with diverse and active student population. If you are looking for a healthcare career that offers tremendous personal satisfaction, professional success and income commensurate with your position as a Doctor of Chiropractic, contact Logan College of Chiropractic today and explore your future.

Logan College•of•Chiropractic
1-800-533-9210
www.logan.edu
loganadm@logan.edu
851 Schoettler Rd, Chesterfield, MO

Jason Kucma
Third-Year Student

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

Friday, November 14, 2003

Editorial@dailycollegian.com

Hate crime prevention needs improvement

Last year saw a sharp decrease in U.S. hate crime incidents, including in the state of Massachusetts. The nation saw a drop of hate crimes of nearly 25 percent, from 9,730 hate crime incidents reported to the FBI in 2001 to 7,462 reported in 2002.

In Massachusetts, there were 430 hate crimes in 2002, about a 37 percent drop from 680 reported in 2001. Only California, New York and New Jersey saw an increase in hate crimes last year.

Despite the overall numbers, more work needs to be done to prevent hate crimes. It is important to note that hate crimes were up at the end of 2001 following the Sept. 11 acts, which explains the steep decrease in hate crimes in 2002. During the last few months of 2001, anti-Muslim and anti-Middle Eastern sentiment soared. The numbers in 2002 stabilized once again and were even better than 2000, when the number of incidents reported was 8,063.

Hate crimes are a good indicator as to which areas of society need to be improved. Of the Massachusetts crimes, 200 were based on race. Although Muslim and Middle Eastern hate crimes may comprise many of those cases, it is evident that much of society holds non-whites with scorn. One's sexual orientation ranks second on the list, comprising 96 hate crimes. There were 90 religion-based crimes, 43 on ethnicity and one on disability.

These numbers show an obvious need for a more tolerant and open-minded society. Affected communities and civil rights movements have gone a long way to alter much of the public's perception on differences, but social and governmental leaders must speak out on these issues to continue to strive for a broader, more open America. If we are to be called the "home of the free," America must continue to strive for an environment where all people are welcome without the fear of discrimination.

Law enforcement must continue to work with affected communities to not only nab offenders, but to prevent these acts from occurring. They must continue to approach this subject with sensitivity and willingness for change. Many hate crimes go unreported each year because of fear that victims will not be treated with respect or that they may become the subjects of terrorist investigations.

Education is the root of preventing all of these problems, and without it there can be no understanding. Schools, beginning at the elementary level, must work on educating students of tolerance and diversity for an ever-diversifying America. No one should have to be subjected to a hate crime simply because of who they are and for how they were born. Muslims and Middle Eastern people continue to suffer disproportionate discrimination in a post-Sept. 11 world, despite the fact that they have meant or done no harm at all.

America must work together to prevent violence and hate like this from continuing. People must be taught at an early age that hate crimes only breed additional hatred. We must do it not only for ourselves, but also for future generations.

Information from the Associated Press was used in this article.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

TV: A celebrity/reality series?

Jen Hodson

Ever wondered what's happened to mainstream television within the last couple of years? Why all of a sudden do channels contain more content that perhaps focuses on what a celebrity ate for dinner last night instead of important news or television programming that's enjoyable to watch?

Why is it that every time I turn on the TV, there's a show about celebrity gossip or there's some type of new reality series that's an even more ridiculous idea than the previous one?

Seriously, you all know what I am talking about. If you don't, you're living under a rock. This all happened a few nights ago when my friend Adam and I had just finished watching a movie, but wanted to catch something good on TV before it got too late. I channel surfed for, honestly, a good half hour. Within that half hour the only thing that I could find on TV that was somewhat interesting to watch (besides the news) were shows that had to do with celebrities.

Adam, not impressed, told me to keep flipping. Somehow we ended up getting into a discussion about the content of television programming. Then, all of a sudden, it hit me. I came to the realization that television itself has changed, even if at all possible, for the worse.

Take for example exhibit A: MTV. "Music television" has now become home to such shows like "Real World," "Jackass," "Punk'd," "Rich Girls," "Dismissed," "Newly-Weds," "Room Raiders," "MTV Cribs," "Diary," "MADE," "Fraternity Life," "Sorority Life," "Taildaters," "Camp Jim," "Boiling Points," "The Wade Robson Project" and so on. You get the point.

Basically, MTV is not "music television" anymore. It's become a home for not only celebrities, but now for reality shows and other "filler" material as well. As my friend Adam pointed out to me, I can't even think of the last time MTV played music videos other than on "TRL," which within itself is not what you would call music television. I know someone who was on "TRL" and the people who are guests there don't even get to request what they want to hear but have to request what they are told to. That's stupid.

Another example is VH1. VH1 is like the classier version of MTV. VH1 used to play music videos all the time, considering it was MTV's biggest rival, but nowadays it seems as though they have been sucked into the latest trend, too. Even though VH1 still plays music videos at times, it now has such shows like "I Love the [insert decade here]," "True Spin," "Driven," "The Fabulous Life of [insert celebrity here]," "Rock Bodies," "Behind the Music [or Movie]," "How the Stars Get Hot," "VH1 All Access" and so on. Now although some of these shows are entertaining, I think there are better things to do with my time than watch a show about the fabulous life of P. Diddy. I'm not too interested in how many bottles of Cristal and diamond watches it would take to fill an entire Concorde to fly P. Diddy to his private yacht where his $25,000 imported suits are. Are you?

But it doesn't stop here. Even channels like FOX, E! (the celebrity channel) and the WB are involved, too. Although these channels do provide quality shows from time to time, they also provide a good amount of trash as well, with such shows as "Blind Date," "American Idol," "Joe Millionaire," "The Fifth Wheel," "The Bachelor" and "The Simple Life." But just when you think it can't get any worse, it does.

What was that show called where a couple of strangers would get married live on TV? Oh yeah, I remember now. "Married By America." Dumbest idea ever. The other show I couldn't get over was the one where a girl would have to choose a guy without ever seeing his face, because all the men on the show wore masks. To put the icing on the cake, the host was Monica Lewinsky. I bet it won the award for tackiest program ever.

But you wont believe what's next. Even ABC's Family Channel has jumped into the mix. For example, there is an actual show called "Switched," where two people who have never met before switch lives completely and live in each other's homes and meet their friends, significant others, etc. Also, "Knock First," a show that showcases three handymen who will come to your home and redecorate your bedroom for you. This show has been done already! Try "Trading Spaces."

The point of the story is, it never ends! I think I can live my life not knowing what size underwear J.Lo wears or how many times the Hilton sisters have been punched in the face for being complete airheads. Although that thought is rather amusing, it's not one that I need to be made aware of. Now I sympathize with those of you who find it hard to pass up these guilty pleasures. I myself even find it hard to avoid watching these shows at times. But then again, enough is enough. Please television networks, put quality TV programming back on before America's youth goes down the toilet.

Jen Hodson is a Collegian columnist.

I think I can live my life not knowing what size underwear J.Lo wears or how many times the Hilton sisters have been punched in the head for being complete airheads.

Submit a letter or opinion

E-mail: editorial@dailycollegian.com

Fax: 413-545-3699

Mail: Letters to the Editor 113 Campus Center, Amherst, MA 01003

The humanity of Palestinians

Jeff Napolitano

There is a disturbing trend I find whenever I read a piece supporting Israel's policy toward Palestine. In almost every piece, be it a column or U.S. news story, the issue is always framed between the government of Israel and either Yasser Arafat or Palestinian terrorists. We are often informed about the quality of life of Israeli citizens and the damage done to Israel's civilian population, but we never hear much about the people of Palestine. Why are the Palestinian people always left out of the conversation? Just as we see images of Israelis suffering on television, why do we not see the suffering of the Palestinian people? Why such a disparity in the portrayal of the situation?

This lack of attention toward the people of Palestine exists because exposing their suffering would shift the focus of the conflict away from the Israeli government and the Palestinian terrorists. While the debate is consistently and simplistically focused on these two parties, to the exclusion of anyone else, it is easy for observers (meaning the news-reading public) to identify the terrorists as the more culpable. But as soon as you take an interest in the Palestinian people, the debate seems far less one-sided.

The fact that most Palestinians live on about $2 a day should weigh on one's mind. In her book, "Israel/Palestine: How to End the War of 1948," Tanya Reinhart states that a great majority of the population has "inadequate access to food, shelter or health services." This should force one to begin to consider Palestinians as fellow members of humanity. And perhaps the sight of the massive, 20- to 40-foot-tall wall being constructed (with your tax dollars) in Palestinian "Occupied Territories" might give one pause in supporting Israel's policy of apartheid.

And that pause, the acknowledgement of the humanity of the Palestinians and the brutality of the Israeli occupation, has been noticed. In a recent article in "The Jewish Week": "Israeli Minister for Jerusalem and Diaspora Affairs, Natan Sharansky, shaken by what he witnessed during a recent whirlwind tour of 13 U.S. colleges ... is worried that Israel is losing the political and ideological battle on campus." The demographic examined wasn't simply the general population, but Jewish students; there is concern that these students, brought up by parents who are often reflexively pro-Israeli, are being repelled from also extending their support because of the harsh policies of the Israeli government.

The article continues with a disturbing statement: "The leaders acknowledge it would be wise to start making Israel's case with students in high school, and younger, implicitly suggesting that it may be too late to make Zionists out of college students." Apparently, since the merits of Israel's policies fall to rationally persuade thinking young adults in the midst of higher education, it has been decided to target a more vulnerable, less intellectually developed group.

This lack of attention toward the people of Palestine exists because exposing their suffering would shift the focus of the conflict away from the Israeli government and the Palestinian terrorists.

Failure to convince people of Israel's righteousness is becoming more and more prevalent. Last week, the European Union released a poll that revealed that 59 percent of Europeans believe Israel and its policies are the greatest threat to world peace (even more so than the United States!). Apparently the Bush administration's loudly touted fear of weapons of mass destruction reminded Europeans that Israel is currently the only country in the Middle East that possesses such weapons — most ominously, nuclear weapons.

Since we are constantly reminded of the actions of Palestinian terrorists, why not talk about the actions of the Palestinian people, who are far more significant? In that case, one should be aware of the International Solidarity Movement, a Palestinian-led group consisting of Palestinians and activists from all over the world. The I.S.M. recognizes international law, which allows for resistance of the violence of an occupying force, as well as utilizing the methods of nonviolent resistance to achieve its goals. It calls for international intervention to protect Palestinians and ensure that Israel complies with International Law.

People of conscience have gone to Palestine to join the I.S.M., with the desire to bring a sense of solidarity to Palestinians and with the hope that Israeli brutality will lessen in the presence of foreign internationals.

One form of nonviolent resistance pursued by the I.S.M. is stopping Israeli destruction of Palestinian farms, orchards and houses by interposing oneself between Israeli bulldozers and their target. One such example was Rachel Corrie, a U.S. citizen from Washington who had the courage to stand with the Palestinian people. On March 16, 2003, Corrie stood in front of the house of a Palestinian doctor and his family, attempting to prevent an Israeli bulldozer from destroying the home. She was clad in a fluorescent orange jacket, in the middle of a clear day, using a megaphone to try to stop the destruction.

The driver of the bulldozer, an Israeli who apparently thought he was only running over a Palestinian, dumped dirt upon Rachel, and proceeded to kill her by running her over.

Rachel Corrie was not a terrorist. The Palestinians with whom she was staying and trying to protect were not terrorists. Virtually none of the Palestinian people are terrorists. It is time to stop framing the debate between desperate terrorists and the fourth-largest military power in the world. The Palestinians are our brothers and sisters in humanity, and it is time we recognize that they deserve to be free from foreign occupation.

Jeffrey Napolitano is a Collegian columnist.

Stomach stapling a last resort

Erika Lovley

It was the annual summer trip to Six Flags New England. My friend Charles and I were $40 poorer, drenched in sweat and guzzling Dasani to stave off dehydration in the concrete heat trap of a theme park. As hot as it was, we wanted a ride on the Superman. Charles hopped in the seat next to me. The attendant strapped everyone in. He seemed to systematically avoid checking our unit, looking distastefully at Charles. The attendant pushed the harness down over Charles' abdomen, struggling to make the buckles clasp. He pulled and yanked as Charles sat helplessly, sucking in his gut, turning redder and redder in the heat.

"You'll have to leave the ride, sir," the attendant said. Charles glared. The people from the other units began to snicker. "The harness doesn't fit you sir, I'm going to have to ask you to leave the ride." There was an uncomfortable silence, and I was jounced upwards as Charles left his seat, white with anger. A man and his son sat on the ride, wiping away tears of laughter and clapping their hands. This was not the first time we had been turned away from a day in the park.

At age 20, 5'9" and 350 lbs., my friend Charles, or "Big Charlie," is morbidly obese. Big Charlie is in every way a normal college freshman. He holds down a part-time job as a cook at McDonald's and studies at the community college. But there are many things he can't do; things that I take for granted. Charlie can't see his own feet when he walks. He tucks his shoelaces inside his shoes because he can't see when they come untied.

When we go out to Bueno Y Sano for dinner, Charlie usually polishes off my leftovers, as well as three grande burritos — equivalent in size to three footballs. Easily fatigued by walking around the Holyoke Mall, he can usually be found waiting in line for the elevator. The escalator is too narrow for him. He never takes the stairs, knowing it scares me how he gasps for breath after climbing them.

Charlie's hometown nicknames include Big Pun, Fat Charlie, and The Bodyguard. Charlie never minds them; he seems to accept who he is and how he looks. He comes from a big family of big eaters. He has been heavy all his life. He loves using his size to be my "body guard," intimidating potential dates and parting the crowds at the Hippodrome like the Jesus at the beach. Once, in an April Fool's antic, Charles stole a D-cup bra and wore it for a photo session. Needless to say, he filled out the bra better than its owner.

It's not that Charlie wants to be overweight. He admits he eats way too much and moves far too little. He has tried exercise, diets and pills. "I don't want to be Big Pun forever," he told me this summer. "Big Pun didn't last that long."

Charlie surprised me a few weeks ago. He is now a 20-year-old candidate for gastric bypass surgery, or "stomach stapling." The procedure includes the stapling of the stomach, shrinking it from the size of a football (in Charlie's case), to the size of an index finger. This allows the patient to take in no more than five or six bites of food at a time. If any more than that is eaten, vomiting and nausea will occur. Although the procedure is usually performed on adults, 150 U.S. teenagers have already undergone the procedure. In a nation where 15 percent of children are obese, Charlie is one of 250,000 possible candidates for the operation.

For Charlie, this operation is not a vanity option. It is an option to save his life. It will bring him back to a quality of life he misses, in which he can tie his shoes, fit into the driver's seat of his car and wear non-elastic jeans. Prospective candidates for the surgery must be at least 150 pounds overweight. Even though Charlie fills this bill, the doctors are still skeptical about performing the procedure on him. In an attempt to qualify, Charlie will spend the next year of his life in psychotherapy screening processes, evaluating whether or not he will be able to emotionally detach himself from food after his stomach is shrunk.

While this operation may save his life, the stapling is irreversible. He is devastated by the dilemma. He will never be able to eat a Thanksgiving dinner again; rather, he will choose six bites of food to enjoy. If he eats any more, he will become severely ill. At family functions, he will become an outcast, unable to participate in the food sharing culture that unites his family members.

Stomach stapling is viewed by many as an easy fix to the nation's obesity problem, much like Prozac has been for mental illness. However, this operation is no quick-fix slim-fast plan. The patients that experience it have to make life-altering changes, both emotionally and physically. They must reinvent themselves as health conscious eaters; a daunting and terrifying task for any American to undertake.

Charlie has a one in 100 chance of dying from the procedure. But his chances of dying without the procedure are far higher. If he takes this chance, he could emerge a new person — renewed not only by dropping a possible 150 lbs. from his frame — but renewed by the possibility of a new life — a life in which he can physically hug me again.

Erika Lovley is a Collegian columnist.

Stomach stapling is viewed by many as an easy fix to the nation's obesity problem, much like Prozac has been for mental illness. However, this operation is no quick-fix slim-fast plan. The patients that experience it have to make life-altering changes, both emotionally and physically.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 14, 2003 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

'LOTR' returns as king of RPG

Press Start to Play

Reid Davenport

The long-awaited sequel to Electronic Art's "Lord of the Rings: The Two Towers" game is finally out. "Lord of the Rings: Return of the King" delivers in every area that the past game did and brings a few new modes and characters to the game play.

"Return of the King" has the same great game play that was found in the previous game. The characters are highly detailed and voiced by the actors of the movies. Each level is meant to give the players and "Lord Of The Rings" fans a story beyond the story. The levels are original creations that are meant to be the untold stories and adventures from the movies.

The game also delivers the excellent effect by morphing from a movie clip to game play. The game flows very smoothly, considering that most games that have more than eight players on a screen at the same time normally start having small glitches and skips. "Return of the King" will throw orcs, trolls and even spiders at players, and some enemies will require specific tactics to take out.

'Lord of the Rings: Return of the King'
PS2
Publisher & Developer: EA
RPG
Rated: T
A+

One of the more interesting aspects of the game is the ability to use your surroundings to aid you in battling enemies. Most levels will contain objects that can be picked up, such as spears and torches that can be hurled at enemies or at other targets to trigger a bigger assistance. For example, when you're using Sam in the Shelob's Lair level, you can use torches to set bags of coal, which hang from the ceiling, on fire and take out large groups of spiders and orcs in one move. This is a definite help for times when you are low on health and need to take out a large group quickly.

Another positive part of the game is the ability to upgrade your characters. With each level you can add new abilities to make the next level easier to get through. Each character has upgrades for up to level 10, but can ultimately reach a peak of level 20. Some of the better upgrades include group health upgrades, Aragon's flaming sword attack and Legolas' double arrow upgrade. Also you can give the entire set of characters a single upgrade, saving you some experience points to gain upgrades meant for the use of a specific player.

"Return of the King" also provides a few more levels than "The Two Towers." Some levels will take a few dozen times through to master before you can move on. The game also gives users a reason to beat the game and delivers more replay value through unlockable characters and secret codes. After defeating the final level you will be able to use Pippin, Merry, Faramir, and Frodo as playable characters.

The game also gives players interviews with the cast and amusing little videos of the actors playing the game. Some of the videos are also unlockable by beating the game. One video shows Billy Boyd (Pippin), Dominic Monaghan (Merry) and Elijah Wood (Frodo) making fun of each other about how they play video games. The only interview you won't find in the game is with John Rhys-Davis (Gimli).

The only downside of the game is that it gives away a lot about the upcoming movie and can ruin the film for those who have not read the book recently. It can spoil the film even for those who have read the book as it shows clips from the upcoming movie as well.

"Return of the King" is a must buy for fans of the trilogy and for gamers that like battling masses of enemies at a time. It can provide you with hours of extended game play and although there are a few levels that may frustrate you, they are beatable.

"Return of the King" is now available for X-Box, PS2 and Gamecube and retails for around $49.99.

UMass getting a bit folky with Ani

DiFranco to perform at the Mullins Center

By Cameron J. Woods
Collegian Staff

Ani DiFranco
Tomorrow
Mullins Center
$27.50

The woman that redefined folk music for an entire generation of feminists will be performing on the University of Massachusetts campus at the Mullins Center tomorrow night. If you are experiencing a humdrum week and are tired of all the same humdrum songs on the radio then this is a show not to be missed. Ani DiFranco will give a solo acoustic performance tomorrow starting at 8 p.m.

A figurehead for liberated women over the last decade, DiFranco has provided numerous albums, each with its own story of anguish and growth. By dint of her own unrelenting energetic need to get her message out, DiFranco has more than proven her strength as an artist and a businesswoman.

Born in Buffalo, N.Y., on Sept. 23, 1970, DiFranco began her career at the age of nine, when her guitar teacher helped her land her first gig: performing Beatles covers at an area coffeehouse. Befriended by the likes of Suzanne Vega and Michelle Shocked, she later gave up music to study ballet. But at the age of 14, she returned to the guitar and began composing her first original songs. A year later, alienated from her crumbling family structure, she left home, living with friends while making the rounds of the Buffalo folk club circuit.

By the age of 19, DiFranco had written more than 100 original songs, and after briefly studying art she relocated to New York City to further her musical aspirations. Besieged by requests from fans for tapes of her performances, she recorded a demo and made 500 copies of a self-titled cassette to sell at shows.

In 1990 she founded her own record label, Righteous Babe Records, and never looked back. Thirteen years and a dozen albums later, the original righteous babe is showing no signs of slowing down. Over the years many fairweather Ani-ites have abandoned their idol for her lack of genre and style loyalty. Despite these enraged deserters, DiFranco has refused to stick to one emotion, genre or even guitar style. For the loyalists, however, her ever-growing music has never failed to please.

Opening for DiFranco will be Hamell on Trial, a New York native whose music is a fusion of folk and punk rock. Ed Hamell may be a treat for those who may not feel that folk music is contemporary enough to listen to. He brings an updated and original sound to the genre.

New disc causes more laughable trouble

By Nick Romanow
Collegian Staff

David Cross is best known to mainstream America for being "that guy in the wheelchair" in "Scary Movie 2," or as the "chicken pot pie" guy (Donnie) on "Just Shoot Me." To his diehard cult of fans though, Cross is known as the man who puts the "and David" in "Mr. Show with Bob and David," the ground-breaking and acclaimed HBO sketch comedy series that ran from 1995 until it was sadly cancelled in 1999.

Since the show's cancellation, Cross has worked on a number of projects. Some, like "Scary Movie 2" or his voice-over work on Fox's short-lived series, "Oliver Beene," have been commercial ventures to support the work that is closer to Cross' heart. This is work such as helping his "Mr. Show" partner Bob Odenkirk with his network TV pilot, "Next!" and taking "Mr. Show" on the road as a live show with Odenkirk and other cast members in last fall's "Hooray For America" tour.

Lately though, Cross undertook a nationwide standup tour that found him gigging at rock clubs rather than comedy clubs and bringing with him a rock band, Ultrababyfat, to open for him, rather than allow the clubs to pick a local comedian as they usually would. Cross and Seattle indie-label Sub Pop, best known for bringing the world Nirvana, joined forces last year to release a double CD of Cross' hysterical live standup, "Shut Up You Fking Baby," and now the label has just released an equally hilarious tour diary/documentary DVD, "Let America Laugh."

"Sub Pop came to me initially for the CD," Cross said in a phone interview last week as he was making his way to a shoot. "[The idea to put out a DVD] must've been mine because the first tour I did ... tons of crazy shit went on and we had a camera then. This [leg] was more interesting as a documentary. The other one was more drunken escapades."

That's not to say that "Let America Laugh" has no mischief. In fact, one of the best portions of the disc comes at the beginning. When Cross comes to a Nashville club and asks that the club owner remove the tables so that there is more room for the crowd, the owner argues that a lack of tables means no one will buy food and he will lose money. Later that night onstage, Cross mocks the man and his theory, exaggerating it to the belief that removing the tables will crush the nation's economy. After the show the man angrily tells Cross he's not welcome back. Cross decides to further annoy the club owner by taking 35 minutes to load up his backpack, while standing in the back room making small talk with the angry man.

David Cross
'Let America Laugh'
Sub Pop Records

While the DVD is just as entertaining as the CD, Cross made a conscious decision not to rerelease the same project. "Well, I've already got the CD out," Cross bluntly reasoned. "This is far more interesting than just watching me on stage."

Cross certainly has a point. The DVD has some

Continued on page 5

COURTESY COMEDYNET.RN.COM

Cross has not only had an extensive stand-up career, but an illustrious film career as well. His recorded work still has as much punch to it as his live stand-up.

Getting very noisy in Amherst

Rock bands to play tonight at Amherst College

By Kristyn Hobbs
Collegian Staff

Hoobastank along with Andrew W.K. and Die Trying started their tour on Nov. 1 and will be playing at Amherst College tonight in the Alumni Gymnasium. This is sure to be a high-energy show, not suitable for the weak ear. It will be a change from their most recent tour, the "Nokia Tour" with the "All-American Rejects." This tour will support their upcoming album, "The Reason."

Hoobastank
Andrew W.K.
Amherst College
Amherst
Tonight

Hoobastank has followed up their platinum self-titled debut in a path of perfect progression. Get ready kids, if you are looking for that new CD that is full of anthems for every amplitude of human emotion, you will find it in "The Reason," our Dec 9.

On their last album, they plucked the innermost rock strings of our hearts with ever-catchy tunes and this time they have done it again in a more experienced fashion. Singing the personal and widely felt lyrics is front man Doug Robb.

Guitarist Dan Estrin, bassist Markku Lappalainen and drummer Chris Hesse all interlocked their music intelligence to produce songs with an epic tone while staying true to their memorable and catchy lyrics.

This time the rock is harder and the soft, sensitive songs even deeper. They followed the simple Hoobastank rules to formulating a rock album. They took issues that are important to them, issues of life that are universally felt by their fans and turned them into songs that reflect the intensity of the topic's emotion through lyrics and heavy but melodic riffs.

"A few songs on this record are about religion and my complete lack of interest in it," Robb said.

"The Reason" is bound to be the favorite sing along during this tour. Robb sings an apology love song that every girl would love to hear, especially if it came from Robb's mouth. "Out of Control" proves that this album is not all about the mushy love stuff. The song has a pop and freak-out quality, definitely good to sweat out some aggressive energy to. The motivational, "Just One" cries out about finding life's big chance and taking it.

"Disappear" and "The Same Direction" further prove that they have made a more definitive album. Hoobastank has started working with charityticketauctions.org for this tour.

It is an auction site that deals with popular ticketing events. They will be donating two tickets from each show to the site. All proceeds from these auctions will be donated to "Stand Up for Kids," a nonprofit organization that helps the kids who are at risk and homeless through education, counseling and other services.

COURTESY PATRICK HALEY/ISLAND DEF JAM

Hoobastank has been a band that stood apart from the rest of their genre with their unique sound and passion for music.

Dolled up on Saturday Night

By David Fonseca
Collegian Staff

Boston's favorite duo, the Dresden Dolls, will be playing a free show tonight at the University of Massachusetts' Blue Wall Pub. What better way to kick-off the weekend than witnessing first hand the powerhouse rock duo voted best band in Boston by "Noise!" magazine?

Dresden Dolls, Elcodrive
Tuesday
Blue Wall Pub
UMass
Free

Hot off the release of their self-titled debut, the Dresden Dolls will be hitting up UMass to play alongside pop-rockers Elcodrive. Don't let the small venue fool you; the Dolls are no strangers to the limelight. Not only have they established themselves as one of the premier acts of the Boston underground, they've also brought home the hardware to prove it, winning the 2003 WBCN Rock 'n' Roll Rumble. All that's left for the Dolls is to spread their music to a wider audience.

The Dolls' latest album encompasses a wide array of musical influences ranging from The Pink Dots to Minor Threat. The combination of reflective lyrics, catchy hooks and emotional delivery captured on the album is undeniable. However, the Dolls' true home is up on the stage. Dressed up as denizens of a burlesque house and emitting enough electricity to solve the energy crisis in California, the Dolls prove that the relationship between showmanship and rock 'n' roll did not die with opening chords of "Smells Like Teen Spirit."

At a recent Halloween show, the Dolls had fun at the expense of that "other" boy-girl rock combo, the White Stripes, by staging a skit in which inept Stripes drummer Meg White felt the wrath of Stripes lead singer/guitarist Jack White, for her inability to keep the beat behind the kit.

Up-and-coming pop rockers Elcodrive should also bring a lot to the stage. Playing a sleek brand of radio rock that falls somewhere between Semisonic and Train, the boys of Elcodrive have enough melodic sensibility to appeal to soccer moms everywhere while not alienating fans of alterna-rock in the least bit. Though they are not striving to be revolutionary in any way, Elcodrive simply wishes to craft pop rock tunes that everyone can enjoy.

Their talent for accomplishing said goal is apparent on their newest album, "Somewhere Between Now and Then." The combination of pristine production and the polished voice of lead singer Mike Golarz may not start a rock revolution, but they will certainly get you nodding your head.

What else is there to say? Two very talented bands will be playing a free show tonight at the Blue Wall Pub, so don't miss out. An opportunity like this does not come along very often.

ELCODRIVE.COM

Elcodrive is an alternative rock group that targets all groups with their not-too-edgy tunes.

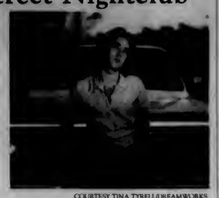
Cleaned up and ready to rock again

Wainright to perform at Pearl Street Nightclub

By Michael Busack Jr.
Collegian Staff

Less than a month after the release of his third album, "Want One," Rufus Wainwright, son of the famed songwriters Loudon Wainwright III and Kate McGarrigle has fallen into a pit of great reviews.

As he sets out for a new U.S. tour, a notable stopover for Wainwright and opening act Teddy Thompson is Northampton's very own Pearl Street Nightclub. The two will play Pearl Street in the ballroom tonight at 8:30 p.m. Northampton has become somewhat of a culture-rich haven for artists like Wainwright. Although it is considered a small town setting, the gay friendly atmosphere has been highly supportive of diversity and gay rights. As seen in many of his venues, the openly gay performer has formed quite the following of gay and lesbian fans.



It has been a long road back to success for Wainwright. Following the issue of his second album, "Poses," last October, the trendy pop-folk artist entered rehab due to extensive abuse of alcohol and pills. It was there on his path to sobriety that Wainwright jotted down many of the seemingly autobiographical tunes that comprise "Want One," his latest album off Dreamworks records.

Rufus Wainwright
Tonight
Pearl Street
Northampton
adv. $17.50 / door $20

The new album and tour sets have resembled a simpler and rawer sound from the elaborately stylish musician. While the previously released self-titled "Rufus Wainwright" (1998) and "Poses" (2001) have a sometimes convoluted and operatic tone, "Want One" is clearly far more straightforward. But don't become committed to the idea that Wainwright has strayed from his contemporary leadership. The new sessions still evoke signs of maturity that is beyond much of what is released today.

The album's release on Oct. 23, 2003, is the first of two installments. The second chapter of Wainwright's vision of "Want" is reportedly already in the can and ready to be released under the title "Want Two."

The sessions include a list of contributors including Martha Wainwright (Rufus' sister), Jenny Muldaur, Linda and Teddy Thompson, and Kate McGarrigle, Wainwright's mother who played the banjo and accordion.

COURTESY TINA TYRELL/DREAMWORKS

Rufus Wainwright has made a superb musical comeback.

This show is expected to be akin to many of Wainwright's shows. The musician prides himself on a very emotional live performance based on his ability to play multiple instruments live.

Doors are set to open at 8 p.m., while the show is set to begin at 8:30 p.m.

Taste something different and new

Cape Verdian festival held at UMass

By MeiMei Thai
Collegian Correspondent

For those of you who enjoy tasting different types of ethnic food, learning about cultures and dancing the night away, stop by and check out the semi-formal held by the Cape Verdean Student Alliance in the Campus Center Auditorium tomorrow night at 7 p.m.

Although many of you may be clueless about where Cape Verde is and the history of these islands, you can still take the first step to learn about it and interact with Cape Verdean students. It's only $5 with a five-college ID and $8 for the general public.

There are a little more than 100 Cape Verdean students at the University of Massachusetts and about 40 to 50 active members involved with the organization. Their main goal is to share their culture with the rest of the students on campus by holding cultural and educational events, including parties and a semi-formal.

Cape Verdean Festival
Campus Center
UMass
Tomorrow

Cape Verde is an archipelago, which is a group of islands, located in the North Atlantic Ocean off the west coast of Africa and west of Senegal. It is somewhat larger than Rhode Island, and the weather in Cape Verde is very warm and dry. Its terrain is steep, rocky and volcanic, but beautiful. There are about 412,137 people living in Cape Verde.

Cape Verde was discovered and colonized by Portugal, and the islands were used as trading centers for African slaves. Due to its history their main language is Crioulu, or Creole, which is a mixture of Portuguese and African dialects. Just recently Cape Verde obtained its national independence as of July 5, 1975.

There will be several Cape Verdean dishes to taste, such as Bacalhou (cod fish), white rice, Cachupa, curry chicken and meat stew; and desserts, such as fruit salad and flan (made out of cheese and milk), which will be cooked by the students' parents.

One of the organization's members, Helder J. Varela, said, "Cachupa is my favorite dish because it is deep rooted in our culture and it will be the best dish on the table. It is made with corn and in it we put meat, potatoes, carrots and cabbages, etc. Take a day off from D.C. food for this tasteful dish."

Not only will there be delicious food, but entertainment as well. There will be dance performances by the "Estrelas de Cabo Verde," and members of the alliance will do poetry readings. Also, there will be musical performances by a Cape Verdean band, "The Nomads," featuring Kimberly Djedje, Novu Reino and Tem Blessed. After dinner and the performances, there will be plenty of time for dancing. Music styles that will be played include morna, coladera, funana, batuku, cola and kuduro.

"The whole atmosphere will be very pleasant," said Evandro C. Carvalho, president of the organization.

Varela also added, "I hope people would come to this event to appreciate the beauty of our culture and diversity among ourselves as a community."

Cross sharing his views

Continued from page 4

footage of him performing his standup act, although a lot of it is different than the content on the CD. But most of it follows the behind-the-scenes action. The majority of the documentary finds Cross in situations such as being invited by a fan to an "after-show party" (read: potheads sitting in the back of a video store), and being interviewed by a drunk who is more interested in recounting his stalking of Sonic Youth than asking his subject pertinent questions.

Although Cross decided to take an alternate route with this DVD, he is not against putting out a future live DVD of standup. "I would do brand new material and put that out there, but not the stuff that already exists. I'd do it the other way around, put out a DVD than a CD."

Cross is well-known for his singular and unique style and mindset. His comedy isn't a series of setups and punch lines, but rather Cross prefers to tell stories. The humor comes from the insanity that surrounds him. In his 1999 HBO special, "The Pride Is Back," he mocks a book of "fun things to do on a date," like turning the television to MTV, getting a kazoo and playing along to the music.

On "Shut Up You Fking Baby," Cross shakes his head in disgust and confusion at the mindless and pointless post-9/11 flag-waving. In "Let America Laugh," Cross uses the people themselves as comedy — he has cameramen interview walkouts and talks to a club owner with an affinity for Robin Williams. Not only is Cross' comedy act and sense of humor different from mainstream comedians (such as Williams) but his life and career choices seem to be, too. Cross' inventiveness manifested itself when he found himself disenfranchised from the comedy scene; he took his show to rock clubs.

"There were pros and cons to both [rock clubs and comedy clubs] ... [in rock clubs] it's a long time [for the audience] to stand up. In the back people chit-chat and stuff and it's not as focused. In the [comedy] clubs, the best thing is that it is very focused ... and you also get people who are not necessarily inclined to agree with everything you say, which is very interesting, and I miss that confrontational feeling. The downside is that you have the club-owners, you're limited to the amount of time you can do ... and, for a lot of my fans who don't have a lot of money, going to a fking comedy club can cost upwards of 50 bucks. Your two-drink minimum and your ticket price, which I don't get to really set, and they have to drive out to the suburbs ..."

While Cross enjoys the rock club tours because he draws more and more people who come specifically for him — not just people who are randomly going to a comedy club to laugh — he deals with a lot of distractions.

"That's not heckling," Cross says. "That's just drunken behavior. When someone says, 'You suck,' it's not that I really suck it's that they're trying to be funny. When someone says, 'You suck,' in a [comedy] club, they mean it."

When asked about any future plans for touring and releasing albums, Cross' trademark deadpan sarcasm made it way out for the first time of the interview.

"I'd like to record 27 more albums," Cross said in his straightest voice, "but only release one of them and take the master tapes and burn them."

When Cross finished joking around, he really answered: "I plan to do another one for Sub Pop that's tighter and a single disc. It's kinda the stuff I'm doing now. I have no plans right now to do another tour but I'm trying to get together some people to do a voter registration tour."

Until then, Cross is keeping busy; he is currently acting in a supporting role on Fox's new comedy, "Arrested Development," developing a show, "Vice TV," for Showtime, and he has a role in next year's "Eternal Sunshine of the Spotless Mind" with Jim Carrey. And, of course, he has released one of the funniest DVD's in recent memory.

Any fan of Cross' previous work should eat up "Let America Laugh," and while "Mr Show" or "Shut Up You Fking Baby" may be a better introduction to Cross' twisted sense of humor, the disc could very well make him some new fans.

GILROGE TIMENTAL/WIREIMAGE.COM

Cross has made a name for himself in and beyond the realm of comedy.

ARTscape getting some attention

Museum allows visitors to explore favorite exhibits

By Bipasha Ray
Associated Press

SALEM (AP) — William Scofield docked his audio guide into an ARTscape kiosk in the atrium of the Peabody Essex Museum — and planned to take his favorite works of art home.

He and his daughters had "bookmarked" some eye-catching exhibits by punching in the ID numbers on the audio guide's keypad, as they walked through the Native American gallery.

After downloading those numbers into an online account at the atrium kiosk, they hoped to further explore those favorites at home, linking them with related items in the museum's collection.

"When you go away from the museum, you have more than just nice memories," Scofield said. "You have something you can revisit, from home or anywhere, and also share the experience with other people."

ARTscape is one of the latest programs in a national trend among museums using online technology to extend their reach, said Ed Able, president and CEO of the American Association of Museums, an organization of about 3,000 museums including the Peabody Essex.

"If it's online and it has these tools associated with it, it can be useful anywhere and that's the beauty of it — museums are reaching out beyond their geographical boundaries," Able said.

At the 204-year-old Salem museum, which reopened in June after a $125 million renovation, ARTscape was born of a need to cater to an increasingly diverse audience, said John Grimes, a deputy director at the museum who headed the project.

"We are recognizing that there are different learning styles, different kinds of intelligence, different kinds of cultural backgrounds," Grimes said. "With this technology, we can provide context, more cultural information important for understanding the use and meaning of these art objects."

Visitors can also use ARTscape to browse the museum holdings, only a fraction of which are on display at any given time. They can search by keyword and make "connections" — look up works from the same culture, made from the same materials, from the same era, or created for the same social purpose.

Founded in 1799 by Salem sea captains to display treasures they collected around the globe, the museum now boasts 2.4 million works of art, architecture and culture. Known for its maritime art and history collection, Asian and Oceanic art, the museum also has extensive holdings in American art, Native American and African works.

The answers to your future in a book

By Deborah Geiger
Collegian Staff

"Don't Wait Until You Graduate II" is a life handbook that will help you in college, getting a job, and forming relationships — not to mention all the fruits of that journey. Author Keith F. Luscher brings jobless nightmares and graduation into perspective in this marvelous life almanac: "If you want a job, if you want to be successful, you must start now — and don't wait until you graduate."

'Don't Wait Until You Graduate II'
By Keith F. Luscher
New Horizon Press
2003

"Don't Wait Until You Graduate II" will reward you chapter by chapter with boldface lessons on achieving your dreams, clearly outlined and numbered for easy review. You'll walk away with some great pointers and will learn to "fill a need" in our capitalist society.

To build experience in your field, you'll need enriching experiences, many of which will be applicable to you regardless of major. "You must learn how to seek out and recognize an opportunity ... you must look for needs." Luscher explains several ways to do this, through college professors, volunteer work, part-time jobs and more. Luscher even tells you how to find these opportunities, and volunteer organizations to contact. "Don't Wait Until You Graduate II" will motivate you to get started investing in yourself and your future.

Job markets may fluctuate faster than the hemlines in the fall Dior line, Luscher says. "Jobs are not an end, they are a means ... our quality of life does not get better with more jobs being created ..." Only a higher standard of living can do that.

Jobs are only a means to solving existing problems, or filling existing needs. But there is a huge difference between a "job" and a "business." Business does not exist solely to create jobs; and "it is nobody's obligation to hire you," or to magically see how great you are. You've got to show them through your own interest and experience.

The principles of this book — the way others perceive you and the way you perceive yourself — revolve around "your integrity, work ethic, and dedication to service ... your relationships with other people."

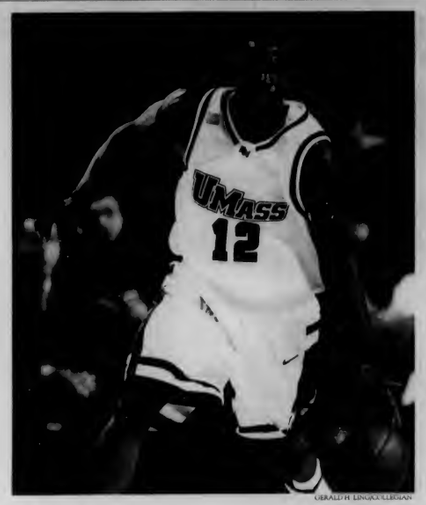
Some of the most engrossing and rewarding segments in this book are on how the truest friendships are made through volunteer work. Real networking, the author insists, "is simply the process of building relationships with other people."

Volunteer work is "one of the most effective ways to network" by looking into doing meaningful volunteer work. "You enhance your expertise ... develop skills that employers seek out universally, yet are not often found ... it can help you develop attributes," like becoming a team player.

Luscher emphasizes that you can do anything you wish in volunteer work — you can try new things virtually risk-free. All you do is choose your volunteering niche and available hours, and you can broaden skills from public speaking, to teaching English to non-speakers. "Don't Wait Until You Graduate II" is the order of the day if you're looking to see the difference you can make in people's lives.

Luscher's step-by-step plan shows you exactly how to start building real friends through these highly accessible outlets. You may even start to see this book as a guide to living more than anything else. "Wherever there are opportunities to serve, there are friends to be made ... not temporary contacts ... but friends ... they are all around us." Even professors can be part of your network if you truly care about the subject and their expertise. "Get them excited about helping you," Luscher recommends, and don't be another "anonymous, faceless body."

Make the world aware of what you can do; ask the advice of someone in the field. "By asking about ... business, you are actually inquiring about ... needs." He also recommends seeking out a mentor as a contact and permanent inspiration.



Full of ways to develop better relationships, get your foot in the door, spot bogus ads, get an internship, find summer employment ideas, get service learning, start your own business and much, much more, "Don't Wait Until you Graduate II" will have you inspired, motivated and excited about your future.

Rent One of Ours
• Direct Billing to Insurance Companies
• Free Local Pick Up
• Locally Owned and Operated
549-RENT (7368)
No additional fee for 21-25 year old drivers
POTTERS AUTO & TRUCK RENTALS
• Cars
• Passenger Vans
• Trucks
at North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
78 Sunderland Road, North Amherst, MA 01059
www.northamherstmotors.com
On Bus Route • One Mile North of UMass

Panda East 熊国
Fine Chinese & Japanese Cuisine
We bring Chinatown to you!
"Voted best Chinese food by UMass students!"
*Sushi bar!
*O&MP accepted
*Delivery available!
Location: 103 N. Pleasant St. Amherst, M.A. 01002
Open Hours:
Fri. & Sat.: 11:30 a.m.-11:00 p.m.
Sun. - Thurs.: 11:30 a.m. - 10:00 p.m.
Delivery: (413)549-0077
Telephone: (413)256-8923 (413)256-8924
Fax: (413)253-1173

Enter twice to win a
$1000 Zanna Shopping Spree!
For 5 days only! Tuesday, November 11 through Saturday, November 15 we're celebrating our 32nd year of being Zanna. Come to our Anniversary Sale. Enter for a chance to win a $1000 Zanna Shopping Spree! All week we're having Big Sales. Join the fun. Shop the Bargains.
Only 2 days left!

Plenty of food & money left over?
It's true- if you shop at:
THE BARN,
Food Sensations...Plus!
Discount groceries... Save 30-50%!!
Just a short drive up 116 to Rt. 91 North to Greenfield (Exit 26).
THE BARN. It's worth the trip!
Meats•Dairy•Produce•Groceries
•Household Items
99¢ sale and 50¢ sale going on now!
95 River Street, Greenfield 01301
(Exit 26 to 2A East, Right at Dunkin' Donuts)
(413) 774-5599 ~ Open daily 8 AM to 10 PM
Cash and food stamps only, please

GERALD H. LINGO/COLLEGIAN

A fresh start

Anthony Anderson scored 16 points as the Minutemen beat the Playaz Club, 95-87, last night at the Mullins Center. Sophomore Rashaun Freeman (19 points, 15 rebounds) scored a double-double in his second game as a Minuteman.

Battle of the Bills

Continued from page 8

Even some players are surprised by the success.

"Honestly, yes," Dallas strong safety Darren Woodson said.

The last time they faced each other, in 1995, Parcells coached New England and Belichick led Cleveland. They're 2-2 in head-to-head matchups and both took the Patriots to the Super Bowl; Parcells lost in 1997 and Belichick won in 2002.

But there is more at stake Sunday than coaching bragging rights.

The Patriots, coming off a bye week, must stop the NFL's seventh-ranked rushing attack and beat the league's top defense that held its fourth opponent below 10 points last Sunday with a 10-6 win over Buffalo.

The Cowboys must handle Tom Brady, who has thrown six touchdowns and one interception in the current five-game winning streak, and must exploit a defense that has allowed an NFL-low four touchdown passes.

"As an offensive group, we don't just take punches and just lay there and look for the next blow," Dallas running back Tony Hambrick said. "We try to throw one back."

The Patriots, hoping to neutralize the Cowboys' blitzing and defensive speed, want to grind out yardage and avoid third-down-and-long plays.

"The best way to counteract speed is to just play powerball against them," guard Damien Woody said.

Belichick was Parcells' defensive coordinator with the New York Giants in the 1986 and 1990 seasons when they won Super Bowls. On Jan. 3, 2000, Parcells stepped down after three years as coach of the New York Jets and was succeeded by Belichick.

But on Jan. 4, Belichick resigned amid uncertainty about the pending sale of the team and Parcells' presence in the front office. Belichick, still under contract to the Jets at the time, lost a lawsuit seeking his freedom from the pact. A deal involving draft choices was worked out that allowed him to coach the Patriots in 2000.

"I have no hard feelings about anything," Parcells said. "I know it has been characterized otherwise, but that's not the case at all. I do wish him well."

Belichick said all the right things about his former boss.

"The thing I appreciated the most about working for Bill was the fact that, as a defensive coach, he gave me the latitude to put together game plans, utilize personnel and coach defense."

Parcells spent four seasons as coach of the Patriots, ending with their loss in the Super Bowl after the 1996 season in which he had disagreements with owner Robert Kraft.

Cowboy 'D' is the show

Continued from page 8

"They're not No. 1 for nothing," Patriots running back Antowain Smith said. "We need to be able to handle that pressure because they like to stop you on first and second down and get you in third-and-long situations and bring the all-out blitz."

The Patriots average only 103.6 yards rushing per game, 19th in the league. The passing offense averages 218.8 yards, ranked 10th, so a short-passing game might be more effective.

"This isn't one of those days where I will be just camping back there checking things out," Brady said. "I really will have to get that ball out quick."

That could mean a greater role for running back Kevin Faulk, an outstanding receiver, and tight ends Christian Fauria and Daniel Graham, who both were playing well before the Patriots had last weekend off.

New England already has overcome an outstanding defense. Denver was ranked second in the NFL but lost 30-26 in the Patriots' last game when Brady threw an 18-yard touchdown pass to David Givens with 30 seconds left.

But the Patriots rushed for only 69 yards and Brady threw for 350 as they trailed most of that game.

Falling behind can be very costly against the Cowboys, who have allowed a league-low 15.1 points per game.

"They present unique challenges," Woody said. "We want to stay ahead because the minute you fall behind, especially on third down, that's when they're going to bring everybody. They're going to always bring one more than you can block."

The Patriots are getting used to tough defenses, and their offensive game plans — whether they stress running or passing — usually work.

"Every week it seems like we play against a really good defense and we get up for it," Fauria said. "We take it as a challenge."

XC set for NCAA race

By Matt Barstow
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts cross country teams will face a daunting task tomorrow, as they travel to Franklin Park to compete in the NCAA District 1, Division 1 Northeast Regional Championships.

The teams need to finish in the top three to earn a bid to the NCAA Championships. The meet will feature 33 teams and 250 runners from every D-I school in New York and New England.

Coming off a seventh-place finish in the conference championships Nov. 1, the Minutemen will look to improve upon last year's 23rd place Northeast Regional finish.

"We hold a slight advantage over the New York teams because we raced at Franklin Park earlier this season, but all the teams from New England have as well," UMass men's coach Ken O'Brien said. "Northeastern, [Boston University] and [Boston College] have the greatest advantage because they practice and train at Franklin throughout the season."

The Minutemen will look upon junior captain Andrew McCarron and sophomore transfer Ryan Corbett to lead a young team in its first 10,000-meter race of the season. Corbett led UMass scorers in the A-10 Championships, finishing 29th overall, with a time of 26:46.

McCarron, who finished eighth in last year's New England Championships, has experience running 6.2-mile races during the indoor season.

O'Brien believes freshmen Aaron Strellner and Michael Dulong are key to the team's success. The duo came in third and fourth, respectively, among Minutemen scorers in the A-10 Championships.

"A 10k is a challenging length, but the course is relatively flat which is comforting to the young runners," O'Brien said.

Iona College, winner of last year's Northeast Regional Title, will look to repeat after claiming its 13th consecutive Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference title on Oct. 31. Heavily favored, the Gaels are ranked fourth in the nation by the Mondo/NCAA Division I Poll.

"We would love to crack the top 25, but my ultimate goal is to have five of our guys have good races," O'Brien said. "I don't care where we finish as much as I care about the team coming out and running strong as a unit."

For the Minutemen, the Regional Championships couldn't come at a worse time.

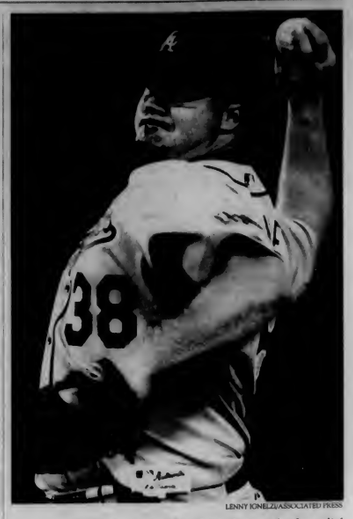
Team MVP Alexis Anzelone is coming off a season-low third-place finish among UMass scorers in the A-10 Championships. A week prior to the meet, Anzelone suffered from the flu, from which she has not fully recovered.

"Saturday's race is going to be extremely competitive and it doesn't look like Anzelone will be back at full strength," UMass women's coach Julie LaFreniere said. "Monday we had the hardest workout of the week and you could tell she was struggling, and that's not like her."

Anzelone led the Minutemen in four out of six races during the season.

Another blow to the Minutewomen was the injury of Loren Donohue. During Tuesday's practice, Donohue's calves tightened, and as the injury persisted throughout the week she was forced to visit the team trainer yesterday morning. LaFreniere will wait for a proper diagnosis before determining Donohue's status for tomorrow's race.

"Now, more than ever, we need to race as a team," LaFreniere said. "There isn't anything we can do about the injuries, so people like [senior] Tricia [Silva] and [junior] Amanda [Dahlberg] need to step up and run their best races of the season."



LaFreniere singled out Silva and Dahlberg because they run 10,000-meter events during the winter season. Tomorrow's women's race will be 6,000 meters.

Columbia is favored to win the women's competition, after repeating at the Ivy League Heptagonal Cross Country Championships on Oct. 31.

At the end of tomorrow's race, the Providence Friars, ranked No. 8 nationally in the Nov. 4 FinishLynx Division I Women's Cross Country Poll, may be nipping at Columbia's heels.

"Some of the best cross country teams in the country are from the Northeast," LaFreniere said. "Columbia is a considerable favorite, but Providence, BC or any of the Ivy's could finish in the top three."

If the UMass cross country teams do not finish in the top three, individual runners may then be selected by an NCAA committee to participate in the National Championships. It is likely that a total of 10 runners from the Northeast Region will be selected.

LENNY IGNELZI/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Los Angeles Dodgers closer Eric Gagne became the first relief pitcher in 11 years to win a Cy Young Award yesterday.

Gagne takes NL Cy Young

By Ronald Blum
Associated Press

NEW YORK (AP) — Eric Gagne was almost as perfect in NL Cy Young Award voting as he was on the mound.

The relief pitcher who converted all 55 of his save chances this year received 28 of 32 first-place votes and 146 points to win the honor Thursday from the Baseball Writers' Association of America.

It was just the ninth time a reliever won a Cy Young, the first in the NL since San Diego's Mark Davis in 1989.

"We haven't seen a lot of relievers win that award, so I was a little worried," Gagne said during a telephone conference call.

San Francisco's Jason Schmidt was second with two first-place votes and 73 points. Chicago's Mark Prior got the other first-place votes and was third with 60 points.

Gagne, a 27-year-old right-hander, was 2-3 with a 1.20 ERA and had 137 strikeouts and 20 walks in 82 1-3 innings. He was converted from a starter to a reliever after the 2001 season and had 52 saves in 2002.

"I knew I had the mental attitude to be a closer, it was just a matter of doing it in the major leagues," Gagne said. "As a starter, you have to be more relaxed, you have to control your emotions more."

He is the only pitcher to reach 50 saves in more than one season and has converted 62 consecutive save chances since failing to hold a lead against Arizona on Aug. 26, 2002, a major league record.

"I don't really care about the streak," said Gagne, the first reliever to win a Cy Young since Oakland's Dennis Eckersley won the AL award in 1992.

He is just the second Canadian to win a Cy Young, following Ferguson Jenkins of the Cubs in 1971.

Gagne failed to hold a lead just once this season — he allowed a two-run, go-ahead homer to Hank Blalock of Texas in the eighth inning of the All-Star game.

"For me, the All-Star game doesn't count," Gagne said.

Growing up in Mascouche, Quebec, Gagne started skating when he was 3 and thought he was headed to a career in the NHL.

"They called me the goon when I was younger," he said. "I thought I was a pretty good defenseman. I was pretty big. I loved to hit."

Gagne wears goggles on the mound because he can't wear contacts — his eyes have scars from getting hit by hockey sticks.

Because he was 18 days shy of being eligible for arbitration and his contract was automatically renewed by the Dodgers in March, Gagne doesn't get a bonus added to his $550,000 salary.

He figures to earn $3.5 million or more next season.

"I'm not bitter. That's the business side of it. There's no hard feelings," Gagne said. "Now, it's going to be a different story."

Schmidt, 17-5 with a league-leading 2.34 ERA, gets $75,000 for finishing second.

Prior, 18-6 with a 2.43 ERA, gets $100,000 for winding up third and also receives $250,000 raises in each of the next three seasons. With Prior's All-Star selection and Cy Young finish, the value of his five-year contract increases from $10.5 million to $12.95 million.

Prior, who is getting married tomorrow, thought Gagne deserved to win.

"To do what he did and to not blow a save, especially in the situations he was put in, one-run games a lot of times, and to rattle off 50-some odd straight saves, is unbelievable," he said.

Marlin wins in court

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — A federal civil jury spent 10 minutes deliberating before deciding that NASCAR driver Sterling Marlin was innocent of assault for throwing a man into the Jamaican surf. The decision was announced late Wednesday.

Joel Whitcomb of Pittsfield, Mass., sued Marlin, claiming he injured his knee and shoulder when Marlin shoved him into the water.

Marlin, who lives in Columbia, contended he could not have hurt the man. Besides, he testified Monday, he had every right to stand his ground when the plaintiff accused him of being a cheater.

Whitcomb went with his wife to Jamaica in December 2001 for a promotional beach holiday that drew NASCAR aficionados from across the United States.

Whitcomb, a Dale Earnhardt Jr. fan, went with his wife, Julia, who likes Bill Elliot, according to testimony in the two-day trial before Senior U.S. District Judge Thomas A. Higgins.

In Jamaica they found themselves at a beachfront resort, where they could mingle with the drivers by night and join teams to compete in the sunny beach Olympics that organizers staged on the sand. The Whitcombs were pleased to find themselves on Dale Jr.'s team.

Joel Whitcomb competed in almost all the events, including the tug of war between the Earnhardt's fans and Marlin's fans. The men from both teams each won once, leaving the rubber match to the women.

When the women from Marlin's team began to lose, Marlin reached in and grabbed the rope as if to aid their cause. Marlin told the jury he was just horsing around and didn't really pull.

Joel Whitcomb concluded otherwise. Testimony from the witness stand and from depositions showed that he told Marlin that he thought the driver was a cheater — always had been, always would be — and jabbed his finger into Marlin's chest.

"I thought he needed to be cooled off," Marlin told the court.

— Associated Press

Launch Your Career

Apply Now For A
LEGAL ASSISTANT INTERNSHIP
At the Student Legal Services Office

*Serve the Campus Community while enhancing your resume

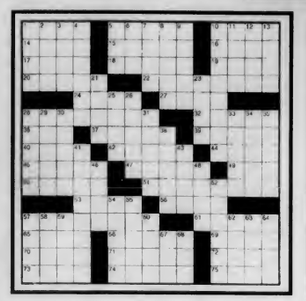
*Earn up to 15 credits working 36 hours a week

UMASS STUDENT LEGAL SERVICES OFFICE
922 Campus Center
(413) 545-1995

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM
SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM
SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM
SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM
SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM
SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

FREE DELIVERY! We accept all major credit cards and OCMP!
549-6073
Open Sun. - Wed. 11AM - 1AM
Thurs. - Sat. 11AM - 3AM
Located on the corner of Fearing St. and Sunset Ave.
150 Fearing St.
Special of the Week: Large Pizza $6.99 - Pick up only

Quote for the Day



"He who controls the past commands the future. He who commands the future conquers the past."

-George Orwell

TODAY'S CROSSWORD PUZZLE

Dining Commons Menu

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Roast Turkey
- Stuffed Shells
- Falafel Pocket Sandwich (vegan)

DINNER
- Dill Salmon
- Pork Souvlaki
- Brazilian Black Beans (vegan)

Daily Weather Forecast

For Amherst

FRIDAY
- High: 40
- Low: 24

SATURDAY
- High: 47
- Low: 30

SUNDAY
- High: 51
- Low: 29

Production Crew

On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Nikolas P. Markantonatos
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Amelia P. Lincoln
COPY EDITOR
Barabara Lotto
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Scott Pihl
PRODUCTION STAFF
Emilie Duggan, Ryan Flaherty

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
The world is stronger than you are. Let it lift you to success.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
You'll find what you're looking for where you'll look last.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Yuck, your tea tastes like cream and water.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Let the good times roll ...

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
It's like water for wine, my friend.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Wear hoodies. Not only are they stylish, but warm over your ears, too.

leo • Jul.. 23-Aug. 22
When people come to you in confidence, keep their secrets.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Don't let a softball take your head off. It's just a game.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Grab napkins at lunch. You'll have stuff on your face.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Give your brain the night off and have fun. You studied hard, now party!

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Wet your whistle and try a happy tune.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
You're the only person I know who will eat that stuff.

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

APARTMENT FOR RENT

3 Bedroom Apartment for January 665-9254

AUTO FOR SALE

1992 Silver Ford Taurus Excellent condition $2400 118000K Call 549-3930 210-7393 All Power

$500!!! Police Impounds. Hondas, Chevy's, etc from $500. For listings. 1-800-319-3323 ext4554

COMPUTERS

Pentium Laptop $99.00 Free Printer with Computer purchase Call for details. Great Rates and great turn around time. We fix Laptops, Desktops/PC's guaranteed 584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

The Barn
–Shift managers
–Refrigerated warehouse
–Cashiers & stockers ($8 hr)
Apply in store. Open 8am – 10pm. 95 River St. Greenfield, MA 01301 (116 to 91N to Exit 26) (413)774-5599

!Bartending!$ $250/ day potential No experience Nesc Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext 162

EMPLOYMENT

Spring 2004 Internships with the Student Legal Services Office. Get hands-on experience in the legal field. Work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn up to 15 undergraduate credits. No experience necessary and training provided. Contact the Student Legal Services Office: 545-1995, 922 Campus Center

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

EMPLOYMENT

Internship
Motivated students seeking leadership outside the box. Gain experience in all aspects of running a small business. Average pay: $9300.00 Call 508-246-1230

FOR SALE

$Save$ Wholesale-Discount Prices, Video games, clothing, jewelry, more. www.tylers-discounts.com

HOUSE FOR RENT

Amherst 3-4 Bedroom house. Hobart Ln. Available Jan. 1. $1650/month. Call 413-549-4001

INSTRUCTION

On the Rocks School Bartending. Become certified in one weekend. Great way to earn money. Call us toll free at 866-mix-5600. www.OTRBartending.com

ROOM FOR RENT

Sublet one bedroom for Spring On Bus Route Call: 617-893-8656

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

SERVICES

Stuck on a tough term paper? ThePaperExperts.com can help! Expert writers can help with editing, writing, graduate school applications. We'll help with any subject- visit us 24/7 at ThePaperExperts.com.

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

TRAVEL

Act Now! Book 11 people, get 12th trip free. Group discounts for 6+ www.springbreakdiscounts.com or 800-838-8202

Spring Break 2004. Travel with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator to Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas and Florida. Now hiring campus reps. Call for group discounts. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com For more information contact STA Travel at 413-256-1261

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Destinations, including Cruises! Foam Parties, Free Drinks and Club Admissions. Rep Positions and FREE trips Available. 1-800-231-4386 www.Epicurean Tours.com

A "Reality" Spring Break 2004's Hottest Prices Book now .. Free Trips, Meals & Parties www.sunsplashtours.com or 1800-426-7710

Advertise in the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace Call 545-3500 today!

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTSWEEKEND

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 14, 2003 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

In the Eagles' eye

3rd-ranked Boston College comes to Amherst tonight

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

Tonight, the ninth-ranked Massachusetts hockey team (7-1-0, 4-1-0 Hockey East) takes on its toughest foe yet, when the No. 3 Boston College Eagles (5-2-2, 2-0-1 HEA) pay a visit to the Mullins Center at 7 p.m.

While the Minutemen have played well against Hockey East opponents thus far, outside of a dismal 6-2 loss to the Providence Friars — who will host UMass tomorrow night at Schneider Arena — but have paid the price.

A number of players are already feeling the kind of wear that usually hits Hockey East teams in the middle of the season.

The Eagles, meanwhile, come into tonight's game with a mark on their conference record which isn't necessarily a blemish, but the story of the last digit in their Hockey East record could have them seeing red tonight.

BC drew with New Hampshire Wednesday night at the Verizon Wireless Arena in Manchester, N.H. The Eagles led 2-0 until 6:46 of the third period, when Jacob Micllikier scored to make it 2-1. Still, BC held onto the one-goal advantage until Nathan Martz scored at 18:51, with UNH goalie Mike Ayers on the bench in favor of an extra attacker. The teams battled to a 2-2 tie, though the squandered two-goal lead likely didn't sit well with the Eagles.

UMass coach Don Cahoon hasn't harped on the Eagles' hunt for vengeance to his team, however.

"We haven't talked to them too much about what [BC has] done, we're trying to get these guys to focus on what we're doing. New Hampshire is a unique team in that they're very resilient, they can get outshot for the majority of games, and they still get points.

"Our guys just need to compete and make sure they're ready for every shift and make sure they don't play the scoreboard, don't play the clock, just compete."

The story for BC this year has been its vaunted offense, which is averaging more than three goals per game. The Eagles have scored 10 goals in the first period this season, while allowing just one goal in the opening frame. That came in a 4-1 victory over UMass Lowell on Nov. 5.

Cahoon would like to avoid a shootout tonight.

"I think we have enough ability to score some goals for sure, but I don't think I want to be trading goals with them, be giving them numbers and trading odd-man rushes and man-advantage situations. I don't think that is in anybody's favor but theirs. They're the ones who are especially good in the rush, and they're the ones that make their bread and butter on the special teams."

If the Minutemen can keep things low-scoring, Cahoon feels the advantage falls with the Maroon and White.

"Hopefully we're a lot more patient than we were a couple of years ago, and patience counts for a lot in those situations, you've got to stay with the grind, you've got to stay with the simple plays, you've got to keep the puck in front of you and be responsible on all fronts. I think our guys understand that type of hockey, it's a playoff type of hockey.

"It's hard to tell. I think we've played a couple of games where if we can manufacture that type of performance, we'd be in decent shape [tonight]. Like a lot of teams early in the season, there have been all types of performances. If we bring the best performance to the table, we'll be in good shape, if we don't, we'll struggle like other teams do against them."

Among the hurting Minutemen were Tim Vitek and Greg Mauldin, who both left yesterday's practice early to seek medical attention, and didn't return.

AMELIA P. LINCOLN/COLLEGIAN

Goaltender Gabe Winer has racked up a 2.29 goals against average and a .882 save percentage this season. He also notched his first career shutout on Nov. 7, a 2-0 win. Winer and the Massachusetts hockey team will take on the Boston College Eagles tonight at the Mullins Center.

UMass Weekend Schedule

Friday, Nov. 14

Sport	Opp./Event	Time
Men's Ice Hockey	vs. Boston College	7:00 p.m.

Saturday, Nov. 15

Sport	Opp./Event	Time
Football	at Delaware	12:00 p.m.
Women's Cross Country	at NCAA Regional	11:00 a.m.
Men's Cross Country	at NCAA Regional	11:00 a.m.
Men's Ice Hockey	at Providence	7:00 p.m.

Gillette showdown

Teams set for battle of Bills

By Howard Ulman
Associated Press

FOXBORO (AP) — Bill Parcells and Bill Belichick have shared two Super Bowl championships, one public breakup and no time for distractions.

So don't expect Parcells to glare from the Cowboys sidelines at his counterpart across the field on Sunday night. And Belichick will be too busy telling the Patriots what to do to mutter epithets about his mentor.

"I am a coach," Belichick said. "I am not going to make any tackles. I am not going to throw any passes."

He spent 15 seasons as an assistant to Parcells, who coached the Patriots for four seasons. That adds to an already potent mixture — two division leaders with surprising 7-2 records and the return to New England of wide receiver Terry Glenn, Dallas' leading receiver.

But just as Glenn went from 90 catches as a rookie with the Patriots in 1996 to a career marred by injuries and suspensions, the teams' fortunes can change dramatically.

"I'm happy that we're in a good position, but it doesn't mean anything right now," Patriots cornerback Ty Law said. "We're 7-2, but it's just as easy if you don't focus to go 2-5 the rest of the way." Belichick and Parcells keep pressure on players to avoid complacency and are the masterminds behind their teams' rise to division leads after season-opening losses.

"We are really inexperienced in a lot of respects. I'm not crying wolf here at all. I'm just telling you that this is a work in progress," Parcells said.

He joined a team that went 5-11 the past three seasons and added key players and a demanding style. Belichick overcame numerous injuries to starters by changing schemes and plugging in substitutes.

Continued on page 6

Big D's defense is on display

By Howard Ulman
Associated Press

FOXBORO (AP) — The New England Patriots move the ball best through the air. That may not be the best way to beat the NFL's top defense.

The Dallas Cowboys also have the NFL's third best rushing defense, but by running well on Sunday night, the Patriots hope to keep them from blitzing.

"That's what the coaches laid out for us. Let's go ahead and play smashmouth with these guys and try to wear them down," New England guard Damien Woody said. "If we can establish the line of scrimmage, we'll definitely give ourselves a better chance of winning the game."

Dallas loves to blitz and has nine sacks in its last three games. It has held each of its last six opponents to fewer than 135 yards passing, and four of its nine opponents under 10 points.

No wonder the Cowboys are 7-2, the same record as the Patriots, and lead the NFC East.

"They are a pressure defense that has speed," Patriots quarterback Tom Brady said. "They are bringing it, so I have to get rid of the ball."

He's done that well during New England's current five-game winning streak. He's been sacked just seven times, thrown six touchdown passes and been picked off only once.

"They are going to try to do something to combat pressure and I think they have a good guy there to try to do that in Brady," Dallas coach Bill Parcells said.

Last Sunday, Dallas beat Buffalo 10-6, held former Patriot Drew Bledsoe to 107 yards passing and sacked him three times.

Just last season, the Cowboys had only the 18th best defense in the NFL and 24 sacks. They already have 20 this season.

Parcells is a big reason for that, having installed a more aggressive defense after taking over for Dave Campo following Dallas' third straight 5-11 season.

Continued on page 6

The Daily Collegian

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 17, 2003 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 52

Turkey Trot gives food bank a lift

By Michelle Dozois
Collegian Correspondent

Forty-four University of Massachusetts students and one marathon runner raised $500 for the hungry on Saturday at the first annual "Turkey Trot Event," a charity run/walk.

The event, which is about 5 kilometers in length, began and ended at the Student Union. It was organized by the UMass registered student organization, Students Helping Area Reach-Out Efforts (S.H.A.R.E.).

The money, raised through entry fees and individual donations, will be donated to the Western Mass Food Bank. The Food Bank will use the money to buy turkeys to distribute to local families for Thanksgiving.

"With every dollar they're given, the Western Mass Food Bank is able to purchase $9 worth of food," said Maggie Moran, a senior marketing major and secretary of S.H.A.R.E. "So, from this event, the Food Bank will be able to buy $4,500 worth of food."

Twenty volunteers arrived at 7:30 a.m. on Saturday to set up for the race and mark the trail with handmade turkey cutouts, which looped around the academic circle.

"It sounds sappy, but everyone was really happy and showed up with a smile on their face, despite the 10 a.m. race start time, which is considered early by many college students," said Carolyn Melbye, a junior.

S.H.A.R.E. and non-S.H.A.R.E. members alike braved the cold weather and the blustery wind to participate, including members of the Phi Sigma Phi sorority and the women's crew and rugby teams.

John Lohan, a two-time Boston Marathon runner and older brother of S.H.A.R.E. publicity officer Brian Lohan, drove from Boston to run in the event.

"The Turkey Trot was very well done," said Lohan, 38. "I won my age group!"

"We had a great turnout, more than we expected," said Brian Lohan, a junior communications major. "We hope that this can become a tradition at UMass, growing year by year, and it's a special feeling, being a part of the first one."

Participants agreed that the event was a success. "I will definitely be here next year," said James Crosby, a junior physics major.

"It was a great time," said Dylan Malynn, a junior geology major. Malynn said that it was tough waking up so early, but that the experience was worth it. "It's especially good because the money we raised is actually $9 for every dollar," said Malynn. "My registration fee alone was $10, which is really $90. That's definitely a family's worth of food."

GERALD H. GINGA/COLLEGIAN

Students run through the UMass campus to raise money for the hungry for the first annual five kilometer "Turkey Trot Event" Saturday. The trek raised $500 towards Thanksgiving turkeys for the Western Mass. Food Bank.

Participants and volunteers munched on bagels, orange slices and granola bars, donated by Stop & Shop, Trader Joe's, and the UMass Outing Club. Beverages were donated by the Special Olympics, an organization that S.H.A.R.E. volunteers work with throughout the year, according to Amy Tessier, S.H.A.R.E president and a senior sports management major.

The top three male and female finishers were rewarded with gift certificates donated by Bueno Y Sano, Cinemark, Hampshire Mall, Staples and Eastern Mountain Sports. There were enough gift certificates left over so that 30 other participants also received prizes.

"More people left with something extra in their pockets than those that didn't," Lohan said.

S.H.A.R.E. officers chose the Western Mass Food Bank, located in Hatfield, MA, as the charity to which to donate the money because of its local ties. "It's an umbrella organization," said Maggie Moran, a senior marketing major and secretary of S.H.A.R.E. "[The money] trickles down to places such as the Survival Center in Amherst and Not Bread Alone."

Each month, eight S.H.A.R.E. members volunteer at Not Bread Alone, a soup kitchen at the First Congregational Church in Amherst, according to Moran.

S.H.A.R.E. was founded in 1996 as a senior honors thesis project. More information on the volunteer club can be found at http://www-unix.oit.umass.edu/~share/.

Istanbul bombings claimed by al-Qaida in newspaper

By Frances D'Emilio
Associated Press

ISTANBUL, Turkey (AP)— An Arab newspaper reported yesterday that it received a claim of responsibility from the al-Qaida terrorist group for the car bomb attacks that killed 23 people in two Istanbul synagogues a day earlier.

The statement received by the London-based daily Al-Quds Al-Arabi, a copy of which was obtained by The Associated Press, said the group carried out the attack because it believed that agents of Mossad, Israel's intelligence agency, were in the synagogues.

Abdel Bari Atwan, the newspaper's editor, told the pan-Arab cable station Al-Jazeera that the claim was received by e-mail from the Abu Hafs al-Masri Brigades, which has been identified as part of Al-Qaida and has sent at least three similar claims regarding attacks.

The sophisticated attacks on the synagogues used pick-up trucks stuffed with nearly identical explosives detonated minutes apart, likely by suicide bombers, officials said.

Israeli intelligence and explosives experts have teamed with Turkish investigators to investigate the bombings, which wounded more than 300 people, both Jews at the synagogues and Muslim bystanders on the streets.

Earlier, Turkey's interior minister told The Associated Press that a link to international terrorists was likely. However, the interior ministry declined to comment on the reported claim of responsibility.

Forensic workers pieced together body parts and searched for clues amid the wreckage from blasts that

MURAD SEZER/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Entrance of the Neve Shalom Synagogue, left, is seen after an explosion in Istanbul, Turkey on Saturday.

Israeli experts said were stronger than most bombings they see at home.

Officials found two bodies fitted with wire, and one of them matched partial remains found in one of the attack cars, media reported, suggesting that the explosions were set off by suicide bombers and not by remote control.

Interior Minister Abdulkadir Aksu told the AP that there is a "more than 95 percent" chance that the attacks were suicide bombings.

"I am not saying 100 percent because the investigation is still underway, but I was convinced that these attacks were suicide bombings after I saw the scenes of the attacks and was briefed by authorities," Aksu said.

"It is very likely that there is an international connection. We are not ruling out any possibility, including al-Qaida involvement," he said, adding that the identities or nationalities of the bombers were still unknown.

International Programs Office to host education week

By Matt Elder
Collegian Staff

Beginning today the International Programs Office at the University of Massachusetts will host International Education Week in an effort to educate students about the programs and services they offer.

"[The International Programs Office] sends people anywhere in the world they want to go," said Frank Hugus, who is starting his second year in the office as director of IPO.

Most of the events are free of charge and held in various rooms in the campus center. Today, at 5 p.m. in room 917 Campus Center, there will be a showing of Special Japanese Anime Films.

Tomorrow at 7 p.m., in rooms 165 and 169 of the Campus Center, there will be a discussion and presentation about world hunger as a global crisis. Also tomorrow, at 8 p.m. in Lewis dormitory, there will be food, music and information from around the world for Culture Night.

On Wednesday at 8 p.m., at the Top of the Campus Center, there will be an International Film Festival, showing "L'Auberge Espagnole." There will also be free popcorn and soda for the audience.

On Thursday, in room 917 of the Campus Center at 7 p.m., there will be a student puppet troupe which showcases puppetry presented through small skits. Discussions will follow the show.

In the Blue Wall on Friday, at 9 p.m., there will be African and Latin music and dance.

The week closes in the Campus Center auditorium with Harvest Night, the only night with a charge. This night will feature African cuisine, music and entertainment. For students, the admission is $8 and $10 for the general public. Students can purchase tickets in advance for $5.

Hugus said he, is looking forward to the whole week, and he wishes more students would take advantage of the opportunities that are presented to them in different exchange programs.

Hugus hopes this week gets more people interested in going abroad by reaching out to the students who normally would not want to.

"[I want more people to go abroad] because there are so many wonderful things around the world," said Hugus.

According to Hugus, Western Europe and Australia are the most popular destinations for UMass students, and a majority of the students brought in to UMass are from China and India.

Professor named to federal commission

By Alyson Zillmann
Collegian Staff

Jeffrey L. Sedgwick, an associate professor of political science at the University of Massachusetts, is one of six people President George W. Bush appointed last month to a commission designed to plan events in celebration of Benjamin Franklin's 300th birthday.

The federal commission will have the next two years to organize Franklin's tercentenary celebrations, which will include the minting of a Benjamin Franklin tercentenary coin and the issuing of a special postage stamp.

"It's our job to design and approve of a whole menu of activities that will engage all Americans," said Sedgwick.

Sedgwick, who was recommended for the commission by former governor Jane Swift, has a special interest in the founding period of American history and especially the drafting of the constitution, in which Franklin was a key player.

"It's a pleasure to be involved in the celebration of an individual known as a scientist, inventor, diplomat, printer and statesman — a jack-of-all-trades," Sedgwick said in a recent press release. "Especially in these times, it is good to remember and honor a man best known for his 'dislike of everything that tended to debase the spirit of the common people.' That is a commitment valuable not only to Americans, but to democracy everywhere in the world."

Sedgwick has been working in the area of democratization for many years, in countries like Romania, Kyrgyztan and Armenia. He is assistant project director of civic education in these countries, which means that among other things, he helps prepare high school students to be active in a democratic society.

"Part of what got me excited [about the commission] is the fact that Franklin too had a long career as a representative of America to the rest of the world," Sedgwick said.

Sedgwick is also the project director for the development of a public administration baccalaureate degree program in the Ukraine, and the project director of a Fulbright Summer Institute in American Studies.

The members of the Benjamin Franklin Commission have not met since their formal white house appointment. Sedgwick said he expects that they will meet in Philadelphia, the nation's former capital.

In addition to supervising production of the commemorative stamp and coin, the commission is responsible for collecting and preserving artifacts, sponsoring publications, conferences, exhibitions and meetings, as well as organizing national high school and college-level essay contests concerned with the life and legacy of the founding father.

EDITORIAL/OPINION
PAGE 4
BE RESPONSIBLE
SAFE SEX A PRACTICE TO BE CARRIED OUT BY ALL
ARTS & LIVING
PAGE 5
CAPE VERDEAN NIGHT
EVENT BRINGS CULTURE TO CAMPUS CENTER
SPORTS
PAGE 12
STREAK SNAPPED
DELAWARE EARNS OVERTIME VICTORY
COMICS/CLASSIFIEDS
PAGE 11

Kerry criticizes Dean on foreign policy

By Mike Wilson
Associated Press

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP)— Massachusetts Sen. John Kerry criticized former Vermont Gov. Howard Dean yesterday as a Washington outsider who doesn't have the experience to lead the country in the area of foreign affairs.

Kerry, Dean and Ohio Rep. Dennis Kucinich, who are all seeking the Democratic presidential nomination, spoke to a crowd of about 200 people at the Tifereth Synagogue in Des Moines.

The candidates were each given about 10 minutes to speak and then answered questions, many of which revolved around foreign policy and the future of Israeli-Palestinian relations.

Kerry, a Vietnam veteran, said the other candidates lack the foreign policy experience needed to leverage a peace settlement in the Middle East. He said President Bush's inexperience in such matters is evident in the handling of the war in Iraq.

"George Bush is a poster child for the notion that after Sept. 11 no foreign policy experience, no security experience, no military experience is absolutely not the equation for the presidency of the nation of the United States," Kerry said. "It is clear that after Sept. 11 we do not need a president with on-the-job training on the issues of national security."

He said the president of the United States should act as a broker in the peace process.

"A good president has always been capable of being able to act as an honest broker, nudging our friends, leveraging when we need to, respecting the notion that it's not up to us to define the peace, it's up to the parties to negotiate the peace and no peace that isn't properly negotiated by the parties can be a peace that holds," Kerry said.

Dean said the United States should redeploy a special envoy to the Middle East to assist in the peace negotiations, saying one of his first acts as president would be to call on former president Bill Clinton to act as that envoy.

He said the next president must play a more active role in the Middle East peace process.

"There will not be peace unless there is heavy intervention every day by an American president," Dean said.

you come home late at night in need of a snack. you discover a slice of cake in the fridge. it's not yours. what do you do? answer the question. compare your opinions with others. explore what matters at pwc.com/lookhere.

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

...each of which is a separate

U.S. investigates Black Hawk crash

By Louis Meixler
Associated Press

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) —The U.S. military tried to determine yesterday whether insurgent gunfire caused the crash of two Black Hawk helicopters, killing 17 soldiers in the worst single loss of American life since the war in Iraq began.

Meanwhile, an audio tape purportedly by Saddam Hussein urged Iraqis to escalate attacks against the occupation and "agents brought by foreign armies"— Iraqis who support the coalition.

The speaker on the tape, aired on Al-Arabiya television, said the only way to end the chaos in Iraq was for Saddam and his now outlawed Baath Party to return to power.

U.S. soldiers, meanwhile, took the offensive with the military mounting operations in Baghdad and Saddam's home region of central Iraq. The military fired a satellite-guided missile with a 500-pound warhead at a suspected guerrilla training base. Four insurgents were killed in a separate clash.

"Any of those groups that are working against the best interest of the Iraqis are going to be targeted," said Lt. Col. William MacDonald, spokesman of the 4th Infantry Division.

Strong explosions thundered through central Baghdad after sundown yesterday, apparently part of "Operation Iron Hammer," a new "get tough" strategy of going after insurgents before they can strike.

Late yesterday, a large number of U.S. troops, backed by armored vehicles and helicopters, moved into the Sunni Muslim neighborhood of Azamiyah, sealing off a 20-block area and searching vehicles in a show of force.

The CIA said it would review the purported Saddam tape for its authenticity. But President Bush dismissed the recording.

"I suspect it's same old stuff. It's propaganda. We're not leaving until the job is done, pure and simple," Bush said. "I'm sure he'd like to see us leave, if in fact it's his voice. I know the elements of the Baathist party, those who used to torture, maim and kill in order to stay in power would like to see us leave."

The voice in the recording resembled Saddam's, but was huskier and the speaker appeared tired.

"The evil ones now find themselves in crisis and this is God's will for them," he said. "The land and fire of glorious Iraq that God has blessed with jihad because of valor in resistance ... will swallow hundreds of thousands of troops that ... will never achieve their plans."

The only solution for Iraq, the speaker said, was for "the zealous Iraqi sons, who ran its affairs and brought it out of backwardness ... to return ... to run its affairs anew," he said, referring to the Baath leadership.

The speaker also lashed out at Iraqis who cooperate with the U.S. military, calling them "stray dogs that walk alongside the caravan." Iraqis who work with the United States have been targeted by Iraqi guerrillas.

The top U.S. administrator in Iraq, L. Paul Bremer, said Saddam likely made some arrangements for a guerrilla war against the Americans before his regime fell before invading U.S. troops in April.

"I think there are some indications that he had prepared for a low-intensity conflict, terrorist war, the kind we're seeing now, beforehand," Bremer said on "Fox News Sunday." "There had been some documents that have come to light since liberation that suggest there were preparations."

In northern Iraq, the U.S. military was investigating whether insurgent ground fire caused the crash of two U.S. helicopters belonging to the 101st Airborne Division. The helicopters went down in residential neighborhoods of Mosul, Iraq's third-largest city. There were no civilian casualties.

"There are reports that there may have been ground fire, and one of them may have been trying to avoid that. We just don't know at this point," Bremer said on "Fox News Sunday."

ANJA NIEDRINGHAUS/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Iraqi's watch from a distance as U.S. Army soldiers remove debris of an U.S. Army Black Hawk helicopter yesterday after it crashed in Mosul, northern Iraq, late Saturday.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Jennifer Eastwood
Managing Editor Dan Lamothe
Business Manager Peter Foundas
Production Manager Scott Pikt
Night Supervisor Nick Markantonatos
Advertising Manager Sean Costello
Editorial Production Shannon Farrington
Arts & Living Editor Glen Straub
Comics Editor Molly Eggleston
Editorial Editor Paige Cram
News Editor Ferron Salniker
Photo Editor Gerald H. Ling
Sports Editor Andrew Merritt
Circulation Manager Kristen Weiss
Classified Advertising Marty Pappas
Distribution Manager Julie Beauchamp
Finance Manager Greg Stamas
Human Resource Sandra Marquez
Special Issues Betsy Feldman
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising David Bor
Assistant Business Jaclynn Sorenson
Assistant Distribution Mark Lagatic
Assistant Finance Richard Pacheco
Advertising Production Liza Lynch
Graphics Advisor Charlie Higgins
Layout Manager Lindsay Clark
Asst Arts & Living Meghan Healy
Asst Arts & Living Cameron J. Woods
Assistant Editorial Matthew Reid
Assistant News Erika Lorkiv
Assistant News Morris Singer
Assistant Photo Emilie Duggan
Assistant Sports Mike Marzelli
Assistant Sports Robert McGovern

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper was 42 pages long before the Collegian in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1924 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been printed since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 A.M. and 5:30 P.M.

News meeting tonight at 6 p.m. All writers must attend.

Activists learn how to act locally to solve global problems

By Mark Pratt
Associated Press

MEDFORD, Mass. (AP)— Global warming, melting ice caps, rising sea levels and other environmental catastrophes are frightening concepts that most people feel helpless to do anything about.

But activists gathered yesterday at Tufts University to discuss grass-roots solutions to worldwide climate problems at the third annual Grassroots Climate Action Conference.

About 200 people attended a series of educational seminars and "how-to" workshops designed to teach people not just about the issue of global warming, but how to address it both at the individual level and by forming community advocacy groups to lobby local government.

"The goal here is to give people the information they need to become climate activists at the local and state level," said Marc Breslow, co-director of the Massachusetts Climate Action Network. "Doing the little things in Massachusetts won't solve the problem, but it's a demonstration effect, and we can set an example."

University of New Hampshire professor Barrett Rock painted a bleak picture in one of the morning seminars. New England's skiing and maple syrup industries have already been negatively affected by climate change, and at current rates, when average worldwide temperatures are expected to rise 6 to 10 degrees by the end of the century, Boston could eventually have a climate similar to the current climate in Richmond, Va. or Atlanta, he said.

The warmer climate will result in the loss of coastal areas, salt water intrusion into fresh water supplies and the spread of tropical diseases, Breslow said.

But there are "a million things you can do" to slow the process, he said, from simply switching to more energy efficient lighting at home to driving a more fuel efficient car.

And while one person making a lifestyle change may not seem like it can make a huge difference, when communities take action, the results can be dramatic.

The Medford Climate Action Network launched a campaign earlier this year to persuade people to switch to more energy efficient compact fluorescent lights instead of conventional incandescent light bulbs.

The campaign, which drew the support of the mayor and city council, has succeeded in replacing hundreds of light bulbs in the city. Program coordinator Jack Beusmans said that if all 22,000 Medford households changed one 60-watt bulb with a 15-watt fluorescent it would keep 1 million pounds of carbon dioxide out of the atmosphere and save $100,000 annually.

A climate control group in Lexington persuaded the cash-strapped town to borrow money to switch to more efficient lighting in four schools. The new, more environmentally friendly lighting will pay for itself in a year and save the town money in the long run, Breslow said.

Dakota Butterfield, fed up by the Bush administration's energy and environmental policies, attended the conference to see what she could do.

"I can't change what the federal government is doing but I can take responsibility in my own community," the Cambridge woman said.

STRATTON/OKEMO
COLLEGE PASS
Only $299*
MORE MOUNTAIN. LESS MONEY.
With a combined 1,184 rideable acres of terrain, 203 trails, and 34 lifts, you can't beat this deal. Take a break from the books and get free with the Stratton/Okemo College Pass. Ski and ride two of Southern Vermont's best mountains all season long for as little as $299*. College students must provide proof of full-time status with documentation from Registrar's Office.
PURCHASE BY 12•6•03
OKEMO MOUNTAIN RESORT
1-800-78-OKEMO
okemo.com
STRATTON VT
1-800-STRATTON
stratton.com
*If purchased before 12/6/03. $399 after 12/6/03. Tax not included. Must be 25 or under

Bush pleased by tentative deal on medicare legislation

By Mark Sherman
Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP)— President Bush yesterday enthusiastically endorsed a tentative agreement on legislation to give older Americans a new prescription drug benefit, part of sweeping changes to the government-run Medicare program.

"I will be actively pushing the bill" in the coming days to ensure passage, Bush said, leading the Republican effort to overcome anticipated resistance from Democrats and objections from some Republicans.

Republican congressional leaders on Saturday announced the breakthrough on the legislation, which would mark the largest ever expansion of Medicare. Republicans hope to pass it by week's end.

Many details remained unknown yesterday as congressional staff worked on the cost of the bill — which cannot exceed $400 billion over 10 years — and its final composition.

But at its core, it would give millions of seniors prescription drug coverage for the first time for a premium of roughly $35 a month. At the same time, the bill would create a large new role for private insurers in health care for 40 million older and disabled Americans.

Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist, R-Tenn., said he thinks most lawmakers will be persuaded to support the bill because of the drug benefit and the ability of seniors to choose their health plans, including remaining in traditional Medicare.

"If you're satisfied with what you have today, you don't have to change," Frist said yesterday at a Capitol news conference to give an outline of the legislation.

Frist said AARP, the 35-million member seniors' group, specifically endorsed compromises on final sticking points in the bill, including efforts to encourage employers to maintain drug coverage for retirees, direct competition between traditional Medicare and private plans, and providing more money to low-income seniors.

AARP chief executive William Novelli said the group would make no decision on an endorsement until it reviews final details of the legislation.

Other interest groups, including the American Medical Association and the trade organization for the managed care industry, announced their support the legislation.

Sen. Max Baucus, D-Mont., one of two Democrats who took part in months of negotiations, said the bill "is not perfect from anyone's perspective, but it's good legislation."

He said the bill would attract significant Democratic support in the Senate, even if some leading Senate Democrats, including Edward M. Kennedy of Massachusetts, oppose it.

"Many will reach the decision that this is better to pass than not to pass," Baucus said.

Kennedy and Senate Democratic leader Tom Daschle of South Dakota raised warning flags Sunday that the bill would do more harm than good.

Kennedy said on CBS' "Face the Nation" that he did not think the bill would pass the Senate. Daschle, on "Fox News Sunday," said, "We may actually be coercing up to 10 million people into an HMO system that could mean dramatically higher costs ... in premiums for Medicare."

But in overcoming the final obstacles to the bill, negotiators said they reached a compromise on proposal to require traditional Medicare to compete with private insurance plans and found a way to reduce by half the number of retirees who would lose employer-based coverage once the new drug benefit kicked in.

Competition would begin in 2010 in six metropolitan areas and last no more than six years. Extending it beyond that would require congressional approval.

Sen. John Breaux, D-La., the other Democratic negotiator, said the bill would cap annual premium increases for seniors who remain in traditional Medicare at 5 percent a year, responding to criticisms that premiums would soar for those who did not move to private plans.

Lawrence Jackson/Associated Press

President Bush makes remarks to the media from the South Lawn of the White House yesterday in Washington.

And Baucus said he disagreed with those who say the temporary program would harm traditional Medicare.

In the House, a conservative Republican said he is disappointed with the agreement. Competition "has been watered down to a demonstration project that does not even begin until 2010," Rep. Jeb Hensarling, R-Texas, said. "I frankly do not know how we can stave off bankrupting the Medicare system without this essential reform."

Hensarling was one of several conservatives who voted reluctantly for the Medicare bill passed by the House in June by a one-vote margin.

He said he and other conservatives would reserve judgment until they see the final bill.

The legislation includes several provisions designed to meet conservatives' demands. These include a new health-related tax break for individuals with a high-deductible health insurance policy; a requirement for higher wage-earners to pay more for the out-of-hospital coverage they receive under Medicare Part B; and a requirement for Congress to review Medicare's costs if they rose to unexpected levels.

The agreement also contains at least $25 billion for rural doctors and hospitals.

Serbia election fails for third time in year, triggers political crisis

By Dusan Stojanovic
Associated Press

BELGRADE, Serbia-Montenegro (AP) — Serbians failed for the third time in a year yesterday to elect a president because of low voter turnout, triggering a political crisis in the Balkan republic.

An ultranationalist with close ties to Slobodan Milosevic led the ballot, underlining Serbians' discontent with the pro-Western government that ousted the dictator in 2000 and the republic's drift back to Milosevic's nationalism, which triggered the Balkan wars in the 1990s.

About 39 percent of registered voters cast ballots, exit polls showed, less than the 50 percent needed to validate the vote, said the independent Center for Free Elections and Democracy.

Tomislav Nikolic was ahead with 46.5 percent of vote, the unofficial results showed. Dragoljub Micunovic, a pro-democracy candidate who led pre-election polls, trailed with only 35 percent. Four other candidates shared the rest of the vote. Official results were expected Monday, but the center's results have proved reliable in the past.

The failed election left Serbia in a power vacuum. Parliament was dissolved last week because the pro-Western government lost parliamentary support, leaving no one to call a presidential new vote. New general elections were set for Dec. 28.

Serbia's Vice Prime Minister Zarko Korac described the election results as a "tragedy for Serbia."

"We are entering a dangerous, dramatic, phase of our future," Korac said.

Stjepan Gredelj, an independent election analyst who monitored the vote, feared "an institutional chaos" without a president for the republic.

Voters stayed away from the polls because of disillusionment with the country's leadership, which has failed to bring economic progress to Serbia following a decade of war that led to Yugoslavia's breakup and and the ouster of Milosevic, he said.

Labor protests are on the rise, and people are generally dissatisfied with their living standards in Serbia, which with the much smaller republic of Montenegro formed Serbia-Montenegro, the country that replaced Yugoslavia.

"The politicians are getting what they deserve," Gredelj said.

The last two elections, at the end of last year, also foundered because low voter turnout. The post of president has been vacant since a Milosevic ally, Milan Milutinovic, stepped down in January to face war crimes charges at a U.N. court in The Hague, the Netherlands.

Nikolic, 51, of the pro-Milosevic Serbian Radical party, had been banking that disillusionment with democracy and the West would help his cause. He has pledged to have no more extraditions of Serbs to the U.N. tribunal to answer war-crimes charges committed during last decade's Balkan wars fomented by Milosevic.

Radical Party leader Vojislav Seselj is in The Hague awaiting his war crimes trial together with Milosevic and several other former top Serbian leaders.

Aleksandar Vucic, an official of Nikolic's Radical Party, said the election results presented an "immense triumph" and predicted that the party would do well in the December parliamentary elections.

SIMMONS COLLEGE
Graduate Programs

Simmons puts students first. Obviously we know what matters.

Learn about Simmons's rigorous academic and professional preparation, flexible schedules, financial aid, and location in the heart of Boston's academic and cultural communities.

Graduate programs for women and men in:

- Education: Special Education, Behavioral Education, Assistive/Special Education Technology, Language & Literacy in Special Education, Administrator of Special Education, Master of Arts in Teaching, Educational Leadership, Master of Arts in Teaching ESL
- Liberal Arts: Children's Literature, English, Gender/Cultural Studies, History/Archives Management, Spanish
- Communications Management

Visit us online, or join us at an up coming
Open House
Saturday, December 6, 2003
9:00 a.m. - 1:00 p.m.
RSVP 617.521.2915 or gsa@simmons.edu

Simmons College
Office of Graduate Studies
Admissions
300 The Fenway
Boston, Massachusetts, 02115-5898

617.521.2915
gsa@simmons.edu
www.simmons.edu/gradstudies

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

Monday, November 17, 2003 Editorial@dailycollegian.com

Responsibility for all: Safe sex a necessity

Let's recall what we did as a University this weekend. Raise your hand if you: watched Boston College battle it out with our beloved Minutemen hockey team, danced to Ani DiFranco, studied, slept, or had sex.

A couple thousand of us crowded into the Mullins center for Friday's hockey game, just as many watched Ani, fewer of us studied, most of us slept, and some of us engaged in sexual intercourse.

However, the number of hands that go up drop when you ask how many that had sex with a known and trusted partner. The hands dwindle even further when you ask how many of those who had sex used protection.

Studies done within the last three years show that despite being a high- risk group for contracting sexually transmitted diseases or illness (commonly referred to as STDs or STIs), American college students continue to engage in risky sexual behavior. Reuters Health reports college students do not use condoms consistently.

Harvard's School of Public Health's 2001 study of 8,500 undergraduates nationwide, published in the Archives of Sexual Behavior, showed that 71 percent were sexually experienced, but only 43 percent reported always using a condom, and an alarming 24 percent said they had never used a condom.

Supposing that you were one of those at the University this weekend who did engage in sexual activities with an unknown partner, or even with a known partner, but without a condom, what excuse do you have? Every student living on campus has access to free condoms: resident advisors are given buckets full to provide to their residents upon request. Whether you live on or off campus as a student (or professor or staff) you may purchase condoms at University Health Services for exceptionally discounted prices.

One in five people in the United States have a STI, according to FemaleHealth.com. Two-thirds of STIs occur in people under the age of 25. The most common age group to contract an STI is women between the ages of 15 and 25. One in five college students have Chlamydia, a common bacterial STI. If that isn't enough to make you strap on a condom, say no, or run to University Health Services for a check-up, half of all new HIV infections occur in individuals under the age of 25. John Hopkins reports that the incidence of STIs is rising, in part, due to social change in marriage patterns: more people have sex earlier, marry later, divorce more often, and have more sexual partners than in previous generations.

Supposing you didn't contract a STI from a partner this weekend, there remains the great risk of pregnancy from unprotected sex. Twenty-two-percent of sexually active 18 and 19-year-olds in the United States become pregnant each year, according FemaleHealth.com. Is that really a responsibility you are ready for?

Abstinence remains the only way to avoid the consequences of STIs and the responsibilities of pregnancy. However, since a majority of college students are sexually active, we as a generation must exercise caution through the use of condoms and smart choices.

Nobody on this campus has an excuse for engaging in sexual activity without using a condom: they are easily accessed, come in a variety of colors, sizes, flavors, textures, and styles. Whatever you do on your weekends here at UMass, keep it safe — for all of us. Know your partner, have sober sex, and use a condom.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

Heroism: Minorities need not apply

Mark Ostroff

With a recently released book, a made-for-TV movie, and a very substantial discharge package, Jessica Lynch has become an overnight celebrity.

And of course, the Bush Administration and Pentagon are hyping Lynch like she's the Second Coming of Vassilli Zaitsev: the bearer of good news from the war front, a much-needed morale-booster, both to troops and skeptics at home. But in the pro-war media, where there's smoke, there are mirrors.

Jessica Lynch was most likely hand-picked by the Pentagon and Bush administration. She had what it took to be the perfect patriotic poster-girl: she was white, young, and attractive. The American media knows what pretty, white girls mean to Americans, especially when something bad happens to them. Young, attractive, white girls have been symbols of purity, dating back to the 13 colonies. It's the instinctual fear of beauty and innocence being lost to a godless savage, which has fueled American hate-streaks for centuries.

Whether it's raising Ku Klux Klan membership or giving the public something to bite their nails over, this mentality may never go away and will continue to be invoked whenever needed.

During the anti-abolition campaigns of the 19th century, streets were lined with posters of charming, petite girls savagely embraced by black men. In the days of Joe McCarthy, American dads were haunted by the specter of Communist "party girls," or good-girls-gone-bad, who apathetically went to bed with social outcasts and racial minorities for the "good of The Party."

Now in 2003, we have Jessica Lynch: the all-American girl next-door who found herself at the mercy of dark-skinned savages of the Third World. It's the perfect cultural drama and, for a few extra bucks during sweeps week, it made for great titillation on prime time television.

Americans were left on the edge of their seats, as the Pentagon, in a display of this-is-where-your-tax-dollars-go chivalry, swept up Jessica from an abandoned hospital, in an unnecessary, over-hyped, and over-Hollywooded rescue operation.

In the months to follow, the issue is left to simmer for ignorant rumors to spread like SARS. And then, showing no respect for the facts, Jessica's story was recklessly hyped into absurdity by the mainstream media and especially, the government. Apparently, Lynch was shot, stabbed, slapped, raped, and any other Rasputin-like method that could be sold to gossip-loving Americans.

All these rumors, however, are now being denied, disputed, or debunked. Doctors denied that she was shot or stabbed, Lynch claims that she was never slapped, and nobody could find any evidence that she was raped. However, the papers had no problem reporting it as if it were entirely factual.

Jessica Lynch: the all-American girl next-door ... It's the perfect cultural drama and, for a few extra bucks during sweeps week, it made for great titillation on primetime television.

Even the story of her rescue was dramatized. The Iraqi lawyer that told coalition forces where she was, started telling stories of dramatic Kung Fu fights with Saddam loyalists during his escape. (His wife claims that he watches too many John Wayne movies.) Even Lynch herself has claimed that the story of her daring (and conveniently videotaped) rescue is hammed-up. She was even upset at the fact that they brought a camera in the first place. In fact, her side of the story is more consistent with a recent BBC story that US soldiers had at first refused to take her back, even firing on her ambulance when Iraqi doctors tried to return her.

Furthermore, last week, in a display of absolute integrity, Jessica came clean with the fact that Bush, the Pentagon, and the media are shamelessly hyping her story for propaganda. She has also come out as saying that she is hurt that the military has fabricated most of her story and "it was wrong" that she be used as a patriotic symbol.

It doesn't really matter at this point, however, because the hawks in Washington got what they wanted. Animosity was successfully generated against the enemy. They knew that the image of a scared little white girl in the hands of faceless dark-skinned "savages" would stir public sentiment. Why do you think they're pushing the rape allegation down our throats? Because, it's a fact that interracial rapes with white victims stir up more outrage than any other form of rape, among Americans.

Never mind the spectrum of racial diversity among the heroes and POWs of the coalition. Who's interested in Native Americans, single mothers, Black women or, (gasp) Mexicans? Can you seriously imagine the image of a black woman in captivity stirring much public outrage? No. In fact, there was a black woman in captivity and outside of her family and friends, nobody could care less.

There were plenty of faces that they could have used, if they wanted to describe heroism, but none of them were young, white, or pretty enough. Shoshana Johnson, a wounded, black captive, will be getting only one third of the discharge package that Lynch will be getting. The conditions of her captivity were degrading and demoralizing. (It's against the law to film POWs for public morale.) Lori Piestewa, a Native American single mother of two had fought to the death at Lynch's side. The media didn't even give her a proper obituary.

The hawks wagered some of their last shreds of credibility on the hope that Jessica's amnesia would last forever. They tried to promote Jessica's story because, frankly, there were no other pretty, white faces that could shift public sentiment.

Now that Lynch has reclaimed her dignity. I simply wonder how long will it be before they dump her like a psychotic girlfriend. Not, I think, until another report of a pretty white damsel in distress comes across the Pentagon desks. Minorities and American propaganda never mix.

Mark Ostroff is a Collegian columnist.

Higher education more cost-effective overseas

Allison Edles

Due to the recent budget cuts that have been taking place this year, UMass students have been feeling the direct effects in many different ways.

However, it is not only the budget cuts that are causing the cost of attending the University to become outrageously problematic.

Many factors have contributed to the increase in financial costs to students. The cost of attending a higher education facility in the United States has become continually more unaffordable for many students, while overseas, the cost is much more economically sound. With some of the world's top minds emerging from the United States' top universities, it is abominable that American students are forced to pay tens of thousands of dollars more for a same rate, if not better, education than they would have overseas.

For the most part, education in Europe is significantly less expensive in comparison because schools and universities are granted federal funding by the government. Textbooks, for one, are abundantly more expensive in the United States than they are in, for instance, the United Kingdom. On average, students can find themselves paying $1,000 on textbooks alone for one academic year. Quite often, publishers wind up selling a textbook for half the price abroad than they would in the United States.

Nowadays, many professors decide to sell materials for their classes in bulk packages containing textbooks, study guides, lecture notes, and even CD-ROMs that, on their own, would be more expensive and hard to find. The students are forced to buy the package at anywhere from $100 to $150, at least. At the University of Hull Law School in Hull, U.K., an academic course packet for a course is made affordable in one way by using mostly Xeroxes of public sources and having the university sell them at 12 pounds, roughly $20.

Many universities in Europe offer very superb education that is on par with the universities available for study in America at a much lower cost.

Many universities in Europe offer very superb education that is on par with the universities available for study in America at a much lower cost. At Lancaster University, located in Lancaster, U.K., the cost for attendance per year for students from the United Kingdom and the European Union is 2,870, pounds, roughly $4,857. For students from the United States attending the university, the cost would be 7,470 pounds per year, roughly $12,699.

One contributing factor to the issue of the increased prices of higher education is the lack of consideration for household incomes when it comes to financial aid.

"During the 1990s, federal and state policy makers developed a new generation of student aid programs that are both very expensive and much more effective at assisting middle — and upper — income students to cover college costs than they are at increasing access for low — income students," states Michael Mumper, a professor at Ohio University specializing in the politics of higher education finance, in "The Finance of Higher Education: Theory Research, Policy and Practice."

In addition, the use of loans greatly outweighs the use of grants in the United States. The reason for this is that, since 1975, the government began awarding more money through loans than it was through grants. Consequently, the use of loans increased drastically and resulted in more difficulty for students to fund their education.

In Europe, the government allots money to schools and universities, leading to the cost of pursuing higher education becoming affordable for students from families of all income levels. Colleges and universities in the United States have made it virtually impossible for a student to afford the tuition and fees for one academic year, let alone the number of years needed to earn the desired degrees.

If American students are taught nothing else in their educational careers, it's that one shouldn't turn down a bargain. Attending universities abroad may prove to be a better bargain financially (and educationally) when pursuing higher education if the current costs of higher education in the United States remain as they are.

Allison Edles is a Collegian columnist.

A call for a Jewish state

Leah Vitale

From my four months thus far in Israel, I have gained much insight and understanding about the situation here in the Middle East. One thing that has been brought to my attention especially is the unfortunate reality that the "situation" extends far greater than just here in the Fertile Crescent. In the media, the Israeli-Palestinian conflict appears to be solely about land. That is most definitely not the case.

As first described to me by my French flat mate, the "anti-Israel" sentiment in France has become rampant. From her portrayal, however, it seems clear that it is not just a widespread opinion against the existence of the state of Israel, but a deeply rooted sentiment of anti-Semitism conveniently cloaked under the auspices of the "Anti-Israel position." Even the great Reverend Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., wrote: "You declare, my friend, that you do not hate the Jews, you are merely 'anti- Zionist.' When people criticize Zionism, they mean Jews. . . . And what is anti- Zionist? It is the denial to the Jewish people of a fundamental right that we justly claim for the people of Africa and freely accord all other nations of the globe."

My flat mate described having to turn her "Steve's Packs" (Israeli bag/luggage company) bag around, label against her body, so as to safeguard herself from assault. She also recounted that Jewish boys are unable to wear kippahs openly on the street without being attacked. Jews have been stabbed, and elderly women are now frisked upon entering synagogues, as a precaution. Despite nearly 400 incidents against Jews just last April alone, French President Chirac denied there is anti-Semitism in France.

Unfortunately, this kind of anti-Semitic behavior is not just in France. Just last month, Malaysian Prime Minister, Mahathir Muhammod called for the world's 1.3 billion Muslims to unite in a holy war against the Jewish people in a speech to the 57-nation Organization of the Islamic Conference. At the United Nations Third World Conference against Racism in Durban, South Africa, protesters compared Israelis to Nazis and called for the killing of Jews, yet the majority response of the delegates was silence. One might think that after two millennia of expulsions, jihads, crusades, inquisitions, pogroms, and gas chambers, the world would finally end the impugning of the Jews for the problems of humankind. However, barely after 50 years of having an independent state, a new method of anti-Semitism has already been set in motion.

Recently, I read an argument against the existence of a Jewish state, claiming that the Jews have no need for a state all their own. I counter, not only is the need great, but especially now, the need couldn't be more pressing. Figures by the Ministry of Immigrant Absorption show that in this year alone, over 3,000 people from France have moved to Israel to seek refuge from the onslaught of anti-Semitic violence that has been rapidly continuing to persist. In response to those who claim that a state that bases itself on Jewish ethnic and religious values is racist or uncalled for, I ask, what about the 22 Arab countries surrounding Israel, all of which have built themselves upon Islam and follow Muslim tradition? Why should a state of not even 6 million people, 640 times smaller in size and 60 times less the population of its surrounding 22 Muslim countries, even be noticed? The existence of the Jewish state should not even be a discussion.

The ability for Jews to live in Israel should not just be existent, but it should be greatly supported.

Conveniently, the new defense is, "Well, Arabs are Semites, too." Frankly, this could not be a more preposterous argument, as it is globally understood that the term "anti-Semitic" has been coined to refer to the Jews especially. In fact, in 1873, the term "anti-Semitism" was first used in a pamphlet by Wilhelm Marr called "Jewry's Victory over Teutonism." Such protests are perpetuating this problem one layer deeper by not only burying it, but making it appear as though it is an unwarranted excuse for sympathy. It is due to claims such as this one that I dare say, the Holocaust was made possible. Or, wait, did that not happen now, too?

The ability for Jews to live in Israel should not just be existent, but it should be greatly supported. In Amherst, we like to consider ourselves rational and sympathetic to world suffering. Why is it then that this entire new epidemic of hatred is being allowed to subsist in our midst and we do not even respond?

The situation worldwide for Jews is extremely grave. I call out to everyone who has the freedom to live free of racial, ethnic and religious persecution to show his or her support and concern for those throughout the world who are less privileged, by supporting the state of Israel, one of the only countries in the Middle East which safeguards these values as dearly as we do in the U.S. By doing so, we will hopefully be able to prevent the horrors of the past from repeating themselves once again in front of our very own eyes.

Leah Vitale is a Collegian columnist on exchange in Israel.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 17, 2003 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Internet: the final dating frontier?

Love Potion

Deborah Geiger

Love and the Internet: you can love the Internet, but can the Internet produce something that you love, too?

Don't tell me you haven't looked up your hometown on match.com and laughed — all the way back to your empty dorm room!

There's a huge stigma behind meeting people online, as if you're totally ugly, have no confidence, or are simply cataleptic when it comes to friendship or dating.

But what if Internet dating — the process of perusing some of many dating websites for photos of candidates who fulfill one or more of your requirements for a mate — replaced commodity? Would picking out a boyfriend be like Longchamp's Lepliage bag, where you merely specify your size, color, and style of choice?

When my friends drag me out on Thursday nights after a long day filled with classes that go until 9 p.m., I'm not in that 'party mode.' I am exhausted, stressed and run down, nowhere near 'party mode.' Since I don't drink, I've become the one more excited for the hazelnut with skim at Dunkin Donuts than the actual party.

Has anyone else noticed the party scene here is mind-numbing, lackluster and tedious? That's on the most wild nights, of course.

As a result, when gearing up for a night out, the $12.99 Express Warehouse Sale pants paired with the thrice worn, slightly stained, definitely not washed Petit-Bateau pink shirt are good enough for me. No one seems to notice that I don't wear those ugly stringy black shirts that fall apart after one washing. To see an example of these shirts, seek out almost any freshman girl at a frat party.

It was at one of these raucous, less than exhilarating events that a friend of mine snapped a few pictures. I remember looking around the room at that party, the crimson Christmas lights haphazardly hanging from this off campus living room and one of last year's most irritating singles blazing from the boom box; the scenery more memorable than the asocial male population who stand around and drinks beer from backpacks.

After flipping through the shots of friends in a drunken daze I found a few photos of myself.

"Great," I thought. "I don't even drink and the only decent photo of me at the end of the night is holding a red Solo cup in one hand and a beer pong ball in the other."

So my friend tacked it on the Web site where she met her current, not to mention very sexy, flame.

And?

So far more than 50 responses! More than 50 people paid money to send me a note.

Maybe it has to do with being an upperclassman, or maybe it has to do with being tall — but meeting people at UMass just feels stale. I'll be walking to class and think, 'I've gotten exactly three smiles this morning; one random female jogger, a girl I barely know and Candy, the card-swiper at Hampshire DC.'

Not one guy around here has looked at me and smiled, has been friendly. But more importantly, it seems like no guys play the game anymore. No guys flirt.

Statistically, attractiveness matters more to men than it does to women. Looks are the first trait a male will look for in a lifelong mate that, but looks remain a distant third or fourth to women. For many of us, it is about personality. "Face value" isn't a cliché for nothing.

Where parties used to be a catalyst for meeting people because saying 'hi' in class was just too scary, they themselves have now become the scary part. It's the internet that is bridging people together. So online dating, as corny as it sounds, is actually genius. You're avoiding crowds, dive bars, and roofies and the biggest risk seems to be the possibility of meeting some legit people.

Yet at the same time it's scary. Online dating may just be the wave of the future; we are now given the power to pick and choose the exact physical attributes of a potential date, to judge him or her based on a brief blurb on his love of jet skiing or her desire "not to be played." In time, this selection will become about picking and choosing the exact physical attributes of a potential spouse.

No matter what the intentions of Internet daters, be it a good time or a long-term relationship, the point is this — it's not a declaration that you are 'pathetic' nor a signifier that you are void of visual appeal if you try out an Internet dating site. So try it.

A few tips: If you're going to make a profile and you're a guy, please, no photos with another girl, or group of girls. It's irritating.

And ladies, no Maxim inspired outfits, unless you going for that "I'm trying to break into the adult film industry" look.

So get online, put up a profile, and don't laugh — my friend's boyfriend is hot.

Deborah Geiger is a Collegian columnist.

'Master and Commander' sails into the hearts of audiences

By Kimberly Seymour
Collegian Correspondent

He has done it again. Russell Crowe, three-time consecutive Academy Award nominee for Best Actor, has brought to life another masterpiece. Crowe, along with Paul Bettany, stars in "Master and Commander: The Far Side of the World," which premiered Friday in theatres across the country. This epic tale takes the viewer back to 1805, a time when England's navy was all that stood between Napoleon and his desired empire.

Australian director Peter Weir, who previously directed hits such as "The Truman's Show" and "The Dead Poet's Society," brought to screen an long infamous story unfolded through the pages of the Patrick O'Brian series of Aubrey/Maturin novels.

Crowe's character is Captain "Lucky" Jacky Aubrey, renowned war hero of Great Britain. Aubrey is in charge of the British vessel HMS Surprise. He is accompanied by Dr. Stephen Maturin, played by Paul Bettany ("A Beautiful Mind"), and a crew of nearly 200 men.

While sailing along the South American coast, the HMS Surprise is caught off-guard and attacked by a great French warship, which seemed to come from nowhere. With half the number of men and weapons and with size and weather against them, the HMS Surprise is badly damaged. Captain Aubrey decides to dock at a nearby port to gather provisions and repair the wounded ship, hoping to follow the French vessel and surprise it with a counter attack.

This heroic film explores naval life in the beginning of the 19th century with a sensitivity to what it was really like. It is clearly an action film, but not in the typical fashion. The battle scenes are larger than life, with a realistic and gripping sense of urgency. This is not another emblematic war film, filled with blood and human bodies being torn apart by bombs.

Instead, Weir decides to focus on the suspense and emotion invested behind the scenes of the battles. Weir acknowledges also the significant role time plays in the actions of Aubrey, Maturin, and their crew. These men are not fighting because they are savage and malicious, but instead because it is their duty and honor to defend the British Empire.

Captain Aubrey is not the archetype, classic war hero either. He is sensitive and compassionate — his friendship with Dr. Maturin moving. The two spend many hours in Aubrey's quarters, playing instruments together or simply exchanging ideas and advice. The doctor is a naturalist, quiet and reserved. It is obvious to the viewer the difference in character and personality between the two, yet together they have an amazing repertoire. Aubrey not only listens to the advice Maturin offers, but considers what he says.

Captain Aubrey also relieves the viewer of the anticipation of the on coming battles with dinner in his cabin, with officers, rum, delicious foods and comic relief. Crowe does just the right amount of underplaying of his character to remind the audience that he is just a man doing his job in a time period when countries seldom saw peace for any length of time.

'Master and Commander: The Far Side of the World'
Directed by Peter Weir
Starring Russell Crow Paul Bettany
Universal Studios Miramax 20th Cenbrary Fox
Rated PG-13
139 mins.
Grade A

Up-and-coming actor Max Pirkis, 13, plays the midshipman, Lord Blakeney. His performance is outstanding, his portrayal of a young man preparing for a life of battle and war, realistic. He is injured in the first attack by the French, but doesn't allow this to dampen his spirits or his bravery. Captain Aubrey is by his side, giving him books on war heroes to keep up his morale.

Also starring in this motion picture is Billy Boyd, who audiences came to and love for his work as Pippin in "The Lord of the Rings" films. Boyd's portrayal of a crewmember is convincing. He is in charge of 'manning the wheel' or steering the ship. He, along with other common crewmen, represented the hard-working lower class that assisted in running a battle ship in this period.

There was a delicate relationship between Captain Aubrey and his crew, as Weir portrayed in a particular scene of this film. It was imperative for Captains at this time to keep their crew in check, while earning their respect and giving them credit for their abilities in return.

Weir has managed to keep this film moving and poignant, with an exciting plot, all-star cast and moments when the viewer might forget this is an action film altogether. "Master and Commander" will touch the viewer's heart, for more than two hours giving you a sense of what old fashioned war might have been like and reminding all of the bravery and sincerity of the men who served.

Forty years after his death, JFK still captivates

By Frazier Moore
Associated Press

NEW YORK (AP) — In the week leading up to Nov. 22, more than a dozen JFK specials invite viewers to encounter him from every vantage point on the 40th anniversary of his death.

You can step back and survey his role in a powerful political dynasty on "The Kennedys" (encoring on PBS, 9 p.m. EST tonight and Tuesday).

If for some reason you care, you can dally with admirers such as Donald Trump and Jay Leno as they describe their reactions to that grim day in Dallas, on MSNBC's dumbed-down "JFK: The Day That Changed America" (9 p.m. Monday).

You can re-experience the tragedy by focusing on the journalists who originally reported it. Through their memories as well as with painstakingly compiled footage, CNN's "President Kennedy Has Been Shot" (8 p.m. Sunday) and PBS' "JFK: Breaking the News" (check local listings) track Kennedy's death, then, two days later, the killing of his collared murder suspect on live TV.

In the process, both programs document media history being made.

"With no preparation whatsoever," says "Breaking the News" narrator Jane Pauley, those long-ago newscasters mobilized "the most massive coverage of any event since the invention of television." They gathered the nation in a video vigil. And created a model for cable news two decades later.

Between this pair of films, perhaps "Breaking the News" has the edge in conveying how journalists responded when a one-day story took on timeless gravity.

Particularly telling are extended excerpts that show Jay Watson, program director at WFAA-TV in Dallas, as he is pressed into unaccustomed on-air duty (all the station's reporters happened to be out in the field).

At one point, Watson manages to chain-smoke, monitor a telephone for updates, and interview Abraham Zapruder, who had just made the most famous home movie of all time. "I got out about a half-hour earlier to get a good spot to shoot some pictures," he explains.

His 26-second, 8mm film — the only known visual record of the full ambush — figures heavily in a trio of documentaries that re-examine whether Lee Harvey Oswald acted alone or as part of a conspiracy. And, befitting a debate that will likely never be resolved, the films arrive at differing conclusions.

Fox News Channel's "JFK: Case Not Closed" (9 p.m. Sunday) supports a conspiracy hypothesis. It disputes the "single bullet theory" and interprets an audio transmission from a Dallas police motorcycle as containing sounds from four gun shots, not three — which would prove the existence of a second assailant in Dealey Plaza.

But Court TV's "JFK: Investigation Reopened" (9 p.m. Wednesday) draws on high-tech analysis that accounts for how that single "magic" bullet might have plausibly traveled through Kennedy, then struck Texas Gov. John Connally in the front seat of their limousine.

This fascinating hour also means to debunk the police tape with techniques that suggest the "gun shots" are random noise — and the recording was made a full minute after the shooting was over.

"Peter Jennings Reporting: The Kennedy Assassination — Beyond Conspiracy" (ABC, 9 p.m. Thursday), provides even more elaborate computer simulations. This two-hour program (only part of which was available for review) reaches the same verdict: Oswald acted alone.

Not that any amount of evidence, one way or another, is likely to settle the question. Nor is this mystery ever likely to be pried loose from assessments of the thousand days that went before.

"Kennedy's legacy is defined in part by the manner of his passing," observes the splendid three-hour "JFK: A Presidency Revealed" (History Channel, 8 p.m. Sunday).

But before his fateful trip to Dallas, Kennedy faced the possibility of nuclear war with the Soviet Union no fewer than three times. (In the film, then Secretary of Defense Robert McNamara recalls an October night during the 1962 Cuban Missile Crisis when he wondered if he — and by extension the human race — would be alive a week later.)

And three times Kennedy would confront the prospect of sending federal troops to occupy Southern states to protect the civil rights of black Americans.

During his brief presidency, Kennedy set America on a course for the moon. He altered fashion, refusing to wear a hat and wearing his hair longish by the standards of that pre-Beatles era. With his wife, Jackie, he was the arbiter of excellence, cool and glamour that helped "create an illusion that later became known as Camelot."

Veteran reporter Hugh Sidey, who covered Kennedy for Time-Life publications, believes there was "a very good chance" that news of his indiscretions "would have broken wide open sometime in his second term, if not before, and he might have been forced out of office."

But, 40 years after Dallas, that's just one of countless "what ifs."

"He's frozen in our memories at the age of 46," says Kennedy biographer Robert Dallek. "So handsome, so articulate, so witty, so charming, so charismatic. He was a man of exceptional promise."

Another valuable program, "The Kennedy Tapes Revealed" (Bravo, 8 p.m. Friday), draws on recollections recorded by Robert Kennedy, the fallen president's brother and attorney general, as an oral history after his death. This intimate hour charts the Kennedy administration from Bobby's perspective, as well as hearing from other observers including Anthony Lewis and Arthur Schlesinger Jr., whom he had picked to interview him for his taped memoirs.

At times on the tapes Bobby is brutally direct, as when he describes Lyndon Johnson, President Kennedy's successor, as "a mean, bitter and vicious animal in many ways."

But even in these private reflections, he is protective of the brother he served so loyally, at one point dismissing rumors of President Kennedy's trysts as "ridiculous, on the face of it."

The world knows better now. Even so, John Kennedy's "enduring appeal seems to transcend personal frailty," notes the History Channel's "A Presidency Revealed." One reason? "He spoke of an America of tolerance, prospering in a world free from fear."

With Americans discovering new fears all the time, Kennedy may seem more appealing than ever.

COURTESY TEACHPOL.TCNJ.EDU

Although John F. Kennedy was only president for a short time, he has remained in the hearts of Americans for many years.

Event gives students an in-depth look at Cape Verdean culture

By MeiMei Thai
Collegian Correspondent

The friendly, exciting atmosphere of Cape Verdean Night, "Palavras di Nos Terra," held on Saturday started the evening off with a delicious cuisine at the Campus Center Auditorium.

The platters served were Cachupa, curry chicken and beef stew, potatoes, carrots, rice, and Bacalhou, a very unique tasting delicacy that was salty and tangy — a perfect combination.

Almost every Cape Verdean and University of Massachusetts student, alum, parent, and even students from other schools such as UMass Dartmouth, were dressed formally and fashionably in suits and dresses. They were seated at round tables, with white tablecloths and glass vases added for a finishing touch. Sidonio Ferreira, the Cape Verdean Student Alliance advisor, and Evandro Carvalho, president of CVSA, welcomed all the attendees to the event.

Iva Brito then recited a deep poem about historias, or stories. Her strong voice stirred the emotions of the room and helped the audience feel the gravity of what she was saying.

"I really liked the poem because it talked about all the things the Cape Verdean people had to go through," Giusi E. Lopes, a Cape Verdean and Italian student at UMass, said.

Following Brito's poem was a traditional dance performance by the Estrelas de Cabo Verde, done by Cape Verdean Student Association members dressed in white buttoned-down shirts, black pants, and black skirts. They started the scene with someone washing clothes by hand, an immigrant mother of many children, and a mother selling fish. Then they danced with their partners slowly at first, then more fast-paced to as the tempo of the music sped up.

As Salome Duarte, a Cape Verdean student, said, "Through the skits, it brings us back to our roots and we remember about the everyday life, which we tried to show."

Next on stage was Verissimo Galvao, who spoke a few words in remberance of former president of CVSA, Edgar Barros, who passed away in August on Fogo, one of the Cape Verdean islands off the west coast of Africa. Galvao spoke about how Barros was very passionate about his people, family, and culture. He also mentioned how Barros wanted to teach Cape Verdean students and the whole campus about his country. Barros was very proud of where he came from and he was very involved with helping the community. Galvao left the audience with the idea that Barros was all about the community and his dedication should be an inspiration for all to help live out his vision.

Continued on page 8

PHOTOS COURTESY GERALD H. LINGUA COLLEGIAN

Students enjoy food and dance performances by Cape Verdean groups on Saturday's Cape Verdean Night in the Campus Center Auditorium.

Student targets cancer cells for project

CAMBRIDGE (AP) — A 17-year-old high school student who developed a process to target cancer cells with fewer side effects than current methods has a chance to compete for $100,000 in a prestigious national science competition.

H. Mason Hedberg, a senior at North Attleboro High School, received a $5,000 scholarship and a silver medal in the Siemens Westinghouse Competition in Math, Science & Technology as the winner in the individual category.

"This student developed an innovative technique that may prove to be extremely useful," MIT biology professor and competition judge Mary-Lu Pardue said in a statement issued on Saturday.

Hedberg's project, titled "An Efficient, Functional Telomerase Activity Assay," aims to find compounds in the natural environment that suppress cancer-causing tumors. By blocking telemorase, an enzyme found only in cancer, Hedberg said the compounds could also stop cancer from spreading.

"My grandmother had a very severe type of cancer recently and I saw her recovery process was very difficult and I thought there had to be a better way to get through cancer," Hedberg said in a phone interview on Saturday.

"Chemotherapy and radiation therapy could have very harmful side effects. This would have almost no side effects," he said.

Hedberg's grandmother inspired him to develop his project, but he has had a lifelong interest in science. He has developed a program at his high school to promote the study of science to elementary students.

Hedberg has applied to Brown University where he hopes to major in biology and enter the pre-med program there. He said he wants to become a physician-scientist "to bridge the gap between research and clinical practice."

A panel of judges from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology chose 70 finalists from six regions to advance to the national competition in Washington next month.

Mark and Jeffrey Schneider of South Windsor, Connecticut won the top team prize at the New England Regional Finals for their West Nile Virus project.

Hedberg and the Schneiders were three of 1,283 students who entered the contest this year.

"The sheer talent and ingenuity of these remarkable young people never fails to amaze me," Albert Hoser, chairman and chief executive of the Siemens Foundation, said in the statement. "I have no doubt that among the winners tonight are some of our future leaders in math and science."

The Iselin, New Jersey-based Siemens Foundation gives more than $1 million in scholarships, awards and grants each year.

-Associated Press

the source

(the sors) n. key to discovering the weekly happenings of New England

MondayNovember17

ART

The Student Union Art Gallery will host an exhibit by artists Jeffery King and Katie Banach. Artwork can been seen in the Gallery starting at 5 p.m. for free. The Art Gallery is located between Earth Foods and the People's Market.

TuesdaySeptember18

MUSIC

The "Tuesdays in Bezanson" concert series continues tonight at 8 p.m. with "The Beauty of Inflections: Music for Voices and Instruments." Playing highlights from "Marie Galante," the show will bring an array of guest musicians to UMass. Tickets are $5 for students and $10 for the general public.

The Calvin Theatre hosts Susan Tedeschi and The Jason Crosby Band tonight at 8 p.m. Nominated for a best new artist Grammy in 2000, Tedeschi has been bringing her guitar-heavy blend of emotional rock to the music world ever since. Tickets are $34.50, $28.50, and $22.50.

WednesdayNovember19

PERFORMING ARTS

Smith College's Alyson Roux takes a new look at Bertolt Brecht's "Mother Courage and Her Children," a play covering a 30-year holy war. The modernized performance of this classic will unfold on the stage of the Hallie Flanagan Studio Theater in Smith's Mendenhall Center for the Performing Arts. The show starts at 8 p.m. tonight through Saturday. Tickets are $5 for students and $7 for the general public.

BOOKS

Historian Henry Wiencek will discuss his latest novel, "An Imperfect God: George Washington, His Slaves, and the Creation of America." The reading will take place at the Odyssey Bookshop in South Hadley at 7 p.m. and is free and open to the public.

ThursdayNovember20

MUSIC

The Residential Arts Solos and Duos Series concludes its season tonight with the Sunny Fortune/ Rashied Ali Duo at the Bezanson Recital Hall. With Fortune on flute and saxophones and Ali on drums the pair bring with them critical acclaim and a sound sense of musical expertise. The show starts at 8 p.m. and student tickets are $5

BOOKS

Jennifer Margulis, Ph.D. will speak tonight at Food For Thought Books about "Toddler: Real-life Stories of Those Fickle, Irrational, Urgent, Tiny People We Love," a book she edited. The collection explores through first-person narrative the joys and agonies of raising toddlers. Accompanying Margulis will be some local contributing parents. The reading starts at 7 p.m. and is free to the public.

FridayNovember21

ART

For those who missed the Paradise City Arts Festival in Northampton over Columbus Day weekend, there will be another chance to check out the exhibits and events this weekend in Marlborough. Established painters and sculptors as well as up and coming artists will be on hand to display their work. Tickets are $6 for students and seniors, $9 for adults and $3 for children ages five to 12. The festivities last through Sunday Nov. 23. For more information see www.paradisecityarts.com

PERFORMING ARTS

The American Ballet Theatre's Studio Company comes to Mount Holyoke College for performance tonight and tomorrow. The company, comprised of dancer from around the world, will perform selections from Tudor, Forsythe and Quanz, at 8 p.m. both nights with a special Saturday matinee at 2 p.m. The shows will be in the Kendall Sports and Dance Complex and tickets are $7 for students and $15 for the general public. Reservations can be made by call 538-2848.

SaturdayNovember22

ART

The 14th Annual Illustrators Show takes place tonight in Northampton. In addition to the works of many New England Area illustrators, new artwork from Dr. Suess will be on display. Work by renowned cartoonist and screenwriter Jules Feffler will also be on exhibit. The opening reception will take place at 5 p.m. at R. Michelson Galleries in Northampton where the artwork can bee seen through December 15.

SundayNovember23

MUSIC

The Mount Holyoke Symphony Orchestra will perform today at 4 p.m. The event will take place at St. Teresa's Church and is free and open to all.

weekly pinup

'COULD NOT ASK FOR MORE'

Acoustic balladeer Edwin McCain comes to Northampton to perform at the Iron Horse Music Hall Friday night. McCain, best known for hits "I'll Be" and "Could Not Ask For More" has been touring for over a decade. The show starts at 9:30 p.m and tickets are $15 in advance and $18 at the door.

CVSA brings music, food and dance to Campus Center

Continued from page 7

going back to the community and helping out.

Following that, Leny Monteiro spoke about the Edgar Barros Bidon Project, designed to honor the deceased's commitment to CVSA. The project hopes to raise money to help provide better education and school supplies for children in Cape Verde.

"I liked how they were raising money to help the kids in Cape Verde, how they are getting them desks, pencils, papers, and maybe books," said Jonathan Kou, an Asian student at UMass.

Evandro Carvalho also recited a poem, spoken first in Criolo (Creole) and finished in English. At one point, he raised his right arm with a clenched fist and recited, "Black power, black power, black power! Why you may ask? Because of 'A Luta Continua,'" a quote from African Revolutionary leader, Amilcar Cabral, meaning, "The struggle continues!"

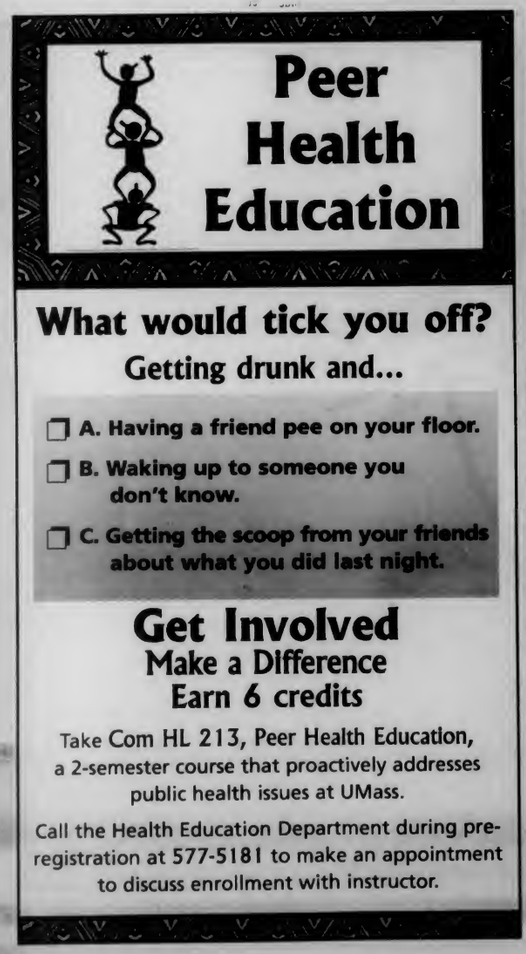
"The common message was that education is our passport to the future," Carvalho said. "It's not just going to school and going to class. Do research on yourself, your culture and people to remember where you came from and how you got there."

After Carvalho, a very hot, exciting Kuduro dance was performed to lighten up the mood. It was more jumpy and had more body movements compared to the first dance performance. Everyone cheered, clapped, and screamed in appreciation.

"It looked like the Sean Paul video," Kou said.

Finally, musical performances by hip-hop style dance troupe Blezzed Dez, Tem Blessed, and a Cape Verdean band called Nomads finished up the evening's festivities. The glimpse into the culture and accomplishment of Cape Verdean students and natives was certainly the highlight of "Palavras di Nos Terra."

The Nomads used their own guitars and drums to play cultural Cape Verdean music. Some of the songs were rapped, and the rest were sung in Criolo. The music got everyone to his or her feet and on the dance floor. All around the room there was a deep connection between the music and people.



American Daniel C. Egerton said, "I thought it was great. I learned a lot that I didn't know about Cape Verde and its culture, and I thought the musical performances were really entertaining. I'd definitely have to say that dancing, or trying to dance, was my favorite part of the night."

Bilal Qayyum, a Pakistani student, agreed.

"I thought it was really awesome, a very good show, and amazing dancing. The Nomads were crazy and the food was great," he said.

Krishna Soares, treasurer of CVSA, also thought the evening was a success.

"I think events like the one we had are very helpful at educating people about our culture," said Soares. "They could try some good food and listen to good music."

Punter's run beats the Jets

PHILADELPHIA — Donovan McNabb threw for 314 yards and two touchdowns, and Brian Westbrook caught two TD passes and ran for a score in the Eagles' fifth straight victory.

The two-time NFC East champion Eagles (7-3) have won seven of eight after opening the season with two losses at home. The Giants (4-6) have lost two in a row, including an embarrassing 27-7 loss to Atlanta last week.

Giants	10
Eagles	28

McNabb, heavily criticized for his poor performance in the first six games, completed 24 of 30 passes for his fourth straight solid effort and fifth career 300-yard performance.

CHICAGO — Jeff Wilkins kicked a 31-yard field goal with 38 seconds left to help the Rams win for the sixth time in seven games.

Marshall Faulk ran for 103 yards and the Rams (7-3) overcame a 14-3 halftime deficit.

Rams	23
Bears	21

Wilkins' third field goal came after the Rams moved 67 yards behind six completions from Marc Bulger, including a 21-yarder to Torry Holt.

The drive was aided by back-to-back penalties for illegal contact and illegal use of the hands on the Bears (3-7).

CLEVELAND — Kelly Holcomb passed for 392 yards and three touchdowns and the Browns showed no signs of disarray in their rout of Arizona.

James Jackson had two TD runs and Phil Dawson kicked three field goals for the Browns (4-6), who came into the game with three straight losses and seemingly in turmoil.

Cardinals	6
Browns	44

On Tuesday, coach Butch Davis released leading receiver Kevin Johnson. On Thursday, the NFL suspended star running back William Green four games for violating the league's substance abuse program.

But the Browns showed no aftereffects. Arizona (3-7) didn't cross midfield until late in the first half, was outgained 235-60 by halftime and finished with just 10 first downs.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Steve McNair threw for a touchdown and the defense held off the Jaguars at the goal line in the final minute for the Titans' fifth straight win.

Jacksonville (2-8) had first-and-goal needing to score to force overtime, but the Titans stopped Chris Fuamatu-Ma'afala twice up the middle for losses. Scott McGarrahan tackled Cortez Hankton at the 2 after an 8-yard catch, then Byron Leftwich couldn't find a receiver in the end zone on fourth-and-2.

Jaguars	3
Titans	10

The Titans (8-2) have won 10 of the last 12 games in this series. They also snapped their string of games with 30 or more points at six.

NEW ORLEANS — John Carney kicked a 36-yard field goal in overtime to lift New Orleans, which rallied from a 20-3 first-half deficit.

Deuce McAllister, held to 20 yards in the first half, finished with 173 yards and two touchdowns for the Saints (5-5). McAllister had touchdown runs of 5 and 7 yards in the rally and Carney tied the game with a 26-yard field goal.

The Saints got the first possession of overtime, but McAllister fumbled into the end zone, giving the Falcons (2-8) first down on the 20. Jay Feely, who kicked two earlier field goals, missed a 54-yarder, giving the Saints another chance.

Falcons	20
Saints	23

MIAMI — Olindo Mare hit a 43-yard field goal with 8:48 left in overtime to win it for the Dolphins.

Mare missed a 48-yard attempt wide right that would have put Miami (6-4) ahead with 2:29 left in regulation. Last month, he missed two 35-yard tries that would have beaten New England.

Ravens	6
Dolphins	9

NFL rushing leader Jamal Lewis lost a fumble to set up Mare's clincher. The Ravens (5-5) lost their second straight. Miami limited Lewis to 88 yards on 26 carries, just the third time this season he has failed to reach 100 yards.

ORCHARD PARK, N.Y. — Tony Banks came off the bench and hit rookie receiver Andre Johnson for a 46-yard touchdown, and Kris Brown made two field goals to spark the Texans.

Banks filled in for David Carr, who hurt his right shoulder in the first quarter.

The Texans (4-6) matched their win total from last year's expansion season. Buffalo (4-6) failed to score a touchdown for the third straight game, and kicker Rian Lindell compounded the problem by missing two field goals.

Texans	12
Bills	10

DENVER — Jake Plummer showed no signs of rust in his first game in a month and the Broncos kept Doug Flutie in check.

Denver (6-4) came flying out of its bye week, totaling 448 yards and taking a 27-0 halftime lead after holding San Diego (2-8) to 18 yards and one first down.

Plummer played as if he had never left, hitting 23 of 34 passes for 253 yards and three touchdowns after missing four games with foot and shoulder injuries.

Shannon Sharpe caught seven passes for 101 yards and had three touchdown receptions to surpass Jerry Smith's league record by a tight end with 61.

Chargers	8
Broncos	37

OAKLAND, Calif. — Phillip Buchanon scored on a 64-yard interception return 49 seconds into the game and third-string quarterback Rick Mirer calmly helped the Raiders end a five-game losing streak.

Daunte Culpepper passed for 396 yards and a touchdown and ran for another score. But his mistakes far outweighed his contributions as Minnesota (6-4) lost its fourth straight.

With two fumbles and three interceptions, he had five of his team's six turnovers after Minnesota came in with only nine giveaways all season. Aaron Elling also missed two field goals.

Vikings	18
Raiders	28

SEATTLE — Bobby Engram had an 83-yard punt return for a touchdown and caught a 34-yard scoring pass to help the Seahawks improve to 6-0 at home and maintain a share of the NFC West lead with St. Louis.

Lions	14
Seattle	35

The win was wrapped up by halftime, when Seattle (7-3) had 300 yards and a 35-14 lead.

— The Associated Press

GERALD H. LINCOLN/COLLEGIAN

James Solon was one of three Minutemen to score their first goals of the season Saturday night. He slipped through the Providence defense in the second period to earn his second point of the weekend.

UM splits weekend

Continued from page 12

2000 campaign, one year before Pöck arrived in Amherst. UMass swept the series that season.

Friday night, Pöck became a utility man, and took shifts at forward in place of the injured Mauldin. It was the first time the senior from Klagenfurt, Austria had appeared at forward since his conversion to defenseman last season.

"Last night was just a period, for fun," Pöck said. "Coach had an idea and I went with it, and it was fun. But I'm a defenseman."

The experiment didn't quite bring a 'W' to the Mullins Center, though, as the speedy Eagles took the 4-1 decision.

John Adams scored twice in the effort, including the game-winner, and sent the record 7,113 in attendance home disappointed. The crowd was the largest ever to watch a UMass hockey game, but there would be no record-breaking noise, as the Eagles stifled UMass for much of the game.

The Minutemen's only score came on a blistering slap shot from Pöck at the Eagle blue line; which beat goaltender Matti Kaltiainen over his left shoulder.

Though the game played mostly even, the Eagles were the clear dominators physically, and the Minutemen were kept mostly away from Kaltiainen, who made 14 saves.

"We played very good team defense," BC coach Jerry York said. "I can't remember much of a flurry with our goaltender. There were a couple of 5-on-3s, a 6-on-4 with the five-minute major, so we were pretty tenacious defensively. Teams have a lot of trouble getting 25 shots on our net, and that's because of our tenacious defense."

The major came near the end of the third period, when Tony Voce was sent off for hitting after the whistle at 15:13, and then nailed with a game misconduct for an undetermined infraction. The Eagles held off the UMass power play, which lasted until the final buzzer. It capped off a very physical game, with six penalties called in the first period, and extra penalties doled out to UMass' Sean Regan (game misconduct), Jeff Lang (roughing), and Eagle Brett Peterson (roughing) for a fracas that came after the final buzzer.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
COLLEGIAN
Is Looking For a
Bright,Talented,
Multitasking
Wizard!

Now Accepting Applications For:
'HUMAN RESOURCES MANAGER'

*Freshmen and Sophomores preferred
*Great Resume Builder
*8.5 hours per week

Applications Available in Room 113 Campus Center Basement. Attn: Sandra Marquez
-Please Bring Resume-

Now live and online!
Online Certificate of Business Studies

Offered by the Division of Continuing Education with the Isenberg School of Management

The certificate program is a credit-based program and is intended for students who want to broaden their academic background with business courses without completing a BBA. The program is delivered online and live allowing for the courses to be taken and completed anytime and anywhere. The program consists of five credit-bearing courses which are as follows: Introduction to Business, Introduction to Accounting I, Corporation Finance, Fundamentals of Marketing, and Principles of Management.

Courses offered this Winter Session 2004:

ACCOUNTING 221
Introduction to Accounting I (live and online)

FINANCE AND OPERATIONS MANAGEMENT 301
Corporation Finance (live and online)

MANAGEMENT 301
Principles of Management (live)

MARKETING 301
Fundamentals of Marketing (online)

SCHOOL OF MANAGEMENT 197 I
ST: Introduction to Business (online)

For more information contact the Division of Continuing Education, 545-3430. To register go to www.umass.edu/contined or the Division of Continuing Education Registration Office, 358 N. Pleasant St.

GERALD H. LING/COLLEGIAN

Jeff Krohn was 25-for-48 for 354 yards passing Saturday, but came up just short as the Minutemen were beaten by the Delaware Blue Hens in the third overtime period.

Hens down UMass

Continued from page 12

took their first possession into UMass territory, setting up a 42-yard field goal from Brad Shushman, his longest field goal of the season.

After the Maroon and White's next possession ended with a Rich Demers fumble, Hall increased the deficit to 10-0 when he found receiver David Boler for a 6-yard scoring strike.

Massachusetts fought back, however, as Krohn connected with his favorite target, wide receiver Jason Peebler, on touchdown passes of nine and 30 yards, to give UMass its first lead of the game at 14-10 midway through the second quarter.

The Hens weren't to be outdone before halftime though, as Hall found Boler again, this time from seven yards out, to give UD a 17-14 halftime lead.

The lead then grew to 24-14, as tailback Germaine Bennett found the end zone from two yards out to cap an 87-yard drive to open the second half.

That signaled the end of the offense for the Blue Hens in regulation, however, as they mustered just one first down the rest of the way leading up to overtime.

"We were just starting to make plays," said linebacker Jeremy Cain, who along with a sack and a forced fumble had a team-high eleven tackles. "They're a good offense and we're a good defense. We just started making plays."

The Minutemen chipped away at the lead when Krohn found tight end Mike Douglas with a 5-yard touchdown pass on fourth down to make the score 24-21.

UMass then proceeded to tie the game at the 10:08 mark of the fourth quarter on a 33-yard field goal by freshman Michael Torres.

The Maroon and White forced the Hens to punt on their next possession, but Dominque Stewart — returning punts in place of the injured Steve Costello — saw the ball bounce off of his helmet and right to UD's Jamie Rotonda at the UMass two-yard line.

As a result, a 3-yard strike from Hall to Long gave the Hens a 31-24 lead with 6:32 to play.

"We got five turnovers and that was the key to the ball game," Delaware coach K.C. Keeler said.

The Minutemen fought back to tie the game with 2:26 remaining in regulation when, on fourth down, wide receiver Johnson Owumi out-leaped cornerback Leon Clarke in the corner of the end zone for a 6-yard touchdown catch.

In overtime, Bennett (22 carries 85 yards) hit the end zone with a 16-yard run off of an option pitch on fourth-and-one, but Baylark (23 carries 126 yards) answered for the Minutemen with a 6-yard touchdown dash of his own.

Massachusetts took the ball first in the second overtime, and scored immediately when Krohn hit Peebler with a 25-yard touchdown pass on its first and only possession of the frame, before the Blue Hens answered to tie the game with a 13-yard touchdown run by Hall.

"We're in a lot of pain right now," Cain said. "But we'll use it as motivation. We still have a chance to win a championship."

Chiefs lose their first

CINCINNATI (AP) — Relax, 1972 Miami Dolphins. Your undefeated season is still unmatched.

Peter Warrick scored on a 68-yard punt return and a 77-yard touchdown catch to lead the Cincinnati Bengals to a 24-19 victory Sunday, handing the Kansas City Chiefs their first loss of the season.

Trying to become the first team since 1998 to start 10-0, the Chiefs instead lost to the up-and-coming Bengals (5-5), who backed up their boast and finished the day tied for first place.

Chiefs	19
Bengals	24

Receiver Chad Johnson, who repeatedly guaranteed the victory, was in the trainer's room getting an intravenous injection for cramps when Warrick made the biggest play of the Bengals' renaissance season.

The victory moved them into a first-place tie with Baltimore in the AFC North. The Bengals haven't been in contention this late in a season since 1990, the last time they had a winning record.

Trent Green threw two touchdown passes in the final seven minutes, the last a 3-yarder to Jason Dunn with 3:19 to go. The Chiefs never got the ball back.

As Jon Kitna took the snap to take a knee in the closing seconds, Johnson stood on the field with his right index finger raised and Bengals players doused head coach Marvin Lewis on the sideline.

Members of the undefeated '72 Dolphins — the NFL's only unbeaten team — now can go forward with their annual ritual and give a toast to their distinction.

TAMPA, Fla. — Playing with a broken right thumb and shrugging off five years of futility at Raymond James Stadium, Brett Favre led a 98-yard second-half drive to lift Green Bay.

Ahman Green finished the march with a 1-yard run that vaulted the Packers (5-5) back into the thick of the NFC playoff race. They dealt the Bucs (4-6) their third straight loss to hurt the defending Super Bowl champions' chances of getting back to the postseason.

Green finished with his seventh 100-yard game of the season, gaining 109 on 21 carries. Favre completed 13 of 28 passes for just 92 yards, but threw a TD pass for the 18th straight game.

Packers	20
Buccaneers	13

The three-time NFL MVP was intercepted once, but was not sacked — ending Tampa Bay's league-record streak of 69 consecutive games with at least one sack.

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — Stephen Davis scored on a 3-yard run with 1:09 remaining to help Carolina beat his old team.

Trying to shake off a nagging ankle sprain that sidelined him last week, Davis had 92 yards rushing on 28 carries for the Panthers (8-2), compared to the 54 yards rushing the Redskins managed.

Redskins	17
Panthers	20

After Patrick Ramsey put the Redskins (4-6) up 17-13 with 4:19 to play on a 10-yard pass to Patrick Johnson, Davis stepped up to show Washington just what it gave up.

INDIANAPOLIS — Edgerrin James ran for a season-high 127 yards and three touchdowns, and punter Hunter Smith raced 21 yards on a fake field goal for the go-ahead score for Indianapolis.

Jets	31
Colts	38

The Jets (3-7) and Colts combined for 862 total yards of offense, 69 points and scored on a myriad of big and strange plays.

Peyton Manning was 27-of-36 for a season-high 401 yards and one touchdown. And despite missing three starters, including two of Manning's favorite targets, Marvin Harrison and Marcus Pollard, the Colts (8-2) still found a way to win.

Rolston lifts B's past Canucks

WINSLOW TOWNSON/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Boston Bruin Patrice Bergeron, rear, passes from his knees to teammate Sergei Samsonove past Markus Naslund during the first period in Boston Saturday. The Bruins won, 2-1, in overtime

BOSTON (AP) — Brian Rolston's late goal allowed the Boston Bruins to overcome Dan Cloutier's goaltending.

Rolston scored with 44.9 seconds left in overtime to give the Boston Bruins a 2-1 win over the Vancouver Canucks in a matchup of the NHL's conference leaders Saturday night.

In the last minute of overtime, Mike Knuble broke in down the left wing, circled the net and fed a pass in front to Rolston, who beat Cloutier for the winning goal.

Canucks	1
Bruins	2

"I didn't get a lot on it, but luckily I got enough to get it over him," Rolston said.

The Bruins pulled out the win despite some outstanding goaltending by Cloutier, who made 37 saves. His best came when he made a sliding stop on defenseman Nick Boynton, who broke in alone with 2:02 left in the extra period.

"He played really well. He made a lot of really good saves and he looked strong," Vancouver coach Marc Crawford said of his goaltender.

Following his game-winning goal, Rolston and Boynton joined the local rock band Dropkick Murphys to play guitar on a song during a postgame performance.

"He's such a versatile player," Knuble said.

Knuble scored the first goal for Boston, which improved to 8-0-1 against the Western Conference. The Bruins are 10-1-2-2 in their last 15 games.

Jason King had a power-play goal for the Canucks.

Boston outshot the Canucks, 39-24.

"Obviously they were better than us in pretty well every aspect of the game," Cloutier said.

The Canucks took advantage of a defensive miscue to grab a 1-0 lead on King's power-play goal 6:59 into the opening period. Both Boynton and goaltender Andrew Raycroft misplayed a loose puck at the side of the Bruins' net before Daniel Sedin slipped a pass to King, who scored from the edge of the crease. It marked the 15th time in 18 games this season that the Canucks scored the first goal.

The Bruins tied it at 1-all in a wide-open second period when Knuble redirected Dan McGillis' shot from the point for a power-play score. Knuble's tip caromed in off the right post.

Boston outshot the Canucks 18-12 in a second period filled with a number of scrums and some chippy play. There were 12 minor penalties and two majors called in the period.

A disallowed Bruins' goal was upheld by a replay review early in the second period. The net became dislodged after Cloutier was knocked down by defenseman Jarkko Ruutu just before Boston's Joe Thornton shot the puck.

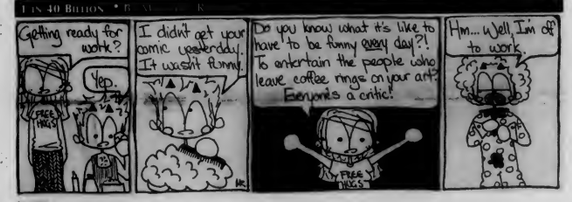
Notes: Vancouver's Artem Chubarov injured his upper body and didn't play after the second period. ... Boston left wing P.J. Axelsson's next assist will be the 100th of his career. ... Rolston needs two points for 400 in his career. ... It was the only meeting between the teams this season. ... Vancouver had killed 13 of 14 penalties in the previous four games, but Boston scored with its first power play.

SPRING BREAK '04
It's time to go!
SPRING BREAK '04 PACKAGES
All HOTEL package prices starting at
> JAMAICA $649
> CANCUN $689
> BAHAMAS $779
> MAZATLAN $839
> AND MORE!
BOOK YOUR TRIP NOW!
44 Main St. (413) 256.1261
exciting things are happening @ www.statravel.com
STA TRAVEL
WE'VE BEEN THERE.
ONLINE • ON THE PHONE • ON CAMPUS • ON THE STREET

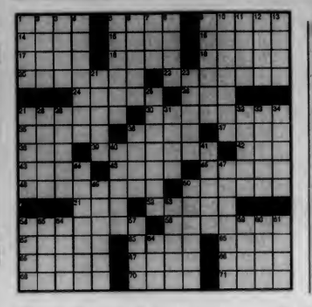
Start here.
Each day of our intense Winter Session equals an entire week of course material which means that you can earn three credits in just three weeks! Best of all, Winter Session costs less. There are fewer fees now than at any other time of year. Save time and money.
You know you're ready. Start here. Classes begin in January.
Are you ready for the challenge?
UMassAmherst
Continuing Education
www.umassamherst.com • (413) 545-2414

BUCCI
HAIRCUTS always $10.
25 N. Pleasant St. Amherst 256.0733
145 Main St. Northampton 586.0155

Oasis Body Wraps and Tanning
243 Russell St.
Hadley, MA 01035
(413) 587-9742
NOW FEATURING SUN SPRITZER UV FREE TANNING
• The first UV FREE tanning machine in the area
• Get $5.00 off your first visit
• A rich golden tan in just a few seconds
• You'll look and feel great
1/2 Price tanning every Tuesday
OASIS • Hampshire Mall • Conveniently Located • University Drive • UMASS



JAMAICA
Spring Break 2004
The Ultimate Experience
CALL 1 800 733 6347 $549
UMASS Amherst University.... Live Life the Beach Life Way!
Group Discounts
Book before Dec 15th and $avell
Sell trips, earn cash, travel free!!
www.BeachLifeVacations.com



QUOTE FOR THE DAY

"A word to the wise ain't necessary – it's the stupid ones that need the advice."

-Bill Cosby

DINING COMMONS MENU

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Meatball Sub
- Chicken Fajita (F, H, W)
- California Chili Nachos (vegan)
- Gardenburger Chick'n Grill (vegan)

DINNER
- Veal Cutlet
- Savory Baked Chicken
- Southern 6 Bean Stew (vegan)
- Roast Vegetable Wrap (vegan)

DAILY WEATHER FORECAST

For Amherst

MONDAY
- High: 49
- Low: 32

TUESDAY
- High: 54
- Low: 45

WEDNESDAY
- High: 61
- Low: 38

PRODUCTION CREW

On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Dan Lamothe

PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Gerald H. Ling

COPY EDITOR
Leah Wyner

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Shannon Farrington

PRODUCTION STAFF
Cory Rosenberg / Sarah Lloyd

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Wear a hat to class today. No one wants to see your face, either.

pisces • FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Ever think of joining the circus? With that nose maybe you should.

aries • MAR. 21-APR. 19
Don't feed the squirrels sandwich meat.

taurus • APR. 20-MAY 20
Show your spirit today and wear something UMass. Why not?

gemini • MAY 21-JUN. 21
Get your stuff that people owe you before Thanksgiving.

cancer • JUN. 22-JUL. 22
You know those new pants that you think make your butt look good? They don't.

leo • JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Sometimes, I wish you would just stay in bed.

virgo • AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
You are a ray of light on these dark days of fall.

libra • SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
You're worse than the people who don't flush the toilet after they go the bathroom.

scorpio • OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Get pumped up and listen to "Eye of the Tiger" on the way to class.

sagittarius • NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Stop fighting with the lunch ladies, they're doing the best they can.

capricorn • DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Try your hands at arts and crafts -you never know what you could create.

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Sports Teams-Sororities- Clubs-Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with a proven Campus-Fundraiser 3 hour fundraising event. Our free programs make fundraising easy with no risks. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so get with the program! It works. Contact Campus-Fundraiser at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campus-fundraiser.com

APARTMENT FOR RENT

3 Bedroom Apartment for January 665-9254

AUTO FOR SALE

1992 Silver Ford

AUTO FOR SALE

Taurus Excellent condition $2400 118000K Call 549-3930 210-7393 All Power

$500!!! Police Impounds. Hondas, Chevy's, etc from $500. For listings. 1-800-319-3323 ext4554

COMPUTERS

Pentium Laptop $99 Free Printer with Computer purchase Call for details Great Rates and great turn around time. We fix Laptops, Desktops/ PC's guaranteed 584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

Internships: November 21 is the last day to apply to become a Legal Assistant with the Student Legal Services Office. Earn up to 15 credits while gaining valuable experience. Call 545-1995 or come to 922 Campus Center to your application.

EMPLOYMENT

The Barn
–Shift managers
–Refrigerated warehouse
–Cashiers & stockers ($8 hr) Apply in store. Open 8am – 10pm. 95 River St. Greenfield, MA 01301 (116 to 91N to Exit 26) (413)774-5599

!Bartending!$ $250/day potential No experience Nesc Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext 162

EMPLOYMENT

Winter Break Employment – Barnes & Noble at Boston University. Help us prepare for the upcoming semester. Needed: Cashiers, Shelvers, Cutomer Service, Phones. Flexible shifts (20, 30, or 40+ hrs per week) starting December 15th –January 23rd. Store discount, conveniently located in Kenmore Sq. under the Citgo Sign on MBTA B, C, or D Green line. Meet our representatives on Dec. 2nd at the Campus Center Concourse or call our Human Resource Dept. at 617-236-7488 or E-Mail us for an application: bksbu@bncollege.com

EMPLOYMENT

Internship Motivated students seeking leadership outside the box. Gain experience in all aspects of running a small business. Average pay: $9300.00 Call 508-246-1230

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

FOR SALE

Shop Now Holiday Discounts ZOO-MASSGear.com

$Save$ Wholesale-Discount Prices, Video games, clothing, jewelry, more. www.tylersdiscounts.com

INSTRUCTION

On the Rocks School Bartending. Become certified in one weekend. Great way to earn money. Call us toll free at 866-mix-5600. www.OTRBartending.com

ROOM FOR RENT

Sublet one bedroom for Spring On Bus Route Call: 617-893-8656

SERVICES

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

Act Now! Book 11 people, get 12th trip free. Group discounts for 6+ www.springbreakdiscounts.com or 800-838-8202

SPRING BREAK
Largest selection of Destinations, including Cruises! Foam Parties, Free Drinks and Club Admissions. Rep Positions and FREE trips Available. 1-800-231-4386 www.EpicureanTours.com

TRAVEL

Spring Break 2004. Travel with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator to Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas and Florida. Now hiring campus reps. Call for group discounts. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com For more information contact STA Travel at 413-256-1261

A "Reality" Spring Break 2004's Hottest Prices Book now .. Free Trips, Meals & Parties www.sunsplashtours.com or 1800-426-7710

To place a classified ad, visit the Campus Center basement or call 545-3500 between 9:30am - 4:00pm

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SportsMonday

Monday, November 17, 2003 — Sports@dailycollegian.com

Not so fast

Delaware snaps UM's win streak in third overtime

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

NEWARK, Del. — It was a game for the ages.

After trailing in nearly every one of its games this season, the No. 3 Massachusetts football team found itself in that predicament on numerous occasions at No. 6 Delaware on Saturday, yet as they have all season long, the Minutemen fought back resiliently.

However with a shot to clinch the Atlantic 10 title and the chance to set a conference record for consecutive wins hanging in the balance, the Minutemen encountered something for the first time this season in what was its most monumental contest.

The end of their magic.

After the two teams combined for 182 offensive plays, 950 net yards, 50 first downs, four ties, and four lead changes in four quarters of football and three overtimes, it was the Blue Hens who emerged from the epic battle as the victor, taking the game 51-45 in triple overtime before a raucous crowd of 21,804 at Delaware Stadium.

With the win, UD (10-1 7-1 A-10) earned control of its own destiny in the hunt for the A-10's automatic playoff bid, needing only to win at Villanova next week to secure the league title.

UMass (9-2 7-1 A-10), which hosts Rhode Island on Saturday at Warren P. McGuirk Alumni Stadium, can still share the league title with the Hens if it is able to knock off the Rams, but will need the Wildcats to beat Delaware for a chance to win the league title outright.

UMass	45
Delaware	51

Nonetheless, the Minutemen are likely in the Division I-AA playoffs regardless of what transpires over the season's final weekend.

"An awesome football game, maybe the best I've been involved in," UMass coach Mark Whipple said. "It's what college football is all about. We just have to move forward and try to win the title next week."

The teams were tied at the end of regulation, and traded scores in the first and second overtime sessions, sending them into a third extra frame, where any touchdowns would have to be followed by a two-point conversion attempt, per league mandate.

It was then, however, that Blue Hen quarterback Andy Hall hit wide receiver Justin Long in the end zone on 4-yard fade route to give the Hens a 51-45 lead. The two-point conversion, which is mandatory starting in the third overtime, fell incomplete.

The Minutemen then had one last chance to prolong what was already the longest game in school history since 1987, and the longest ever in the history of Delaware. Yet after a pair of incompletions sandwiched around a 4-yard Steve Baylark rush set up 4th-and-5 for the Minutemen, quarterback Jeff Krohn's pass sailed towards the sideline as his receiver, Jimmie Howard, cut towards the middle of the field, prompting the Blue Hen sideline to pour onto the field in jubilation.

It was just the second loss to a I-AA opponent for Krohn since coming to Amherst prior to last season. On the afternoon the senior tri-captain completed 25-of-48 passes — at least one to 10 different receivers — for 334 yards and five touchdowns, despite being intercepted twice and sacked five times.

Hall, meanwhile, was 28-for-39 for 261 yards and 6 touchdowns, and carried the ball 21 times for 63 yards.

The game began ominously for the Minutemen, as Delaware

Continued on page 10

Gerald H. Ling/Collegian

Andy Hall (28-for-39, 261 yards, no interceptions) led Delaware to a triple-overtime victory over UMass Saturday, halting the Minutemen's eight-game winning streak, which had them on the verge of setting a conference record, and setting up a crucial pair of games this weekend.

Gerald H. Ling/Collegian

Sophomore Marvin Degon scored his first goal of the season in UMass' 3-2 win over Providence at Schneider Arena Saturday. The win salvaged a weekend split after the Minutemen's loss to BC at home.

Split decision

Minutemen fall to Eagles, bounce back

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

PROVIDENCE, R.I. — After watching his squad drop a 4-1 decision to the No. 3 team in the country Friday, Massachusetts hockey coach Don Cahoon said it wasn't that game, but rather Saturday night's regular-season series finale with Providence that would truly define the state of his club.

The definition was bright, as the Minutemen took another two points from the Friars with a 3-2 win at Schneider Arena. It was the second time the Minutemen earned a split in the last three weekends, the other coming in a home-and-home set with PC.

UMass	3
Providence	2
Boston Coll.	4
UMass	1

With Saturday's win, UMass improved to 8-2-0 overall, and 5-2-0 in Hockey East play. The Friars dropped to 6-3-2 overall (2-3-2 HEA). The victory also meant that the Minutemen will retain first place in the conference at least until they square off with the Maine Black Bears — sitting two points back in second place — on Friday.

Three Minutemen scored their first goals of the season Saturday, including Ohio State transfer John Toffey, whose tally at 14:13 of the second period gave UMass the one-goal edge it needed to take the season series with the Friars. The Minutemen beat Providence in their last meeting — also at Schneider — on Nov. 1, a day after losing badly to the Friars at home.

Toffey's goal began with a perfectly placed outlet pass from the stick of defenseman Marvin Degon, who found Josh Hanson along the right wing boards at the red line. Hanson turned from there, and brought the puck in on a 2-on-1 with Toffey. The Medford native fed the pass through the Friar defenseman's skates, and Toffey converted for his first goal in a UMass uniform.

Degon also scored his first of the season, on a pretty play with defensive partner Thomas Pöck. The two played catch along the blue line, and on the return, Degon ripped a slap shot that snuck through Providence goaltender Bobby Goepfert's legs to open up the scoring.

In addition, James Solon scored his first of the season on a beautiful move that opened up Goepfert's net. Solon came crashing in — literally — and slipped the puck in just before sending the sophomore netminder sprawling into the cage. Goepfert banged his head on the way down, and remained down on the ice for a minute before returning to action.

For the Minutemen, it was a much-needed scoring outburst from three artists formerly known as background players. Big-scoring forward Greg Mauldin (four goals, six assists) missed his second straight game with a leg injury.

"I think all the teams that are looking for guys to contribute," Cahoon said. "You only have a few guys who put up big numbers, and everybody else has to take their turns, and these kids stepped up tonight and scored great goals for us."

"Marvin played a terrific game tonight, he got his chances, and he buried one, he got another great assist," Pöck said of Degon. "It's the whole team chipping in with us, we don't have any particular stars, everybody else chips in."

It was also a big rebounding effort for the Maroon and White, which lost a chippy battle to Boston College Friday night.

"We knew that we had to come in and play hard to beat them, with the season series on the line," Pöck said. "And we won the season series, I think for the first time since I've been here, so that makes me proud."

Indeed, the last time the Minutemen won the season series with Providence was in the 1999-

Continued on page 9

The Daily Collegian

Tuesday, November 18, 2003 — New England's Largest College Daily • Est. 1890 — Volume CXIV Issue 53

Take Our Daughters creator visits UMass

By Erika Lovley
Collegian Staff

Co-founder of the national Take Our Daughters to Work program and University of Massachusetts alumna Miriam Zoll began her speech, "From the University to the U.N.," by reflecting on her journey as a journalism major at UMass. "You have to sink or swim, and I learned how to swim here," she said.

The 1984 graduate has "swum" to the top of the writing and business field. Zoll is the head of Zoll Group Communications, a consulting group based in New York City that focuses on international development and domestic public policy issues. She is currently the chief researcher for the United Nations global publication concerning the issue of the HIV/AIDS virus pandemic.

"This disease is worse than the plague," Zoll said. "So many people are unwilling to talk about this disease, and it's spreading like wildfire."

According to Zoll, there are 20 million people dead, 42 million infected and 13 million orphans in Africa alone.

"There are orphaned girls at seven years-old who are acting as mothers," she said. "This causes them to engage in early sex work. They become infected and the cycle continues."

Another notable achievement in Zoll's career has been earning the role of the founding co-producer of the Ms. Foundation for Take our Daughters to Work Day.

"I imagined a day when girls fill the halls of Capitol Hill. Pictured a stock market full of girls and women, in equal numbers to men," she said.

When Zoll first began planning the event, she said it was specifically designed to help adolescent girls experience new opportunities. The day itself was originally meant to run as a test pilot program in the New York City schools alone. However, a reporting error in Parade Magazine named the project a national program.

"After that, we ran the event as a national program," Zoll said.

When she first graduated, Zoll began her own business in order to support her work as a freelance writer.

"It may sound glamorous. But painting and cleaning houses was not glamorous, but I was running a business. I knew I wanted no part of a 9-to-5 job. I have freelanced since I was 21," she said.

Sarah Lloyd/Collegian

Miriam Zoll, 1984 alumna of UMass Amherst, spoke yesterday at the ISOM about her work as a journalist and as chief researcher for the U.N. publication on the HIV/AIDS virus.

Zoll attributes much of her success to her days spent at The Massachusetts Daily Collegian.

"I spent three-fourths of my time at The Collegian and loved every minute of it," Zoll said. "I loved being on deadline, interviewing and meeting all the famous people who came to campus. I was able to articulate student interests and seeing my name in print, it was a very exciting time."

Zoll's experience at The Collegian first paid off when she had to interview Bella Abzug, one of the few early women figures in Congress.

"I was very nervous when I called. I was put on hold for 20 minutes. When Abzug finally picked up the phone, she told me she didn't have time to talk to me."

Luckily, Zoll was able to fall back on her reporting skills and persuade the abrasive Abzug to answer her questions.

"It was extremely exciting to talk to such a powerful woman," she said.

Zoll's first major break as a journalist came after college when she worked as a reporter for The Beverly Times, a local newspaper in her town. When 15 de-institutionalized mental patients died in a rooming house fire in Beverly, Zoll worked with a team of reporters, talking to the coroner about forensics while in competition with every major news media.

"I took my five semesters spent at The Collegian and put them into action," Zoll said. Her work on the story won her a UPI news award when she was only five months out of college.

Zoll admitted she didn't always know what she wanted to do with her life. She first spent her days at UMass in and out of classes. "I was here on campus asking, 'Why the hell am I here?'"

When John Lennon was murdered, the reaction of students on campus left a strong impression on Zoll.

"The experience shaped my psyche and my conscious. People were crying and holding candlelight vigils. It dawned on me that this was all organized by someone. I began to understand I had opportunity," Zoll said. "I decided I should use my writing skills to invest and flourish in an open community and in society."

Although she has conquered many goals and challenges, Zoll still battles with some of the insecurities.

"When all things in life fluctuate, writing is one thing that is my central compass. I get adamant. I force myself to get out and have structure. You must maintain a vision of success and confidence in front of you," Zoll said.

In closing, Zoll had the following words of encouragement for UMass students: "There are many opportunities here on campus. I hope this inspires you to spread your wings and go find opportunities."

Miriam Zoll's speech was the first of the College of Humanities and Fine Arts Dean's series. The series celebrates the second annual Dean's seminar, which focuses on alumni entrepreneurs. The speech was held in the Isenberg School of Management.

Muhammad convicted of capital murder

By Matthew Barakat
Associated Press

VIRGINIA BEACH, Va. (AP) — In a verdict that could cost him his life, a stone-faced John Allen Muhammad was convicted yesterday of using a high-powered rifle, a beat-up car and a teenage sidekick to murder people at random and terrorize the Washington area during last year's sniper attacks.

The jury immediately began hearing evidence on whether the 42-year-old Army veteran should get the death penalty or life in prison.

"We reserve the death penalty for the worst of the worst," prosecutor Richard Conway told the jurors. "Folks, he still sits right in front of you without a shred of remorse."

Muhammad stood impassively as the verdict was read, looking straight ahead with the same enigmatic look he had throughout the trial. Two jurors held hands, and two others wept. Family members of victims held hands and wiped away tears.

The jury deliberated for 6-1/2 hours over two days before convicting Muhammad of two counts of capital murder. One accused him of taking part in multiple murders, the other — the result of a post-Sept. 11 terrorism law — alleged the killings were designed to terrorize the population. Muhammad is the first person tried under the Virginia law.

Muhammad was found guilty of killing Dean Harold Meyers, a Vietnam veteran who was cut down by a single bullet that hit him in the head on Oct. 9, 2002, as he filled his tank at a Manassas gas station. He was also found guilty of conspiracy to commit murder and use of a firearm in a felony.

The victim's brother Robert said he believes Muhammad deserves the death penalty: "I must say that I can't think of too many more heinous crimes than this one."

Fellow suspect Lee Boyd Malvo, 18, is on trial separately in nearby Chesapeake for the killing of FBI analyst Linda Franklin at a Home Depot in Falls Church. He also could get the death penalty. Malvo's attorneys are pursuing an insanity defense, arguing that the young man had been "indoctrinated" by Muhammad.

In all, the two men were accused of shooting 19 people — killing 13 and wounding six — in Alabama, Georgia, Louisiana, Maryland, Virginia and Washington, D.C., in what prosecutors said was an attempt to extort $10 million from the government.

The men's trials were moved some 200 miles to southeastern Virginia out of concern that it would be too hard to find an impartial jury close to the nation's capital because the sniper attacks had terrorized so many people.

The verdict came after three weeks of testimony in which a series of victims and other witnesses graphically — and often tearfully — recalled the horror that gripped the Washington area.

William Franklin recalled being splattered with his wife's blood outside a Home Depot. A retiree described seeing a woman slumped over on a bench, blood pouring from her head. The only child shot during the spree testified: "I put my book bag down and I got shot."

Jurors also saw several stomach-turning crime-scene photos, despite protests by the defense that the pictures were gratuitous.

Ten people were killed in the region and three were wounded in the spree, many of them shot as they went about their daily tasks: shopping at a crafts store, buying groceries, mowing the lawn, going to school.

At the height of the killings, the area was so terrified that sports teams were forced to practice indoors, people kept their heads down as they pumped gas, and teachers drew the blinds on their classroom windows.

Alvin Selverstone/Associated Press

Sniper suspect John Allen Muhammad stands between bailiffs as he listens to the guilty verdicts on four charges in Courtroom 10 at the Virginia Beach Circuit Court in Virginia Beach, Va., yesterday.

Editorial/Opinion — Page 4
Howard Dean — The moral dilemma of the Confederate flag

Arts & Living — Page 4
Rockin' Amherst — Andrew W.K. parties hard

Sports — Page 8
Fresh start — UMass to begin season tonight

Comics/Classifieds — Page 7

Deputy provost appointed to U.S. Dept. of Agriculture

By Ferron Salniker
Collegian Staff

John I. Cunningham, deputy provost of the University of Massachusetts, has recently been appointed by U.S. Secretary of Agriculture Ann M. Veneman to serve a three-year term on a national advisory board for the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

The National Agriculture Research, Extension and Economics Advisory Board is designed to advise the USDA and its land grant university partners on research, extension, education and the effectiveness of economic policies and priorities. The panel will also include input from customers to address the strategic plan for research, education and economics.

"We advise the department of agriculture if they're going in the right direction and using resources wisely," Cunningham said.

Cunningham, who is also a professor in the department of nutrition in the School of Public Health and Health Sciences, was nominated by the American Society for Clinical Nutrition to serve as the representative for national human health associations.

"My first meeting as a board member opened my eyes to its scope. The REE [research, education and extension] mission area within USDA is critically important to the continued success of production agriculture or forest products," Cunningham said. "REE spans areas from animal health, crop diversification and genomics, to health concerns about food preparation and safety, and even to promoting healthy behaviors to prevent obesity when calories are so readily available in very tasty, convenient and affordable products."

Cunningham mentioned four major mission areas within the USDA that will be evaluated by the advisory board. The first is the Agricultural Research Service, the in-house research arm of the USDA.

The Cooperative State Research Education and Extension Service (CSREES) will also be evaluated by the board. CSREES is a partnership formed between universities and federal support from the USDA.

"The department of agriculture works with universities to do research and to do teaching in agriculture and to run extensions through universities," Cunningham said.

The third mission area evaluated is the Economic Research Service, the main source of economic information and research from the USDA.

"[The ERS] provides economic forecasts, summaries, calculations, nationally," Cunningham said. "It's basically for everyone to use. It provides forecasts on agriculture in the future and the economy's impact on products."

The National Agricultural Statistic Service, which provides analysis and statistics in service of U.S. agriculture, is also under evaluation.

The 31-member board meets twice a year and works by telecon monthly.

Senate debates ban on workplace smoking

By Ken Maguire
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) — Senate democrats gave strong support yesterday to a statewide ban on workplace smoking, although it may not reach Gov. Mitt Romney's desk until January.

The Senate was expected to continue debate today on the bill, which would make Massachusetts the sixth state in the nation to ban smoking in the workplace, including most bars and restaurants.

The legislative session ends tomorrow, however, so if the Senate passes a bill that is significantly different than the House version, there may not be enough time this week for the two chambers to agree on a compromise bill.

Republicans tried yesterday to derail the proposed ban, arguing that it's full of loopholes exempting the "rich and famous," such as members of private country clubs and American Legion halls.

"You either believe (workplace smoking) is bad or not, but the exemptions that have been put in here for the rich and famous, for the heavy Democratic givers, for the nursing home owners, is absolutely disgusting," said Minority Leader Brain Lees, R-East Longmeadow.

The bill, which the House passed last month, would extend the state's workplace ban to all restaurants, nightclubs and bars, as well as auditoriums, conference rooms, offices, elevators, hallways, cafeterias, employee lounges, restrooms and staircases. It would take effect in July.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Jennifer Eastwood
Managing Editor Dan Lamothe
Business Manager Peter Foundas
Production Manager Scott Pihl
Night Supervisor Nick Markantonatos
Advertising Manager Sean Costello
Editorial Production Shannon Farrington
Arts & Living Editor Glen Straub
Comics Editor Molly Eggleston
Editorial Editor Paige Cram
News Editor Ferron Saltiker
Photo Editor Gerald H. Ling
Sports Editor Andrew Merritt
Circulation Manager Kristen Weiss
Classified Advertising Marty Pappas
Distribution Manager Julie Beauchamp
Financial Manager Greg Stamm
Human Resources Sandra Marquez
Special Issues Betsy Feldman
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising David Ber
Assistant Business JaLynn Sorenson
Assistant Distribution Mark Lagatic
Assistant Finance Richard Pacheco
Advertising Production Lisa Lynch
Graphics Advisor Charlie Higgins
Layout Manager Lindsay Clark
Asst. Arts & Living Meghan Healy
Asst. Arts & Living Cameron J. Woods
Assistant Editorial Matthew Reid
Assistant News Erika Lovley
Assistant News Morris Singer
Assistant Photo Emilie Duggon
Assistant Sports Mike Martelli
Assistant Sports Robert McGovern

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts summer semester. The Collegian is independently owned, operation advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper known as Aggie Life, became the Collegian Signal in 1901. The Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1950. Published daily since 1967. The Collegian has been recognized since 1890. For advertising rates and information, call between 9:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Marijuana confiscated from student

Woman's restraining order is violated by ex-boyfriend

police log

compiled by Thomas Coyle

Saturday, Nov. 8

1:34 a.m. Emergency Health and Safety and the Amherst Fire Department reported to a fire alarm at Webster Hall. The alarm was caused by the discharge of a fire extinguisher on the sixth floor. Emergency Housing was notified for cleanup.

5:22 a.m. An officer advised that he had observed a subject checking door handles to vehicles parked on Fearing Street. The subject was issued a summons to court.

12:57 p.m. An EMT requested an ambulance for a sports injury in the athletic fields across from Boyden Gym. One patient was transported to Cooley Dickinson Hospital. It was noted that vehicles were parked on both sides of the street were making it difficult for emergency vehicles to get through. No one responsible for the event was in the area or controlling parking.

2:26 p.m. A credit card fraud was reported by a student in Kennedy Hall. The account was canceled and a report was taken.

5:34 p.m. A traffic stop in Lot 50 near the Hampshire Dining Common resulted in one arrest. Dante Askew, 21, of 63 Bayview Ave., Norwalk, Conn., was arrested for unlicensed operation of a motor vehicle and violation of miscellaneous municipal ordinances.

9:14 p.m. A traffic stop in the Northeast quad resulted in one arrest. Ryan Adgate, 21, of 131 Winn St., Woburn, Mass., was arrested for unlicensed operation of a motor vehicle and violating miscellaneous municipal ordinances.

Sunday, Nov. 9

1:51 a.m. A traffic stop on University Drive resulted in one arrest. Derek Euvrard, 18, of 75 Winthrop St., Athol, Mass., was arrested for operating a motor vehicle with a suspended license and equipment violations.

3:18 p.m. The PVTA reported to Amherst Police that there was a large group of people fighting near the stadium on Dallas Drive with unknown weaponry. An area check turned up negative.

3:58 p.m. A party stated that an unknown group of people had attempted to kick in his door at Baker Hall. Emergency Housing was called because the door and lock were rendered unusable.

8:02 p.m. A traffic stop on Massachusetts Drive resulted in one arrest. Andrea Plankey, 19, of 10 West St., South Deerfield, Mass., was arrested for operating a vehicle with a suspended license, a crosswalk violation and not having registration in possession.

11:50 p.m. At Infirmary Way, one person was arrested for sexual assault. Jonathan Muollo, 22, of 26 Mocking Bird Hill Rd., Windham, N.H., was arrested for indecent assault and battery on a person 14 or older.

Tuesday, Nov. 11

12:04 a.m. A disturbance in Hamlin Hall resulted in two arrests. John Rosolino, 18, of 4 Fox Ridge Ln., Locust Valley, N.Y., was arrested for disorderly conduct. Michael Jacobson, 18, of 2 Chestnut St., Grafton, Mass., was arrested for disorderly conduct and carrying a dangerous weapon.

2:11 a.m. A fight was reported in the lobby of Webster Hall with one injured party. The subject refused medical attention and a report was taken.

3:24 a.m. Following a disturbance in John Quincy Adams Hall, Janice Miles, 22, of 78 Stafford Rd., Wales, Mass., was arrested for assault and battery.

6:35 a.m. Officers served a search warrant on a student in Mackimmie Hall. Adam Weisblatt, 19, of 2 Anderson Circle, Andover, Mass., was arrested for possession of marijuana.

Wednesday, Nov. 12

10:25 a.m. A party cleaning out a room in Brown Hall came across gun shell casings in the trash. Officers removed three rounds from the room.

2:20 p.m. A red Diamondback Sorrento with a broken brake was reported stolen from the Southwest Mall.

10:41 p.m. A caller reported that his daughter in Kennedy Hall has received calls from an ex-boyfriend against whom she had an active restraining order. A report was taken.

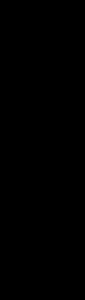
Thursday, Nov. 13

9:40 a.m. A caller reported an older male sitting on the south side of the Thompson Tower roof with his feet off the side. The Physical Plant advised that there were contractors washing the windows.

2 p.m. The Springfield Police reported recovering a vehicle reported stolen from UMass.

10:51 p.m. Following an assault and battery in Webster Hall, Katherine Franklin, 18, of 14 Cavan Crossing, Mansfield, Mass., was arrested for assault and battery and assault and battery with a dangerous weapon.

Friday, Nov. 14



1 a.m. A caller reported that there was a large party in a room in McNamara Hall and that the subjects were giving the Resident Assistants a hard time. The residents were spoken to and the Resident Assistant was advised to call the police if further problems occurred.

For the record

Correction: Because of a reporting error in yesterday's Collegian, the honors fraternity Phi Sigma Pi was incorrectly identified as a sorority in the article "Turkey trot gives food bank a lift."

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
COLLEGIAN
Is Looking For a
Bright,Talented,
Multitasking
Wizard!

Now Accepting Applications For:
'HUMAN RESOURCES MANAGER'

*Freshmen and Sophomores preferred
*Great Resume Builder
*8.5 hours per week

Applications Available in Room 113 Campus
Center Basement. Attn: Sandra Marquez
-Please Bring Resume-

SARAH LUDTKE/COLLEGIAN

Stealing 'American Hearts'

Piebald guitarist Aaron Stuart plays a sold-out show for fans this past Friday in the Student Union Ballroom. The concert, which also featured the bands Lucky Caderra, There Were Wires, and Read Yellow, was put on by University Productions and Concerts and WMUA.

The 35th Annual
GREAT UMASS SKI SALE

Thursday, November 20th 11am - 8pm
Friday, November 21st 11am - 8pm
Saturday, November 22nd 11am - 6pm

Loads of wicked good gear, wicked cheap!

Brought to you by the ... UMASS Ski 'N' Board Club
545 - 3437 | skiclub@stuaf.umass.edu
http://www.umass.edu/rso/skiclub

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

Tuesday, November 18, 2003 Editorial@dailycollegian.com

Is the Confederate flag flying for tolerance?

Presidential democratic candidate hopeful Howard Dean spoke at Dartmouth College last Tuesday about his proposed plan that would allot college students $10,000 a year in federal financial aide from his $7.1 billion program for higher education.

However, Dean was met with opposition at the campus as nine students stood silently throughout the speech with Confederate flags on their backs, protesting a comment Dean made last week. Dean incited controversy among voters and politicians alike when he said that the Democratic Party should cater toward Southerners, saying he wanted to be the candidate for the people who displayed the Confederate flag symbol in their pickup trucks.

Dean was quoted in USA Today, saying, "I regret the pain that I may have caused either to African-Americans or Southern white voters. I think [the flag] is a racist symbol but I also think the Democratic Party has to have a big tent . . . Poor white people need to vote their economic interest," Dean said.

While Dean is traveling the road toward possible presidential candidacy, even his supporters warn that the candidate had better watch his words concerning the South. So far, Dean's comments have not appeared to yield any damaging results. However, if he wishes to run for president, he must be cautious.

While Dean's comments could potentially attract a new voter pool and a new group of supporters, his words are also turning many voters away. Displaying the Confederate flag has been an issue under scrutiny for years. Representing one side of the spectrum are the Dartmouth students.

"We felt his apology was insufficient," said Xi Huang, a protester.

Some southerners, including several African-American groups, were extremely offended by Dean's remarks, viewing the comments as racist. Dean's rival, Senator Joe Lieberman of Connecticut, said Howard Dean had offended both blacks and whites in the South when he used the flag as a political symbol. He demanded that Dean admit he was wrong.

Another problem is that Dean's comments generalized people who display the Confederate flag as poor whites. This is not true, as many southerners from all socioeconomic classes display the Confederate flag as a sign of their heritage.

"I think Dean was on to something — the vast majority of people displaying [the flag] are not racist. That might be a surprise to the Democratic Party," said Ben Jones, who was quoted in USA Today as a former democratic congressman who sells Confederate flags in his Virginia tourist shop.

When it comes to the morality of flying the flag of the South, beauty is in the eye of the beholder. To many southerners, the flag was once a symbol of slavery and disunion. It is now a symbol of historic pride. Southerners are not proud of the slavery that the flag represents; rather, they are proud of their ancestors who fought and died in defense of their homes from invading armies.

Where many politicians feel that Dean has made a mistake for the democratic reputation, Dean may have caught on to a helpful campaign move in order to attract a new voter audience.

All Americans should have representation in government by their political candidates, regardless of belief or culture. This includes those who believe in displaying the symbol of the South.

In this modern age, the Confederate flag does not represent the oppression of one race by another. Rather, it memorializes the farmers and poor who fought and died for their love of the South.

The situation requires tolerance and all sides, both from politicians and the American public. The stereotypes concerning southern people and their way of life need to be left behind.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

Alternative view on abortion

Zach Oelschlegel

The partial birth abortion ban was signed by George Bush, after tons of back and forth fighting, debating and anger.

Naturally, this initiated an influx of Collegian editorials, where it seems that every day a pro-life or pro-choice article makes its way onto Page Three or Four. The pro-lifers literally scream bloody murder, and then the pro-abortionists wail back about women's rights, and everyone just ends up really angry. What makes this scene even more pitiful is that the most obvious and sensible answer to this chaos hasn't even been uttered.

The government should ban sex.

Sodomy is already illegal in some states, so why not go all the way and ban the whole thing, for heterosexuals and homosexuals? The way it seems in America today, the cons of sex far outweigh any of the pros, yet people still love to engage in drunken orgies for some sick and twisted reason.

Sodomy is already illegal in some states, so why not go all the way and ban the whole thing, for heterosexuals and homosexuals? The way it seems in America today, the cons of sex far outweigh any of the pros, yet people still love to engage in drunken orgies for some sick and twisted reason.

You read this and say, "That's outrageous! How will we procreate?"

Well, my friend, haven't you heard of a thing called artificial insemination? People can still have beautiful offspring without all the vigor and hard work of sex! Simply take a sperm specimen and an egg, put them together in a petri dish, and voila! You have an instant baby. And even better than having instant baby, this abortion mess is solved! No more of these "unwanted pregnancies" due to casual unprotected sex! No more 14-year-old moms! Syphilis, gonorrhea and herpes could be gone forever! We might have actual responsibility for our actions! And we can still have kids. Doesn't this make everybody a winner?

The biggest caveat to this idea, of course, is that people will not get that perverted pleasure from sex that they have been dreaming of since that magical age of puberty began. I say, like war, what is sex good for?

It's been proven that we cannot handle these babies and other hazards of sex, so why should we be so ballsy (pun intended) to try it anyway? Then there's the fact that there will be no more Jerry Springer, since every story on the show revolves around the romantic sex lives people conduct with their bosses, attractive family members and religious leaders.

Now we come to the simple duty of enforcing it. This will be an expensive task, but when you figure in all of the budget cuts that Massachusetts is making toward higher education, we can easily afford it. We will have the shaggin' police force. Yes, every room of every house and building will be equipped with a video camera, along with cameras on every street and sidewalk. A group of 10 officers will be present in video rooms stationed strategically near the alleyways, parking lots and airplane bathrooms (where people are most likely to be doin' the nasty), checking screen after screen of footage to make sure no one is getting their nookie on.

If someone is caught in the act, three of these officers will be dispatched to the offending area to stop the crime, outfitted with gloves and dark sunglasses in case the couple is especially grotesque. Initially, a small misdemeanor fine will be given for the first two offenses, but the third time someone is literally caught with their pants down, the "three strikes" law will be in effect and the offender will be jailed for the next 10 years for attempting to produce offspring without a license.

Lest we forget the socioeconomic pros to banning sex. For one, alcoholism rates would dive straight down, since men would cease to have the need of getting their girlfriends drunk so they will sleep with them, and men themselves would stop drinking to make their girlfriends look better.

Two, productivity in the workplace would skyrocket (reproductivity would drop drastically), since men and women wouldn't be taking any time off from work to have so-called "nooners" and "quickies." I also read that men think about sex at least once a minute on average, and outlawing the dirty deed would cause this number to be reduced significantly; hence mental output in men would be doubled at the very minimum. Just think of the theories Isaac Newton and Albert Einstein could have come up with had they not been so preoccupied with sex!

Finally, people would use their money more wisely with the banning of sex. Men wouldn't spend countless dollars on condoms and women wouldn't have to spend the occasional $300 for an abortion, nor would they have to get their birth control pill prescription filled every month. All this money saved from the sex ban could be used to pay rent, or even, God forbid, pay child support, which is usually the result of good sex (as if there was such a thing?) gone bad. No more high-tailing it to the pharmacy for that "morning after" pill.

In all seriousness, a world without sex would be the utopian society mankind has dreamed about. People would be better thinkers, better spenders, and would probably have the audacity to take some responsibility. I'm thoroughly amazed that this is the ban old George isn't passing.

Zach Oelschlegel is a Collegian columnist.

On the straight and narrow

Dan Lamothe

I don't like big corporate companies.

I don't like clothing lines like Banana Republic or Calvin Klein because they use sweatshops and they overcharge simply for the name. I hate conformists — dangers to society with their boring and lemming-like dispositions. I don't like preppies or popular culture. I don't like plastic packaging or Styrofoam. People who study law, study business, or go into investment banking make me sick to my stomach.

Television is the devil.

The United States is a tyrannical country and anyone who lives here should be ashamed of himself or herself. Big expensive cars, like SUVs and other gas-guzzlers, should be outlawed for wastefulness. I don't like the status quo. I love organic food because it's healthy. Consequently I won't eat GMO'ed food (genetically modified, for those who don't know the slang). And while we are at it, I hate jargon and conformity to language. I feel like rules are meant to be broken and people who get in the way of my unique approach to life are wrong. Yes, I said wrong, as in they've eaten too much processed food and can't function properly anymore.

I don't like paying taxes, nor do I like the government putting its nose in my private life. And I don't like Stop & Shop.

But that doesn't mean that I don't like things like you and everyone else. So for those of you out there whose ideals are as vehement and similar to mine, I want to share some of the things I enjoy — just in case you can't seem to figure out what's kosher and what's not.

I love organic food. (Did I just say that?) The health benefits are amazing, the food tastes better and it can be very cheap; I don't see why Africa and other countries with food shortages don't go organic. That's why I shop at Whole Foods, because no matter where I am in the country, I know that my food is going to be organic and that it will meet a certain standard of quality. I like that they sell good food and I like the people who shop at Whole Foods. If it's got that "Whole Foods 365" label, you can count me in. Sometimes it costs more, but I know that the quality is good.

I like Carhart, too — great brand. Like Northface, EMS and Nalgene, Carhart is reputable and its products last. Besides, lots of people wear Carhart and carry Nalgene bottles; I can be honest — it makes me feel like I fit in. We need a way to identify each other in the crowd of look-alikes that this society breeds. We need something unique and something personal. I can see the girl across the field with the Carhart jacket and the dreads and I know she might like me.

Oh, and while we are on dreads — love 'em. For so long, a short military-style haircut was the norm and those with long hair or with "different" hairstyles were seen as social deviants. Dreads are my way of saying, "I'm different, I'm unique, and you can't judge me!" And I know I was done talking about what I don't like — but if you wear your hair in that frat-boy crew cut, we all know that you are a corporate war-monger.

Russ Juskalian

You might find me uptown getting a smoothie from Bananarama. Yogurt and natural fruits are really good for you; they taste great and they're just what I need after a long day of class. A smoothie break is especially great after having to listen to some strict professor with no respect for emotional growth rattle on about marketing and gender.

If we're going to make any progress, we better be able to make sacrifices — even the ultimate sacrifice of an old friend. If you're not (100 percent) part of the solution, then you're part of the problem.

I like to work at the local organic farm. I know it doesn't pay well, but my parents help to pay for my apartment so that I can spend my college years learning about the world. What really sucks is that "The Sopranos" airs on HBO, because then I have to pay (or my parents do) for cable. Of course I get the Food Network, Comedy Central and MTV's "The Real World" — so I can kind of justify it.

I like to visit my parents in New York City. It's great that so many exciting things exist in such a small place. You can find great bookstores, food and entertainment there, and the cabs are a great way to get around. You might say that I am enamored.

The toughest part of having such valiant desires and goals is that sometimes it gets in the way of my friendships. Sure. An old friend (we'll just call him that for now) recently started becoming interested in law school and now he buys long dress coats and button-down shirts and he wears black leather shoes. He thinks that Kucinich is crazy, he loves Abercrombie, and he says that organic food might have some downsides — and I don't know what to do.

I guess the moral is that if we're going to make any progress, we better be able to make sacrifices — even the ultimate sacrifice of an old friend. If you're not (100 percent) part of the solution, then you're part of the problem.

Russ Juskalian is a Collegian columnist.

Kegerator capitalists at UMass

Dan Lamothe

When Jeff Durand and Ross Lucivero were looking for a way to start a business and make a quick buck, they turned to an old college standby.

Beer.

What the two University of Massachusetts engineering students didn't foresee, however, is all of the media attention their business, Kegs on Legs, would receive in the local media, and what that attention could mean.

Kegs on Legs was born in September as a legitimate business venture after the two experimented with an old refrigerator during the summer. Taking their engineering skills, some hoses, a drill and a CO2 tank for air pressure, they went to town. The result — their very own "kegerator" — was a hit with friends. Not long after, a business was born.

"Basically we just installed one in our house and thought it was a good idea," Durand said. "We thought, 'Hey, lets see if people want to pay for this service.'"

Since then, the duo has filed their tax paperwork at both the state and federal level to become a legitimate business, developed an E-commerce Web site (www.kegsonlegs.com) and marketing the business with the production of refrigerator magnets, among other things.

"It's something we've taken serious from the beginning," Durand said. "At some point we'd like to incorporate, most likely."

Durand and Lucivero market kegerators mainly on the merits of saving party people everywhere money. They say there are about seven cases to each keg of beer. A keg costs somewhere around $50. A case costs about $20.

Therefore, they reason, for each keg kept cold with a kegerator and consumed completely over the course of time, a customer will save about $90 to $100 — the price difference between a keg and seven cases of beer. A full kegerator that they install costs $350. They say that means after only four kegs, the device has paid for itself.

"After a couple of months, it really does give you your money back," Durand said.

Business was chugging along slowly but surely for the pair, with eight kegerators installed during the first two months of business. Then the local media got wind of it. The Daily Hampshire Gazette ran a front-page story on the group Nov. 7, and WLZX 99.3 FM's morning show followed that up with an interview of Durand and Lucivero last week.

It doesn't matter if Kegs on Legs is demonized by some of UMass' mucky-mucks in print. In fact, the more it happens, the happier the two running the service will be.

Since then, Kegs on Legs inquiries have gone through the roof. Durand says their Web site had about 2,000 hits on it per month in September and October. The numbers for November, with half of a month remaining? Twenty thousand, and counting.

The Kegs on Legs team never saw that attention coming, particularly from the media.

"We think its because the product itself has sort of a controversial edge," Durand said.

Indeed, a member of the Chancellor's Task Force on the Prevention of Alcohol Abuse at UMass criticized the service they're providing in The Gazette. He said the service they provide puts more focus on drinking than there should be in life.

Which, to Kegs on Legs, seems ridiculous.

"Nothing's ever been said directly to our face, that Kegs on Legs is a bad idea," Durand said. "I really think they are overreacting. It doesn't increase your alcohol consumption. They're [students] going to drink, no matter what. We're just making it more user-friendly."

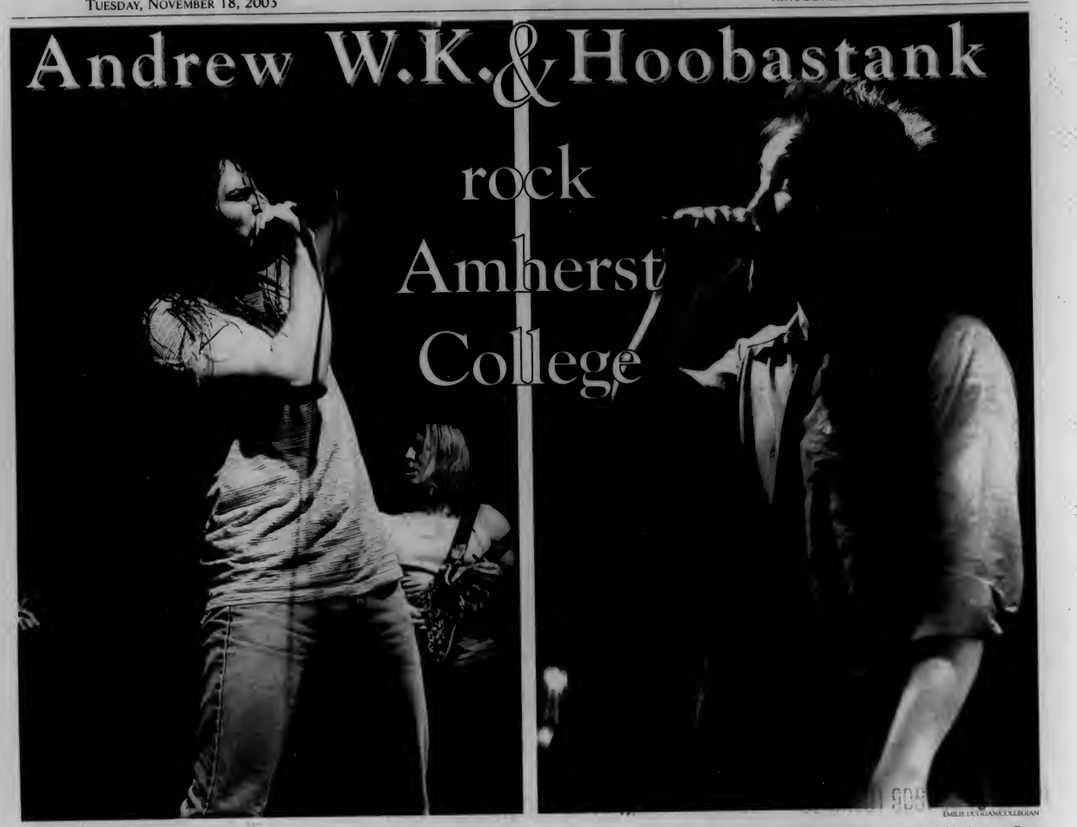
So while administrators around campus may be cringing, the pair is scrambling to meet new interest that has been generated by the press. It doesn't matter if Kegs on Legs is demonized by some of UMass' mucky-mucks in print. In fact, the more it happens, the happier the two running the service will be.

"There's no such thing as bad publicity," he said.

For now, it's business as usual. The one problem the two have been coping with lately is finding enough used refrigerators for customers who don't have one to convert, which means combing the want ads, among other things. And an increase in supply and demand can hardly qualify as a bad thing.

Durand said since the flood of inquiries began coming in, Kegs on Legs has at least three or four more job offers pending. One of those is for a restaurant interested in installing a simple three-keg draft system using kegerators. Business is looking good.

"If we do well with this, like any smart entrepreneur, we'll take the money from this and roll it over into a new venture," Durand said.



Sounds like the two might have a different calling than the engineering world, after all. God bless the American entrepreneurial spirit.

Dan Lamothe is a Collegian columnist.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 18, 2003 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

EMILIE DUGGAN/COLLEGIAN

Popular hard rock artist Andrew W.K., left, sweats out another anthem during his concert at Amherst College's Alumni Gymnasium Friday night. The second band on the bill, Hoobastank, led by frontman Doug Robb, right, is touring in anticipation of its new album, "The Reason." Die Trying, not pictured, was the opening act.

Andrew W.K., Hoobastank rock Amherst College

By Kristyn Hobbs
Collegian Correspondent

Andrew W.K., Hoobastank and Die Trying all preformed at the Alumni Gymnasium on the Amherst College campus Friday night to a crowd that barely halfway covered the basketball court.

However, that didn't stop the artists from rocking out with the same intensity that would be required to fill such a massive venue.

Die Trying was first up on stage and they dressed to kill in their rock wear despite being short one man.

Die Trying guitarist, Jack Sinamian, broke his leg jumping from stage equipment during a show on Nov. 12, and due to the severity of the break, Mike Doherty came to the band's rescue and replaced him. Doherty was a virgin to the set of songs he had never performed before Friday, but he was still able to rock out just as hard as the rest of the band.

The Sacramento-based band performed songs from its self-titled debut album. Kids of every age sang with the band in unison throughout the half-hour set.

Hoobastank took stage next, as a larger audience pushed close to the stage, creating an even more intimate setting than the quaint gymnasium provided.

Together, the boys of Hoobastank set the tone with all the favorites from their self-titled album. Not only did they satisfy the audience's thirst for recognizable lyrics and melodies but they also gave a taste of their upcoming album, "The Reason."

A small but pumped audience enjoyed antics that raved nothing shy of electric. The set was completed with blocks at the front of the stage, supplying lead singer Doug Robb with objects to jump off of and spin atop.

Andrew W.K. Hoobastank Die Trying
Amherst College
Amherst
Nov. 14

After a lengthy gap of time, Andrew W.K. rolled up to the gymnasium, and minutes later he appeared onstage stirring a spirit of chaos.

Opening with insane guitar riffs and overzealous piano playing, he reminded every member of the audience that they were at a rock concert and that they all should be dancing and partying.

After his first song, audience members were pulled onstage, creating a scene that broke down the barrier between the performer and the audience. An overwhelming energy poured from every person in the gymnasium, which overcompensated for the petite size of the audience.

Just before the last song, a security guard kicked an audience member out, just as Andrew W.K. himself jumped off stage and chased after him. Moments later he reappeared onstage obviously distressed. He then reminded security guards that he knew they were doing their jobs but they did not have to remove the audience member from the concert.

The last song was then dedicated to that audience member and Andrew W.K. finished off with "Party Hard."

■■■

Prior to the show, Hoobastank drummer Chris Hesse gave some insight into his band's new album

Continued on page 5

Dolls entertain small Blue Wall crowd

By David Fonseca
Collegian Staff

In preparation for their upcoming show at the Northampton's Iron Horse Musical Hall on Dec. 2, cabaret punk rockers the Dresden Dolls played an impromptu free show at the Blue Wall Pub in the University of Massachusetts Campus Center Friday evening.

The Dresden Dolls
Blue Wall Pub
UMass
Nov. 14

A night on which the Five College area hosted a multitude of hot-ticket shows, including Hoobastank and party rocker Andrew W.K. at Amherst College, plus pop-punk heroes Piebald in the Student Union Ballroom, the Dolls faced some stiff competition. Never ones to back down from a challenge, the Dolls played a stellar show to a small but devoted audience.

What was supposed to be a quick opening set for pop-rockers Elcodrive turned into a full hour-and-a-half set when the headliners pulled a no-show. It was no worries for the Dolls, though. The duo is accustomed to the spotlight and pulled off a set that more than proved their capability as a marquee act.

The Dolls played to a crowd of about 50 faithful fans and a handful of would-be new recruits, all of whom were willing to brave the brutally cold trek to the Blue Wall.

Taking the stage in full cabaret garb with faces painted like porcelain dolls, the Dresden Dolls loosened up the crowed by having a little bit of fun at the expense of the Blue Wall's atmosphere.

"You think this cafeteria can't rock?" lead singer Amanda Palmer implored.

"Well it can!" drummer Brian Viglione responded in full falsetto. For the rest of the night, the Dolls embarked on the task of proving Viglione right.

The set consisted of a potpourri of old favorites, numerous tracks from the band's latest self-titled album, and a few new tracks. The set began with a series of slower songs, "Missed Me," "Mrs. O." and "Good Day" — all of which displayed the songwriting capabilities of singer/pianist Palmer, but didn't exactly engage the crowd. What followed was a combination of faster tracks including "Sex Changes" and slower songs like "Delilah," a song that the Dolls rarely play in concert.

At that point it became clear that the Dolls were winning the crowd over. What followed was a Dolls classic, "Coin Operated Boy," and a medley consisting of a cover of Radiohead's "Karma Police," which segued into another crowd favorite, "Half Jack."

Sandwiched between the two tracks was a Vigilone drum solo, which showcased his virtuosity behind the kit. The Dolls slowed things down again, lulling the crowd into a false sense of security with the mesmerizing drumbeat of "Ultimate Esperanza," only to blow it away once more with the show's final song, the adrenaline pumping "Girl Anachronism."

The show's highlight came halfway through the set in the form of "Coin Operated Boy." The song best demonstrates all the characteristics that make The Dresden Dolls so unique. From its sporadic time changes reminiscent of 1930s cabaret to the ingenious lyrics, which not so ambiguously dance around the topic of artificial lovers, this song is one that only a combo like the Dresden Dolls could create. And like many Dolls songs, it gains a whole new dimension when played live. The breakdown halfway through the song where the band mimics a broken record is particularly remarkable to witness live.

As it goes with all up-and-coming bands, the true test of their mettle comes when stepping out of the comfort zone. While the Dolls may wow crowds in Boston every night, the time has come to step out and start winning new fans. Friday night's show at the Blue Wall, which to some may seem like a step down, is in fact a step in the right direction. Playing small shows and earning your lumps is what all bands who eventually get big go through. The Dolls proved Friday night that they are more than capable of doing so.

The true purpose of Friday night's show was to create a buzz for the band in preparation for the show at the Iron Horse in December. The Dolls' willingness to promote themselves by getting on the road and playing shows proves that when the band does make it big, it will have come as a result of their own talent and hard work.

Plaid's return

Warp artists release 'Spokes'

By Timothy Gabriele
Collegian Staff

COURTESY WARP RECORDS

Ed Handley and Andy Turner make up the duo, Plaid.

It's hard to review a release from England's Warp Records, having been a forerunner in many of the important electronic music movements of the past decade and a half or so. Since its foundation in 1989, Warp has consistently put out material whose artiness is often outweighed by its playfulness and vice versa.

The multi-textural layers spun out by the myriad talent have influenced the face of music itself, and electronic musicianship in particular. Any modern day electronic artists who has not been influenced by at least one Warp Record is suspect, and this critic suggests a universal boycott on said "artists" until they better acquaint themselves with the progenitors of their own namesake.

Not nearly the least of these talents is the team of Ed Handley and Andy Turner who, along with M.I.A. Warphead Ken Downie, formed Black Dog Productions in the late 1980s. When Handley and Turner decided to pardon themselves from their groundbreaking ambient dance work with Downie, they renamed themselves Plaid and put out a string of stellar material, most amply collected on their double album, "Trainer."

Plaid
'Spokes'
Warp

Having acquired the blessing of Trent Reznor's Nothing Records as a U.S. distributor, Plaid received considerable attention for their deserving late 1990s work.

"Spokes" does not function as the next logical step in the string of brilliant releases, but that does not mean that it does not contain its own strokes of genius. The problem seems to lie in the fact that "Spokes" does not seem to be stepping (or bicycling) anywhere. It basically assumes some of the territory that has already been stepped (but not overstepped) in, from Handley and Turner's Black Dog days to their most recent "Double Figure" album.

Is it right to chastise a group for sticking to a formula that works, especially when it can really work in such monumental strides as the dark symphonies that Plaid compose? Not every album has to expand the genre, per se. Yet at the same time, it seems that if bands like the multitudes in the Warp milieu were putting out albums sounding like "Trainer" all the time, it might make "Trainer" seem a little less special.

That's not to say "Spokes" will soil your old Plaid albums with more-of-the-sameness. Fans will be emerging themselves in the phantasmagoric, organic Orbital-y closer "Quick Emix" on headphones for as long as mandated by the timeless track. The hyperphonic low-end sprawl of "Crumax Rins" provides a similar transcendent experience with synthesized sounds that sound somehow more distant and more primitive than the guitars and bells they are trying to emulate. The drones of amorphous soundscapes brewing in the backdrop of the track may take several months of delicate, intimate listening to unravel completely. None of this is particularly newsworthy for those familiar with the duo's perfectionist knack for intricate processing.

What it really comes down to is whether one would choose to review a Warp record for those in the know or whether one should assume that the listener is approaching a product for which they are unaware of the persistent quality control behind its elaborate history.

For those in the know, "Spokes" is the next project from Plaid. As always, it is a fascinating work of careful and intentional design, but it is unremarkable in the larger context of a band who could not sneeze in the midst of recording a track without considering the depth that some flange and EQ on that sneeze might bring to the holistic picture of that particular track.

It doesn't matter what I say, though, because you will want to buy the album for the good stuff anyway; despite the good-to-bad ratio, Plaid's good stuff is always that good.

For those not in the know, "Spokes" is sonic genius from our knob-twiddling boys, but as a primer it may not be the best example of what they are capable of. Those looking for a "special" album may want to look toward "Rest Proof Clockwork" or "Trainer" instead.

However, "Spokes" should certainly wow those not in the know (or those who think that Aphex Twin came out of a vacuum). "Uptona" is a more tense piece whose electrobass gets so tangled sometimes that, like something off of Autechre's "LP5," the beat seems to have trouble keeping up with it. Unlike their scrambled signal worshipping peers in Autechre, though, Plaid have a delectable ear for haunting melody that saves the track from the throes of glitch-level obscurity inside an album that froths with hot spots of shimmer and beauty.

They also do not obsess themselves in spacey ambient harmonics enough to doom themselves into a frenetic mid-90s Orb imitator resurgence. For all their electronics, the textures that Plaid elicit on "Spokes" fall far out of the wired plain of modernity's tech-obsessed gadgetry. One of the biggest criticisms of the duo is their inability to let go of their steel drums, but even pondering music like the kind on "Spokes" with any number of cheesy drum machine presets sets a curdling feeling in one's stomach.

On a fidgety song like "Zeal," they come off like a cleaner, symphonic Einsturzende Neubauten. The only thing is that the raw materials Neubauten may have used for their track have not been invented yet.

Composition-wise, the godfathers of musique concrete and mainstream mainstays alike should be able to examine a track like the hopelessly pretty "B Born Droid" with the same awe and splendor that a first-time listener would. In the sphere of dance music, it rises from a whisper to showers of light onto a thousand twinkle-eyed kids on mood enhancing drugs. As a work of art, the track stands as a densely-layered, deliciously produced, well thought-out, and sparkling pinnacle of creative expression, which, for Plaid, is nothing out of the ordinary at all.

Real people and cartoons don't mix in new 'Looney Tunes'

Continued from page 4

Chairman (Steve Martin, stooping below his talents in a red wig and glasses).

As the human pawns in Dante and writer Larry Doyle's game, neither Elfman nor Fraser makes an impression, even when the amiable Fraser obliges with some self-mockery. Martin meanwhile impersonates a human impersonating a cartoon impersonating a human. But sadly, even Bugs fails to make an impression; the "wascally wabbit" is reduced to a wisecracking, carrot-chomping jester uttering his usual catchphrases. This isn't the Bugs Bunny we know and love, but a pale copy of him.

There is one sequence of bravura wit and wonder, a dexterous dance through art both classical and popular as Elmer Fudd chases Bugs and Daffy in and out of the paintings hanging in the Louvre. It's a sublime sequence capturing both the marvelous, giddy humor of the Looney Tunes and a genuine sense of art. It's more of what Dante should have brought to his Tune tale, rather than sticking with this uninspired knock-off of "Who Framed Roger Rabbit?"

COURTESY WARNER BROS.

From left to right: Daffy Duck, Jen Elfman, Brendan Fraser and Bugs Bunny star in "Looney Tunes: Back in Action."

Amherst College rocks out

EMILIE DUGGAN/COLLEGIAN

Die Trying lead singer Jassen Jensen sings to the crowd at Amherst College.

Yonder Mountain go too long at Pearl and the band's plans for the upcoming months. Hesse said that he did not have any expectations for this tour. His reasoning was that if he did not have expectations then he could not be disappointed. This tour will be in progress until Dec. 5, before their new album, "The Reason," invades stores on Dec. 9.

Continued from page 4

Hesse said that they did not have a specific method for making the album.

"One thing we don't do is write music first," he said.

Unlike other artists, they lay down the actual music and then "Doug-vocals" writes the lyrics. "The Reason" took about four or five months to record.

Hesse said this album is different than the last because it "branches out in both directions." He said that the first album was straight-up rock, while "The Reason" focuses more on the melodic aspect of the songs.

When asked about what common thread runs through the band's fans, Hesse said, "We have a lot of different fans." He said people who can appreciate the melody and the music are their typical fans.

When asked about his favorite places to play, he named a few spots, including Boston. He said that he liked Beantown because it is full of young people and it had a lot of energy.

That means the show in Amherst must have been right up his alley.

It was their fantastic originals, however, that truly moved the crowd — physically and otherwise.

"Left Me in A Hole" is a timeless, bittersweet tale of life and love: "You have your life / And I have mine / Maybe we'll meet again / Some other time."

In "Loved You Enough," heartbreak is the predominant theme: "I loved you enough to let you go, dear / I loved you enough to let it ride / I hold your little hand in mine / But your sweet love died." These proficient musicians double as excellent, if simplistic, lyricists.

This young group's only hindrance is their reluctance to leave the stage. The second set dragged toward the end when several songs followed their climactic cover of "Shantytown." As all great musicians demonstrate, holding back can be just as important as pushing forward, and these guys need to learn a little restraint.

Nevertheless, no amount of anti-climactic songs could have stopped this crowd from dancing and enjoying themselves thoroughly, which, ultimately, was the point.

COURTESY YONDERMOUNTAIN.COM

Yonder Mountain String Band kept the crowd dancing all night long at Pearl Street, most notably during a cover of Desmond Dekker's "Shantytown."

New 'Tunes' flick a lame duck

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

'Looney Tunes: Back In Action'
Directed by Joe Dante
Starring Brendan Fraser Bugs Bunny
Warner Bros.
Rated PG
90 mins.
Grade B

The Looney Tunes cartoon shorts, with their subversive, madly referential, postmodern-before-there-was-post-modern wit, were a much-needed antidote to the cuddly, cutesy geniality of the Disney animation empire.

Chuck Jones, Tex Avery and their fellow animators took an anvil to the squishy niceness of Mickey Mouse with their creation of iconic characters like the sardonic, carrot-chomping hero Bugs Bunny and his foil, the flustered, blustering egotist Daffy Duck.

Antic, rambunctious and bursting with a rollicking humor that kept a keen eye on the social, cultural and political mores of the era, the Looney Tunes were the forebears of such modern landmarks as "The Simpsons" and "South Park," and deserve better than to have their honor besmirched by a frantic, frenzied dud.

If anything, director Joe Dante at least retains the manic, anything-goes velocity of a Looney Tunes cartoon. The aptly titled "Looney Tunes: Back In Action" is as amiably lunatic as any of the shorts, but with only a quarter of the wit. The (lousy) jokes crash and collide with dizzying speed, and the movie never stops to reflect on just how unfunny it actually is. It's almost admirable how Dante ("Gremlins") at least hangs on to the frenetic pace of a Looney Tunes short, how they are often mad dashes through smirking, winking landscapes. The in-jokes and cross-references fly fast and furious, but the pile-up of pop-culture ephemera swiftly turns into sensory overload.

The James Bond films are the main take-off point for "Back in Action" and the movie rips through a host of movie references, both old ("Psycho," nearly every '50s science fiction picture) and new ("Finding Nemo," the "Mummy" movies.) The metatextual gags reach right back into the Looney universe, as seemingly every Warner Bros. 'toon character clomps on through for a fourth wall-breaking cameo (Porky Pig and Speedy Gonzalez talk about being politically incorrect; Shaggy berates Matthew Lillard for his "Scooby-Doo" performance.)

Many of the jokes may fly over the heads of little ones in the audience; even some adults may not get it when Kevin McCarthy reprises his role from the original "Invasion of the Body Snatchers."

"Looney Tunes: Back in Action" is a movie that's clever more in theory than in execution. For every joke that works (a swipe at Wal-Mart and the oft used practice of product placement), there are 15 more that fall flatter than Wile E. Coyote after a trip to the Acme catalog.

Maybe it's because the Looney Tunes patchwork insanity works better in the space of a short rather than a movie; blown up to 90 minutes, the exhausting relentlessness of it becomes wearying. But that doesn't explain why the movie stumbles as soon as it hits the ground running. It may be going fast, but it's spinning its wheels and getting nowhere.

The sub-Bond spy plot consists of Daffy being fired by WB VP of comedy Kate Haughton (Jenna Elfman), and hitting the road with security guard/wannabe stuntman DJ Drake (Brendan Fraser) to save Drake's action hero/real-life spy father (Timothy Dalton), and keep a mystical sapphire gem called the Blue Monkey from falling into the villainous clutches of the head of the Acme Corporation, Mr.

Continued on page 5

COURTESY WARNER BROS.

Brendan Fraser reads his lines to co-star Daffy Duck.

Quartet strums away in Noho

Yonder Mountain inspires audience

By Bradley Farberman
Collegian Staff

Yonder Mountain String Band
Pearl Street
Northampton
Nov. 13

Touring in support of their 2003 release, "Old Hands" (exclusively featuring the tunes of Benny Galloway), Nederland, Colo.'s Yonder Mountain String Band brought their singular brand of bluegrass to Pearl Street's ballroom last Thursday night for a celebratory evening of song and dance — especially dance.

COURTESY YONDERMOUNTAIN.COM

Colorado band Yonder Mountain String Band played the Pearl Street Ballroom Thursday night.

Among the revelers in attendance — who packed the room from wall to wall — there was barely a motionless figure to be found. Impressive, since the quartet does not include a drummer. Mandolinist Jeff Austin, bassist Ben Kaufmann, banjoist Dave Johnston and guitarist Adam Aijala kept the crowd in perpetual movement with their versatile playing and percussive approach to their instruments. On this night, however, the group was augmented by a violinist, Darol Anger.

The band's instrumental performances, however, at no time outshined their prowess as vocalists. All members of the band sing, and their four-part harmonies are as crisp and tight as the day is long. These four musicians are talented, and that fact was clear and present during their two-set throwdown in Northampton last week.

For starters, they mined some uncharted territory for a bunch of young bluegrassers. Frank Zappa's "I'm The Slime," a jazz/rock opus that includes a spoken word segment denouncing television, seems far from your average bluegrass fare. But the group pulled it off nicely, with Austin impishly snarling Zappa's lyrics: "I may be vile and pernicious / But you can't look away / I make you think I'm delicious / With the stuff that I say / I'm the best you can get / Have you guessed me yet? / I'm the slime oozing out from your TV set."

Their take on Desmond Dekker's two-chord reggae romp, "Shantytown," was another surprising turn for the boys. But when they pulled out their best island vibe for the appreciative Thursday-night crowd, they were greeted with nothing but wide smiles and dancing feet. The band also took on Willie Nelson's "Bloody Mary Morning" to the delight of the audience.

Continued on page 5

Bartenders Have More Spirit! Why not be a bartender?
BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL of AMERICA
Call TODAY! (413)747-9888

Nick's...for the morning after
63 Main Street, Amherst
Traditional & eclectic breakfast fare, featuring a Southwestern flare, Jewish favorites, & vegan items.
20% STUDENT DISCOUNT
Monday-Friday for the fall 2003 semester
Monday-Friday 6:30am-2pm
Satuday & Sunday 7am-2pm
256-4643
OCMP

GREAT Reasons to use UHS Eye Care Services
1 Savings on routine eye exams for students at UMass
2 A great place to get contact lenses
3 FREE sample start-up contact lens solutions
4 Same day replacement of disposable contact lenses, in many cases
5 Contact lenses mailed directly to your home or office
6 FREE eyeglass adjustments and one year warranty on frames
SPECIAL OFFER: 10 PERCENT STUDENT DISCOUNT ON ALL FRAMES AND EYEGLASS LENSES!*
"I invite you to use the Eye Care Services"
Frederick H. Bloom, O.D. Director, UHS Eye Care Services
* Cannot be combined with other Insurance discounts.
For appointments or questions, call 577-5244
UHS EYE CARE SERVICES

Rodriquez named AL MVP

By Ronald Blum
Associated Press

NEW YORK (AP) — Alex Rodriguez became the second player from a last-place team to win a Most Valuable Player award, beating Carlos Delgado and Jorge Posada in American League voting announced yesterday.

The Texas Rangers shortstop received 242 points in voting by the Baseball Writers' Association of America. Delgado had 210 points and Posada 194.

Showing the split among the writers, 10 players received first-place votes, one short of the record set in the 1947 NL vote and matched in the 1977 AL vote.

Rodriguez was picked first on six ballots, the fewest for an MVP winner since the New York Yankees' Yogi Berra in 1951. Delgado and Posada got five firsts each.

The only other player on a last-place team to win an MVP was the Chicago Cubs' Andre Dawson in 1987.

Rodriguez, second in the voting in 1996 and last year, was the only player picked on every ballot.

He hit .298, tied for the major league lead with 47 homers, and led the AL in runs (124) and slugging percentage (.600). He had 118 RBIs, second in the AL to Delgado's 145.

Rodriguez was in his third season with Texas, which finished last in the AL West at 71-91. He joined the Rangers after the 2000 season when Texas gave him a record $252 million, 10-year contract and has led the league in homers in all three years.

Delgado hit .302 with 42 homers for Toronto, while Posada batted .281 for the Yankees with 30 homers and 101 RBIs.

Shannon Stewart, traded from Toronto to Minnesota during the season, was fourth with three first-place votes and 140 points. Boston's David Ortiz was fifth with four firsts and 130 points.

Boston's Manny Ramirez and Nomar Garciaparra, Toronto's Vernon Wells, Oakland's Miguel Tejada and the Yankees' Jason Giambi got one first-place vote each. Tejada was last year's MVP.

Rodriguez gets a $500,000 bonus added to his $21 million salary, and Stewart gets $25,000 for finishing third.

Because he finished 10th, Seattle second baseman Bret Boone gets an automatic $250,000 raise to $8.25 million.

Courtesy Associated Press

Texas Rangers shortstop Alex Rodriquez was voted American League Most Valuable Player yesterday.

UMass to start fresh in Pre-Season NIT

Continued from page 8

rebounded in nearly every one of their contests, the Minutemen enlisted the help of the 6-foot-9 Freeman to help cure their woes, and thought they had another potential gem in 6-foot-8 Stephen Briggs before he was dismissed from the program in July.

Now it will be up to Freeman — and the player brought in to fill Briggs' roster spot, the rail-thin 6-foot-8 Lasme — to inject new life into a frontcourt that also features effective returnees Gabe Lee and Jeff Viggiano.

Freeman, an academic non-qualifier who sat out last season, has the added advantage of having spent a year observing Lappas and the program, and after a rigorous year in the weight room, now weighs in at a bruising 255 pounds and will start at power forward.

An agile big man with good back-to-the-basket skills as well as a soft touch and good ball handling ability, Freeman also has the added benefit of being left-handed, and should be a force to be reckoned with down the line for UMass both offensively and defensively, as well as on the glass.

Viggiano, a Suffield, Conn., native who was impressive in his rookie campaign with the Minutemen, returns to play the three and will be counted on heavily to continue to score in the motion offense.

A good slasher who has the potential to be a solid shooter, Viggiano still hasn't displayed the consistency with his jump shot that Lappas has hoped for, and will likely be called upon to be the teams second option, after Anderson, to shoot the 3-pointer.

His durability is without question, however, as the 6-foot-7 Viggiano played in all 29 games last season, and averaged 9.1 ppg, 3.2 rebounds per game and 2.9 assists per game after moving into the starting lineup for the final 21 contests.

Rounding out the Massachusetts frontcourt is 6-foot-9 center, Gabe Lee. Lee, a junior who also sat out his freshman campaign and can earn it back upon completing his career. Lee had a nice season in 2002-03, his first with UMass.

Also thin at only 210 pounds, Lee is a battler down low who lead the Minutemen in blocked shots (46), while ranking second in both field goal percentage (.504) and offensive rebounds (49). He must continue to rebound and defend consistently for the Minutemen, while it also remains crucial that he avoid foul trouble as the lone veteran presence at the pivot.

First off the bench up front will be Lasme, who is still considered by many to be a project, but has good leaping ability and enough athleticism down low to allow him to contribute while he learns the ropes.

He too, along with Freeman, must join Lee in staying out of foul trouble, as the Minutemen can ill afford to lose a player at already their thinnest position.

Six-foot-8 sophomore Alassane Kouyate could contribute in a limited role as well, but will likely be severely limited by a pair of bad knees, and a medical redshirt has been discussed as a possibility.

Schedule

The Minutemen will play one of their lightest schedules in recent memory this season, which kicks off tonight at 7 p.m. when they host St. Francis at the Mullins Center in the first round of the Preaseason National Invitational Tournament.

There will be a distinct New England feel at the Mullins Center this year as well, as Hartford (Nov. 24), Vermont (Dec. 2) and Maine (Dec. 23) will all make the trip to Amherst, while UMass will hit the road to face regional foes Boston College (Dec. 6), Central Connecticut State (Dec. 9) and preseason national No. 1 Connecticut (Dec. 30).

The Maroon and White will be making at least eight television appearances as well in 2003-04. Games with Tennessee (Jan. 3) and Temple (Jan. 24) will be broadcast nationally on ESPN2, while conference dates with Duquesne (Jan. 18), Dayton (Feb. 8), Xavier (Feb. 14) and Richmond (Mar. 6) will be covered locally on Atlantic 10 Television.

In addition, the Maroon and White's battle with BC will appear on NESN, while a second battle with Temple (Mar. 8) will be shown on CN8.

The Atlantic 10 portion of Massachusetts' schedule will begin on Jan. 7, when La Salle visits the Mullins Center.

Tonight's game with St. Francis marks a return to the Preseason National Invitation Tournament for UMass for the first time since 1998. Overall, it is the Minutemen's third appearance in the tournament, where they hold a 4-2 record, including a runner-up finish in 1993.

That year, UMass beat No. 1 North Carolina in overtime to advance to the final, where they lost to No. 6 Kansas.

St. Francis, out of the Northeast Conference, is coming off of a 14-16 campaign under head coach Ron Ganulin.

The Minutemen and the Terriers have never met on the basketball court.

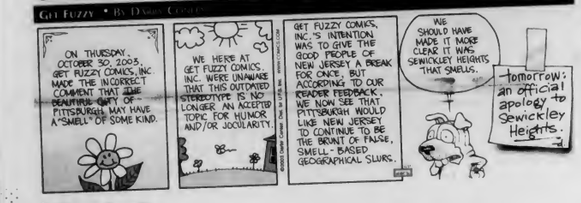
The winner of the contest will await the winner of Davidson-Texas Tech in Lubbock, Tex., which will be broadcast nationally on ESPN2 beginning at 9 p.m. Eastern time.

Tonight's winners will face off on Friday evening at 7 p.m. at the campus site of the higher seed, in a game that will also be shown on ESPN2.

sports@dailycollegian.com

Buttercup Festival • By [illegible]

That's what she said • By [illegible]

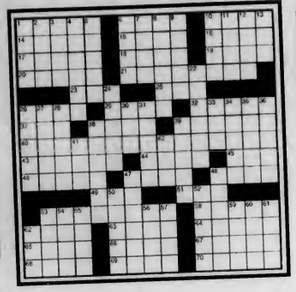


ZooMass • By [illegible]

1 in 40 Billion • By Meghann Rosario

Get Fuzzy • By Darby Conley

Quote for the Day



"There's no such thing as fun for the whole family."

-Jerry Seinfeld

Today's Crossword Puzzle

Across
1 Disagree
6 Home to Pierre
14 Rock category (hyph.)
15 Poet — Sandburg
16 Goose egg
17 Declares
18 Polar state
19 A.D. word
20 Change the clock
21 Prance
23 Move to and fro
26 Checkout ID
28 Put covers
29 FitzGerald's poet
32 Cat, informally
37 Before, to a poet
38 Iffy attempt
39 Meet, goddess
40 Psychology term (2 wds.)
43 Campaign topics
44 Smidgen of bluegrass
45 New England cape
46 Loafer
47 Scrabble word
48 Unit of resistance
49 Horrifying bird
51 "Pipe down!"
53 Locomotive
58 Lightweight quilt
62 Opera highlight
63 Nuked obituary
64 Shake awake
65 Ms. Lupino
66 Fencing weapon
67 Realize's acronym
68 Mansion clutter
69 Laura — of "Jurassic Park"
70 Skulk around

Down
1 Blacken
2 Strong emotion
3 Amazes
4 Gossip about
5 Shield, diving
6 Bird
7 Leave a mark
8 Freeway sign
9 Legendary king
10 Censor
11 Teapot
12 Egg producers
13 Hen's eggs
22 Hero
24 Backers of Rome
25 Rocker Jerry Lee
27 Notre Dame
28 Nonsensical
30 Bygone month
31 More adept
33 Equator segment
34 Mete out
35 Cleaning tool
36 Encloseures
38 Stage sets
39 Fuzzy hairdos
41 If spoiled to spring
42 Fail to keep up
47 Alpha-Omega
48 Command native
50 — out (distributed)
52 Buffalo's groups
53 Hudson Bay tribe
54 Plaids a squeak
55 Go after an ex
56 Gin joint
57 Mystic spot
59 Stand hill
60 Thai service
61 Smell terrible
62 Hoodie gear

Daily Weather Forecast

For Amherst

Tuesday
- High: 52
- Low: 41

Wednesday
- High: 61
- Low: 50

Thursday
- High: 59
- Low: 52

Dining Commons Menu

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

Lunch
- BBQ Pork Sandwich
- Chicken Pesto Pasta
- Falafel Pocket Sandwich (vegan)

Dinner
- Chicken Pot Pie
- Boston Scrod
- Native American Stew (vegan)

The Harp
Irish Pub
413-548-6900 www.theharp.net
163 Sunderland Rd.- N. Amherst
Just north of the apartments
Great new deck!
TUES. Team Pub Trivia! Win Money and Prizes
WED. Harp Reggae Night
November Special!
Labatt Blue:
$1.75 A pint / $6.25 A pitcher

Production Crew

On staff today

Night Editor
Barbara Lotto
Photo Technician
Sarah Lloyd
Copy Editor
Andrew Merritt
Production Supervisor
Dan Simmons
Production Staff
Nikolas P. Markantonatos / David Pessah

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Censorship doesn't always seem fair; unfortunately it's often necessary.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Dealing with UMass red tape is not fun at all.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Don't you just hate when your to-do list is longer than a line at Whitmore?

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Curl up in a ball and don't leave your room. The world outside sucks.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
Don't bite your lip. It will bleed.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Turn the other cheek.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
You look like Golem from "Lord of the Rings."

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
SPIRE will continue to blow for as long as the world turns.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
That super perky chick is gonna freak you out one too many times.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Don't worry. You're gonna make it after all.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Hugs will make you feel better.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Try something new today. It will look shnazzzzzzzy!

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Announcements

Auditions for thesis film Simple Machines 7pm – 10pm on 11/18 in Campus Center room 101, 11/19 Amherst College Converse Hall room 207, 11/20 Hampshire College FPH room 105 for any questions Call 559-5189

Sports Teams- Sororities- Clubs- Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with a proven CampusFundraiser 3 hour fundraising event. Our free programs make fundraising easy with no risks. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so get with the program! It works. Contact CampusFundraiser at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campus-fundraiser.com

Apartment for Rent

3 Bedroom Apartment for January 665-9254

Auto for Sale

1995 Geo Prism 4 Dr. 1.8cc 5Spd 120,000 miles Gsaloman@psych.umass.edu 546-4375 545-5949

$500!!! Police Impounds. Hondas, Chevy's, etc from $500. For listings. 1-800-319-3323 ext4554

Computers

Pentium Laptop $99.00 Free Printer with Computer purchase Call for details. Great Rates and great turn around time. We fix Laptops, Desktops/PC's guaranteed 584-8857

Employment

Winter Break Employment Barnes & Noble at Boston University Help us prepare for the upcoming semester Needed: Cashiers, Shelvers, Cutomer Service, Phones. Flexible shifts (20, 30, or 40+ hrs per week) starting December 15th – January 23rd. Store discount, conveniently located in Kenmore Sq. under the Citgo Sign on MBTA B, C, or D Green line. Meet our representatives on Dec. 2nd at the Campus Center Concourse or call our Human Resource Dept. at 617-236-7488 or E-Mail us for an application: bksbu@bncollege.com.

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

Employment

The Barn
–Shift managers
–Refrigerated warehouse
–Cashiers & stockers ($8 hr) Apply in store. Open 8am – 10pm. 95 River St. Greenfield, MA 01301 (116 to 91N to Exit 26) (413)774-5599

Internship
Motivated students seeking leadership outside the box. Gain experience in all aspects of running a small business Average pay: $9300 Call 508-246-1230

!Bartending!$ $250/day potential No experience Nesc Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext 162

For Sale

Shop Now Holiday Discounts ZOOMASSGear.com

Instruction

On the Rocks School Bartending. Become certified in one weekend. Great way to earn money. Call us toll free at 866-mix-5600. www.OTRBartending.com

Room for Rent

Sublet one bedroom for Spring On Bus Route Call: 617-893-8656

Roommate Wanted

2 Roommates needed in nice house in Belchertown for Spring 2004 $350 Rent plus Lease. 253-6779 or cgall@student.umass.edu

Services

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

Services

Stuck on a tough term paper? ThePaperExperts.com can help! Expert writers can help with editing, writing, graduate school applications. We'll help with any subject- visit us 24/7 at ThePaperExperts.com.

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

Travel

A "Reality" Spring Break 2004's Hottest Prices Book now .. Free Trips, Meals & Parties www.sunsplashtours.com or 1800-426-7710

Travel

#1 Spring Break Vacations! 110% Best Prices! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, Florida, Acapulco. Book Now & Receive Free Parties & Meals Campus Reps Wanted! 1-800-234-7007 endlesssummertours.com

Act Now! Book 11 people, get 12th trip free. Group discounts for 6+ www.springbreakdiscounts.com or 800-838-8202

SPRING BREAK
Largest selection of Destinations, including Cruises! Foam Parties, Free Drinks and Club Admissions. Rep Positions and FREE trips Available. 1-800-231-4386 www.EpicureanTours.com

Announcements

Spring Break 2004. Travel with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator to Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas and Florida. Now hiring campus reps. Call for group discounts. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com For more information contact STA Travel at 413-256-1261

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace wants your ad! Come visit the Campus Center Basement or call 545-3500 between 9a.m.-4p.m.!

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 18, 2003 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

A whole new ballgame

UMass to tip off '03-04 tonight against SFC in Pre-Season NIT

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

Call it a youth movement, an overhaul or simply year three of a long and difficult rebuilding process, but whatever you call the change the Massachusetts men's basketball team has undergone since it last took the Mullins Center court back in March, it will be there.

A year after finishing a disappointing 11-18 and bowing out of the Atlantic 10 tournament in the first round, veteran coach Steve Lappas returns for his third season on the Minutemen bench with what is essentially the first University of Massachusetts team he can truly call his own.

Following the departure of forward Raheim Lamb for UMass Lowell and the graduation of co-captains Jackie Rogers and Micah Brand, only guard Anthony Anderson, Lappas' lone captain in 2003, remains from the James "Bruiser" Flint era.

Now, with an incoming freshman class that includes guards Maurice Maxwell and Top 50 recruit Art Bowers, along with forwards Rashaun Freeman and Stephane Lasme, and a solid transfer in former Cecil (Md.) Community College standout guard Chris Chadwick, the former Villanova bench boss feels he has the beginnings of the right mix of players to run his motion offense.

Lappas still may be a year away, with a pair of big men in 6-foot-9, 215-pound Olivier Lamoureux and 6-foot-11, 325 pound Jeff Salovski already committed to UMass for 2004-05, and promising 6-foot-7 sharpshootingforward Lawrence Carrier eligible to participate next season after sitting out this year as an academic non-qualifier.

Nontheless, this year's youthful group, which includes only one senior, should see its numbers improve across the board from what was an utter disaster last season.

So while the 2002-03 Minutemen will not threaten the 1995-96 squad for most prolific in program history, they should be much improved over their most recent version.

Barring a major setback or disappointment, they have a legitimate chance to post a winning record in a watered-down schedule and, if all goes as planned for Lappas and Co., bring fans and support back to what has been a consistently empty Mullins Center.

Backcourt

While Lappas is glad to finally have a team full of his own recruits at his disposal, it will be Anderson that will be the key to this year's squad.

The 2001-02 A-10 Rookie of the Year, the Lynn native saw his scoring average jump from 10.0 points per game in 2001-02 to 11.8 ppg last season, a year in which he reached double figures 15 times and at least 20 points on five separate occasions. He needs to continue score consistently, and as one of the conference's top 3-point shooters, he must continue to connect from behind the arc, as well as play floor general for the inexperienced group.

A senior who can regain a year of eligibility if he completes his degree on time, the captain led the Maroon and White in minutes played (1,047), 3-point goals made (74), attempted (189) and percentage (.392), free throw shooting (.757), defensive rebounds (113), assists (107) and steals (38) last season, and will be called upon to do more of the same as the lone veteran presence at the guard position.

Playing alongside Anderson will be one of the more promising recruits in school history in the 6-foot-4 Bowers, who averaged 18 points per game as a senior at St. Benedict's (N.J.) Prep School.

A pure scorer who combines good driving ability with decent 3-point shooting and a deadly mid-range game, the Wilmington, Del., native has the chance to be an impact player immediately.

Lappas will rely on the Bowers, who once outscored LeBron James head-to-head, to take some of the heat off of Anderson and establish himself as a potent two-guard in the A-10 and the nation.

Behind Bowers and Anderson in the backcourt rotation will be Lappas' first-ever junior college transfer in Chadwick, and another promising true freshman in Maxwell.

Lappas hopes Chadwick, a physically solid guard at 6-foot-3, 195 pounds, is reliable and consistent enough to run his motion offense; allowing him to rest Anderson or shift him to shooting guard at times.

A decent shooter who connected on 48 percent from the field and 40 percent from behind the 3-point arc in his final season at Cecil, Chadwick should be fundamentally sound enough to fit in somewhat seamlessly at either guard position, and with either Anderson or Bowers in the lineup.

Maxwell, meanwhile, comes to Amherst from Lutheran Christian Academy in Philadelphia, Pa., and after heavily considering a commitment to Indiana University, potentially gives Lappas another quality scoring option off the bench.

A lanky 6-foot-5, 175 pounds, Maxwell is a good outside shooter who has the height and wingspan to play small forward as well as either guard position.

Likely to spend most of his time on the wing as either the two or the three, Maxwell averaged 26 points, 12 assists and five rebounds as a high school senior, and while he is still somewhat skinny for the college game, could develop into a versatile scorer and defender off the bench as well.

Guard Marcus Cox, the lone senior and a former Connecticut transfer, will likely sit out the season with an arthritic knee, and will not contribute in his final year in Amherst.

Frontcourt

A year after being out

Continued on page 6

GERALD H. LING/COLLEGIAN

New faces for the 2003-04 Minutemen include, clockwise from top left, guard Chris Chadwick, forward Rashaun Freeman, and guards Art Bowers and Maurice Maxwell. UMass opens its season tonight at 7 p.m. when it hosts St. Francis in the first round of the Preseason NIT.

GERALD H. LING/COLLEGIAN

Steve Lappas is entering his third year as coach of the Minutemen.

2003 Pre-Season National Invitation Tournament

FIRST ROUND November 17, 18	SECOND ROUND November 19,20,21	SEMIFINALS November 26	FINALS November 28
Georgia State November 17, 9:00 PM EST UTAH	November 19, ESPN 2 10:30 PM EST	7:00 PM or 9:00 PM EST	ESPN 2, 7:00 PM EST
UMKC November 17, 8:00 PM EST MINNESOTA
St. Francis (NY) November 18, 7:00 PM EST MASSACHUSETTS	November 21, ESPN 2 7:00 PM EST
Davidson November 18, ESPN 9:00 PM EST TEXAS TECH
Louisiana Lafayette November 18, ESPN 7:00 PM EST GEORGIA TECH	November 20 (TBA)	7:00 PM or 9:00 PM EST
Hofstra November 18, 7:30 PM EST MARIST
Vermont November 17, 10:05 PM EST NEVADA	November 19, ESPN 7:00 PM EST
Yale November 17, ESPN2 7:00 PM EST CONNECTICUT

The Daily Collegian

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 19, 2003 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 53

Northampton rally celebrates legalization of gay marriage

By Julie O'Donnell
Collegian Correspondent

Students rallied last night in celebration of the ruling that allows same-sex marriages in Massachusetts at Northampton's City Hall, singing 'Everything Possible' by Fred Small, emphasizing the lyrics, "some women love women, some men love men, today we're reaching the end of everything for you."

The Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court ruled yesterday that banning gay marriage is unconstitutional. Chief Justice Margaret Marshall declared that an individual's civil rights should not be taken away because he or she wants to marry someone of the same sex.

Massachusetts, which is the first state to pass same-sex marriages, ruled the ban unconstitutional on a 4-3 vote. Although there were cheers from gay couples, President Bush and Gov. Romney denounced the ruling, stating that marriage is an institution between a man and a woman.

Hundreds gathered in Northampton in a joyful celebration of the ruling and shouted, "Happy gay marriage day!"

Several people spoke at the rally, including Heidi Norton and her partner Gena Smith, who are panelists and served as a plaintiff couple for the case in Boston today. Norton and Smith were also present for the ruling.

"Celebrate tonight, but to not give up the fight because there is still a lot of work to be done. Let's keep this on the front burner and don't move back one inch!"

The two thanked supporters and shouted, "We're going to win!" Avery, Smith and Norton's young child said, "This is a very special day and I am very proud of my Mommy and Mom for helping."

Claire Higgens, Northampton town mayor, told supporters that the Pioneer Valley is a community of acceptance, concerning people who are gay, straight, rich or poor.

"We are the city of pioneers," she said. "Let's not take the easy way out."

A sign held by J. Mary Sorrell and her wife Elizabeth Anema read, "Married July 1, 2003 in Canada, legally recognized Nov. 18, 2003."

According to Ellen Story, state representative for the Pioneer Valley, if a couple was married legally somewhere outside the U.S., Massachusetts now has the legal obligation to recognize the couple as married.

Jennifer Levi, the co-council of the case, said, "We will no longer be excluded. All are protected, we all go forward in the civil rights movement, or not at all."

The University of Massachusetts Pride Alliance group also attended the rally. Dan Pomeray, the treasurer of Pride, said he was "wicked excited" but also, "very apprehensive

Continued on page 2

CHARLES KRUPA/ASSOCIATED PRESS

From left to right, gay couples Gina Smith and Heidi Norton of Northampton, and Gloria Bailey and Linda Davies of Orleans, stand together during a news conference regarding the Massacusetts Supreme Judicial Court's ruling that same-sex couples are legally entitled to wed under the state constitution in Boston yesterday.

Court approves gay marriage in the state of Massachusetts

By Jennifer Peter
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) — In the nation's most far-reaching decision of its kind, Massachusetts' highest court declared Tuesday that the state constitution guarantees gay couples the right to marry — a ruling celebrated with a popping of champagne corks and the planning of spring weddings.

"Without a doubt, this is the happiest day of our lives," said Gloria Bailey, who with her partner of 32 years was among the seven gay couples who had sued the state in 2001 for refusing to issue them marriage licenses.

In its 4-3 decision, the Supreme Judicial Court gave the Legislature six months to rewrite the state's marriage laws for the benefit of gay couples.

Although courts in other states have issued similar rulings, some legal experts said this one goes further in its emphatic language and appears to suggest that gay couples should be offered nothing less than marriage itself — and not a lesser alternative such as civil unions, which are available in Vermont.

The ruling was another milestone in a year that has seen a significant expansion of gay rights around the world, including a U.S. Supreme Court decision in June striking a Texas ban on gay sex. Canadian courts also legalized gay marriage over the summer.

"We declare that barring an individual from the protections, benefits, and obligations of civil marriage solely because that person would marry a person of the same sex violates the Massachusetts Constitution," Chief Justice Margaret Marshall wrote.

The dissenting justices argued that the court was treading on lawmakers' territory. "Today, the court has transformed its role as protector of rights into the role of creator of rights, and I respectfully dissent," Justice Francis Spina wrote.

The decision prompted complex legal questions about the next step and about when the nation's first gay marriage licenses will be issued, if ever.

Republican Gov. Mitt Romney denounced the ruling but said there is little the state could do beyond pursuing a constitutional amendment.

"I agree with 3,000 years of recorded history. I disagree with the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts," he said. "Marriage is an institution between a man and a woman ... and our constitution and laws should reflect that."

But the soonest a constitutional amendment could be put on the ballot is 2006, potentially opening a window of a few years in which gay marriage licenses could be granted.

Vermont's high court issued a similar decision in 1999 but told the Legislature that it could allow gay couples to marry or create a similar institution that confers all the rights and benefits of marriage. Lawmakers chose the second route, leading to the approval of civil unions in that state.

Continued on page 2

Certificate program created

By Nathan Chomsky-Higgins
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts' Center for Public Policy and Administration is now offering a new interdisciplinary undergraduate certificate.

This new certificate, which is open to all students regardless of major, will allow students to complement their majors with a concentration in public policy in various areas such as environmental issues and international policy.

The requirements for this certificate involve successfully completing eight courses with a B or better. Three of the courses are required, including one in economics, one overview of public policy in the form of a political science class, and a course in introductory statistics.

There is no minimum GPA needed to enroll in the certificate program. Anyone can apply before the beginning of his or her senior year, after choosing a major.

Working with a faculty advisor, students determine what other five courses best fit the area of study. Each of these courses must be at least of level 200, with three of them at level 300 or above. Also, no two courses may be from the same department, providing a diverse knowledge base in public policy.

Along with education in public policy, recipients of this certificate can receive a thorough backing in survey research, computer applications, applied statistics, technical writing and public presentations, all of which are important skills to have for a career in public policy.

Brenda Bushouse, Chief Undergraduate Certificate Advisor and political science faculty member, said "it has a potential to be ... well-rounded, as opposed to a minor, in which you take all your courses in one department."

Students will constantly work with a faculty advisor to tailor the certificate to their needs. Twenty faculty advisors from university departments such as economics, sociology, geosciences, psychology, political science, and education policy, will provide advising services.

"The strength of this is it's an interdisciplinary major," Bushouse said.

For example, one currently enrolled student is a social thought and political economy major, but is interested in labor policy and wishes to pursue a career in that area after law school. This certificate will not only provide a decoration on a transcript, but gives practical knowledge and experience in the concentration desired.

While this certificate does not create any new courses to be offered, it does allow students to take classes they would not have been able to take before if they were not a part of the major.

The CPPA formed in 1998 out of the Political Science department, offering a masters degree in public administration as well as heading research. This new certificate program is the first undergraduate offering of its kind, and has already received positive feedback.

Students have already begun to enroll in classes for next semester. To enroll, a student must choose a course of study, and then write a one-page paper on the concentration and how the five elective courses will help to meet this goal.

The eight courses taken towards the certificate's completion can also be used toward the completion of a major's requirements, or general education requirements.

Anyone interested in the new certificate in public policy and administration should contact Brenda Bushouse at ugrdcert @pubpol.umass.edu, or any of the other faculty advisors involved.

Editorial/Opinion
Page 4
A big step
Gay marriage legislation gets the ball rolling

Arts & Living
Page 5
UMass Rockers
Pitbaud, Read Yellow give solid show

Sports
Page 10
Minutemen win
Hoops bound for Lubbock

Comics/Classifieds
Page 9

Surgeon for health care system reform

By Michelle Dozois
Collegian Correspondent

Dr. Benjamin S. Carson, world-renowned neurosurgeon and philanthropist, told a packed house at Amherst College's Johnson Chapel Monday night that they must make it their job to fix the United States' "horribly wrecked" health care system.

"Your generation has got to make it clear to each other that we're all in this together. We all need to take pride in it and do everything we can to make it fair and equitable for everybody," he said.

Carson, who graduated from Yale University and the University of Michigan Medical School, is director of pediatric neurosurgery at the Johns Hopkins Medical Institution. He credits his success to his mother.

"She never felt like she was a victim" despite the hardships she faced, he said. "The problem was, she never felt sorry for us either."

Growing up in a violent Boston neighborhood, he saw people dying on the streets. "I never expected to live beyond 25," he said.

Voted the "dumbest person in the world" by his fifth-grade classmates, consistently earning zeros on quizzes, he was addicted to television as a child. Unsatisfied with his grades, his mother turned off the TV and forced Carson and his brother submit book reports to her twice a week.

"She couldn't read, but we didn't know that," he said. "If people refuse to accept your excuses, you stop making them."

Carson is president and cofounder of the Benevolent Endowment Network, which enables uninsured children in need of neurosurgery to get the care they need, as well as the Carson Scholars Fund, which recognizes youths who have distinguished themselves in academics or in humanitarian work.

Carson said that there are two ways in which health care could be fixed.

The first would be eliminating paperwork and the middleman by recording all diagnoses and procedures, which already have codes assigned to them, on computer. The money saved by doing this would be enough to insure the 44 million who are currently uninsured, he said.

The second would be creating portability, getting rid of health care plans and making health care "regulated just like utilities."

Carson has proposed his solutions to the health care problem to Congressmen, as well as to President Bush. Carson said both parties have agreed that his ideas would work, but said that there are problems.

"You have to get rid of those special interest groups," Carson said.

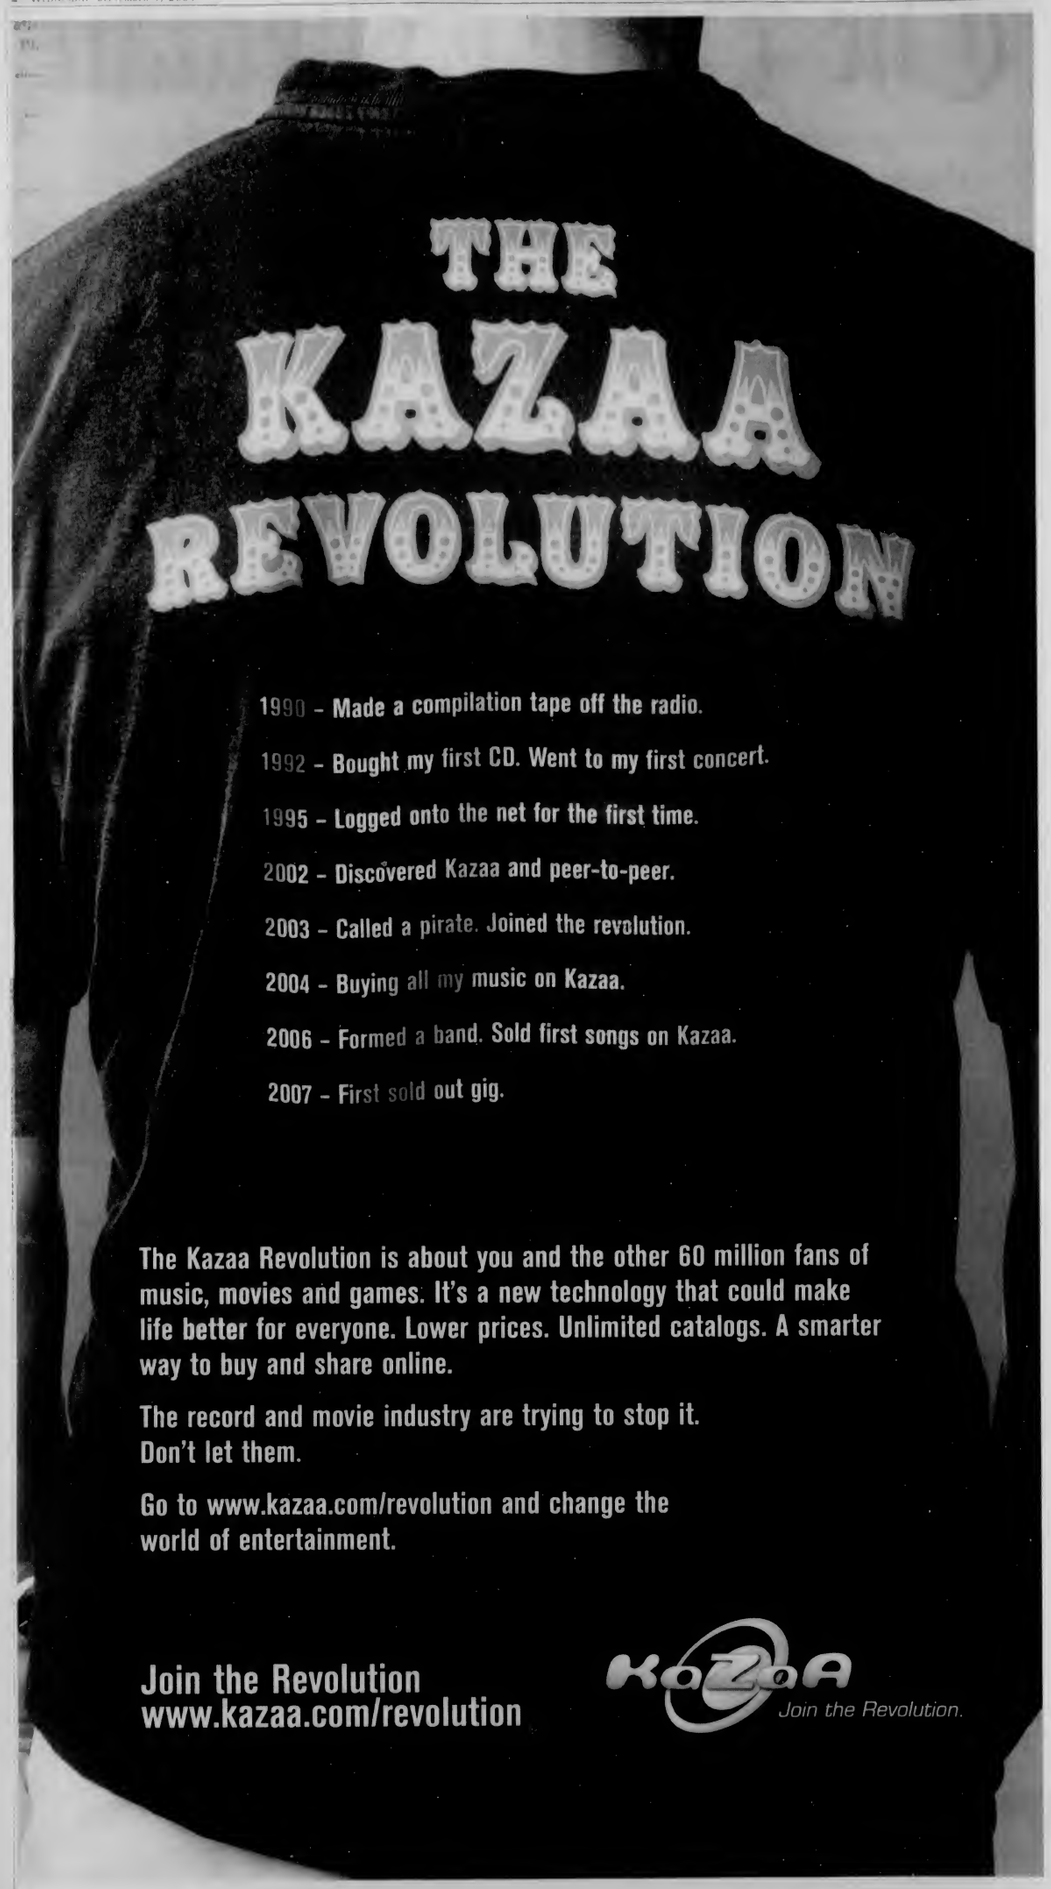
In addition to reforming our health care system, we need to reform our lifestyles.

"Most of us in the medical profession would be out of a job if everyone got enough sleep and exercise, ate three healthy meals a day and eliminated snacks, alcoholic beverages, smoking, and illicit drugs."

Carson also addressed the problem of racism, using an analogy of red and black ants at a picnic. There is plenty of food for all of the ants, he said, but they fight because they have tiny brains and can't get over the fact that they are different colors. Our brains are so much more complex, that we have no excuse, he said.

"Racism will continue to be alive and well as long as there are people with small minds."

Carson asked the members of the audience to raise their hands and promise that, for one week, all would be nice to everyone they encounter.



"What kind of world could we have if everybody thought about others first?"

The Schweinm Fund, the Willis Wood Foundation, and the Center for Religious Life at Amherst College sponsored Carson's lecture, as did Amherst College's Office of the President, Health Professions Advising, and the Biology Department.

MARGARET PETERS/COLLEGIAN

Dr. Benjamin S. Carson, director of pediatric neurosurgery at John Hopkins Medical Institute, spoke Monday at Amherst College about problems facing the U.S. health care system.

Weekly Calendar of events

Compiled by Sara-Megan Walsh

November 19 - November 24 2003

Today

UMass — Amy Stolls, Literature Specialist, will host "Writers Work" in the Commonwealth College Lounge of Goodell from 12 p.m. to 1 p.m. Stolls will share her thoughts on the role of public funding in the arts and provide practical advice for individuals seeing grants or writing tips.

UMass — Pierre DeVries from the Microsoft Corporation will speak on "Of Pennies and Packets: Politics and Business in a World of Seamless Communications" at 3:30 p.m. in room 150-151 of the Computer Science Building.

Mount Holyoke College — Sut Jhally, Professor of Communications at University of Massachusetts, will give a lecture entitled "Hijacking Catastrophe: 9/11, Fear and the Selling of American Empire" at 7 p.m. in Cleveland L2. He will speak on how he thinks the Bush administration has manipulated the 9/11 tragedy to benefit businesses.

UMass — Stonewall Center's Reel Out Film Festival will present the film "Dangerous Living: Coming Out in the Developing World" at 7 p.m. in room 65, Bartlett. The Reel Film Festival will continue on through Sunday with various film showings each day. For more information and a full schedule, visit www.umass.edu/stonewall/ eventservices.

Tomorrow

Amherst College — Richard Moran, the Brian D. Young Professor of Philosophy and chair of the psychology department at Harvard University will give the lecture "Being Told and Being Believed." The lecture begins at 4:30 p.m. in Fayerewather 115, Pruyne Lecture Hall.

UMass — At 6:30 p.m., Arjun Riana will perform "Kathakali Concert: A Terrible Beauty Is Born" in the Campus Center auditorium. Kathakali is a classical dance-drama art that uses costumes and make-up in accompaniment to drums and vocalists, depicting characters from religious epics originating in Kerala, India during the 17th century. Tickets cost $5 for students, $8 for the general public.

Hampshire College — At 7 p.m., the film "Floating Life" by Clara Law will show in the West Lecture Hall of Franklin Patterson Hall. The film chronicles the journey of a Chinese family through different cultural aspects emphasizing the ambivalence of migration. The film showing is sponsored by the Global Migrations Program at Hampshire College.

Friday 21

Mount Holyoke College — Vanessa James, chair of the department of theatre arts, will hold a book signing and lecture for her recent publication "The Genealogy of Greek Mythology" at 7 p.m. in Rooke Theatre. A copy of the book can be obtained through Odyssey Bookshop at 534-7307.

Smith College — At 7:30 p.m., The Folger Concert will perform "Illuminations" at Helen Hills Chapel. Illuminations is from the 13th century Iberian piece from the Cantigas de Santa Maria of Alfonson II Sabio and will be performed with images to create story by comic book like effect.

Smith College — Beat Surrender, the WOZQ dance party, will take place at the Smith College Field House, off West Street from 10 p.m. to 1 a.m. The event is free and features DJ Jovanana, DJ Justin and Shirley Beans.

Saturday 22

Mount Holyoke College — Vanessa James, chair of the department of theatre arts, will hold a book signing and lecture for her recent publication "The Genealogy of Greek Mythology" at 7 p.m. in Rooke Theatre. A copy of the book can be obtained through Odyssey Bookshop at 534-7307.

Smith College — At 7:30 p.m., The Folger Concert will perform "Illuminations" at Helen Hills Chapel. Illuminations is from the 13th century Iberian piece from the Cantigas de Santa Maria of Alfonson II Sabio and will be performed with images to create story by comic book like effect.

Smith College — Beat Surrender, the WOZQ dance party, will take place at the Smith College Field House, off West Street from 10 p.m. to 1 a.m. The event is free and features DJ Jovanana, DJ Justin and Shirley Beans.

Monday 24

Hampshire College — Rogaia Abusharaf, Fellow at the Carr Center for Human Rights at Harvard University, will hold the lecture, "We Have Supped So Deep of Horrors: Understanding Colonialist Emotionality and British Responses to Female Infibulation in Northern Sudan" from 12 p.m. to 1:30 p.m. in Red Barn. The lecture will discuss the aesthetic and affective dimensions of female circumcision.

Amherst College — At 8 p.m., Musicordia will host Autumn Fest in Buckley Recital Hall. Autumn Fest is their annual student scholarship fundraiser for American and International students attending Musicordia Chamber Music Institute. Admission to the concert costs $10 for students, $25 for adults.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Jennifer Eastwood
Managing Editor Dan Lamothe
Business Manager Peter Foundas
Production Manager Scott Pihl
Night Supervisor Nick Mackantonatos
Advertising Manager Sean Costello
Editorial Production Shannon Farrington
Arts & Living Editor Glen Straub
Comics Editor Molly Eggleston
Editorial Editor Paige Crum
News Editor Ferron Salniker
Photo Editor Gerald H. Ling
Sports Editor Andrew Merritt
Circulation Manager Kristen Weier
Classified Advertising Marty Pappas
Distribution Manager Julie Beauchamp
Family Manager Greg Stamm
Human Resource Sandra Marquez
Special Issues Betsy Feldman
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising David Bor
Assistant Business Jaclynn Sorenson
Assistant Distribution Mark Lagatic
Assistant Family Richard Pacheco
Advertising Production Liza Lynch
Graphics Advisor Charlie Higgins
Layout Manager Lindsey Clark
Asst. Arts & Living Meghan Healy
Asst. Arts & Living Cameron J. Woods
Assistant Editorial Matthew Reid
Assistant News Erika Lovley
Assistant News Morris Singer
Assistant Photo Emilie Duggan
Assistant Sports Mike Marzelli
Assistant Sports Robert McGovern

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Adsit Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967. The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Gay marriage is legalized

Continued from page 1

The Massachusetts decision makes no mention of such an alternative, and instead points to a recent decision in Canada that changed the common-law definition of marriage to include same-sex couples and led to marriage licenses being issued there.

The state "has failed to identify any constitutionally adequate reason for denying civil marriage to same-sex couples," the court wrote, adding that denying gays the right to marry deprives them "of membership in one of our community's most rewarding and cherished institutions."

Still, legal experts pointed out that the wording leaves it unclear whether the court would accept an alternative to marriage.

"It's poorly drafted in that they are going to create all of this controversy about what they meant," said Paul Martinek, editor of Lawyers Weekly USA.

The Human Rights Campaign, a national gay rights organization, said that the Massachusetts decision goes beyond Vermont by saying that it is unconstitutional to bar gay couples from the institution of marriage, and not just the accompanying benefits — such as hospital visitation and inheritance rights.

The federal government and 37 states have adopted laws defining marriage as a union between a man and a woman — assuring legal battles over whether gay marriages performed here will be recognized outside the state.

In the 1990s, Hawaii's Supreme Court ruled that a ban on gay marriage might be unconstitutional, but state lawmakers amended the constitution before same-sex weddings were allowed. Similarly, a trial court in Alaska ruled in favor of same-sex marriages, but the Legislature amended the constitution to ban them.

Without any pressure from a court, California's Legislature passed a law signed by Gov. Gray Davis this summer that avoided using the term "marriage" but granted gay couples who register as domestic partners most of the rights and responsibilities of spouses.

Massachusetts Rep. Barney Frank, who is openly gay, said the decision "will enhance the lives of probably thousands, maybe tens of thousands, of Massachusetts citizens, and will have no negative effects on anyone else."

House Speaker Thomas Finneran, a Boston Democrat opposed to gay marriages, said he would reserve comment on the decision until after reviewing it. Finneran is perhaps the most powerful politician in the state, and he could set the course for the debate.

Rally attracts gay supporters

Continued from page 1

about what's going to happen." He was concerned about the comments by Gov. Mitt Romney and felt that anything could happen.

"This is a step in the right direction and we need to continue with that momentum now and certainly not go backwards."

Vice president Lyndsy Belliveau-Byam was also concerned about Gov. Romney vetoing the ruling, but was overall excited. Julie Callan, a Pride member, was surprised at the ruling because of the recent political backlash by Gov. Romney and President Bush.

"I am expecting something bad to happen. It's too good to be true."

Pride president Emily Rimmer agreed that this is the first time that any member of Pride has seen a positive rally about the rights of gays and lesbians.

Many at the rally rejoiced at the moment but knew that there was a strenuous battle ahead to actually win the larger conflict. Applause broke out in UMass classrooms yesterday, but there are 180 days left for the legislature to enforce this ruling.

Local high school Gay Straight Alliance groups also rallied and gave thanks to the previous generation of gays for making it easier for them to come out of the closet.

"Keep up the good work," shouted Aimee Fisher, 15, from the Pioneer Valley Performing Arts School. Northampton High School GSA president Mairi Maltz said that she has received a lot of support and will continue to work for gay rights.

Unlike Vermont, which is the only other state that recognizes same-sex partnership, Massachusetts will have to recognize same-sex marriage, rather than civil unions, which are accepted in Vermont.

www.dailycollegian.com

The 35th Annual
GREAT UMASS SKI SALE

Thursday, November 20th 11am - 8pm
Friday, November 21st 11am - 8pm
Saturday, November 22nd 11am - 6pm

Loads of wicked good gear, wicked cheap!

Brought to you by the ... UMASS Ski 'N' Board Club
545 - 3437 | skiclub@stuaf.umass.edu
http://www.umass.edu/rso/skiclub

Fire memorial debated among families

By Brooke Donald
Associated Press

WEST WARWICK, R.I. (AP) — The site of The Station nightclub fire has become a source of contention as families of victims and survivors debate what a memorial will look like, whom it will memorialize, and who will oversee its planning.

Benches, a grassy area, a granite slab or a small building with mementoes of each victim are all ideas that have been tossed around between families and survivors.

Many survivors want to be included in any plaque erected at the site. But victims' families say any display should only include the names of the 100 people who died in the Feb. 20 fire.

"In all of those discussions, it happened to dawn on me you have various factions wanting various things," said Leo Wells, whose friend was severely burned.

Wells wants to poll families of victims and survivors for ideas for a memorial. "Let them decide what they want," he said.

The site on a commercial strip in West Warwick is owned by Triton Realty Inc., which has said it's willing to donate the land for a memorial. But because Triton is being sued by fire survivors and victims' families, that transaction has been put on hold.

If Triton is held partly responsible for the deadly fire, the property could be part of any damages awarded.

The president of the West Warwick Town Council, Jeanne Marie DiMasi, said a donor has agreed to put the value of the land in a special escrow account. That way, if the fire plaintiffs prevailed against Triton, the value of the land would still be available to them.

"But the big question is who is that donor?" said Thomas Cahir, president of The Station Memorial Foundation, formed to build a memorial at the site.

DiMasi hasn't disclosed the donor's name, saying House Speaker William Murphy arranged it. Calls to Murphy's office weren't returned.

Cahir said some people affected by the fire are worried the donor is connected to the town or to the 1980s rock band Great White, whose pyrotechnics sparked the fire.

"There's enough blame to go around in this fire," said Paul Bertolo, 45, of Brockton, Mass. He dove out a window to escape the inferno.

"They've got to get that land set free from any one person."

Now live and online!
Online Certificate of Business Studies

Offered by the Division of Continuing Education with the Isenberg School of Management

The certificate program is a credit-based program and is intended for students who want to broaden their academic background with business courses without completing a BBA. The program is delivered online and live allowing for the courses to be taken and completed anytime and anywhere. The program consists of five credit-bearing courses which are as follows: Introduction to Business, Introduction to Accounting I, Corporation Finance, Fundamentals of Marketing, and Principles of Management.

Courses offered this Winter Session 2004:

ACCOUNTING 221
Introduction to Accounting I (live and online)

FINANCE AND OPERATIONS MANAGEMENT 301
Corporation Finance (live and online)

MANAGEMENT 301
Principles of Management (live)

MARKETING 301
Fundamentals of Marketing (online)

SCHOOL OF MANAGEMENT 197 I
ST: Introduction to Business (online)

For more information contact the Division of Continuing Education, 545-3430. To register go to www.umass.edu/contined or the Division of Continuing Education Registration Office, 358 N. Pleasant St.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 19, 2003 EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Bay State makes move toward gay marriage

Massachusetts, supposedly one of the more liberal states in the country, is finally beginning to follow in the footsteps of its neighbor, Vermont. Yesterday, the Massachusetts Supreme Court ruled that the commonwealth's current practices regarding same sex marriage are unconstitutional and allotted Congress six months to come up with acceptable changes. This ruling is a huge step for homosexuals across in the country in their fight for equal rights.

Vermont is currently alone in its decision to allow homosexual marriage, which it refers to as a civil union. California, however, has also taken steps toward this end, using a "domestic partnership law" to allow same-sex couples many of the legal privileges of an actual marriage. Now, Massachusetts has joined the ranks of these two revolutionary states in what will hopefully be an effort to correct this injustice all across the country.

It remains to be seen what the Massachusetts government will do about the court's ruling. They have six months to devise a plan for fairer practices, and the governor himself has declared that he will consider alternative options, but that he believes only in marriage in the traditional sense.

"Of course we must provide basic civil rights and appropriate benefits to nontraditional couples," he said, "but marriage is a special institution that should be reserved for a man and a woman." Perhaps what Romney will be seeking is an arrangement much like the one California has recently put in place. It may not be quite what some couples are hoping for, but it would still be a huge improvement on what the state currently offers.

Romney is not the only one who is opposed to the idea of same-sex marriage. Surveys have shown that a majority of the American public is also against it. But it is not likely that the courts would take something like public opinion into consideration. As Elizabeth Birch, director of the gay rights organization Human Rights Campaign, pointed out, it is not the job of a court to do what is popular.

"If not for courts, African-Americans would not have had the right to vote, women would not have the right to vote," she said. "The purpose of a constitution is to protect a minority group from the wrath of the majority."

She makes a valid point, and one can only hope that this ruling will stick despite the narrow 4-3 margin with which it passed.

We at the Massachusetts Daily Collegian think that it is about time the officials of this state began living up to their liberal reputation. If injustices are going to be corrected in this country, it will have to start at the state level, and we are proud to be part of one of the few states that realizes this. Many more may follow in our footsteps, but Massachusetts will still be remembered as one of the first to stand up and demand that all its citizens be treated equally. Whatever solution the government comes up with, we feel certain that yesterday's court ruling can only lead to positive changes in Massachusetts.

Information from cnn.com was used in this article.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

The religious wrong

Thomas Naughton

Perhaps my schism with religion began one windy night in September 1998 when I was kicked out of CCD for cackling like a hyena at an anti-abortion speech that my entire CCD class was forced to attend. Perhaps it was New Years 2000 when Alex Krofta and I were dared to make out, the first time I ever kissed a guy, the moment I realized I was gay. Maybe it was afterward when I realized that the religion I had been brought up in viewed my love as "evil." Perhaps my anger felt vindicated when I read about Sinead O'Connor ripping up a picture of the Pope on national television.

I'm not sure exactly when I realized that the "love" that religion supposedly fosters in the world is actually hollow, bigoted, marketed, hypocritical, sexist, homophobic and strangling.

I'm not sure exactly when I realized that the "love" that religion supposedly fosters in the world is actually hollow, bigoted, marketed, hypocritical, sexist, homophobic and strangling.

The war that is in our midst today is a war fought over religion: "My god vs. your god." Neither religion is right; neither is glorious. Neither side of followers is more worthy of going to whatever "heaven" is supposedly prescribed in centuries-old texts that the blind followers adhere to with frightening relentlessness.

I wanted to vomit last week when I saw pictures of our evangelical president and his old fat-faced fellow politicians smiling while looking on at the aforementioned "man of God" as he signed documents that control organs that don't belong to his gender.

The look in those men's eyes as they smiled was eerie and strange, as though they thought they were carrying out the will of God. Fine, ban whatever form of abortion you want for whichever deity you choose. The ones with the fetus inside of them, no matter what you do will always have the final choice, whether afforded by law or not.

We as a campus learned that lesson two years ago in the form of a dead infant left in a trash dispenser in a dorm. Is that not a kind of abortion? You can jail these women, take away their rights, but then you will just be rescuing them from what they wholeheartedly wished to be saved from: unwanted, unprepared parenthood. The slain children and the mothers killed by secret, unsafe abortions are victims of religious violence.

My only sister's salary is paid by a church of child rapists. Her job is teaching theology at a Catholic high school. The scandal-hiding, child molester-enabling Catholic church pays my sister to teach teens that people like me are sinners who God hates and will damn to hell. My sister is forced to place religious violence on me because of her employer's literal belief in a centuries-old text that has been pilfered, slanted, perverted, distorted and shamed. It hurts her heart that I cannot find myself safe within the church that we grew up in. It hurts my heart that she could believe in men that abuse children, that she could believe in the word of God said through the mouths of men who forced intercourse on young boys and girls. It hurts my heart that she could believe in a church that includes me in an afterlife with mortal sinners because of the sex of my lover.

Why must we, as a society, be motivated by religion? Some readers will contend that our country began as a faith-based nation, that our reason for colonization was religious freedom. However, during that time, as in the dark and middle ages, religion was used as a way of controlling the people who believed without question that their actions would be judged stringently by God.

Religion has faded into the background in the modern day when compared to the fervor of the past, but it remains a motivator, instigator, separator and miseducator of the people. Our wars are still fought over religion. We still uphold religious monarchs like the Pope. I don't believe for one second that whatever higher power up there or anywhere talks to that old man, he is not a representative of God in the flesh. He is a figurehead of the oldest monarchy in history.

You will ask: If not God, if not religion, what will we have to believe in? To answer that question will be the most political, social and spiritual act of revolution that history will ever see. Start searching now.

Thomas Naughton is a Collegian columnist.

Interpreting the SJC

Well it's about time! The Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court became the nation's first state supreme court to rule that same-sex couples have the legal right to marry. This is huge! Massachusetts has set a precedent on which to wage the battle for equal marriage rights.

S.J. Port

Yesterday, ye Old Massachusetts, that bastion of puritanical unadmitted conservatism, spoke up for civil rights. Amidst enormous national and international debates, and potent protest, the SJC acted not in the name of the "good of the Commonwealth" but through the governing document that we use to define our state and our law — and thus our society.

Long past its set internal deadline for a decision, July 14, the SJC confirmed in its findings: "We declare that barring an individual from the protections, benefits and obligations of civil marriage solely because that person would marry a person of the same sex violates the Massachusetts constitution."

The SJC did not decide for the people of the Commonwealth that gay marriage is indeed acceptable: the SJC did do its job as interpreters of the constitution — to decide whether Massachusetts constitutional law did or did not define marriage as the civil union between one man and one woman. After eight months of consideration and conversation about the precise meaning or lack of meaning behind the Constitution's language, the SJC came to the carefully made decision that in fact the language did not define marriage as anything more than a civil union between two people. It does not say that these two people must be of opposite sexes.

The SJC, the supreme authority on the Massachusetts Constitution, agreed in March to hear the case Goodridge vs. Massachusetts Department of Public Health. Even to take on the case was a brave move by the SJC: the subject is explosive and yet undecided by many other states. Regardless of which way the Mass. SJC decided, its ruling would have serious consequences for not only the Commonwealth but also for the rest of the nation.

The case involved seven homosexual couples living in the Commonwealth who had been denied the right to file for a marriage license in Massachusetts. After being refused the right, the couples sued Mass. DPH claiming that the Massachusetts constitution (the oldest written constitution in the world) did not define marriage as being a union between one man and one woman.

Suffolk Superior Court Judge Thomas E. Connolly threw out the case in May 2002 before even going to trial, according to the Boston Globe. Connolly ruled at the hearing that the state constitution did not explicitly give same-sex couples the right to marry, and that the greatest purpose of marriage was to procreate — which same-sex couples, he said, could not contribute to.

Of course, in the late 1990s, Massachusetts law had already been changed to give homosexuals the right to adopt. This right allows homosexuals to raise other people's children, but not to marry — a situation about as backward as George Bush and his offensive Defense of Marriage Act.

By not granting homosexuals the right to marry, the state classified homosexuals as second-class citizens. The SJC's ruling holds promises of equal rights and benefits for gay partners and their families.

The state is not the church, despite much confusion over this issue: religion has no place in government, and government has no place in religion. What the defendants of Goodridge vs. the Mass. DPH were asking for was not the right to marry under the eyes of God, or any religious church, but the right — as equal and respected citizens to marry in the name of the law.

However, although the SJC's decision is monumental, much more must happen before same-sex couples are granted rights equal to those given to heterosexual couples. The SJC wrote into its decision that the ruling will not take effect for 180 days in order to allow the legislature "to take such action as it may deem appropriate in light of this opinion."

In essence the legislature now has been given a window of time in which to craft a roadblock for same-sex marriage. The problem the legislature and opponents of same-sex marriage face is that the only way now, following the SJC's ruling, to prohibit same-sex marriage in Massachusetts is to propose and pass an amendment to the state's Constitution, which would have to be supported by a citizen vote.

One more twist of interest is that the legislature is currently in a two-year session and therefore would not be able to pass this amendment until 2006. In the meantime once the SJC's ruling goes into effect in 180 days (mid-year 2004) gay couples in Massachusetts will have the right to marry. But then if the amendment passes this right could again be removed. What an interesting experiment the SJC has set up with same-sex couples of the Commonwealth as the lab rats.

Furthermore, the same-sex marriage licenses from Massachusetts will not be respected by other states, or by the federal government. For homosexual couples to truly attain the equality they innately deserve as citizens the federal government must decide to support the right to marry, regardless of sexual orientation. The Massachusetts SJC's decision is the first major step in this battle and sets the stage for same-sex couples in other states to demand equal rights from their state as well, and eventually the federal government.

S.J. Port is a Collegian columnist.

Neglected battlefield

Yousef Munayyer

As the American death toll continues to rise in Iraq, and the news of these deaths dominates the American press, it is easy to understand why we are focused on Iraq.

With all the rhetoric about the "war on terror," Iraq is the battlefield that takes center stage. There is, however, another battlefield in the "war on terror" that deserves to be looked at — Saudi Arabia.

The vast desert nation is larger than Iraq geographically, however, the population is very small for its size. Roughly 25 million people live in Saudi Arabia, 5.5 percent of which are not Saudi nationals.

The nation has within its borders Islam's two holiest cities: Mecca and Medina. It is the nation of origin of Osama bin Laden and 15 of the 19 Sept. 11 hijackers. It is also one of the America's staunchest Arab allies.

Saudi Arabia has experienced terrorism for many years now. The Khobar tower bombings and several other bombings that have targeted compounds in Riyadh have left many dead and even more wounded. Saudi Arabia is one of the premier battlegrounds in the "war on terror" and this is something to keep an eye on.

Saudi Arabia has always maintained pretty strong ties with the United States. It sided with the U.S. in the first Gulf War, and its soil was home to American bases for much of the last 15 years.

Terror in Saudi Arabia has to be a concern for Saudis and Americans alike. You may be wondering why America should care about terror in Saudi Arabia. Well, some will tell you that we need to aid them in the global war on terror. If you really want to fall for that rosy ideological nonsense, you are going to be taken for a ride.

The reason the United States needs to be concerned about terror in Saudi Arabia is the same reason why it is concerned about anything that happens in the Middle East: oil. The Middle East, vis-à-vis American foreign policy, would be nothing but a sandy wasteland were it not been for that magic black gold. All that rhetoric about spreading democracy, values and freedom is simply talk. Some of America's best friends are Gulf monarchs. Let's not kid ourselves. What strategic interest does America have in the Middle East other than securing resources? The future of Saudi Arabia and its domestic terror issues directly falls into this category.

The terrorism that is happening in Saudi Arabia is a direct challenge to the Saudi monarchy. The princes have said they would respond to this with an "iron fist." The attacks have targeted westerners in some of Riyadh's compounds but have also targeted non-Saudi Arabs. Most recently, a plot and weapons cache was uncovered in Mecca.

The changing faces of the targets of these attacks can mean a few things.

First, it could mean the terror networks are getting desperate. But one has to be pretty desperate to turn to terrorism in the first place.

Second, targeting non-Saudi Arabs will cause bin Laden to lose many supporters. This may end up happening, but will most likely not affect the tight terror network.

Third, and most certainly, these attacks most definitely mean Saudi Arabia is becoming more unstable.

A stable Saudi Arabia is necessary for American interests. If the terror attacks continue, the Saudi monarchy is in trouble. The downfall of the Saudi monarchy — a goal of bin Laden which he constantly preaches — could lead to a catastrophic domino effect across the oil-rich Gulf region.

All this becomes increasingly more likely with every terror attack. Though the monarchy has a special guard to protect it from insurgencies, enough public pressure can bring down any regime. Saudi Arabia, which vies for leadership of the Arab world with other nations, has been criticized for its relations with the United States.

It has also been criticized for not stepping up its role in the conflict between Israelis and Palestinians. This conflict is the single most common issue of concern that is common among almost all Arabs. The Saudi monarchy's policy does not accurately reflect the sentiment of its people, because of its close ties with Israel's greatest ally, and this can get the monarchy in trouble.

To put this into a historical perspective, the conditions that exist in Saudi Arabia today are very similar to pre-revolutionary Iran. Both are oil-rich nations. Both have repressive governments. Both have disproportionate numbers of youth in the population (40 percent of Saudi Arabia's population is 14 or younger). Both share high birth rates. Both societies are extremely divided economically, and most importantly, both societies have leaders that are or were very pro-western with complete disregard for popular opinion.

As the Intifada continues to go on, and as the terror attacks continue, Saudi Arabia's relationship with the West will look increasingly worse. In recent history, leaders in the Middle East who have been seen as far too pro-America have paid the price. Anwar Sadat, president of Egypt, was assassinated by fundamentalist Muslims after signing peace with Israel and being to friendly with the U.S.A. The Shah of Iran was deposed in a revolution preached by Islamic clerics after years of pro-western policies shunned by his people.

Now Saudi Arabia faces the same test. Its population becomes more anti-Israeli and anti-American with every news clip about Palestinian and Iraqi deaths. The monarchy is being challenged by radical Islamist terrorists and has yet to find a solution for this.

Only time will tell what will happen in Saudi Arabia. The United States needs not only consider the public opinion of Americans, but also to analyze and understand the public opinion of foreign nations they are dealing with. In the meantime the United States has to be very cautious and conscience of the situation in that Saudi Arabia. Oil in the Gulf is simply far too important for us not to be.

Yousef Munayyer is a Collegian columnist.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 19, 2003 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

A background on PBA ban

Sex-iversity is a question and answer column designed to provide important information and answers to questions regarding sex, sexuality, sexual orientation, sexually transmitted infections and reproductive rights. Voiced by Julia Kristan, a member of Voices for Planned Parenthood branch at the University of Massachusetts and an active volunteer for the Everywoman's Center on campus, the column is intended to help educate the university community about reproductive health, rights, legislation and responsibilities. Much of the statistical information provided in this column derives from research done through and obtained by Planned Parenthood and its national affiliates.

Sex-iversity

Julia Kristan

Q. What did the Partial Birth Abortion Ban signed into law recently do?

A. The Partial Birth Abortion Ban Act of 2003, signed into law on Nov. 5 of this year, prohibits the medical practice of dilation and extraction. Bear in mind the term "partial birth abortion" itself is not a legitimate name of the medical procedure. The medical term is "intact dilation and extraction." The procedure is rarely used, and quite a difficult choice to make if one's health is in danger. This procedure is used primarily in the third trimester of pregnancy if and when a woman's life is in danger or in other cases when the fetus is dead. While the language of the legal document maintains, "a partial birth abortion is never necessary to preserve the health of a woman," many other sources, including the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, give information that there are cases where the procedure is necessary.

While the dilation and extraction procedure is rarely used (it was used in less than 2 percent of abortions in 2000), it has created a tidal wave of activity and debate over women's rights, the right to life, and Roe v. Wade. Thirty years ago, abortions were deemed legal under Roe. v. Wade, giving women another option for their health and well being regarding childbearing. This act is an attack on the foundation of the Constitutional right to choose certain medical treatment. It has no health exception to protect women. Period. Not in rape, not in incest, not when the woman's life is at risk.

Dilation and extraction is undoubtedly a tremendously difficult and possibly traumatic experience to go through, one, which I believe no woman, would ever opt to have. When a woman does need such a medical procedure, it is after much thought and consideration of the risks, and for a serious reason. This law seems to have put no thought and consideration to the health of women in the situations requiring a dilation and extraction. This law infringes on women's right to privacy, as well

Continued on page 7

UMass not a school of rock

Onslaught of bands give performance that staggers but doesn't fall

By Brendan Lee
Collegian Staff

Over the past two decades, the overpopulated University of Massachusetts campus has produced a handful of prolific bands (most notably The Pixies and Bane), leaving the local college rock scene in the capable hands of the artier siblings at Smith and Hampshire.

Piebald, Read Yellow
Student Union Ballroom
UMass
Nov. 14

Unfortunately, the only times the student body gathers in the name of music is for sundry performances at the Mullins Center and the annually uninspiring Spring Concert.

For the first time in years, it's safe to say that the kids are alright in Amherst.

In fact, the scene at Friday's WMUA/UPC-sponsored Piebald show in the Student Union Ballroom closely approximated the look and feel of a successfully promoted and well-attended event. There was a "business-as-usual" feel to the whole night: legions of teenagers in thrift store t-shirts, well-dressed mods, a smattering of hardcore punks, book-reading emo kids, and even some unaffiliated attendees.

Although they didn't disappoint, co-headliner Piebald turned in a short set that leaned on the latest entry in the band's catalog "We Are The Only Friends We Have." From their humble beginnings as a hardcore unit in the Merrimack Valley, Piebald has grown through changes in style, local scenes and band membership to become an enduring favorite of the New England rock community.

The Piebald (Version 3.0) that took the stage on Friday blasted through short pop songs using a punk twist on the classic arena rock formula, complete with stylish facial hair, arm swings and timed jumps from lead guitarist Aaron Stuart, and grossly inappropriate moshing from a certain knuckleheaded segment of the audience. Lead singer Travis Shettel and co. used the night to work through new material like "The Present Tense" and the Elvis Costello-riffed "This Giving Cup." The band uncharacteristically spurned audience requests for songs, failing to provide any command performances and only a cursory two-song encore.

Earlier in the night, openers Lucky Caderra and There Were Wires displayed the same sort of rock-by-numbers approach. The UMass-based Caderra played a lengthy set of jagged, emotional punk rock. Despite precocious stage presence and highly technical songwriting, the band quite negatively mined to perfection every trend in punk today (soaring vocals, metal-influenced dual guitar licks, copious amounts of backups, forced stage banter, superfluous wrist bands, etc.). There Were Wires followed up by plodding through a set of progressive hardcore, ambient electronics and creeping metal. The band's maudlin theatrics and visible disgust with the lack of crowd response punctuated a performance lost on all but the most devoted art schoolers in attendance.

The show's other headliner turned in the best performance of the evening. Soon-to-be UMass grads and certifiable "next big thing" Read Yellow brought the noise like Sonic Youth in 1990. With the exception of two songs from their Fenway Recordings EP and a handful of others, the band tore through a blistering set of recently recorded material slated for release on its debut album.

Pete Townsend once observed that rock and roll is about promise; Read Yellow fulfilled the bargain with "Wall of Sound" distortion, rapid-fire vocals, and enough raw attitude to back it up. The band managed to overcome a moronic heckler, crowd indifference and sound board problems to deliver their trademark brand of promise, closing with the white-hot noise of "The Association."

Still, the night belonged to Piebald. From the opening chords of "Long Nights," Travis was leading a group sing-along on any familiar material the band played. Against the backdrop of an upcoming election year, "American Hearts" took on a more powerful meaning; the band stopping while over 500 college-aged potential voters shouted and backed the fiercely political rant. Even when the band declared it was only playing one more song (a surprisingly well-received and mildly ironic "Look, I Just Don't Like You"), the crowd seemed more excited than vexed. They sang, they danced, and ultimately went home happy. Hey, UMass, maybe you should do this more often.

Film is too lovable to be hated

'Love Actually' fulfills fans' fluffy expectations

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

"Love Actually" is like a puppy that piddles on the floor and then comes along to lick your face for attention. It's at times annoying, and you want to swat it with a newspaper, but it's so lovable that you can't stay mad at it.

'Love Actually'
Directed by Richard Curtis
Starring Hugh Grant, Liam Neeson
Universal
Rated R
129 mins.
Grade C+

This romantic ensemble comedy marks the directorial debut of screenwriter Richard Curtis, a man who knows a little about snuggly Brit romances after having written or contributed to movies like "Notting Hill," "Four Weddings and a Funeral" and "Bridget Jones' Diary." Curtis doesn't stray far from the material that made him famous, and it's abundantly clear that the filmmaker wanted to patch together the romantic comedy to end all romantic comedies. This wobbly, overstuffed movie is so chockablock with plots and subplots that it's a wonder that it's legs don't collapse beneath it.

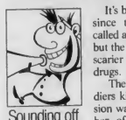
Curtis' ambitions are so great that he thinks he's created no less than an exploration of love in all its many agonizing facets. And he's assembled what appears to be half the crème of the British acting crop to do it. Hugh Grant, Alan Rickman, Colin Firth, Emma Thompson, Liam Neeson, Rowan Atkinson (in an absurdly inconsequential role) — they all contribute their fair share to what amounts to little more than the holiday cookie version of a Robert Altman movie. It may be cute, but "Love Actually" often finds itself fumbling around for a humor and poignancy it only sometimes achieves.

Any one or two of the stories that make up the bulk of "Love Actually" would have made for decent movies, but this tinselly logjam has Curtis cramming in as many stories as possible, as if he plans to exit the genre with a (very pretty) bang. More often than not though, the net result comes closer to a whimper. By crosscutting between nine or 10 only tangentially related plots, Curtis manages to give short shrift to his ambitions. What should sparkle instead only glimmers faintly.

Here's what Curtis gives us: Grant as a newly elected bachelor Prime Minister who falls for a comely lass (Martine McCutcheon) on his waitstaff at 10 Downing Street; Neeson as a widower helping his young stepson (Thomas Sangster) deal with a crush on a classmate; Laura Linney as a mousy American with a crush on an office stud (Rodrigo Santoro) and a heartbreaking secret to her loneliness. The charismatic Andrew Lincoln is a Londoner doing his damnedest to not let his true feelings show for his best friend's lovely new bride (Keira Knightly, shining incandescently in a tiny role). Firth stars as a cuckolded writer who falls in love with his Portuguese maid (Lucia Moniz) despite the fact neither of them speaks the other's language.

And so on. Like any ensemble movie, the quality of the work ranges with each segment. Grant's storyline comes off as forced and uncomfortable, awkwardly shoehorning in an unnecessary political angle – featuring Billy Bob Thornton playing the U.S. president as a smarmy combination of Bill Clinton's waggish charisma and George Bush's stiff moral superiority – that doesn't belong in such a puffball of a movie. (It also forces Grant to shimmy around, embarrassingly, to the Pointer Sisters' "Jump.") Kris Marshall's turn as a nerdy 20-something who ventures to Wisconsin in hopes that his accent will get him an American girlfriend fails to pay off convincingly, and the Firth story loses steam as it goes, despite some pleasant linguistic comedy.

The saddest story — the one that's meant to lodge a lump in the throat — deals with the dying marriage of Rickman and



COURTESY DETER MOUNTAIN/UNIVERSAL STUDIOS

Liam Neesan plays Daniel, one of the many British characters that are exploring, at the most, the very surface of love.

Continued on page 6

Words that went unheeded

War on terrorism/liberty still being waged

Sounding off

Nikolas Markantonastos

It's been more than six months since the Bush administration called an end to hostilities in Iraq, but the current climate overseas is scarier than Courtney Love on drugs.

The number of American soldiers killed during the Iraq invasion was 138. Thus far, the number of American soldiers that have been killed since President Bush declared an end to hostilities is more than 250. No weapons of mass destruction have been found. Saddam Hussein and Osama bin Laden are still on the loose.

As the death toll and injuries continue to rise and the cost of war grows tremendously, one wonders: Where was the outrage before the war started?

It was collectively muzzled.

Despite anti-war campaigns, the majority of Americans were too busy cheering on the Bush administration and their misguided policies. Thoughtful dialogue succumbed to knee-jerk approvals.

Even in the world of pop culture, the opinions of stars were met with giant tomatoes. Perhaps the highest profile(est anti-war statements (either through words or through art) revolve around the Dixie Chicks, Michael Moore and Madonna. More than half a year later they beg to be revisited.

SHUT THE CLUCK UP

Multi-platinum selling music trio the Dixie Chicks, who hail from Bush's home state of Texas, received a boiling when its lead singer made anti-Bush remarks. Right before the war, lead singer Natalie Maines said, in a concert in London, that she was "ashamed the president of the United States is from Texas." Following the statements, country stations around the country pulled the band's music from playlists.

Station managers said their decision was prompted after receiving phone calls from angry listeners. Airplay for the band's hit "Travelin' Soldier" dropped 15 percent after the remark. Unfortunately, those who jumped on the Chicks' bashwagon failed to see irony behind the song's lyrics.

"Travelin' Soldier" is about a lonely 18-year-old who is being sent to Vietnam to fight in the Vietnam War. Before departing, the soldier finds a lovely girl, who sends him letters while he's fighting. When the war escalates, he writes, "Now don't worry but I won't be able to write for a while." The girl waits and waits for the letter that says "my soldier's comin' home." That letter never arrives. The travelin' soldier in the song never makes it home.

In hindsight, the song served as an eerie foreshadowing from a group that tried to cluck their view but was instead tarred and feathered.

MOORE OR LESS?

Days after the war commenced, the brash Michael Moore burst into an anti-war tirade during his acceptance speech for best documentary Oscar for "Bowling for Columbine," a film about gun culture in American society.

"We like nonfiction and we live in fictitious times," he said. "We live in a time where we have fictitious election results that elect a fictitious president. We live in a time where we have a man sending us to war for fictitious reasons."

Naturally, the audience's loud boos drowned out the applause. So why did Michael Moore, out on a night where glittery fashion and the overall glamour of Hollywood presided, act out this way?

Because "I'm an American," he said, when asked about it backstage. He's right. If America is a democratic society, its citizens should be able to speak out against political issues.

CENSORED 'LIFE'

Perhaps the most brazen statement against the war came in the form of a music video from Madonna that never aired. The video, which was available on unofficial Web sites during the time it was pulled, sees Madonna making anti-war statements.

In the video, models strut down a fashion runway as images of war are displayed on huge monitors on the wall. Madonna sings in front of a screen where orange fireballs erupt. Rapid edits of planes dropping bombs and fiery explosions move the video along. At the end of the video, Madonna and overweight female dancers crash the show with a military tank, begin dancing menacingly and spray the paparazzi and crowd with a water gun. Finally, the video reaches a climax when Madonna lobs a phony hand grenade to a Bush look-alike in the crowd, who catches it and uses it to light his cigar.

"The ending of the video is really important. I throw this hand grenade … But it gets caught," Madonna explained to MTV earlier in the year. "And the one who catches it takes something that could be violent and destructive and takes the destruction out of it by turning it into something else. That's my hope for an alternative, not only to this war, but all wars."

Controversy has always been Madonna's best friend. She never had qualms about voicing her opinion — no matter how left of center it may have been. She's taunted sexism and Catholicism, made a book about sex, promoted gay culture before it was cool

Continued on page 6

One totally hoppin' Friday

Hip-Hop releases that demand to be heard

The Red Line

Peter Dale
Justin Chellman

"The Black Album" hit stores on Friday with a fury, but not without some serious competition, in fact just about as serious as you can get. G Unit (50 cent and his crew) also dropped their debut album together this last Friday. The head-to-head release of these two albums is a very interesting thing, because with Jay-Z we have a seasoned veteran's last run around, and on the other side the young 50 cent, whose last album sold more records than any of Jay-Z's previous releases. The good thing is, for hip-hop fans, both albums are dope, so we win both ways. To add to that, the two albums are also very different, which gives us the ability to enjoy each during different moods.

The G Unit is far more marketable to the youth and shines in the same way that 50 cent's last album did, with serious production. But the production is not as one-sided as on 50's album, which was headed up by Eminem and Dr. Dre. This album has production credits from a wide list of different producers, including some who you wouldn't think would be working with G Unit because of their past styles, like Hi Tek and No ID. The reason is because, when I think of G Unit, thoughts of Common, Mos Def and Talib Kweli don't also rush into my head. No ID was responsible for the greater part of the production on Common's second and third album "Resurrection," and "One Day it Will All Make Sense," both commonly regarded as his best works. Hi Tek was responsible for a large part of the "Black Star" album and the entire "Reflection Eternal" album with Talib Kweli.

But the combination works and G Unit sounds real nice over these varied beats. This also gives them fewer limitations on how they sound. They are not constricted to one type of flow. Jay-Z on the other hand went all out on his Black Album and enlisted only the best of the best from his resources. This of course would include Pharrell and Chad Hugo, as the Neptunes team up with Jay twice on the album, as well as twice with Kanye West, Rocafella's prodigy producer Jay Z also had Eminem team up with him again and give him another fired up track reminiscent of the sound that Eminem gave Nas for "The Cross" on the God's Son album. But if anything shines the most on this album, it's the producers that Jay hasn't worked with before like Rick Rubin and 9th Wonder, who each produce one of the two best songs on the album (in our humble opinions).

Rick Rubin, who has produced albums for big name artists like the Beastie Boys, Run DMC, Red Hot Chili Peppers and the Black Crowes, as well as being a co-founder of the label Def Jam, hit Jay-Z up with one of the best beats I've heard Jay rhyme over in years. The sound is similar to what I would associate with the Def Jux style of beats but also old school Beastie Boys, very different and hot at the same time. Jay spit some serious fire over the track as well, and it wasn't just your run of the mill braggadocio's rhyme either, it had something to it, a story to tell about real subjects.

The 9th Wonder collaboration is most impressive because until this past year 9th Wonder was just another underground producer as obscure as the next dope but unknown underground producer, oh, except for one thing, that 9th Wonder just might be one of the sickest producers ever to bless tracks. The track he gave to Jay-Z, track nine, entitled "Threat" (hand picked by Jay out of many others supplied by 9th Wonder) is no exception. In fact these tracks blew away Jay-Z so much that it left him wondering where 9th Wonder had been all these years, when he could have been hitting the boards for him albums ago. Overall the album is just as good as we expected, and definitely going to be on bump for a while in our systems.

The best thing about last Friday, and 2003 for that matter, is that it's been a long time since we've had weeks like this, where two dope albums come out on the same day, and so many sick albums are flooding the market. Years ago it used to be commonplace to have album after album come out, so much in fact as to make classic albums not stick out as much due to the great competition around it. While it's true that it isn't like that again yet, it's as Q Tip once said on a track back in the day: "Competition's good, it brings out the vital parts." It's definitely vital for an emcee to come hard today because the bar has been raised. Thank you Jay-Z, and I never thought I'd say this, but thank you 50.

Peter Dale and Justin Chellman are Collegian columnists.

Eli Reed/Sacha Wald-Mantin/Def Jam

Though a force on his own, when with his boys Young Buck and Lloyd Banks, 50 Cent is beyond a rap star.

National security at the cost of national freedom and made statements about racial equality — all while being chastised. So it was clear that when Madonna decided to pull her video, something was seriously amiss.

Continued from page 5

She issued a statement explaining her decision to halt the video's U.S. release: "Due to the volatile state of the world and out of sensitivity and respect to the armed forces, who I support and pray for, I do not want to risk offending anyone who might misinterpret the meaning of this video."

But it was apparent that Madonna decided to shelve the video indefinitely after witnessing the scorching the Chicks received.

"You know, it's ironic we're fighting for democracy in Iraq because we ultimately aren't celebrating democracy here," Madonna said, airing her grievances in a VH1 special before the airing of a toned down version of the video. "Because anybody who has anything to say against the war or against the president or whatever is punished, and that's not democracy — it's people being intolerant." In the altered video, she is dressed in military fatigues and simply stands in front of changing flags of different countries.

■■■

Meaningless pop-culture is enjoyable and when we want an escape, we turn to movies, television, music and other modes of entertainment. But it's also important for mainstream artists to raise important issues, rather than constantly feed us sparkly distractions. We can only benefit from these artists who hold up a mirror to our times and societal issues.

If the United States is indeed the beacon for freedom of expression and freedom, statements against the war and even against the president of the U.S.A. should be allowed to be expressed openly. One of our missions in Iraq is to make the nation a democratic society. How can we expect to do this if our nation is not a democracy?

Last week President Bush said that the United States will maintain a military presence in Afghanistan and Iraq until Saddam Hussein is killed or captured. America must now suffer through a holiday season knowing the lives of our travelin' soldiers may never make it back home.

Nikolas Markantonatos is a Collegian columnist.

Brit flick's thin story doesn't carry flm home

Continued from page 5

Thompson, as the former is tempted by his sexy secretary (Heike Makatsch.) Thompson's reaction upon getting an unexpected Christmas gift is a devastating portrait of grief, betrayal and shock displayed in a deft few seconds. Too bad Curtis doesn't handle this story with the delicacy and attention it needs, giving us no real understanding of the interior lives of these people. Bill Nighy cheekily wanders through, stealing scenes as a lewd, has-been rocker who makes an unexpected comeback with a yuletide novelty cover of "Love Is All Around" that even he admits is rubbish. The most amusing story involves the romance that develops between a pair of porn stand-ins (Martin Freeman, Joanna Page) who fall in sweetly, shyly in love while carrying on normal conversations naked and miming sex acts.

But this alternately smug and sincere movie is far too busy patting itself on the back to truly warm the cockles of the heart. Had Curtis concentrated on telling just one of these stories, instead of juggling all of them, and then he might have made a lovely little movie. But this self-satisfied film feels rushed and slipshod, lacking an attention to detail and suffering from directorial miscues. (What's with the fat jokes? The geopolitics? The lack of any real love stories for gays and the elderly? And why do so many stories feature bosses and subordinates involved in romance? Why do none of the characters seem to have any motivation? These are questions that Curtis cautiously tip-toes around.) At 129 minutes, this movie is just too long and too much, even with the graceful acting from its cast. What should have been a charming holiday treats comes off as contrived, actually.

Stonewall film fest underway

The Stonewall Center kicks of its Reel Out Film Festival tonight with a screening of "Dangerous Living: Coming Out In The Developing Worldm," a documentary about dealing with homosexuality in the global south. The director John Scagliotti will present the screening in Bartlett 65 at 7 p.m.

The festival will screen films about LGBT pioneers such as Harry Hay, Joan Nestle, Audre Lorde and Bayard Rustin. There will also be short programs and screenings of feature films such as "Tipping The Velvet" a three-hour period drama from Britain and the romantic comedy "A Family Affair."

Co-sponsored by the English and Women's Studies departments, and partially funded by the University of Massachusetts Arts Council, the festival will screen through Sunday, Nov. 23, and a $3-$5 donation is appreciated. The times are scheduled as follows:

Today at 7 p.m. in Bartlett 65; Tomorrow, from 7 to 11 p.m. in Herter 231; Nov. 21, from 7 to 11 p.m. in Mahar 108; and Nov. 22-23, from 12 p.m. to 10 p.m. in Mahar.

— Johnny Donaldson

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

Is Looking For a Bright,Talented, Multitasking Wizard!

Now Accepting Applications For: 'HUMAN RESOURCES MANAGER'

*Freshmen and Sophomores preferred
*Great Resume Builder
*8.5 hours per week

Applications Available in Room 113 Campus Center Basement. Attn: Sandra Marquez
-Please Bring Resume-

Flyers • Newsletters • Posters • Banners • Business Cards
And other layout platforms
Phone: 413.545.1[illegible] Fax: 1.[illegible].3699
113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003

The mouse is still cool

What Mickey means to children of all ages

By Mike Schneider
Associated Press

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — Mickey Mouse arrived on the world's cultural stage 75 years ago as of this Tuesday as a scrawny but buoyant black-and-white product of the Jazz Age.

He was a symbol of American pluck in his screen debut, "Steamboat Willie," on Nov. 18, 1928. The film at New York's Colony Theatre showed an irreverent rodent who takes Captain Pete's steamboat on a joyride and woos Minnie Mouse by making music on the bodies of various farm animals.

The years have dulled Mickey's personality, a result of him becoming the corporate face of a multibillion-dollar entertainment empire. In the process, Mickey also has become a cultural Rorschach test - a symbol of American optimism, resourcefulness and energy or an icon of cultural commodification and corporate imperialism.

"There are a number of qualities Mickey represents on which people like to stick their particular view of the world," said Janet Wasko, a University of Oregon professor and author of "Understanding Disney: The Manufacture of Fantasy."

For Roy E. Disney, whose uncle, Walt Disney, created the character; Mickey Mouse is "this friendly little guy,' which were Walt's words for describing him."

For Penn State professor Henry Giroux, however, Mickey Mouse represents the vast reach of American cultural power, symbolizing a company that has turned childhood into a function of consumerism as children feel obligated to purchase the latest "Finding Nemo" DVD or Mickey Mouse watch.

"Mickey Mouse offers up a ... symbol of innocence while hiding the role it plays in commodifying children's dreams and extending the logic of the market into all aspects of their lives," said Giroux, author of "The Mouse That Roared: Disney and the End of Innocence," a cultural critique of the company.

Mickey wasn't always so complex.

Walt Disney started his animation career in Kansas City, Mo., producing films that were a combination of cartoon and live action and starring an inquisitive little girl named Alice. Hoping for greater success, he moved to Los Angeles in 1923, joining his brother, Roy. Once the creative possibilities with the Alice series were exhausted, Disney started producing films for a new animated character, Oswald the Lucky Rabbit, in 1927.

Mickey Mouse was conceived the next year during a cross-country train ride, according to the "official" company history. Walt Disney had just been forced to give up the Oswald rights to his ruthless New York distributor, who had exercised copyright control over the character.

On the ride back home to Los Angeles, Disney conjured up a little mouse named Mortimer. His wife, Lillian, thought the name too pompous and suggested Mickey.

But others have argued that Mickey's creation was more likely a collaboration between Disney and his chief animator, Ub Iwerks, with Disney taking the credit. Mickey Mouse was first drawn by Iwerks' hand.

Disney and Iwerks initially produced two silent cartoons for Mickey Mouse, "Plane Crazy" and "The Gallopin' Gaucho." But in the wake of the success of the nation's first "talkie," Al Jolson's "The Jazz Singer" in 1927, Disney decided to produce a cartoon that would be synchronized to songs, music and sound effects.

"Steamboat Willie" was an instant hit, arriving at a time when technological advances in motion pictures, radio and the phonograph were transforming mass culture. By the end of the 1930s, Mickey had starred in more than 100 cartoons.

Mickey gradually transformed both physically and spiritually. His face was rounded out and his eyes went from black ovals to white eyes with pupils in the late 1930s. His face became friendlier, less rat-like.

"Round things seem to be less belligerent than the angles," said John Hench, a 95-year-old animator who has been with the Disney company since 1939.

Mickey Mouse became the face that launched a thousand merchandise products. Watches. Pencils. Bedsheets. Alarm clocks. Telephones. He is one of the most merchandised faces ever - about $4.5 billion a year in sales - even though he's currently second to Winnie the Pooh for the Disney company.

Mickey's personality became less edgy, duller and less subversive. Toward the end of the 1930s and the start of the 1940s, Disney animators found it harder to create story lines around Mickey as the character become the face of the company.

"Donald (Duck) became easier to write stories around because his personality was more varied. Often in that period, they would start a cartoon with Mickey and it wouldn't work and someone would say 'Use Donald,'" said David Smith, archives director for the Walt Disney Co. "You didn't want to do naughty things with your corporate logo. He suddenly became sacrosanct."

Mickey's popularity may have waned in the 1940s, but he gained new life in the 1950s with the airing of TV's "Mickey Mouse Club" and the opening of Disneyland in Anaheim, Calif.

"Mickey got a double shot of invigoration," said Marty Sklar, vice chairman and principal creative executive at Walt Disney Imagineering. "The characters live in our park. Mickey is the king of our characters."

COURTESY DISNEY.COM

From a simple light hearted sketch to the figurehead of the Disney Corporation, Mickey Mouse has seen it all.

GERLAND H. LENG/COLLEGIAN

On the board

Jamie Solon scored his first goal of the season in the Massachusetts hockey team's 3-2 win over Providence Saturday. The Minutemen face Maine on Friday at 7p.m. in the Mullins Center.

Anti-doping agency shows dissatisfaction with Bush

By Stephen Wilson
Associated Press

LONDON (AP) — The head of the World Anti-Doping Agency accused the White House on Tuesday of showing no interest in the fight against performance-enhancing drugs in sports.

WADA president Dick Pound said the Bush administration's lack of support could lead to sanctions against the U.S. team at next summer's Athens Olympics and affect New York's bid for the 2012 games.

"There's just a complete vacuum and void there as far as we're concerned," Pound said in a conference call on the eve of WADA meetings in Montreal. "Our sense is they're not the slightest bit interested in this issue."

Jennifer de Vallance, spokeswoman for the White House Office of National Drug Control Policy, called Pound's comments "disingenuous and unproductive."

"This is out of left field," she said by phone from Washington. "We work with his staff on a regular and close basis. I'm a little mystified that he feels that way. We remain steadfastly committed to WADA's mission."

Pound said the United States, Italy and Ukraine were among the major countries yet to pay their annual dues to WADA, which is jointly funded by the Olympic sports movement and national governments.

"We've had great support from the Congressional side ... but vis-a-vis the White House we are just striking out and are very disappointed in the lack of leadership being demonstrated."

WADA, which was created in 1999 to spearhead global drug-testing efforts, has collected less than two-thirds of its funding for 2003 — about $13 million of its $20 million budget. The contributions were due by the beginning of this year.

De Vallance said Congress is expected to pass the federal budget in the next few days, clearing the way for payment of the WADA dues.

The whole truth about partial birth abortion as interfering in patient-doctor relationships. It takes away an option for doctors to treat patients. It essentially ignores the knowledge of the doctor and the needs of the patient, with no exception.

Continued from page 5

This law erodes the right to privacy and the right to medical treatment. It's a foot in the door for law to take away more women's health rights. The ban criminalizes a recognized medical procedure. Roe v. Wade, oddly enough, already outlaws abortions in the third trimester except to save the life or health of the woman. The Partial Birth Abortion Ban Act is a broad and vague document which could possibly be used to criminalize legal second trimester abortions. Its inflammatory language and lack of Constitutionality, however, may lead to it being struck down. Planned Parenthood, NARAL Pro-Choice America, the Feminist Majority and other organizations have mobilized and begun the legal fight against the law.

If you are interested in taking action, contact VOX here on campus at the email address listed below. There are weekly meetings open to the public to discuss issues and take action. We will be attending the April 25 March for Freedom of Choice on Washington, D.C. There will be transportation provided through the area Planned Parenthood group.

On the Net: www.planned parenthood.org

Questions? Comments? E-mail sexiversity@ hotmail.com. Confidentially is respected.

UMass Boston

A Great University in a Great City

Next Fall, Make Nantucket Your Campus

If you're ready for an adventure that goes beyond the classroom, and if studying the natural, social and cultural history of a unique island community sounds intriguing, check out UMass Boston's Fall 2004 "Semester on Nantucket" program.

Offering twelve undergraduate credits, the Semester on Nantucket will prove to be an unforgettable one, combining academic excellence with personal enrichment, as you experience one of New England's most distinctive places.

- Curriculum integrates courses in literature, geography, biology and history, taught by distinguished UMass Boston faculty
- Field station site, a 106-acre "biologist's paradise," with dunes, ponds, private beach, and salt marsh, serves as your classroom
- Bike, hike, fish, and explore the island
- Stay in furnished two-bedroom apartments near the center of historic Nantucket town

UMASS BOSTON

For information, contact Kathy FitzPatrick:
617.287.7913
kathleen.fitzpatrick@umb.edu
www.ccde.umb.edu

ATTENTION COLLEGE STUDENTS

Earn College Credits During Your Winter Break!

Wintersession

January 5-16, 2004

Day and Evening Classes — Classes Guaranteed to Run

Art, Biology, Communications, Criminal Justice, Education, English, History, Mathematics, Management, Music, Philosophy, Psychology, Sociology, Women's Studies

Call (413) 572-8020 for registration information www.wsc.ma.edu/dgce

Westfield State College

Are you ready for the challenge?

Start here.

Each day of our intense Winter Session equals an entire week of course material, which means that you can earn three credits in just three weeks! Best of all, Winter Session costs less. There are fewer fees now than at any other time of year. Save time and money.

You know you're ready. Start here. Classes begin January 5.

UMassAmherst
Continuing Education

www.umass.edu/start • (413) 545-2414

Bonds named NL MVP

By RONALD BLUM
ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK (AP) — This one was for Dad.

Barry Bonds won a record sixth National League MVP award Tuesday, becoming the first player to capture the honor for three consecutive years.

His thoughts immediately turned to Bobby Bonds, his three-time All-Star father who died in August.

"This award is more special to me than any award I've ever received because it's dedicated to my father," said the San Francisco outfielder, who has won twice as many of these awards as any other player.

"He has been my hitting coach my entire life, ever since I was a little kid. I miss him dearly. It's a really emotional time for me right now."

And a controversial time, too. Bonds and other athletes have been subpoenaed to testify by a federal grand jury investigating the Bay Area Laboratory Co-Operative, a nutritional supplements lab. On Monday, a lawyer for Bonds' personal trainer, Greg Anderson, confirmed his client is a target of the probe.

Bonds declined comment on BALCO, citing his lawyer's advice. But he did welcome the start of steroid testing with penalties in baseball next season. The testing was triggered when more than 5 percent of tests this year came back positive in an anonymous survey.

"I am glad there is going to be testing," he said. "I am glad that, hopefully, hopefully, it will diminish a lot of everyone's speculation, and everyone can just move on."

Bonds defended his withdrawal from the Major League Baseball Players Association's licensing program starting next season, meaning the union can no longer make deals to use his image on souvenirs.

Bonds wants to control his likeness as he approaches Hank Aaron's career home-run record of 755. Bonds is fourth with 658, also trailing Babe Ruth (714) and Willie Mays (660), Bonds' godfather.

By going on his own, Bonds said he will be able to give back to the community and fund projects.

"I felt I've really been misrepresented throughout my career as a bad guy, bad person," Bonds said. "This gives the licensees an opportunity to really know me."

